Another instruction given at defendant's request stated that if the jury believed Arnold [the principal] was present, and had reason to know of the said misrepresentations at the time the same were alleged to have been made, defendant was not liable.

Further instructions given at the request of defendant were, in substance: (1) that while one is presumed to have assented to the terms of a written contract when he signs it, it may be rebutted, and if defendant did not assent to the terms of the bond, "then in law" he is not deemed to have signed or executed said bond; (2) that a contract obtained by misrepresentation is of no legal force or effect; and (3) that the jury's verdict should take into consideration the circumstances surrounding the execution of the bond and the situation of the parties.

[1] If the persons in whose interest the surety's liability is sought to be enforced did not have knowledge of any fraud in obtaining an administrator's bond at the time it was obtained, and if the administrator's liability has been fixed by a decree, the defenses available to a surety in an action upon the bond are: that the bond was not made; or that the decree, ordering the administrator to deliver property for which he was accountable, was obeyed; or that the decree was not made; or that the decree, if made, was obtained by fraud. In the case of Irwin v. Backus, 1864, 25 Cal. 214, 85 Am.Dec. 125, the court found that Backus, the administrator, was in default, removed him from office, appointed a successor and ordered Backus to pay over the amount due the estate. Backus did not comply with the order. In holding the sureties liable on the bond, the Supreme Court said, at page 223 of 25 Cal., 85 Am.Dec. 125: "As a general rule, sureties upon official bonds are not concluded by a decree * * * against their principal * * * but administration bonds seem to form an exception to this general rule. * * * This distinction seems to be founded upon the terms of the obligation into which the sureties upon an administration bond enter, which are that their principal shall faithfully perform all the duties imposed upon him by the nature of his trust, and will account for and pay over all money which may come into his hands pursuant to the orders and decrees of the Probate Court," and said further on page 224 of 25 Cal., 85 Am.Dec. 125: "* * * upon the refusal of the administrator to obey such order or decree, the liability of the sureties attaches, and they are bound to make good the default of their principal, and cannot go behind the decree to inquire into the merits. They may show in defense either that the bond was not made, or that the decree was not made; or, if made, that the same has been obeyed; or that the same was obtained by fraud or collusion; but they cannot show that the Court has erred in making the decree * * *." It is to be noted that the words, "the same has been obeyed," in the last sentence above quoted referred to the decree. The word "obeyed," of course, was not used with reference to the bond, and the words "the same," therefore, referred to the decree. It is to be noted further that the words, "or that the same was obtained by fraud or collusion," also referred to the decree. The repetition of the words "the same" indicates a reference to the same subject that was referred to when those words were used in the preceding sentence. The word "collusion" is not used ordinarily in referring to the improper obtaining of a surety's signature, but is an appropriate word to use in designating connivance between a principal and a beneficiary in a court proceeding to obtain a decree against a surety. Authorities hereinafter mentioned also indicate that the words "the same," as used in Irwin v. Backus, supra, related to the decree and not to the bond. It is stated in 11b California Jurisprudence, section 1405, pages 942 and 943: "The sureties may show, by way of defense, either that the bond was not executed or that the decree directing delivery of property found in the hands of their principal was not made, or if made, that it [the decree] has been obeyed or was obtained by fraud or collusion; but they may not show that the court erred in making the decree * * *." (Italics added.)

"As a general rule, in the United States, when a principal obligor has induced his surety or guarantor to sign an instrument by false or fraudulent representations, such misrepresentations may not be set up by the surety or guarantor as a defense to an action on the indorsement or guaranty unless the obligee or guarantee had notice of, or participated in, such fraud." 71 A.L.R. 1278 and cases cited.

In 34 Corpus Juris Secundum, Executors and Administrators, § 944d, p. 1166, it was stated: "The liability of the sureties on an administration bond is not affected by the fact that they were induced to sign the bond through the fraud or misrepresentation of the principal, of which the beneficiaries of the estate in whose interest the liability is sought to be enforced are innocent * * *."

The court stated in the case of Simon Newman Co. v. Tully, 1939, 13 Cal.2d 134, 137, 88 P.2d 131, 132: "The rule is well settled and generally followed that fraud of the principal debtor will not relieve the guarantor or surety who acted at the request of the debtor from liability, if the creditor did not have notice of the fraud and did not participate therein."

It was stated in California Standard F. Corp. v. Cornelius Cole, Ltd., 1935, 9 Cal. App.2d 573, at page 577, 50 P.2d 1054, 1056: "'While the law requires the guarantee to act in good faith, unless he has knowledge of or participates therein, he is not responsible for any misrepresentation or deception practiced by the principal, or other third person, upon the guarantor in order to induce him to enter into the contract of guaranty.' 28 C. J. 927; Elizalde v. Murphy, 163 Cal. 681, 126 P. 978."

In the case of Scholl v. Gilman, 1928, 263 Mass. 295, at page 299, 160 N.E. 889, 891, the court said: "It is not material what induced the defendant to sign the bonds so long as the obligee was not responsible therefor."

[2] If a surety has signed an administrator's bond, and has undertaken thereby to pay any balance which shall be adjudged to be due by the administrator to the estate, he is bound by the judgment unless he can show the judgment was obtained by fraud. Easton v. Boston Investment Co., 1921, 51 Cal.App. 246, 251, 252, 196 P. 796; Kruger v. California Highway Indem. Exch., 1927, 201 Cal. 672, 678, 258 P. 602.

Plaintiff cites the case of Treweek v. Howard, 1895, 105 Cal. 434, 39 P. 20, in support of his contention that fraud by the administrator or cosurety in obtaining the signature of defendant surety was not a defense. The sureties therein were held liable. One of the defenses alleged therein was that the executor, by fraudulent statements, induced defendants to sign his bond as sureties. Defendant asserts there is no similarity between that case and the present one in that the fraud referred to therein was not the type of fraud under discussion herein. The case, however, is of assistance in determining whether the fraud which is referred to in Irwin v. Backus, supra, as a defense, is fraud in obtaining the bond or fraud in obtaining the decree. The court said in the Treweek case, 105 Cal. at page 445, 39 P. at page 23: "The decree of distribution * * * and the order * * * approving the account of the executor, were, in the absence of fraud, binding upon the * * * sureties * * *." In support of that statement the court cited the case of Irwin v. Backus, supra, and then said on the same pages: "The question remains, is there any such fraud charged * * * as entitled the defendants here to attack the decree of distribution * * *." (Italics added.) It therefore appears that the court eliminated, as a question in the case, the alleged fraud in obtaining the signatures of the sureties on the bond; and it further appears that the fraud referred to in the statement of the court, "in the absence of fraud," in the Treweek case was fraud in obtaining the decree, and that the court in that case interpreted the reference to fraud, as a defense in the Irwin v. Backus case, to mean fraud in obtaining the decree.

The first instruction above referred to included a statement that if there was fraud and "there was no negligence on his [defendant's] part in signing said bond" the verdict must be for defendant. Defendant contended as a part of his defense that he was not negligent in signing the bond. As to the question of negligence on the part of a surety in signing a bond, it was said in the case of Sager v. W. T. Rawleigh Co., 1929, 153 Va. 514, 529, 150 S.E. 244, 248, 66 A.L.R. 305, after referring to various cases: "These cases and the majority rule do not rest upon negligence but upon a broader base. It comes back to this: 'Where one of two innocent parties must suffer by a fraud perpetrated by another, the law imposes the loss upon the party who, by his misplaced confidence, has enabled the fraud to be committed.'" In that case the defendant, a successful business man, could not read, but could write his name, and he signed a guaranty upon the representation of the principal that it was a letter of recommendation. The court held the defendant liable, and stated further at page 526 of 153 Va., at page 247 of 150 S.E., 66 A.L.R. 305: "* * * we are of opinion that, as between plaintiff and defendant, the equities are with the plaintiff. It [Rawleigh Co.] did nothing, while the defendant [Sager] set in motion a series of causes, innocent though he may have been, which resulted in loss to another who had every reason to rely and did rely upon them. The weight of authority in this country and the juster rule hold with the plaintiff. * * * Common prudence requires that those who are unable to read should at least not sign contracts or writings without having them first read by some disinterested party."

In the case of J. R. Watkins Medicine Co. v. Hargett, 1923, 209 Ala. 165, 95 So. 811, an obligor had induced certain persons to sign a guaranty by a false representation that the instrument was a recommendation, and the court held that the fraud did not defeat the liability of the guarantors to a guarantee who did not participate in the obligor's fraud, and stated at page 166 of 209 Ala., at page 812 of 95 So.: "The real question is: Which of two innocent parties shall suffer by a fraud perpetrated by another? The answer is found in the principle of justice and morals, often followed by this court, which imposes the loss upon the party who, by his misplaced confidence, has enabled another to commit the fraud."

Defendant relies strongly upon the case of Mazuran v. Stefanich, 1928, 95 Cal.App. 327, 272 P. 772. That action was upon a note made by defendants and payable to plaintiff, an attorney at law, in consideration of plaintiff's agreement to render certain legal services. The court held that the note was obtained by fraud and was void. That case (in which a confidential relationship of attorney and client existed) is distinguishable from the present case in that plaintiff therein was guilty of fraud in obtaining the note. The note was invalid as between the parties to the transaction. In the present case the heirs of Trotter, for whose protection the bond herein was required by law, did not participate in or have knowledge of the alleged fraud of defendant's cosurety and the administrator in obtaining the bond. The heirs were not parties to the transaction in which the bond was obtained and did not determine the sufficiency of the sureties. The bond and the sufficiency of the sureties were approved by the court.

[3] The instructions above mentioned relative to fraud as a defense were prejudicially erroneous.

[4] The action was not barred by the statute of limitations. The period of limitation for commencing the action against the surety was at least 4 years from the time Arnold, the former administrator, died on December 31, 1939. Hewlett v. Beede, 1905, 2 Cal.App. 561, 567, 83 P. 1086. The action was commenced on July 24, 1941.

[5, 6] Plaintiff was not guilty of laches. An administrator or surety who asserts that an action against him on his bond is barred by laches or equitable estoppel must show an unreasonable and unexplained delay, and it has been held that mere delay short of the full period of limitation will not defeat an action on the bond. Tucker v. Stewart, 1910, 147 Iowa 294, 126 N.W. 183. In the case of Biggins v. Raisch, 1895, 107 Cal. 210, 40 P. 333, the executor and one of the sureties had died, and plaintiff was appointed administrator with the will annexed. He commenced an action against the remaining sureties within 8½ months after the death of the executor, and the court said, at page 213 of 107 Cal., at page 334 of 40 P.: "Surely no laches can be attributed to them * * * this being only a reasonable time within which to procure the appointment of the administrator, examine the condition of the estate, and commence the action. * * * While it is true that they [heirs] might have compelled the executor to account to the probate court long before he died, yet merely passive delay and forbearance on their part could not discharge the sureties, nor affect their obligation * * *." Approximately 19 months elapsed from the time of Arnold's death on December 31, 1939 to the time the action was commenced on July 24, 1941. Plaintiff was appointed administrator of the Trotter estate on June 19, 1940 to succeed Arnold. The decree settling Arnold's account as administrator, and fixing the amount due from Arnold to the Trotter estate was made on April 14, 1941. In view of the several legal proceedings and investigations which were necessary before commencing the action, including the appointment of an administrator to succeed Arnold, the appointment of an administrator of Arnold's estate, the preparation of an account by Arnold's administrator covering the many years of his administration of the Trotter estate, and the settlement of the account by the court, it should not be concluded there was a delay that amounted to laches.

It is not necessary to discuss other points presented by appellant.

The judgment is reversed. The order denying a motion for a new trial is not an appealable order, and the appeal therefrom is dismissed.

DESMOND, P. J., and SHINN, J., concur.

ESCOLA v. COCA COLA BOTTLING CO. OF FRESNO et al.

Civ. 12415.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.
Aug. 3, 1943.

Hearing Granted Sept. 30, 1943.

1. Negligence 🔑27

The test to be applied in determining whether negligence of bottling company was cause of injuries allegedly sustained by employee of retailer when bottle of beverage broke in her hand was whether bottling company had used reasonable care in view of degree of hazard in use of the article.

2. Negligence 🔑121(2)

The rule of "res ipsa loquitur" applies only where the instrumentality at time of accident was under exclusive control of defendant.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Ipsa Loquitur".

3. Negligence 🔑121(2)

Where there is a division of responsibility in use or management of an instrument which causes injury, and such injury might in equal likelihood have resulted from the separate acts of either one of two or more persons, the "res ipsa loquitur" doctrine cannot be invoked against any one of them.

4. Negligence 🔑121(2)

The "res ipsa loquitur" doctrine applies only when facts proved by plaintiff admit of single inference that accident would not have happened unless defendant had been negligent, although it continues to apply for plaintiff's benefit as against evidence produced by defendant that it may have happened without his negligence.

5. Negligence 🔑121(1)

Where it becomes incumbent on plaintiff to establish negligence other than by application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur because proof does not show exclusive control of defendant, plaintiff must go all the way with his evidence to prove some act or omission on part of defendant on whom he would pass the responsibility.

6. Negligence 🔑121(3)

In action against bottling company by employee of retailer for injuries claimed to have been suffered by reason of bottle of beverage breaking in her hand, where there was no evidence as to negligence of bottling company in manufacture of bottle, preparation of beverage, or in bottling of product, or as to careful handling by retailer following delivery by distributor, a judgment for plaintiff could not be sustained under "res ipsa loquitur" doctrine.

PETERS, P. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; James D. Garibaldi, Judge.

Action by Gladys Escola against Coca Cola Bottling Company of Fresno and others for personal injuries claimed to have been suffered by plaintiff by reason of a bottle breaking in her hand. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff against the named defendant, the named defendant appeals.

Reversed.

H. K. Landram, of Merced, for appellant.

C. Ray Robinson, Willard B. Treadwell, Dean S. Lesher, and Loraine B. Rogers, all of Merced (Belli & Leahy and Melvin M. Belli, all of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

WARD, Justice.

This action is for personal injuries claimed to have been suffered by plaintiff by reason of a bottle breaking in her hand. The defendant, Coca Cola Bottling Company of Fresno, a corporation, appeals from a judgment in her favor following a verdict by a jury. Also named as defendants were Coca Cola Company and the Pacific Coast Coca Cola Bottling Company, both corporations, but the action was dismissed as to them at the trial prior to the introduction of evidence.

The complaint alleged that defendants "were negligent and failed in their duty to the plaintiff by selling to [her] employer bottles containing said beverage [coca cola] which, on account of excessive pressure of gas or by reason of some defect in the bottle was dangerous * * * and likely to explode."

In their opening statement counsel for plaintiff declared: "We are going to * * * rest our case completely on this doctrine we call res ipsa loquitur: The thing speaks for itself. Our theory of the case is that we have no way of showing any specific act of negligence."

Plaintiff testified that by order of the Industrial Accident Commission she had been paid for partial loss of wages.

At the time of the accident plaintiff was transferring bottles of coca cola from cases delivered at her place of employment to a refrigerator. She testified: "I picked up the case of Coke and set it on a box which contained the ice cream in the Waffle Shop, and I proceeded to take one bottle at a time from the case to put it into the refrigerator. I had put three in the refrigerator when I picked up the fourth one. I had moved about 18 inches when it exploded in my hand." An employee of defendant company answered in the affirmative the following question: "You have found broken bottles of Coca-Cola when you took the cases out of the warehouse, haven't you?" Upon testimony as to the injury sustained, and the evidence as above stated, plaintiff rested.

There was no evidence of negligence as alleged in the complaint or otherwise, and, as appears, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not applicable to the facts herein. Defendant moved for a nonsuit. The court denied the motion but suggested that the matter be argued further on a motion for a directed verdict at the conclusion of the case. Such a motion, and also a motion for judgment in favor of defendant notwithstanding the verdict of the jury and also a motion for new trial, were made and denied.

In making its case the defendant introduced evidence showing the methods and the care used in the manufacture and bottling of the beverage. It appears that approved, modern means are used, and that each bottle is inspected four times. A representative of the company which manufactured the bottle involved testified as to the process of its manufacture.

Appellant does not attack the sufficiency of defendant's evidence as to the exercise of due care in the manufacture of the container, the preparation of the beverage, or in the "bottling" of the product; but suggests that the use of "so many inspectors conclusively showed the recognition of the dangerous character of the instrumentality and of the possibility of a defective bottle sneaking by." Many instrumentalities, such as automobiles, airplanes, heating contrivances, electrical supplies, drugs, inflammable liquids, beverages, etc., may be dangerous if imperfectly manufactured or improperly used; but in this age such articles are considered necessities of life. If the manufacturer, in addition to liability for breach of an express or implied warranty, is to be held financially responsible not only for inexpert preparation or manufacture, but for improper use by the general public, he then becomes an insurer. In such a situation, manufacturing as a practical business could not be successfully carried on until the process of manufacture had reached such perfection as to make the product "foolproof."

[1] Reasonable care in view of the degree of hazard in the use of the article is the rule applied. The Supreme Court of this state recently approved that rule. In Gerber v. Faber, 54 Cal.App.2d 674, 680, 129 P.2d 485, 488, the court said: "In a case involving a question of negligence in the manufacture of a chair, the court in Sheward v. Virtue, 1942, 20 Cal.2d [410, at 414], 126 P.2d 345, 347, said: 'The appropriate standard of care applicable to the facts of the present case is expressed in O'Rourke v. Day & Night Water Heater Co., Ltd., supra (31 Cal.App. 2d 364 [366], 88 P.2d 191), to the effect that if the defective condition of the part could have been disclosed by reasonable inspection and tests, and such inspection and tests had been omitted, the defendant has been negligent. In Smith v. Peerless Glass Co., Inc., 259 N. Y. 292, 181 N.E. 576, it was held that reasonable care consisted of making the inspections and tests during the course of manufacture and after the article was completed which the manufacturer should recognize were reasonably necessary to secure the production of a safe article.' This rule is the one under which defendant's conduct is to be examined for negligence."

The difficulty in attempting to affirm the present judgment is that the reviewing court is not presented with any evidence of negligence on defendant's part, or even testimony tending to contradict the evidence of the defendant respecting its method of manufacture and the care used by it throughout the entire process presented under the res ipsa loquitur rule imposed upon it at the trial, or any dereliction of duty in the preparation or manufacture of the product. To hold defendant responsible it is necessary to surmise that a defective bottle "sneaked by" without proper test or inspection, and to adopt a special res ipsa loquitur rule covering carbonated beverages without applying it generally to other articles, or to hold that the breaking of bottles in a manufacturing plant, warehouse, or on way to point of delivery, prior to the time when the maker ceases to have exclusive control is notice to him of defective manufacture and resulting hazard. This reasoning is not applicable to the present case as it assumes that which is in doubt, namely, a negligent act which caused the breaking. There is no evidence in the present case that the breakage of bottles in the warehouse was caused by "explosion," and no evidence of "improper charging." The plaintiff herein referred to the breaking as an explosion, but described its sound as a "loud pop" similar to the breaking of an "electric light bulb."

There is expert testimony, based upon a description of the manner in which the bottle broke, that the breakage could have been due to some external blow and not from internal pressure or thermal change. This evidence is uncontradicted. On cross-examination the attack was rather that the witness had testified for the Coca Cola and other companies in other cases.

[2-5] The present case is quite similar factually, and in respect of the points urged by plaintiff on appeal, to that of Gerber v. Faber, supra, pages 685, 686 of 54 Cal.App.2d, page 491 of 129 P.2d, where the court said: "The definition of res ipsa loquitur as a rule of law, quoted in Hill v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 1913, 22 Cal.App. 788, 790, 136 P. 492, from the opinion in San Juan Light & Transit Co. v. Requena, 224 U.S. 89, 99, 32 S.Ct. 399, 56 L.Ed. 680, emphasizes that the rule applies only where the instrumentality at the time of the accident was under the exclusive control of the defendant, and that is the interpretation of the doctrine which has been applied by our courts without exception. Where there is a division of responsibility in the use or management of the instrument which causes the injury, and such injury might in equal likelihood have resulted from the separate act or acts of either one of two or more persons, the res ipsa loquitur doctrine cannot be invoked against any one of them. Speidel v. Lacer, 1934, 2 Cal.App.2d 528, 38 P.2d 477; White v. Spreckels, 1909, 10 Cal.App. 287, 101 P. 920, 923. The res ipsa loquitur doctrine applies only when the facts proved by the plaintiff admit of the single inference that the accident would not have happened unless the defendant had been negligent, although it continues to apply for plaintiff's benefit as against evidence produced by defendant that it may have happened without his negligence. Lejeune v. General Petroleum Corp., 1932, 128 Cal.App. 404, 18 P.2d 429; see, also, cases collected in 19 Cal.Jur. 708 and 10-Yr. Supplement. When, therefore, it becomes incumbent upon plaintiff to establish negligence other than by application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, because the proof does not show exclusive control in the defendant, he must go all the way with his evidence and prove some act or omission on the part of the defendant or defendants upon whom he would fasten responsibility. A contrary rule would upset many settled rules of evidence in negligence cases." Plaintiff claims "certain decidedly distinguishable" facts in the present case from those in the Gerber case. The only differences are that defendant herein is a bottler and distributor; in the Gerber case the court found that defendant was a manufacturer, maker, bottler, keeper, maintainer, distributor and seller. Here the bottle was delivered several days before the accident; in the Gerber case it may have been on the truck for a week. Here, again, an employee was injured; in the Gerber case, a customer. In one case the beverage was coca cola; in the other, root beer. The claimed factual discrepancies are inconsequential in determining the identical legal questions.

There are a number of decisions wherein the court held that it was proper to invoke the rule of res ipsa loquitur to the facts of those cases, but, as appears in the Gerber case, the rule there followed is not the general rule in California. In the Gerber case the court considered the conflicting authorities, and the conclusion therein is adopted as the conclusion in this case. The citations appearing the Gerber case are the same as in this, with a few exceptions, notably Bradley v. Conway Springs Bottling Co., 154 Kan. 282, 118 P.2d 601 and Macres v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 290 Mich. 567, 287 N.W. 922. These cases based upon different facts have not changed our views as to the correctness of the decision in the Gerber case.

[6] The Gerber opinion demonstrates exhaustive research and careful consideration, and the conclusion reached should not be repudiated in the present case, based upon similar facts, and identical in that in both cases there was no testimony offered of careful handling by the "retailer" following delivery by the distributor. Respondent's suggestion to the contrary is merely surmise. The retailer did not know when the case was delivered and so testified, and respondent did not present any evidence as to such "care" and did not offer any instruction upon that theory. There is no evidence upon this subject up to the time she placed the case of coca cola upon the box which contained the ice cream and began transferring the bottles to the refrigerator. That the application of res ipsa loquitur to the facts herein "would be an unwarranted extension of that doctrine is readily apparent." Gerber v. Faber, supra, 54 Cal.App.2d page 684, 129 P.2d page 491.

The judgment is reversed.

KNIGHT, J., concurs.

PETERS, Presiding Justice (dissenting).

I dissent.

The defendant bottled and placed in circulation coco-cola, a carbonated beverage. The defendant delivered several cases of that beverage to the restaurant where plaintiff was employed. The defendant's driver placed those cases behind, and underneath, the counter of the restaurant. The cases remained in that same spot for a little over two days. While plaintiff was carefully removing the bottles from the case and placing them in the refrigerator one of the bottles exploded, causing a deep cut over five inches long and one and one-half inches deep on plaintiff's hand. The evidence shows that plaintiff handled the bottle carefully, and did not hit the bottle against any object while removing it from the case. The majority opinion holds that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not applicable to such a factual situation. The exact basis of that holding is not clear. Fear is expressed that a contrary ruling would make the bottler an "insurer." The fact that no implied warranty is involved is mentioned, and some emphasis is placed upon the fact that the exploding bottle had been out of the "control" of defendant for over two days. None of these factors, in my opinion, is controlling. Logic, reason and authority compel the conclusion that such a factual situation requires the application of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine.

There is no magic in the phrase "res ipsa loquitur." It is simply one phase of the law of circumstantial evidence. 20 Minn.L.Rev. 241; 22 Cornell Law Quarterly, 39. All that is meant is that on the face of the accident there is no plausible explanation for its cause, of which plaintiff reasonably could be expected to have knowledge, except some negligent conduct on defendant's part. Therefore, it is only fair that negligence will be inferred, and that the duty of going forward with the evidence to rebut that inference should rest on defendant. The doctrine simply raises an inference of negligence on the part of defendant. Mudrick v. Market Street Ry. Co., 11 Cal.2d 724, 81 P.2d 950, 118 A.L.R. 533; Dowd v. Atlas T. & A. Service, 187 Cal. 523, 202 P. 870; Atkinson v. United Railroads of S. F., 71 Cal.App. 82, 234 P. 863; Crooks v. White, 107 Cal. App. 304, 290 P. 497; Even v. Pickwick Stages System, 109 Cal.App. 636, 293 P. 700; Hilson v. Pacific G. & E. Co., 131 Cal.App. 427, 21 P.2d 662; Hubbert v. Aztec Brewing Co., 26 Cal.App.2d 664, 80 P. 2d 185, 1016. The burden of proof is not shifted. Osgood v. Los Angeles, etc., Co., 137 Cal. 280, 70 P. 169, 92 Am.St.Rep. 171; Kahn v. Triest-Rosenberg Cap Co., 139 Cal. 340, 73 P. 164; Diller v. Northern Cal. Power Co., 162 Cal. 531, 123 P. 359, Ann. Cas.1913D, 908; Scarborough v. Urgo, 191 Cal. 341, 216 P. 584; Seitzman v. Srere Corp., 116 Cal.App. 674, 3 P.2d 58; see collection of cases 12 Cal.L.Rev. 138.

If this fundamentally simple rule be applied to the facts of this case, what is the result? The defendant bottled the coca-cola in question and distributed it to his customers for a profit. The defendant had exclusive control of the mixing and bottling process, and had exclusive control of the particular bottle in question until it was delivered in a case furnished by defendant to the restaurant in question. The employee of defendant carefully placed the case behind, and underneath, a counter. The case remained there for a little over two days. The evidence shows that plaintiff carefully lifted the case and carefully removed the bottle. Nevertheless, the bottle exploded. After the bottle left the physical possession of defendant nothing was done to it that would cause it to explode. But it did explode. That does not occur unless someone was negligent. Either the bottle was defective, or the bottle was overcharged, or both. The bottle could not have become defective after it was delivered and before it exploded. Are these circumstances not sufficient to raise an inference that defendant must have been negligent either in supplying a defective bottle or in overcharging it, or both? The burden of going forward with the evidence to rebut the inference in fairness should rest on defendant. The sufficiency of that explanation rested with the jury.

It is no obstacle to the application of this doctrine that there was no contractual relationship between plaintiff and defendant. It is now too well settled to require discussion that a manufacturer of any product is liable to third persons for negligence in the manufacture of his product if that product is of such a nature that negligence in its manufacture may cause it to become dangerous and cause injury to third persons. § 395, Restatement of the Law of Torts; Windram Mfg. Co. v. Boston Blacking Co., 239 Mass. 123, 131 N.E. 454, 17 A.L.R. 672; Heckel v. Ford Motor Co., 101 N.J. L. 385, 128 A. 242, 39 A.L.R. 992; 63 A.L. R. 340; Baxter v. Ford Motor Co., 168 Wash. 456, 12 P.2d 409, 15 P.2d 1118, 105 A.L.R. 1502; Chanin v. Chevrolet Motor Co., 7 Cir., 89 F.2d 889, 111 A. L.R. 1239; Dahms v. General Elevator Co., 214 Cal. 733, 7 P.2d 1013; Kalash v. Los Angeles Ladder Co., 1 Cal.2d 229, 34 P.2d 481; Sheward v. Virtue, 20 Cal. 2d 410, 126 P.2d 345; O'Rourke v. Day & Night W. H. Co., 31 Cal.App.2d 364, 88 P.2d 191; Hall v. Barber Door Co., 218 Cal. 412, 23 P.2d 279; MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co., 217 N.Y. 382, 111 N.E. 1050, L.R.A.1916F, 696, Ann.Cas.1916C, 440. This does not make the manufacturer an "insurer." It simply means that he is liable for negligence to third persons not in a contractual relationship to him.

An inference of negligence cannot arise unless the defendant had "control" of the instrumentality causing the injury. But that "control" does not necessarily mean physical possession. Thus, to give an elementary example, if a foreign substance in a can of beans causes injury to a third person, it could not reasonably be contended that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur did not apply although the can of beans may have been out of the possession of the canner for an appreciable length of time. In the instant case the bottler had exclusive control until the case of coca-cola was placed under the counter. From the evidence, it is a reasonable inference that no one touched that case until plaintiff started to place the bottles in the refrigerator. Thus, we are faced with a situation where the jury reasonably could find, and impliedly did so in the present case, that after the defendant surrendered physical possession of the case of bottles, no one touched them prior to the plaintiff's careful handling in placing them in the refrigerator. This evidence of non-accessibility and careful handling after leaving defendant's possession leaves the case in the same situation as if the bottle had exploded while still in defendant's possession.

There are many cases dealing with the problem of whether the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable to the explosion of a bottle of carbonated beverage after the bottle has left the possession of the bottler. Where the only evidence is that the bottle exploded, some cases do hold that the doctrine is not applicable. See annotation 4 A.L.R. 1094. But where there is not only evidence of the fact that the bottle exploded, but also evidence that the bottle was carefully handled after it left the physical possession of the bottler, the weight of authority, quantitatively and qualitatively, seems to be that whatever the rule may be as to ordinary beverages, the doctrine applies to carbonated beverages. See cases collected 8 A.L.R. 500; 39 A.L.R. 1006; 56 A.L.R. 593. Some of the more recent cases holding that the doctrine is applicable where there is evidence of an explosion of a carbonated beverage, plus evidence of careful handling after it left the possession of the bottler, are: Bradley v. Conway Springs Bottling Co., 154 Kan. 282, 118 P.2d 601; Ortego v. Nehi Bottling Co., La.App., 6 So.2d 674, 677; Lanza v. De Ridder Coca Cola Bottling Co., La.App., 3 So.2d 217; Auzene v. Gulf Public Service Co., La.App., 188 So. 512; Stolle v. Anheuser-Busch, 307 Mo. 520, 271 S.W. 497, 39 A. L.R. 1001; Benkendorfer v. Garrett, Tex. Civ.App., 143 S.W.2d 1020; Macon Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Crane, 55 Ga.App. 573, 190 S.E. 879; MacPherson v. Canada Dry Ginger Ale, Inc., 129 N.J.L. 365, 29 A.2d 868; Macres v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 290 Mich. 567, 287 N.W. 922; Healey v. Trodd, 124 N.J.L. 64, 11 A.2d 88, affirming 122 N.J. L. 603, 7 A.2d 640; Middlesboro Coca-Cola Bottling Works v. Campbell, 179 Va. 693, 20 S.E.2d 479; Ashkenazi v. Nehi Bottling Co., 217 N.C. 552, 8 S.E.2d 818; Georgia-Alabama Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. White, 55 Ga.App. 706, 191 S.E. 265; Atlanta Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Danneman, 25 Ga. App. 43, 102 S.E. 542.

The theory of these cases is that the bottler has put into circulation for public consumption a beverage which, if negligently concocted, or, if negligently placed in a defective bottle, becomes an inherently dangerous substance in the nature of a potential explosive; that when such a bottle explodes someone must have been negligent; that where the direct or circumstantial evidence excludes everyone but the bottler he should have the burden of explaining the occurrence; that under such circumstances the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable.

The majority opinion places great reliance on the case of Gerber v. Faber, 54 Cal. App.2d 674, 129 P.2d 485 (no hearing asked in the Supreme Court). In that case the bottler of root beer sold the same to an independent distributor, who sold to the proprietor of a store. The plaintiff was injured when the bottle exploded while he was removing it from the refrigerator, to which all customers had access. It was held that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was not applicable. The exact basis of the court's decision was that the bottler had parted with possession and control of the bottle when he sold to the independent distributor; that the bottle in question may have been on the distributor's truck for a week; that there was no evidence of careful handling by the distributor or by the retailer. Under such circumstances it would be improper to infer that the bottler was negligent to the exclusion of the distributor and retailer, and, therefore, the doctrine is not applicable. These thoughts are expressed in the following language (54 Cal.App.2d at page 686, 129 P.2d at page 491): "It is clear that plaintiff's accident may have resulted from some cause other than any negligence on the part of defendant. It appeared from the testimony of the distributor Weinberger that the bottle which exploded in plaintiff's hand may have been on his truck for a week. There was no evidence that the bottle had been carefully handled during that time or during the process of its delivery to defendant Faber nor by the latter or his employees when it was placed in the cooler. In addition to all of this, there is the admitted fact that Faber's customers were allowed to help themselves from the cooler, and it does not appear how frequently that was done nor the manner in which it was done. The law does not impose liability upon one party in favor of another upon suspicion or mere supposition. Plaintiff had the opportunity and the only opportunity to prove, if it were a fact, that the glass contained a flaw and his evidence, as we have seen, failed completely in that respect. The res ipsa loquitur doctrine cannot be applied so as to raise an inference that the bottle was cracked while in defendant's possession, to the exclusion of the inference that it may have been cracked thereafter. As we have stated, it retained its pressure up to the time when it was handled by plaintiff and it is at least as reasonable to infer that it was cracked after it left defendant's warehouse as to infer that it was cracked before. If it was carefully bottled and handled by defendant and was cracked thereafter, defendant would not be guilty of negligence and the res ipsa loquitur doctrine would cease to be applicable from the time the bottle passed from defendant's exclusive control."

With this ground of the decision I agree. Such holding in no way is applicable to the facts of the instant case where the missing element of evidence of careful handling after leaving the possession of the bottler was supplied.

It must be conceded, however, that there is dicta in the opinion to the effect that in the absence of evidence of many other explosions known to the bottler and occurring at or about the same time, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not applicable even if there were evidence of careful handling after the bottle left the possession of the bottler. That dicta, in my opinion, is erroneous, is contrary to the many well-reasoned cases above cited, violates logic and reason, and should not be followed.

Defendant places much emphasis on the testimony of its experts relating to the care used in the bottling process to discover defective bottles and to prevent overcharging. According to those witnesses it would be highly improbable for a defective bottle to slip by the inspectors. But this bottle did slip by, and it did explode. The weight to be given to defendant's testimony on this point was obviously for the jury.

In my opinion the judgment should be affirmed.

60 Cal.App.2d 73

PEOPLE v. D'ANGELO.

Cr. 3703.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 30, 1943.

1. Gaming ⚷75(1)

It is the keeping or occupancy of a room or place with paraphernalia for purpose of recording bets on horse races, among other kinds of contests, that is covered by statute denouncing as crime the keeping of place for recording of bets on horse races. Pen.Code, § 337a, subd. 2.

2. Gaming ⚷98(5)

In prosecution for occupying premises with paraphernalia for purpose of recording bets upon results of horse races, although prosecution was required to prove that place was kept or occupied for purpose set forth, it was not necessary to make that proof by direct evidence. Pen. Code, § 337a, subd. 2.

3. Gaming ⚷98(5)

In prosecution for keeping premises with paraphernalia for purpose of recording bets upon results of horse races, purpose in keeping the place could be determined from surrounding circumstances shown in evidence. Pen.Code, § 337a, subd. 2.

4. Criminal law ⚷1159(2)

A finding of guilt reasonably justified by evidence cannot be disturbed.

5. Gaming ⚷98(5)

Evidence sustained conviction of keeping and occupying premises with paraphernalia for purpose of recording bets upon results of horse races. Pen.Code, § 337a, subd. 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Newcomb Condee, Judge.

Sam D'Angelo was convicted of keeping and occupying certain premises with books, papers, and paraphernalia for the purpose of recording bets upon the results of horse races and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Max M. Solomon, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Eugene M. Elson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Defendant was accused of the crime of violation of section 337a, subdivision 2, of the Penal Code, in that he kept and occupied certain premises in Los Angeles with books, papers, and paraphernalia for the purpose of recording bets upon the results of horse races. It was also alleged in the information that defendant had been convicted previously in Pennsylvania of the crime of "breaking and entering with intent to commit larceny, a felony," and he had served a term of imprisonment therefor in the state prison. He pleaded not guilty, and denied the prior conviction. Trial by jury was waived. The court adjudged that defendant was guilty, and that the charge of prior conviction was true; and sentenced him to imprisonment in the county jail for 30 days. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial. His contention is that the evidence was not sufficient to support the judgment.

The case was submitted to the trial court, upon the transcript of the preliminary hearing, with a stipulation that police officer Jenkins, a witness at that hearing, was qualified as "an expert on bookmaking matters"; and upon the testimony of the defendant at the trial. That transcript showed that police officer Conly testified as follows: He went into a beer parlor in Los Angeles, known as the Village Cafe, on December 2, 1942 (the day before the arrest), about 2:45 p. m., and from a place near the entrance he observed defendant standing at the "far end" of the bar, which was 30 or 35 feet in length. Six or seven men at the other end of the bar, who were looking at scratch sheets, made notations on "a slip" of paper, called defendant over, and gave the slip of paper to him. On three occasions, during the 30 minutes the witness was there drinking two bottles of beer, he saw those men hand money to defendant, and saw defendant go into a back room and come out of that room after he had been in there about one-half of a minute. On the next day, December 3rd, about 3 p. m., he (witness) went into the same place again and saw "these men" sitting at the bar, looking at scratch sheets. He also saw one of the men, whose name was Frakes, make notations on a pad of paper on three occasions, call defendant over, talk to defendant a minute, and then give defendant a slip of paper, some currency and silver. On those occasions he saw defendant write on a pad and immediately go into the back room. Defendant came out of the back room after 7 or 8 minutes. He also saw another man make notations on a pad, call defendant over, and give money to him; and on that occasion he saw defendant "go with the slip of paper" into the back room, and come out again. In about 10 minutes thereafter, Frakes made notations on a pad, while looking at a scratch sheet, and called the defendant over after making the notations and gave him some money. On that occasion defendant took the slip of paper and went into the back room again. Then he (witness) went out and signaled to police officer Jenkins. When the witness saw the other officer coming, he returned to the cafe and went back to the place where "these men" were with the scratch sheets and where one of them was making notations on a scratch sheet. Just as the other officer entered the door the defendant looked toward the other officer, turned to Frakes and said, "Nix, nix." Frakes immediately put a pencil in his pocket, and about that time the other officer took the scratch sheet from Frakes. He saw some of the other men writing on slips also. He saw defendant serve drinks to persons in the cafe on December 3rd. He saw defendant write on the pads of paper, tear off the top sheet, put the pads back on the bar in front of the men sitting there, and then go into the back room. He did not see what defendant wrote on the pads. The way to the lavatory was through that back room.

The transcript of the preliminary hearing showed that police officer Jenkins testified in substance as follows: On December 3, 1942, officer Conly entered the place referred to approximately 25 feet ahead of him, went to the bar, and stood by Frakes who was sitting at the bar. Defendant was standing on the inside of the bar in front of Frakes. When he (witness) was about 5 feet within the place, defendant looked at the witness and then turned toward Frakes. He (witness) went to the end of the counter where the National Scratch Sheet, referred to as exhibit B, was on the counter under Frakes' hand and in front of defendant. The witness pulled the scratch sheet from under Frakes' hand and took two pads, referred to as exhibit A, which were on the counter. Officer Conly reached under the bar in front of a man who was sitting next to Frakes, "pulled out" the Metropolitan Scratch Sheet, and put it on the counter. He found a certain group of papers, referred to as a part of exhibit C, in a beer carton (the other part of exhibit C) in the back room. The cover of the carton was down and another carton was on top of it. A Metropolitan Scratch Sheet, dated December 2, 1942, and another group of small slips of paper, referred to as exhibit D, were found also in that carton. A Metropolitan Scratch Sheet, dated December 1, 1942, and another group of papers, referred to as exhibit E, were found also by him in that carton. An envelope containing certain papers, referred to as exhibit F, were found also in that carton. One of the pieces of paper found in exhibit C which had upon it the figure 6 followed by the words, "Paula's Lulu," and the figure "7" followed by the words, "Rock Hesive," and "X-1-X" in parenthesis, was a betting marker. That his opinion was that "Paula's Lulu" was the name of a horse running in the sixth race at Bay Meadows, parlayed to a horse named "Rock Hesive" running in the seventh race at Bay Meadows; that the figure "X-1-X" indicated nothing to win, one to place, and nothing to show; that the words, "Big Fred," at the bottom of the paper, was the better. He compared the letters and figures on that paper with the scratch sheet dated the day of the arrest, and found that the two names thereon appeared on the scratch sheet as names of horses in the sixth and seventh races at Bay Meadows. He checked the rest of the slips of paper in exhibit C and found that the names thereon appeared on the National and Metropolitan Scratch Sheets of December 3rd, the day of the arrest. He examined some of the slips of paper in exhibit D and found that the names thereon were on the scratch sheet for December 2nd. He examined the slips of paper in exhibit E and found that the names thereon were on the scratch sheet for December 1st. That in the business of bookmaking, papers such as exhibits A and F were called betting paraphernalia, scratch sheets, and betting markers. The radio was in operation when he was there and he heard a broadcast that gave results of a race at Bay Meadows. He asked defendant how much rent he paid at that place and defendant said $80 a month. He also asked defendant "if he phoned those bets he took in to anyone else?" Defendant said he did not, that he kept them himself and, "Give me a break—it will ruin my business." He said to defendant that it appeared that defendant had done a good business as far as bookmaking was concerned, and defendant said, "Well, that is only the proceeds for the last three days." When he asked defendant about the loose slips in the box, he said that was "the business for today." Defendant also said the place belonged to his sister and "he just managed the place." He did not see defendant put anything in the carton. Frakes was arrested also. He (witness) did not hear a telephone ring while he was there. That the way to the lavatory was through that back room.

An exemplified copy of the record of the alleged prior conviction of defendant was received in evidence. Defendant submitted that issue without presenting any evidence thereon.

Defendant did not testify at the preliminary hearing, but he testified in the superior court in substance as follows: That he was a bartender; that at the time of his arrest he was back of the bar putting beer bottles in a case; that he did not take any wagers from any people in the bar that afternoon; that the bar was not owned by him; that he was an employee there; that he was not a bookmaker; that the betting markers found in the back room were not his; that he did not have any idea who put them there; that the writing on one of those betting markers found in the back room might have been written by him; that he, himself, made several bets with a man on the corner that day and he (defendant) kept a record of those bets.

It was stipulated that some of the betting markers found in the rear room were in his handwriting.

Defendant's argument is that the elements of the crime were not proved; that it was not proved that he was occupying the premises for the purposes denounced by Section 337a, subdivision 2, of the Penal Code; that the betting markers were found in a rear room which was accessible to defendant and the patrons; that defendant was an employee; and that no betting markers were found on defendant's person or in his possession. No contention was made that the papers found in the carton in the rear room were not papers and paraphernalia for the purpose of recording bets on horse races.

Scratch sheets and pads of papers were on the counter where defendant and several of the patrons had transactions. Money and slips of paper were passed on several occasions from the men at the counter to defendant after the men had made notations on the pads of paper and called defendant to them, and defendant went immediately thereafter to the rear room with the slips of paper which had been handed to him by the men. Several scratch sheets and betting markers, some of which had defendant's handwriting upon them, were concealed in a carton in a rear room of the premises and defendant said he had no idea who had put them there. Names on the betting markers were the same as names of horses running in the races at the Bay Meadows track on the day of the arrest, and on the two preceding days. The results of the Bay Meadows races were received by radio in the bar soon after the arrest. Defendant showed consciousness of guilt when he said, "Nix, nix," to Frakes, who was writing on the scratch sheet as the officer Jenkins entered the place, and when he asked the officer for a "break." His statement, in referring to his arrest, "It will ruin my business," indicated that he was occupying the premises to conduct a business which belonged to him.

[1-4] It is the keeping or occupancy of a room or place with papers, or paraphernalia for the purpose of recording bets on horse races, among other kinds of contests, that is denounced by subdivision 2 of said section 337a. People v. Manning, 1940, 37 Cal.App.2d 41, 43, 98 P.2d 748; People v. Hinkle, 1923, 64 Cal.App. 375, 380, 221 P.693. Although it was incumbent upon the prosecution to prove that the place was kept or occupied for the purpose set forth in said subdivision 2, it was not necessary to make that proof by direct evidence. People v. Tuttle, 1938, 27 Cal. App.2d 647, 649, 81 P.2d 571. The purpose in keeping the place could be determined from the surrounding circumstances shown in evidence. People v. Tepper, 1940, 36 Cal.App.2d 525, 527, 97 P.2d 1002. If the circumstances shown in evidence reasonably justify the finding of guilt by the trial court, a reviewing court is not warranted in disturbing the finding. People v. Newland, 1940, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778. See, also, People v.

Vertlieb, Cal.Sup., 1943, 137 P.2d 437; and People v. Allen, Cal.Sup. 1943, 137 P.2d 439.

[5] The evidence was sufficient to support the judgment.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

SHINN, Acting P. J., and SHAW, Justice pro tem., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 54

CITY OF OJAI v. CHAFFEE, Auditor of Ventura County.

Civ. 14088.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 30, 1943.

1. Mandamus 🔑164(3)

The allegations of petition for a writ of mandate would be taken as true where answer failed to comply with form of denial permitted by Code of Civil Procedure. Code Civ.Proc. § 437.

2. Counties 🔑153½

County taxes under statute relating to cancellation of taxes constituted a "thing of value" within constitutional provision prohibiting legislature from making any gift of public money or thing of value. St.1939, p. 1367, § 4986.3; Const. art. 4, § 31.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Thing of Value".

3. Counties 🔑153½

As far as mere mode of procedure is concerned, act of cancellation of county taxes would be the making of a "gift" within constitutional provision prohibiting legislature from making any gift of any public money or thing of value. St.1939, p. 1367, § 4986.3; Const. art. 4, § 31.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Gift".

4. Counties 🔑153½
Municipal corporations 🔑871

The fact that county and city are arms of the state will not necessarily prevent a transfer from one to the other from being a gift within constitutional provision prohibiting legislature from making any gift of any public money or thing of value. Const. art. 4, § 31.

5. States 🔑119

In determining whether an appropriation of public funds is a "gift" prohibited by constitution, primary subject of inquiry is as to whether money is to be used for a public or private purpose, and if it is for a public purpose, it is not, generally speaking, regarded as a "gift". Const. art. 4, § 31.

6. Counties 🔑153½

In determining whether statute authorizing cancellation of taxes charged on property acquired by a city on foreclosure proceedings under Improvement Bond Act of 1915 authorized a gift by the county to city contrary to constitution, considerable weight would be given to resolutions of city council and of county board of supervisors that cancellation was in furtherance of plan to restore delinquent properties to private ownership and would be in the public interest. St.1939, p. 1367, § 4986.3; Const. art. 4, § 31.

7. Constitutional law 🔑48

There is a strong presumption in favor of constitutionality of statute, and it may not be held invalid until presumption is overcome, either by facts appearing upon face thereof or by such others as are matters of judicial notice.

8. Constitutional law 🔑48

Where validity of statute depends on existence of a certain state of facts, it will be presumed that the legislature ascertained existence of such facts before passing the law, even though it contains no express finding thereof.

9. Evidence 🔑23(1)

The court would take judicial notice of a condition of overlapping assessments and unduly burdensome taxes and assessments, with resultant abandonment of property to sales for taxes and assessments, prevailing quite widely over the state.

10. Counties 🔑153½

The statute authorizing cancellation of taxes charged on property acquired by a city on foreclosure proceedings under Improvement Bond Act of 1915 does not violate constitutional provision prohibiting legislature from making any gift of any public money or thing of value to any individual, municipal or other corporation. St.1939, p. 1367, § 4986.3; Const. art. 4, § 31.

11. Taxation ⚷=49

The statute authorizing cancellation of taxes charged on public property acquired by a city on foreclosure proceedings under Improvement Bond Act of 1915 does not provide for a "remission of taxes" in violation of constitutional provision requiring property to be taxed in proportion to its value. St.1939, p. 1367, § 4986.3; Const. art. 13, § 1.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Remission of Taxes".

12. Taxation ⚷=42(1)

The statute providing for cancellation of taxes charged on property acquired by a city on foreclosure proceedings under the Improvement Bond Act of 1915 is not invalid as containing discriminatory classification because limited to property subject to bonds issued under the 1915 Act. St. 1939, p. 1367, § 4986.3.

13. Taxation ⚷=552½

Under statute providing that any uncollected tax may be canceled by auditor on order of board of supervisors with consent of district attorney, discretion is vested solely in the supervisors and district attorney, and the auditor is a mere ministerial officer who is required to make the cancellation when properly ordered to do so. St.1939, pp. 1312, 1313, 1367, §§ 2622, 2623, 2625-2627, 4986.3.

Original proceeding by the City of Ojai against J. H. Chaffee, as auditor of the County of Ventura, State of California, for a writ of mandate to test the validity of Section 4986.3 of the Revenue and Taxation Code.

Writ issued.

Stacy C. Bates, of Ventura, for petitioner.

M. Arthur Waite, Dist. Atty., and Julian G. Hathaway, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Ventura, for respondent.

SHAW, Justice pro tem.

This is an original proceeding for a writ of mandate, the object of which is to test the validity of section 4986.3 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, St.1939, p. 1367. That section, while not a part of the original code as enacted in 1939, was added to the code by Chapter 530 of the Statutes of 1939, p. 1922. It appears in the division of the code relating to general property taxation for state and county purposes and is a part of a chapter dealing with the cancellation of assessments and taxes. It reads as follows: "All or any portion of any uncollected tax, penalty, or costs, heretofore or hereafter levied, and not heretofore validly canceled, may, on satisfactory proof, be canceled by the auditor on order of the board of supervisors with the written consent of the district attorney if it was levied or charged on property subject to assessment for the payment of bonds issued under the Improvement Bond Act of 1915 where such property was acquired after the lien date by a city on foreclosure proceedings under the Improvement Bond Act of 1915. If a city is entitled to bring foreclosure proceedings under the Improvement Bond Act of 1915 against any property and the city acquires the property in any other manner than by foreclosure and the governing body of the city by resolution, covering any number of parcels acquired, declares that such acquisition was in lieu of acquisition under foreclosure proceedings, such acquisition is, for the purposes of this section, an acquisition by foreclosure proceedings under the Improvement Bond Act of 1915. This section applies regardless of whether the property acquired by the city is impressed with a public trust or is acquired for the purpose of resale."

The Improvement Bond Act of 1915 referred to by this section is a statute (now included in the Streets and Highways Code, as division 10, by amendment in 1941, St. 1941, p. 956) authorizing the issuance of bonds to represent and be secured by assessments levied in municipalities for the cost of improvements made under any statute,—of which there are several—which authorizes the making of improvements and the assessing of the cost thereof against real property. No bond issued under this act is a charge against any particular parcel of real property, but all the bonds issued for any improvement are secured generally by all the unpaid assessments levied therefor. If, after bonds are issued, an assessment becomes delinquent, it may be foreclosed, either by proceedings taken out of court by the municipal tax collector, or by an action to foreclose brought by the city. In either case the city may buy the property at the foreclosure sale and in certain cases must do so when there is no other purchaser; and when it becomes the purchaser it must pay into the proper fund the amount of the delinquent assessment, and also of all instalments which thereafter become delinquent. The lien of assessments under this act is subject to that of state, county, and municipal taxes, as well as that of other special assessments having priority.

[1] The petition herein alleges that there is a large number of properties in the County of Ventura, both within and without the City of Ojai, which are subject to delinquent assessments under the Improvement Bond Act of 1915, and that in a large number of instances the market value of these properties is substantially less than the aggregate of taxes, assessments, penalties and costs which are a lien upon them; and that the problem here presented is not limited to the County of Ventura but is common to many municipalities in the state. Respondent has filed an answer attempting to deny these allegations, but it is not effective for that purpose, by reason of its failure to comply with the form of denial permitted by law (Code Civ. Proc. sec. 437). We therefore take these allegations as true.

Proceeding under section 4986.3 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, above quoted, the City Council of the City of Ojai passed a resolution declaring that said city was entitled to bring foreclosure proceedings under the Improvement Bond Act of 1915 against the real property involved in this proceeding, that in lieu of such foreclosure it had acquired said property in a manner other than by foreclosure; that this was done "in conformity with a general plan adopted to acquire and to return to private ownership the properties in said City subject to delinquent assessments levied under the provisions of said Act, and/or to delinquent City and/or County taxes, and that the property above described has therefore been acquired and is therefore held for the purpose of resale to accomplish such object," and that "the public interest and necessity require, and the general interest of the City of Ojai and of the County of Ventura will be served and promoted" by the cancellation of any uncollected taxes levied upon the property, and requesting the cancellation of such taxes under section 4986.3. The Board of Supervisors of the County of Ventura passed a resolution reciting the same facts as to the mode of acquisition of the property by the city, finding that the public interest and necessity and the general interest of the city and the county will be served by granting the city's request, and directing the respondent, as Auditor of the County of Ventura "to cancel any uncollected tax, penalty or costs heretofore levied, and not heretofore validly canceled" upon the property in question. The District Attorney of the County endorsed his written consent to the cancellation upon this resolution, but when it was presented to respondent he refused to make the cancellation and the writ is sought to compel him to do so.

[2-4] Respondent's only contention in support of his refusal is that section 4986.3 of the Revenue and Taxation Code is unconstitutional. His first and principal point is that it, in effect, authorizes a gift of public property of the county, that is, the unpaid taxes which are to be cancelled, to the city, contrary to section 31 of Article IV of the California Constitution. That section reads, in material part, as follows: "The legislature shall have no power to * * *; nor shall it have power to make any gift or authorize the making of any gift, of any public money or thing of value to any individual, municipal or other corporation whatever * * *." We see no reason to doubt that the county taxes to be cancelled under the code provision in question constitute a "thing of value" and so come within the purview of this constitutional prohibition. Nor do we doubt that, as far as mere mode of procedure is concerned, the act of cancellation would be the making of a gift. While nothing would be literally handed over by the county to the city, the latter would receive the same benefit as if the county had delivered so much money to it and the city had then used the money to pay the taxes. (County of San Bernardino v. Way, (1941) 18 Cal.2d 647, 654, 117 P.2d 354.) So, too, the fact that both the county and the city are arms of the state would not necessarily prevent a transfer from one to the other from being a gift. As the Supreme Court said, in City of Oakland v. Garrison, (1924) 194 Cal. 298,

303, 228 P. 433, this constitutional provision "would prevent the appropriation of county funds to a municipal corporation even for a public purpose, if that purpose were purely municipal and of no interest or benefit to the county as a political subdivision."

[5] We are thus brought to a consideration of the nature and purpose of the transaction authorized by the statute, in order to determine whether it constitutes a gift. In County of San Diego v. Hammond, (1936) 6 Cal.2d 709, 721, 59 P.2d 478, 105 A.L.R. 1155, the Supreme Court said: "It is well settled that in determining whether any appropriation of public funds is to be deemed a gift 'the primary and fundamental subject of inquiry is as to whether the money is to be used for a public or private purpose. If it is for a public purpose * * * it is not, generally speaking to be regarded as a gift.' (City of Oakland v. Garrison, 194 Cal. 298, 302 [228 P. 433].)" This declaration of principle was approved and followed in County of Los Angeles v. Jones, (1936) 6 Cal.2d 695, 705, 59 P.2d 489, and County of Alameda v. Janssen, (1940) 16 Cal.2d 276, 281, 106 P.2d 11, 130 A.L.R. 1141, and it was quoted with approval and followed in County of San Bernardino v. Way, supra, (1941) 18 Cal.2d 647, 653, 117 P.2d 354.

In all of these cases except the Janssen case the court had under consideration a series of statutes passed in the last few years in an attempt to remedy the situation arising out of the recent depression and so well known that the court took notice of its general outlines (County of San Bernardino v. Way, supra, 18 Cal.2d at page 660, 117 P.2d 354), in which large amounts of property, especially that lying in special assessment districts, many of which overlapped, had become overburdened with taxes and assessments, and delinquent in the payment thereof, had been sold to state or city for non-payment of such taxes and assessments and had thereby been exempted from taxation and removed from the tax rolls, so that such property no longer produced any revenue for public purposes. For further descriptions of this situation see the opinions in County of San Diego v. Childs, (1932) 217 Cal. 109, 113, 114, 17 P.2d 734; County of Los Angeles v. Rockhold, (1935) 3 Cal.2d 192, 195, 196, 44 P.2d 340, 100 A.L.R. 149; County of San Diego v. Hammond, supra, 6 Cal.2d 725, 726, 59 P.2d 478, 105 A.L.R. 1155; County of Los Angeles v. Jones, supra, 6 Cal.2d 706, 59 P.2d 489. The statutes involved in County of San Diego v. Hammond, supra, and County of Los Angeles v. Jones, supra, were in the nature of refunding statutes, operating to reduce in amount and refund bonds which had previously been issued for special or local improvements, in the doing of which the county was to aid by a contribution of money from its funds. In County of San Bernardino v. Way, supra, the county's contribution to the refunding plan was to be by way of cancelling delinquent general taxes upon the land subject to the assessments which were refunded. The purpose, or at least one of the purposes, in each of the three cases last cited was to restore the property in question to the tax rolls and make it once more a source of public revenue and it was held in each case that this was a public purpose in which the county was interested (see Anglo California National Bank v. Leland, (1937) 9 Cal.2d 347, 352, 70 P.2d 937, to the same effect) and that a contribution by it to bring about that purpose was not a gift, although private persons might incidentally benefit from it by a reduction in the total amount of taxes and assessments standing against their land. The court in County of San Diego v. Hammond, supra, at 6 Cal.2d 727, 59 P.2d 487, 105 A.L.R. 1155, stated its conclusion thus: "Our conclusion upon the question under discussion is that the Act of 1935 (Stats. of 1935, chap. 10, p. 63) is not subject to the constitutional objection that it authorizes the gift of public money to an individual or to any private purpose. The express purpose of the act is to restore to the tax rolls of the county the large amount of property within said delinquent assessment districts, which now, due to said excessive assessments, have been sold to the state and are contributing absolutely nothing to the support of the county government. This purpose is one within the constitutional powers of the legislature to accomplish, and it is not rendered futile by the fact that in carrying it out certain individuals incidentally are benefited thereby."

[6-10] Section 4986.3 of the Revenue and Taxation Code appears to be another statute passed for the same general purpose as were those considered in the cases above cited and the same rules should be applied to it. It is true it contains no express statement of its purpose and no recital of the facts moving the legislature to adopt it. The admitted allegations of the petition herein show the existence of a similar state of facts. The resolution of the City Council of the City of Ojai shows that the cancellation here will be in furtherance of a plan to restore delinquent properties to private ownership, and both that resolution and the resolution of the County Board of Supervisors state that the cancellation here will be in the public interest. Such declarations are given considerable weight. (County of San Diego v. Hammond, supra, 6 Cal.2d 726, 59 P.2d 478, 105 A.L.R. 1155; County of Los Angeles v. Jones, supra, 6 Cal.2d 705, 59 P.2d 489; County of San Bernardino v. Way, supra, 18 Cal.2d 654, 117 P.2d 354.) But it is not necessary that facts showing the validity of a statute be affirmatively shown in order to require a court to uphold it. The statute comes before the court with a strong presumption in favor of its constitutionality (Jersey Maid, etc., Co. v. Brock, (1939) 13 Cal.2d 620, 636, 91 P.2d 577; Hart v. City of Beverly Hills, (1938) 11 Cal.2d 343, 348, 79 P.2d 1080) and before it can be held invalid that presumption must be overcome, either by facts appearing upon the face of the statute or by such others as are matters of judicial notice. (5 Cal.Jur. 631; Los Angeles County F. C. Dist. v. Hamilton, (1917) 177 Cal. 119, 125, 169 P. 1028, and cases cited; Frohliger v. Richardson, (1923) 63 Cal.App. 209, 214, 218 P. 497.) If the validity of a statute depends on the existence of a certain state of facts, it will be presumed that the legislature has investigated and ascertained the existence of that state of facts before passing the law. (5 Cal.Jur. 632; Galeener v. Honeycutt, (1916) 173 Cal. 100, 104, 159 P. 595.) This is true even though the statute contains no express finding of such facts. (Galeener v. Honeycutt, supra.) Here we find nothing in the statute itself on which to base a conclusion of unconstitutionality, for its very terms suggest, even if they do not state, the existence of such a condition as was held to justify similar statutes in the cases above cited. Nor does our judicial notice produce anything to the disadvantage of the statute, for while we may, perhaps, not take judicial notice of the condition existing in any particular assessment district, we do know judicially that a condition of overlapping assessments and unduly burdensome taxes and assessments, with resultant abandonment of property to sales for taxes and assessments, has prevailed quite widely over the state. As far as appears, an ample factual background may exist for the statute, under the rules established by the cases. We must, therefore, uphold it under those rules.

[11] Respondent also contends that section 4986.3 provides for a remission of taxes and is therefore in violation of section 1 of Article XIII of our Constitution, which provides that all property in the State, with some exceptions, shall be taxed in proportion to its value. We find no substantial difference between this point and that relating to a gift, for a remission of taxes, which implies that there is no consideration for the act constituting the remission, would at the same time be a gift of the amount thereof, as we have already held in discussing a cancellation of taxes. The same argument was presented to the Supreme Court in County of San Bernardino v. Way, supra, 18 Cal.2d 647, 117 P.2d 354, discussed at some length and rejected (see page 657 of 18 Cal.2d, 117 P.2d 354) the court deeming the statutory purpose of restoring property to the tax rolls sufficient to prevent the proceeding from constituting a "remission" of taxes. That decision is determinative of the same point here.

[12] There is also a suggestion in respondent's brief that the statute here makes an improper and discriminatory classification because it is limited to property subject to bonds issued under the Improvement Bond Act of 1915, although there are other acts by which improvement bonds may be charged against real property. A similar objection was made to the statute involved in County of San Bernardino v. Way, supra, 18 Cal.2d page 660, 117 P.2d page 362, and was there held insufficient, the court saying: "This criticism goes only to the policy of the legislation in question and the wisdom of the legislature in determining to exclude the aforementioned districts from the benefits of the tax cancellation provision, which considerations are not the concern of the courts * * *. 'If good ground for the classification exists, such classification is not void because it does not embrace within it every other class which might be included.'" The statute here cannot be invalidated on the ground suggested. (See also South San Joaquin Irr. Dist. v. Nuemiller, (1935) 2 Cal.2d 485, 490, 42 P.2d 64.)

[13] The amicus curiae, appearing in behalf of the respondent, argues that section 4986.3 is not mandatory and hence no enforceable duty rests on respondent, basing this contention on the use of the word "may" in the section and the definition of this word elsewhere in the Revenue and Taxation Code as being permissive. But, accepting and applying this definition, we think the discretion given thereby is vested solely in the Board of Supervisors, who may order the cancellation, and in the District Attorney, whose consent thereto is necessary. The auditor is a mere ministerial officer, in this matter, and was doubtless specified as the officer to make the cancellation because the assessment roll is in his possession after taxes have become delinquent. (Revenue and Taxation Code, secs. 2622, 2623, 2625–2627, St.1939, pp. 1312, 1313.) When such cancellation has been properly ordered and consented to, the duty to make it rests on the auditor.

It is ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate issue directing the respondent to make the cancellations prayed for in the petition here.

SHINN, Acting P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 152

HEROND et al. v. BONSALL et al.

Civ. 14056.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
Aug. 6, 1943.

1. Use and occupation 🔑1

An action lies to recover reasonable value of use and occupation of plaintiff's realty by another, regardless of whether such use was tortious or wrongful, as tort, if any, may be waived and action on implied assumpsit maintained to recover value of use for time of occupation, where no special damages are sought.

2. Use and occupation 🔑8

A landowner, instituting suit for reasonable value of another's use and occupation of land, need only allege plaintiff's ownership of land, defendant's occupation thereof, reasonable value of his use thereof for period of occupation, and nonpayment of such sum.

3. Use and occupation 🔑10

Where equipment left on land by occupant thereof after termination of his occupancy substantially fills premises and prevents or excludes use thereof by owner, such occupant is liable for rental value of entire premises. Civ.Code, § 3334.

4. Fixtures 🔑32

A provision of agreement for tenants' surrender of demised premises to landlords that tenants should remove from premises all trade fixtures owned by them within five days after landlords' mailing of notice to remove them gave tenants no right to allow their restaurant equipment to remain on premises until landlords gave five days notice to remove it, as obligation to give such notice referred only to tenants' surrender of premises on specified date and consequent removal of their personalty therefrom, and subsequent negotiations and re-rentals of premises did not revive or continue in force permissive provisions of agreement as to removal of such fixtures and equipment.

5. Pleading 🔑36(2)

Persons suing for damages for removal of their restaurant equipment from defendants' premises after termination of plaintiffs' lease thereof could not defeat defendants' recovery on cross-complaint for trespass in wrongfully permitting equipment to remain on premises on ground that equipment was in possession of corporation as purchaser under contract for conditional sale thereof by plaintiffs, as plaintiffs' claim of ownership of equipment was essential to their cause of action.

6. Judgment 🔑720

In action to recover damages for removal of plaintiffs' restaurant equipment from defendants' premises after termination of plaintiffs' lease thereof, finding in part of litigation which went to final judgment that plaintiffs owned such equipment was "res judicata" on such issue in subsequent proceedings.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Judicata".

7. Landlord and tenant ⚷34(1)

Tenants' obligation to pay landlords specified sum on certain date under agreement, reciting parties' desire to provide for payment of judgment against tenants for accrued rentals and for reinstatement of lease canceled by such judgment, was extinguished by parties' subsequent mutual agreement cancelling lease some two years before such date.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; H. C. Shepherd, Judge pro tem.

Action by Harold Herond and others against Samuel N. Bonsall and another to recover damages for removal of restaurant equipment owned by plaintiffs from premises of defendants, who filed a cross-complaint for the rental value of such premises after termination of a lease thereof to a conditional purchaser of the equipment and for an amount agreed to be paid defendants by plaintiffs. From a judgment for cross-complainants, cross-defendants appeal.

Modified, and affirmed as modified.

James J. McCarthy, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

George R. Schmidt, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WHITE, Justice.

This is an appeal by cross-defendants from a judgment rendered against them on the first, second and third causes of action of a cross-complaint.

By their first cause of action cross-complainants alleged that at all times therein mentioned they were the owners of certain real property located at 335 North LaBrea, in the city of Los Angeles; that on or about the 21st day of March, 1938, they leased said premises to Pacific Coast Enterprises, Inc., a California corporation; that said lease expired and terminated on or about March 31st, 1939. It was then alleged that during the term of said lease cross-defendants and the tenant in possession kept upon the premises certain restaurant and night club equipment, used in the operation of the business there conducted, prior to the expiration of the lease. That upon termination of the lease cross-complainants gave a good and sufficient notice to cross-defendants and other allegedly interested parties to remove said equipment from the premises but that cross-defendants wrongfully permitted said equipment to remain upon cross-complainants' premises from April 1st to April 21st, 1939, upon which last named date cross-complainants caused the same to be placed with a storage company subject to the order of cross-defendants. The second cause of action of the cross-complaint is a restatement, upon slightly different legal theories, of the first cause of action.

The third cause of action alleged that on the 18th day of May, 1937, pursuant to the terms of a written agreement executed by the parties, cross-defendants agreed to pay cross-complainants the sum of $310 on July 1, 1939, but failed and refused to make such payment.

The trial court found that at no time subsequent to March 31, 1939, did cross-defendants have any right, title or interest in or to the premises in question and were not entitled to any notice from cross-complainants to remove the restaurant and night club equipment from the premises of the latter; that by keeping their equipment upon cross-complainants' premises from April 1st to April 21st, 1939, cross-defendants "committed a continuing trespass upon said premises belonging to defendants and cross-complainants and thereby appropriated to themselves the benefit of storage for said equipment"; that the reasonable rental value of said premises from April 1st to April 21st, 1939, inclusive, was $210, against which there was an offset of $110, the nature and character of which is not here material. Upon the first and second causes of action judgment was accordingly entered in favor of cross-complainants for the sum of $100. As to the third cause of action the court found for cross-complainants by reason of the execution of a written agreement on May 18, 1937, by and through which cross-defendants became obligated to pay cross-complainants $310 on July 1, 1939. Judgment went in favor of cross-complainants for this last named amount, and interest, on the third cause of action.

Appellants first contend that they were entitled to a five-day written notice before they could be guilty of trespass and before respondents would be entitled to any damages by reason of the restaurant equipment remaining upon the latter's premises. It appears from the record that over a period of several years prior to 1939, appellants were the lessees of respondents under a written lease upon the North LaBrea

Street property. During August, 1937, negotiations were in progress whereby one Robert Cabaniss was to take over appellants' lease and purchase from the latter, upon a conditional sales contract, the restaurant and night club equipment with which we are here concerned. As a part of these plans, appellants and respondents on August 11, 1937, entered into a written agreement wherein they mutually released each other from any and all liability attaching to either or any of them under the lease existing between them, dated May 1, 1935, and ending October 31, 1940. A certain amendment to said lease which provided an option for extension of the lease and a previously executed assignment of the same lease to third parties were also cancelled. By this agreement of August 11, 1937, appellants, as lessees, agreed to surrender the demised premises to lessor-respondents on August 30, 1937. In said agreement there also appears, typewritten and initialed by the parties on the margin of said agreement, the following provision: "Second Party shall remove from the premises all trade fixtures owned by Second Party within five days after notice requiring the same has been deposited in the United States mail at Los Angeles, California, as registered mail, with postage prepaid, addressed to Second Party at 6021 Hollywood Blvd., Los Angeles, Cal. First Party shall not be responsible, in any way, for Second Party's trade fixtures". The restaurant equipment remained upon the premises throughout the term of the lease between respondents and Cabaniss and subsequently was sold under another conditional sales contract to Pacific Coast Enterprises, Inc., and thereafter continued to remain upon the premises until the expiration of the latter's lease of the premises March 31, 1939.

After termination of the last mentioned lease and while the equipment remained upon their premises, respondents on April 18, 1939, addressed to appellants a notice demanding that within three days thereafter the latter remove all trade fixtures belonging to them from respondents' premises. This notice was deposited in the United States mail on the day it was dated and was received by appellants on the following day, April 19th. On April 21st, respondents caused the equipment to be transferred from the premises to a storage warehouse and notified appellants of such action.

[1-4] Unless it can be held that the quoted portion of the agreement of August 11, 1937, vested appellants with a right and gave them permission to allow their equipment to remain on respondents' premises until the latter gave the former a five-day notice to remove the same therefrom, the judgment as to counts one and two of the cross-complaint must be sustained. An action will lie for recovery of the reasonable value of the use and occupation of real property irrespective of the question of whether or not the use thereof by the occupant was tortious or wrongful. In such a case the tort, if any, may be waived and an action based upon implied assumpsit is maintainable to recover the value of the use of the real property for the time of such occupation, where no special damages are sought. A landowner instituting such a suit need only allege his ownership of the land, occupation of such land by the defendant, the reasonable value of the use of the property for the period of occupation, and that such sum is unpaid. Richmond Wharf & Dock Co. v. Blake, 181 Cal. 454, 185 P. 184; Taggart v. Shepherd, 122 Cal. App. 755, 10 P.2d 808; Samuels v. Singer, 1 Cal.App.2d 545, 552, 553, 36 P.2d 1098, 37 P.2d 1050. For a continuing trespass, section 3334 of the Civil Code prescribes the measure of damage. Where, as here, the equipment left upon real property substantially fills the premises and prevents or excludes the use thereof, a defendant is liable for the rental value of the entire premises. Lindberg v. Linder, 133 Cal.App. 213, 23 P.2d 842. We fail to see wherein the obligation of giving a five-day notice to appellants under the agreement of August 11, 1937, referred to anything other than the surrender of the premises by appellants to respondents on August 30, 1937, and the removal of appellants' personal property by reason of such surrender. Support is given to this view by the fact that on August 27, 1937, respondents did direct a notice to appellants requiring them to remove the trade fixtures within five days thereafter. We fail to perceive wherein subsequent negotiations and re-rentals of the real property revived or continued in force the permissive provisions of the agreement of August 11, 1937, with reference to the removal of appellants' trade fixtures and equipment. Furthermore, the record discloses without contradiction that appellants had notice of the default of Pacific Coast Enterprises, Inc., to whom appellants were selling the equipment under a conditional sales contract, in the payment of rent, for a much greater period than five days prior to April 1, 1939. Appellants were served with the three-day notice directed to Pacific Coast Enterprises, Inc., setting forth the default in rent and the demand for payment thereof or surrender of the premises.

[5, 6] It is next urged by appellants that they could not be guilty of trespass when the equipment was, during the pertinent period, in the possession of Pacific Coast Enterprises, Inc., under a conditional sales contract from appellants as sellers. This claim is devoid of merit. By their own complaint which gave rise to this litigation appellants assert their ownership of the equipment. Indeed, claim of ownership was essential to their cause of action. Unless, as they alleged, they owned the equipment, its removal by respondents could not have damaged them. In another part of this litigation, which has gone to final judgment, there was a finding that appellants were the owners of the equipment. That issue is, therefore, res adjudicata.

[7] The third cause of action upon which respondents obtained judgment is predicated upon an agreement between the parties hereto, executed on May 18, 1937. By the terms of said agreement it appears that respondents had theretofore obtained a judgment against appellants in the principal sum of $1,315 for accrued rental upon the LaBrea Street property which was under lease to appellants, and which judgment further decreed the cancellation of said lease and restitution of the premises to respondents. The agreement of May 18, 1937, expresses the intentions and purposes of the parties thereto in the following language: "Whereas it is the desire of the parties hereto to provide for the payment of such Judgment and for reinstatement of said lease and for the cancellation of the said assignment thereof * * *". Then follows various and sundry provisions requiring certain payments to be made to respondents by appellants among which, with reference to the item of $310 with which we are now concerned, we find the following: "2. In further consideration of the execution of this agreement by said Lessors, said Harold Y. Herond and Mark M. Hansen agree to pay to said Lessors the sum of $310.00 on July 1, 1939 * * *". In connection with the manner and time of such payment the agreement reads "provided, however that if all the terms, covenants and conditions of said lease as amended shall be faithfully kept and performed, then the said sum of $310.00 shall be credited to the rent for the month of September, 1940 under said lease * * *".

On this appeal it is contended by appellants that certain agreements entered into between the parties hereto on August 11th and September 1st, 1937, cancelled their obligation to make payment of the $310. From a reading of the agreement of August 11, 1937, we are convinced that by the terms thereof appellants were absolved of their obligation to pay the $310. This we say because such obligation arose under the lease between the parties hereto, dated May 1, 1935, and ending October 31, 1940, and amendments thereto, which lease was cancelled by decree of court but which was reinstated by the agreement of May 18, 1937. The contract of August 11, 1937, mutually released appellants and respondents "from any and all liability which may hereafter accrue to either of them under that certain lease dated May 1, 1935 and ending October 31, 1940". This agreement also terminated and cancelled the amendment to such lease which provided for an option for extension of the term thereof, dated December 18, 1936. True, the agreement of August 11, 1937, provided that appellants should not be relieved of their obligation to pay the judgment rendered against them following a previous default in the payment of rent under the lease, but the item of $310 was not a part of such judgment. This sum was not to be paid until July 1, 1939, with the proviso that if all the terms, conditions and covenants contained in the lease, as amended by the contract of May 18, 1937, were faithfully kept and performed the $310 to be paid July 1, 1939, would be credited on the September, 1940 rental. Manifestly, when the lease which gave rise to this obligation was, by mutual agreement, cancelled on August 11, 1937, the obligation to pay the $310 thereunder, some two years after such cancellation, was extinguished as was the right of appellants to have such payment applied on the rent for September, 1940. In view of this conclusion at which we have arrived, it becomes unnecessary to consider or analyze the agreement of September 1, 1937, because when that agreement was entered into the obligation resting upon appellants to pay the $310 had been extinguished by the contract of August 11, 1937. And in any event the September 1st agreement dealt solely with the settlement of the judgment heretofore referred to.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment from which this appeal was taken is modified by deducting therefrom the sum of $310 and any interest predicated thereon. As so modified the judgment is affirmed. Each of the parties will bear their respective costs on appeal.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

---

59 Cal.App.2d 843

PEOPLE v. JACKSON.

Cr. 3681.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 23, 1943.

Criminal law ⚷1182

Where transcripts on appeal were filed but no brief had been filed by defendant and appeal was on the calendar but no argument or appearance was made in defendant's behalf, judgment and order denying new trial were affirmed. Pen.Code, § 1253.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Crum, Judge.

Proceeding by the People of the State of California against Eugene Jackson. From an adverse judgment and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Eugene Jackson, in pro. per.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

The transcripts on appeal herein were filed January 19, 1943, but no brief has been filed by appellant. The appeal was on the calendar on May 19, 1943, but no argument or appearance was made in behalf of appellant.

Therefore, pursuant to the provisions of section 1253 of the Penal Code, the judgment and the order denying a new trial are hereby affirmed.

SHINN, Acting P. J., PARKER WOOD, J., and SHAW, J. pro tem., concur.

---

59 Cal.App.2d 793

CECIL, Director of Agriculture of California, v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.

Civ. 14048.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 23, 1943.

Hearing Denied Sept. 20, 1943.

1. Venue ⚷11

The statute providing that the county in which the cause arose is the proper county for trial of actions against a public officer for an act done by him in virtue of his office takes precedence over statute requiring the place of trial to be changed to the county of defendant's residence in certain other cases. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 393(b), 395.

2. Venue ⚷11

A mandamus proceeding against the Director of Agriculture to retry proceeding before the Department of Agriculture which proceeding resulted in order revoking milk distributor's license on condition that Los Angeles County licensee might petition the Director to modify the order on repayment of underpayments of fluid milk purchases to sellers "arose" in Los Angeles County within statute providing that the county in which the cause arose is the proper county for trial of actions against public officers as against contention that the proceeding was directed only against the Director's threatened future acts. Code Civ.Proc. § 393(b).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Arise".

3. Venue ⚷11

A mandamus proceeding against the Director of Agriculture to retry proceeding before the Department of Agriculture which proceeding resulted in order revoking milk distributor's license on condition that Los Angeles County licensee might petition the Director to modify the order on repayment of underpayments of fluid milk purchases to sellers "arose" in Los Angeles County within statute providing that the county in which the cause arose is the proper county for trial of actions against public officers and did not arise in Sacramento County because the Director signed the revocation order there. Code Civ.Proc. § 393(b).

4. Venue ⚷11

Where proceedings by a state agency against a citizen result in order the effect of which is to deprive him of the right to do business, the proper county for redress under statute providing that the county in which the cause arose is the proper county for trial of actions against public officers is the county in which the citizen carries on the business. Code Civ.Proc. § 393(b).

5. Process ⚷68

Process for seizure of property operates when and where it is executed.

6. Venue ⚷11

A cause of action does not "arise" in the county in which a state officer affixes his name to an order which is to become operative in another county, within statute providing that the county in which the cause arose is the proper county for trial of actions against public officers. Code Civ.Proc. § 393(b).

SHAW, J. pro tem., dissenting.

◆

Original proceeding in prohibition by W. J. Cecil, as Director of Agriculture of the State of California, against the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles, and Joseph W. Vickers, as judge thereof, to stay further steps in a mandamus proceeding against petitioner by the Arden Farms Company.

Writ denied.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Walter L. Bowers, Deputy Atty. Gen., for petitioner.

J. H. O'Connor, County Counsel, and S. V. O. Prichard, Asst. County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHINN, Acting Presiding Justice.

The Director of Agriculture of the State of California, who is the petitioner in this proceeding in prohibition, seeks to stay further steps in a mandamus proceeding pending against him in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, upon the ground that his motion for change of venue to the county of his residence (Sacramento) was improperly denied.

[1] It is not questioned that petitioner did reside in the County of Sacramento at the time the proceeding was instituted in the superior court and at the time of his motion for change of venue. It is conceded that he was not entitled to the order he sought if the "cause or some part thereof" which is the basis of the mandamus proceeding arose in Los Angeles County and if that proceeding is one directed against a public officer for an act done by him in virtue of his office. Respondent contends that the mandamus proceeding is such a proceeding and that the cause arose in Los Angeles County. We are obliged to agree with these contentions and to hold that that proceeding is triable in Los Angeles County under section 393(b) of the Code of Civil Procedure, for this section, if it applies, takes precedence over section 395, Code of Civil Procedure, which requires that the place of trial be changed to the county of defendant's residence in certain other cases.

Arden Farms Company, a corporation, operates a milk plant at 1900 West Slauson Avenue, Los Angeles, and holds a milk distributor's license issued by petitioner as Director of Agriculture of the State of California. The auditor of the Bureau of Marketing Enforcement of the department filed a complaint with the department accusing Arden of purchasing and receiving in Los Angeles County certain quantities of fluid milk, using the same in the manufacture of ice cream and paying the producers therefor lower prices than those which had been established under and in accordance with the provisions of the Agricultural Code, St.1933, p. 60, by which complaint and proceedings to be had thereunder it was sought to have revoked the license of Arden as a distributor of fluid milk and to require Arden to do any and all other things which the Director of Agriculture might deem fitting and proper in accordance with his powers and the provisions of law applicable thereto. After notice to Arden a hearing on the complaint was held in Los Angeles County, evidence was taken before a representative of the Department, the matter was submitted, and the Director of Agriculture made an order at his office in Sacramento revoking the license of Arden as a milk distributor, as of a date four weeks after the date of the order.

A further provision of the order was that if Arden should, before the effective date of the revocation, pay to Central Milk Sales Agency, an association of producers from which Arden had made the purchases in question, some $16,000, which represented the total amount of the alleged underpayments as found by the director, Arden would have the right to petition the director to modify or set aside the order. Arden declined to pay the sum and five days before the date when the revocation would have become absolute brought the proceeding in mandate for a retrial of the issues involved in the proceeding before the department and seeking revocation of the order which conditionally revoked its license and an injunction against interference with its business by reason of said order. The grounds upon which the relief was sought are not material to a decision of the question of petitioner's right to a change of venue.

The question before us has not been passed upon by our courts in any of the reported cases. There have been decisions construing the applicable provisions of section 393 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but these tend more strongly toward the contention of respondent than that of appellant.

It is not contended by petitioner that the act of the director in revoking the permit was not an act done by him in virtue of his office. The Attorney General does contend, however, that the proceeding in mandamus is not directed against that act but only against threatened future acts, and it is also urged that the cause which Arden is prosecuting in the superior court arose in Sacramento County because the director signed the order there. We regard these positions as untenable.

McMillan v. Richards, 1858, 9 Cal. 365, 70 Am.Dec. 655, was in mandate to compel the sheriff to issue a deed. In Bonestell, Richardson & Co. v. Curry, 1908, 153 Cal. 418, 95 P. 887, it was sought to enjoin the Secretary of State and certain other state officers from entering into and carrying out a contract to purchase paper for the state printer's office, which had been awarded by the state officers to a paper company. State Commission in Lunacy v. Welch, 1908, 154 Cal. 775, 99 P. 181, was a proceeding in mandamus against the treasurer of San Benito County to compel him to pay moneys into the state treasury. Bloom v. Oroville-Wyandotte Irr. Dist., 1939, 34 Cal.App.2d 102, 93 P.2d 164, was in mandamus to require the respondents to pay money on bond obligations of an irrigation district and to levy an assessment in order to raise the money. In the McMillan case the court emphasized that the statute related to "affirmative acts of the officer, by which, in the execution of process, or otherwise, he interferes with the property or rights of third persons, and not to mere omissions or neglect of official duty." None of the cases has done more than hold that acts which the officer has failed to do or which he will do unless enjoined therefrom are not acts done within the meaning of the section and which provide the substance of the cause of action. The Bonestell case, supra, 153 Cal. 418, 95 P. 887, upon which petitioner places his principal reliance, did not decide the questions which are before us. In referring to the decision in the McMillan case it was said (153 Cal. at page 420, 95 P. at page 888): "This construction contemplates only such affirmative acts of an officer as directly interfere with the personal rights or property of the person complaining, such as wrongful arrest, trespass, conversion, etc. The complaint in the case at bar shows no such case." Most assuredly Arden is prosecuting a cause for redress against interference with its personal rights and property. The Director of Agriculture has gone into the County of Los Angeles, has inquired into alleged violations of law by Arden, and has issued an order which will put an end to Arden's business as a distributor of milk by revoking its license, unless such revocation is avoided by the payment of an additional sum for milk produced, as fixed by the findings of the department. Or we may say that Arden has been assessed some $16,000 because of the manner in which it has conducted its business in the County of Los Angeles, and if it fails to pay that amount, the right to carry on its business in and from the County of Los Angeles will be ended by the revocation of its license. We are not considering a mere general order issued by the Director of Agriculture applicable alike to all milk distributors in the state or to those engaged in certain branches of the industry, but an adjudication relating to particular practices and transactions of a single milk distributor engaged in business in Los Angeles County and which directly affects its property located in its principal place of business. We think that the act of the director which will thus operate to Arden's detriment is essentially of the type of acts which the courts have had in mind and which they have described as affirmative acts and those which interfere with the property or rights of third persons. Certainly it is the act which has brought Arden to court for redress.

[2] The Bonestell case was not one seeking protection from the effects of an official act directed against the property or rights of the plaintiff. On this point the court said (153 Cal. at page 420, 95 P. at page 888): "Moreover, the action is not one against public officers for an act done by them, but is an action against them and certain other persons solely to prevent the doing of certain acts by such officers and by the other defendants in the future." (Emphasis added.) The complaint in the Bonestell case, which we have examined, alleged that the defendants had passed a resolution awarding a contract to defendant paper company and were about to enter into a contract and to purchase quantities of paper thereunder. It was these proposed acts which were sought to be enjoined; the mere decision that the contract should go to the successful bidder was not an official act which gave rise to the cause of action and the opinion of the court shows that the attack was considered to be one directed against acts about to be done by the defendants. That is not our case. Here the act of the director is complete and it is self-executing. The proceeding in mandamus is directed against this order and its necessary consequences and not against future threatened acts. Arden's license has been revoked, although conditionally. If the order is annulled, that will end the matter; if it is not annulled, Arden will pay the sum of $16,000 or lose its license. The action is directed against an act that has been done by the director, not against those which he threatens; the director's work has been completed, so far as official action is concerned. If Arden has any redress, it is by action to annul the order. And if the order is for any reason illegal, the illegality is the basis of the cause of action and it is immaterial in what form of action the right is asserted. The cause of action is essentially for the protection of Arden's property, which can only be accomplished by annulment of the order.

[3] It is equally clear that the cause of the action arose in Los Angeles County and not in Sacramento County. The affidavit filed in the Bonestell case in support of the motion alleged that the cause of action arose in Sacramento County where the official action had been taken, but there was no decision on that point. It is immaterial in our case where the order was signed or that it was filed in the office of the director in Sacramento County. The cause of action arose in Los Angeles County, where it was to be enforced upon the business and property of Arden located therein, that is to say, by the collection there of $16,000 or by closing up Arden's business by revoking its license. Upon this proposition the well-reasoned case of Montana-Dakota Utilities Co. v. Public Service Comm., 1940, 111 Mont. 78, 107 P.2d 533, is directly in point. The statute under consideration was identical in material respects with our own. An order of the Public Service Commission reduced the gas rates charged by plaintiff in Valley and Phillips counties; the order was made in Lewis and Clark County, where the office of the commission was located. Defendant commission moved to transfer the action from Lewis and Clark County to Valley County, upon the ground that the cause or some part thereof arose in that county and that no part of it arose in Lewis and Clark County. In holding that the action should have been transferred, the court said (107 P.2d at page 534): "It is the operation of the order that the action seeks to enjoin. True, the complaint also seeks to set aside the order, but only because its operation allegedly would injure plaintiff by confiscating its property. The operation of the order will be accomplished, if at all, in Valley and Phillips counties where the order is made applicable. It is our view that the cause of action arose in Valley and Phillips counties and not in Lewis and Clark county." The same question was involved under an identical statute in State Appeal Board v. District Court of Pottawattamie County, 1938, 225 Iowa 296, 280 N.W. 525, cited in the Montana case. It was held that where an order had been made by the State Appeal Board reducing a budget and levy in Pottawattamie County, the cause of action to annul the order arose in the county where it was to be given effect and not at all in the county where the order was made, namely, at the state capitol, where the members of the board resided and were required by law to reside. In State ex rel. Florida Dry Cleaning and Laundry Board v. Atkinson, 1938, 136 Fla. 528, 188 So. 834, it was held that the venue of an action brought to restrain the enforcement of orders of a state agency was in the county where the order was threatened to be enforced and that plaintiffs had the right to institute their suit in the jurisdiction where the orders were alleged to be operating.

[4-6] The reasoning of these cases is sound and the conclusion is acceptable, in view of the fact that there has been no contrary holding in California. There is no escape from the conclusion that where a citizen is singled out by a state agency and proceedings are instituted against him and result in an order, the effect of which is to deprive him absolutely or conditionally of the right to do business, the proper county for redress under section 393, subd. (b), of the Code of Civil Procedure is the county in which he carries on the business and in which he will be hurt by enforcement of the order. It is where the shaft strikes him, not where it is drawn, that counts. Process for the seizure of property operates when and where it is executed. Surely a cause of action does not arise in the county in which a state officer happens to affix his name to an order which is to become operative in another county.

The order refusing to change the place of trial was correct. The alternative writ of prohibition heretofore issued is discharged and a peremptory writ is denied.

PARKER WOOD, J., concurs.

SHAW, Justice pro tem.

I dissent. It is contended, in behalf of the respondent court, that the case is ruled by this provision of section 393 of the Code of Civil Procedure: "* * * the county in which the cause, or some part thereof, arose, is the proper county for the trial of the following actions: * * * (b) * * * Against a public officer * * * for an act done by him in virtue of his office * * *." The petitioner contends, on the other hand, that the following part of section 395 of the same code is the governing provision: "In all other cases, * * * the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside at the commencement of the action, is the proper county for the trial of the action." All of these provisions are made applicable to mandamus proceedings by section 1109, Code of Civil Procedure. There is no dispute about the fact that petitioner's legal and actual residence is in the County of Sacramento. The answer to our problem depends, therefore, on the nature of the mandamus proceeding. If it was a proceeding against petitioner "for an act done by him in virtue of his office," and if "the cause, or some part thereof" arose in the County of Los Angeles, that was the proper county; but, failing either of these conditions, the change of venue under the provision of section 395, Code of Civil Procedure, above quoted, should have been granted and a writ of prohibition should issue here.

The petition of Arden for a writ of mandate was doubtless framed with the decisions of the Supreme Court in Drummey v. State Bd. of Funeral Directors, (1939), 13 Cal.2d 75, 82, 87 P.2d 848, Bodinson Mfg Co. v. California Employment Comm., (1941) 17 Cal.2d 321, 329, 109 P.2d 935, and Laisne v. California State Bd. of Optometry, (1942) 19 Cal.2d 831, 123 P.2d 457, in view, and its purpose was, as a reading of it discloses, to take advantage of the ruling of those cases that mandamus may be used to obtain a review of decisions of administrative boards and officers revoking licenses, and other similar acts, and to compel a reversal of those decisions. In so far as this purpose is concerned, the proceeding initiated by the petition is one against a public officer for an act done by him in virtue of his office. Bonestell, Richardson & Co. v. Curry, (1908) 153 Cal. 418, 420, 95 P. 887. But so viewing it the cause of action is founded on the act of the officer which is attacked and which the attacking party seeks to have reversed; that is, in this case, the order revoking Arden's license. This act was not done in the County of Los Angeles, but in the County of Sacramento, and hence the cause of action against it arose in the latter, not the former, county.

The Arden petition also asks for relief in the nature of an injunction to prevent the Director from interfering with its continuing its business. It is said that in this aspect the proceeding is one against him for an act done by virtue of his office, that is, the act of making his order operative and enforcing it in the County of Los Angeles. But the petition was filed before the revocation of Arden's license became effective, and hence this phase of it is prospective only, an effort to prevent future action by the Director, and comes in the same category as the effort to enjoin future performance by public officers of a contract illegally awarded by them, which was the subject of decision in Bonestell, Richardson & Co. v. Curry, supra, (1908) 153 Cal. 418, 420, 95 P. 887. Of it the court said "the action is not one against public officers for an act done by them, but is an action * * * solely to prevent the doing of certain acts by such officers * * * in the future." On this point Montana-Dakota Utilities Co. v. Public Service Commission, (1940), 111 Mont. 78, 107 P.2d 533, and some other out of state cases cited by respondent may express contrary views; but the California case last cited appears to be as a direct holding that the provision of section 393, Code of Civil Procedure, now under consideration does not apply to actions to restrain future acts, though they be but the sequel to acts already done, and it should be followed, in preference to authority elsewhere.

---

59 Cal.App.2d 771

VAUGHN v. BOARD OF POLICE COM'RS OF CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.

Civ. 14035.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 23, 1943.

Hearing Denied Sept. 20, 1943.

As Corrected Nov. 4, 1943.

1. Licenses 🔑38

The revocation by city Board of Police Commissioners of used automobile dealer's license is a proper exercise of the "police power". Const. art. 11, § 11.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Police Power".

2. Municipal Corporations 🔑594(2)

A city ordinance authorizing Board of Police Commissioners to revoke used automobile dealer's license if dealer shall violate any ordinance or law or shall conduct such business unlawfully is not void for indefiniteness. Const. art. 11, § 11.

3. Licenses 🔑7(1)

Boards and commissioners charged with supervision of certain classes of business may be authorized to investigate a licensee upon complaint that he has violated regulatory ordinances or statutes in transactions with complainant, since no permit may be revoked until facts have been found to support an order.

4. Licenses 🔑38

A complaint in proceeding to revoke used automobile dealer's license on ground that dealer had unlawfully altered signed purchase orders and had made misrepresentations as to terms under which vehicles were taken out for trial was not insufficient for failure to notify dealer of nature of charges so as to enable him to formulate a defense.

5. Licenses 🔑38

A licensee when accused of violating municipal regulations governing his conduct does not stand in same position as one accused of crime, since he is only under discipline of the authority to whom he is subject.

6. Licenses 🔑38

A used automobile dealer making no exception to form of complaint in proceeding for revocation of dealer's license "waived" any defect in complaint.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

7. Licenses 🔑38

The charge of having committed a felony in transaction with his accuser is itself sufficient "notice" to licensee of the subject of inquiry at hearing to follow.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Notice".

8. Licenses 🔑38

The findings of city Board of Police Commissioners which revoked used automobile dealer's license went to the Superior Court with a strong presumption of their correctness.

9. Licenses 🔑38

An order revoking used automobile dealer's license on ground that dealer had unlawfully altered signed purchase orders and had made misrepresentations as to terms under which vehicles were taken out for trial should be sustained in absence of showing that board acted capriciously or fraudulently.

10. Licenses 🔑38

A used automobile dealer whose license was revoked by Board of Police Commissioners had burden of showing wherein board acted contrary to weight of evidence.

11. Licenses 🔑38

In determining right to revoke used automobile dealer's license for unlawful acts, dealer could not avoid responsibility by pleading that abuses were committed by his employees, especially in view of provision of ordinance that licensee should be held strictly responsible for conduct of his employees.

12. Principal and agent 🔑159(1)

A principal is liable for torts of his agent committed within scope of his authority under doctrine of "respondeat superior".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Respondeat Superior".

13. Alteration of Instruments 🔑12

An instrument cannot be altered by any person after signature of promisor unless person be specifically directed to make the alteration.

14. Licenses 🔑38

In proceeding for revocation of used automobile dealer's license, board was neither obliged to appoint experts to determine that alteration of signed purchase orders had been made by the hand of dealer, nor to be bound by their testimony if appointed.

15. Officers 🔑103

In reviewing decision of local administrative board court must determine merely whether there is substantial evidence in record to support board's findings.

16. Licenses 🔑38

Evidence warranted revocation of used automobile dealer's license on ground that dealer had unlawfully altered signed purchase orders and had made misrepresentations as to terms on which vehicles were taken out for trial.

17. Officers 🔑103

While decisions of administrative boards are reviewable by courts, boards' judgments have constitutional support, and when boards perform their function without prejudicial error, their judgments are "final" and it is only when record discloses arbitrary conduct that courts will intervene.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Final Judgment".

18. Licenses 🔑38
Mandamus 🔑173

If upon showing made by petition for mandate or review of order revoking license it appears that trial was capriciously conducted, superior court will retry the case, and if ends of justice will be served, court may in exercise of discretion receive additional evidence upon showing that in exercise of reasonable diligence it could not have been presented before the board.

19. Constitutional law 🔑318

Where proceeding for revocation of used automobile dealer's license included service of complaint and notice of hearing, right to representation by counsel, a full hearing of all evidence, and privilege of cross examination, "due process of law" was not violated by sustaining demurrer without leave to amend dealer's petition for mandate or certiorari.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law".

20. Licenses 🔑38

A trial de novo of revocation of license following issuance of alternative writ contemplates a consideration of evidence taken before board whose function is important in supervising activities of licensed businesses, investigating and disciplining them, and in conducting hearings, determining facts and making orders.

21. Licenses 🔑38

A used automobile dealer whose license was revoked by Board of Police Commissioners was not entitled to trial de novo in superior court since if dealer presented all of its evidence before board, it was considered by court, and if dealer did not present it, he could not have a trial de novo merely to gain the chance of court's reaching a contrary conclusion.

22. Equity 🔑43

The law looks with disfavor upon a litigant who, having been cited before an administrative board, withholds his evidence for only judicial ears.

23. Licenses 🔑38
Mandamus 🔑163

Sustaining demurrer without leave to amend petition for writ of mandate or certiorari to compel Board of Police Commissioners to annul an order which revoked used automobile dealer's license, was not an abuse of discretion in absence of showing that dealer was not guilty of acts charged.

24. Certiorari 🔑9, 42(9)
Mandamus 🔑7, 154(10)

The superior court may exercise a wide discretion in granting or denying writ of mandate or certiorari and may conclude that further efforts to state a cause of action would be idle in view of weak showing made by petitioner as against testimony adduced against him.

25. Licenses 🔑38

Intelligent inquiries or observations by a board member during course of trial on proceeding for revocation of a license are not alone proof that issue has been prejudged.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Petition by Richard Vaughn, doing business as Vaughn's Used Cars, against the Board of Police Commissioners of the City of Los Angeles, and the members thereof for a writ of mandate or certiorari to compel the board to annul its order revoking petitioner's permits or for a review of the judgment of such board by the superior court. From an adverse judgment petitioner appeals.

Affirmed.

Albert G. Bergman, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., Frederick von Schrader, Asst. City Atty., and Edwin F. Shinn, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

The question for decision is whether the petition for a writ of mandate or certiorari stated a cause of action to compel respondent board to annul its order revoking appellant's permits or for a review of the judgment of such board by the superior court and whether the court abused its discretion in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend.

Prior to the events recited herein appellant had procured from the respondent board licenses to engage in the business of buying and selling used motor vehicles at three separate locations within the city. On May 11, 1942, a complaint was filed with the board of police commissioners, charging that appellant had violated the provisions (§ 24.03) of the Los Angeles Municipal Code in that he did willfully and unlawfully "alter or permit to be altered, signed contracts or purchase orders covering sales of automobiles; make, or permit to be made, misrepresentations as to cash deals and terms under which cars were taken out for trial." Citation having issued to appellant the trial was held before the respondent board on and after May 27, 1942. At that time appellant appeared with his counsel. Witnesses on behalf of the complainant as well as of appellant appeared and testified. Following the hearing an order was made revoking the licenses theretofore granted by the board to appellant effective June 21, 1942.

A demurrer having been sustained to his original petition "for mandate or certiorari," appellant filed his amended petition demanding that the order of respondent board be annulled and that appellant be allowed a trial de novo before the superior court. A transcript of the trial before respondent board was attached to the amended petition which alleged that appellant had been deprived of a full and complete hearing before the board; that he had been deprived of his right to do business without due process of law. Upon the filing of the petition the court below issued its alternative writ of mandate ordering the board to restore his licenses to appellant or to show cause why such restoration had not been effected. Following a hearing on the general demurrer to the amended petition, it was sustained without leave to amend, the alternative writ was discharged and the writs prayed for were denied. Judgment for defendants ensued.

Appellant attacks the judgment on the following grounds: (1) Section 24.03 of the Los Angeles Municipal Code is void for indefiniteness and uncertainty; (2) the complaint is insufficient to give the board jurisdiction; (3) there was no legal evidence to justify the revocation of the licenses; (4) appellant was deprived of due process of law; (5) he was entitled to a trial de novo in the superior court; (6) the court abused its discretion in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend.

[1, 2] (1) The cited Code section is a part of a valid ordinance and is itself valid. Under the city's Charter the council may authorize the board of police commissioners to revoke permits granted by it in the exercise of police powers. § 2, subd. 11 E and 11 P, § 203; Constitution, Article XI, § 11. The revocation of such permits is a proper exercise of the police power. In re Higgins, 50 Cal.App. 533, 537, 195 P. 740; Vincent Petroleum Corporation v. Culver City, 43 Cal.App.2d 511, 517, 111 P.2d 433. Appellant cites many authorities to show that the ordinance is invalid but they are not apropos. They refer to statutes or ordinances where the administrative board was without guiding rules by which to determine the vice charged against the accused licensee. For instance a physician was accused of unethical conduct in advertising his medical business. The court held that in the absence of a statutory declaration of what statements in the advertisements should be deemed "grossly improbable" the medical examiners were left to their own particular views as to what might be grossly improbable statements and the statute was therefore held void. Hewitt v. Board of Medical Examiners, 148 Cal. 590, 591, 84 P. 39, 3 L.R.A., N.S., 896, 113 Am.St.Rep. 315, 7 Ann.Cas. 750. In the case of subdivision "L" of section 24.03, the board is authorized to revoke a permit which it has issued in the event that the permittee as a dealer in used automobiles "shall violate any of the provisions of this section or any provisions of any other ordinance, or of any law relating to, or regulating, such automobile business, or shall conduct or carry on such business in an unlawful manner." Such a dealer in obtaining his permit from the city agrees to be governed by ordinances designed to regulate his business. Section 22.02 of the same code authorized the board to revoke permits granted by it and prescribes the procedure by which such revocation may be accomplished. The procedure is that ordinarily followed by administrative boards throughout the Union. A verified complaint must be filed and served upon the accused permittee and he must be notified of the time and place of the hearing upon the complaint, and the permit cannot be revoked until facts establishing the complaint have been determined. It is a vain criticism of the section that it requires no more than a charge that the permittee has violated the provisions of the section (24.03) or of any other "ordinance or law relating to or regulating such used automobile business." Appellant ignores thereby the significance of the procedure prescribed for a trial and the right of the permittee to cross-examine the accusing witnesses. In order to inquire into the conduct of a permittee, no more should be necessary than to recite in the complaint his violations of such law in his transactions with the accuser.

Moreover, it is not uncommon for ordinances and statutes to confer upon boards and commissions authority to regulate by the use of language that implies the exercise of discretion. A city electrician might discontinue the use of electrical wiring when he found it "dangerous to life or property." Gaylord v. Pasadena, 175 Cal. 433, 166 P. 348, 349. The statute directing the corporation commissioner to issue a license to a broker if he finds that the character of the applicant is such as to warrant belief that the proposed business will be conducted honestly, fairly and efficiently. In re Halck, 215 Cal. 500, 503, 11 P.2d 389. See, also, Riley v. Chambers, 181 Cal. 589, 185 P. 855, 8 A.L.R. 418; Blue v. Division of Corporations, 8 Cal.App.2d 485, 48 P.2d 80; Smulson v. Board of Dental Examiners, 47 Cal.App.2d 584, 118 P.2d 483; Hall v. Geiger-Jones Co., 242 U.S. 539, 37 S.Ct. 217, 61 L.Ed. 480, L.R.A. 1917F, 514, Ann.Cas.1917C, 643. The criticised clause of the ordinance is so universally understood that no one could misunderstand it.

[3] By the cited authorities and many others it is established that boards and commissioners charged with the supervision of certain classes of business may be authorized to investigate a licensee upon a complaint that he has violated the regulatory ordinances or statutes in transactions with the complainant. If the accusation is brief it cannot effect a disastrous result for the reason that no permit may be revoked until facts have been found to support an order.

The argument is advanced that there is no security in the possession of a permit in the absence of rules for the guidance of the board at a trial of the permittee because after a person might have become established in business the board could set up its own rules as to what is unlawful and then arbitrarily thereby determine the conduct of the permittee to be unlawful. Such argument loses sight of the language which condemns only "unlawful" conduct. Also it assumes that a board will ignore the law and be activated by caprice. It will be presumed that officials will do their duties. § 1963 Code of Civil Procedure. Men may differ upon ethical concepts but once the unlawful acts of a permittee are averred no permittee can fail to understand that he is charged with having violated criminal or civil statutes or ordinances, contrary to his contract with the municipality.

[4-7] (2) Appellant contends that the complaint gave him no such notice of the nature of the charges as would enable him to formulate a defense. The averments were ample to advise of the grounds upon which the board intended to inquire into appellant's conduct with a view to revoking his license: in the course of his business he had unlawfully altered purchase orders that had been signed and had made misrepresentations as to terms under which cars were taken out for trial. Such a complaint follows the ordinance and is sufficient. Smulson v. Board of Dental Examiners, supra. A licensee of a municipality when accused of violating the regulations governing his conduct does not stand in the same position as one accused of crime. He is only under discipline of the authorities to whom he as licensee is subject. But the argument of appellant denouncing the insufficiency of the complaint is answered by the fact that he made no exception to the form of the complaint at the time of his trial. His silence there was an effectual waiver, as to any defects which it might contain. Casey v. Leggett, 125 Cal. 664, 58 P. 264; Cushing v. Pires, 124 Cal. 663, 57 P. 572; Munson v. Kirby, 105 Cal.App. 213, 215, 287 P. 133; Donovan v. Board of Police Commissioners, 32 Cal.App. 392, 403, 163 P. 69. He was represented by capable counsel with a stream of objections but none as to the form or content of the complaint. The charge of having committed a felony in a transaction with his accuser is itself sufficient notice to a licensee of the subject of inquiry at the hearing to follow.

[8-10] (3) There was no abuse of discretion in holding that the evidence presented to the board was sufficient to justify the revocation of appellant's license. The findings of the board went to the superior court with a strong presumption of their correctness. Drummey v. State Board of Funeral Directors, 13 Cal.2d 75, 85, 87 P.2d 848. No showing is made that the board acted capriciously or fraudulently in revoking the permit in which event the order of revocation should be sustained. Hogan v. Retirement Board, 13 Cal.App.2d 676, 57 P.2d 520. The burden is on appellant to show wherein the board acted contrary to the weight of the evidence. Laisne v. State Board of Optometry, 19 Cal.2d 831, 123 P.2d 457.

The testimony of three witnesses was received to show the scheme or design of appellant. In addition thereto the testimony of Grady Wilcox and Albert World both severally gave in detail the facts of their having been required to sign in blank about 27 papers for the exchange of automobiles by the payment of an agreed sum of money by the witness as a consideration for the exchange. To each witness later was forwarded a contract bearing his signature showing a large balance due in excess of that which was to be paid. In both cases the forms which had been signed in blank by the purchaser had been altered to suit the wishes of appellant. The witness, Rutkowski, testified that at the Broadway office of appellant, a salesman agreed to sell him a 1940 Ford Coupe for $500 cash. He paid $50 and a few days later returned to pay the balance of $450. At that time demand was made of him for information concerning the manner of his obtaining the $500 and he then signed a number of papers. He read none of them, made no payment but when he later returned he was told that he must sign more papers, one of which was marked "cash deal." Later he received a copy of the contract showing that he had paid $500 in cash as a down payment and there was a balance of $300 yet to be paid. While officer Sheets was under cross examination by appellant's counsel, he testified that 17 complaints had been made against appellant since the first of January, 1942. While most of the conferences had by the witnesses at the place of business were with employees of appellant, yet when demand was made for a modification of the contract appellant personally refused the modification and finally yielded only after complaint had been filed with respondent board.

[11-13] It is urged that the transactions proved were conducted by the employees of appellant and that he took no part therein. But appellant was responsible for the conduct of his employees in the purchases or sales of used automobiles. He cannot avoid his own responsibility by pleading that the abuses of his permit were committed by those he trusted. In such transactions, section 24.03 provides that every person operating under this section "shall be held strictly responsible for the conduct of his employees insofar as the sales or purchases of used automobiles or motor vehicles are concerned." Moreover, it is the general rule that a principal is liable for the torts of his agent committed within the scope of his authority under the doctrine of respondeat superior. 1 Cal.Jur. 837. It has been held that for a sale of liquor by a clerk with a knowledge of his employer the latter is criminally liable. In re Souza, 65 Cal.App. 9, 11, 222 P. 869. In the prosecution of a merchant for violating the pure foods act by selling adulterated foods, the proprietor could not avoid responsibility for what was sold if he had such food in his stock and had a clerk authorized to make sales therefrom. Such sale was held to be a sale by the employer. People v. Schwartz, 28 Cal. App.2d Supp. 775, 781, 70 P.2d 1017. See 43 L.R.A.,N.S., 2, where the author of the note states that it is well settled that a principal may under certain circumstances be held liable criminally for an action by the hand of his servant acting either under his direct authority or with his consent or even in disobedience of orders. Appellant's answer to the testimony, that the blanks in the written documents were filled in by appellant after signature by the purchasers, is that it was authorized by section 3095 of the Civil Code. Neither that statute nor any other authority authorizes the alteration of an instrument by any person after signature of the promisor unless he be specifically directed to make the insert or other alteration. 1 Cal.Jur. 1073, 1087; C. I. T. Corporation v. Glennan, 137 Cal.App. 636, 639, 31 P.2d 430.

[14] There is nothing in the record of the trial before respondent board to show that any prejudicial evidence was received. On the contrary, all testimony that was hearsay or irrelevant was excluded. Appellant had full opportunity to present all of his evidence. His offer to stipulate to the revocation of appellant's license in the event that expert witnesses which the board might appoint should determine that the alteration complained of had been made by the hand of appellant is not an approved method of ascertaining facts in controversy. The board was neither obliged to appoint such experts nor to be bound by their testimony if appointed.

[15, 16] In reviewing the decision of a local administrative board, the court has to determine merely whether there is substantial evidence in the record to support the findings of the board. Walker v. City of San Gabriel, 20 Cal.2d 879, 129 P.2d 349, 142 A.L.R. 1383; Dierssen v. Civil Service Commission, 43 Cal.App.2d 53, 110 P.2d 513. The Dierssen case held that in order to make a successful attack upon the decision of an administrative commission it must be alleged and proved that the tribunal acted fraudulently, capriciously, or arbitrarily, and that the findings will not be disturbed if the board had any substantial evidence to sustain the decision. There is neither allegation nor proof in the record to support such attack upon the order of respondent board.

[17-19] (4) There was no want of due process of law. All of the requirements of due process were complied with, including service of the complaint and notice of hearing, right of representation by counsel, a full and complete hearing of all the evidence offered, and the privilege of cross-examination. While the decisions of administrative boards are subject to a review by the courts, their judgments have constitutional support. The conduct of the multitudinous affairs of a complex society requires the establishment of boards and commissions to ascertain and determine facts. When they perform that function without prejudicial error in the proceedings their findings are determinative and their judgments are final. It is only when the record discloses the allowance of incompetent evidence, the rejection of valuable proof at the trial, or other arbitrary conduct on the part of the administrative tribunal that courts will intervene in controversies between such boards and their licensees. If upon the showing made by the petition for mandate or review it appears that the trial was capriciously conducted the superior court will retry the case. If the ends of justice would be served by hearing additional evidence proposed by the petitioner the court may in the exercise of a sound discretion receive such evidence upon a showing that in the exercise of reasonable diligence it could not have been presented at the trial before the board. Dare v. Board of Medical Examiners, Cal.Sup., 136 P.2d 304. Inasmuch as the record of the trial of this case before respondent board showed no abuse of the rights of petitioner before the police commissioners, no further trial of fact was required of the court below and the right of due process was not violated by sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend.

[20-22] (5) There was no occasion for a trial de novo, if appellant means thereby a rehearsal of all the testimony heard by the board. If a trial anew were a matter of right there would be no place in the scheme of government for administrative tribunals. Such a trial following the issuance of an alternative writ contemplates a consideration of the evidence taken before the board whose function is important in supervising the activities of licensed businesses, investigating and disciplining them, and in conducting hearings, determining facts and making orders. Whitten v. State Board of Optometry, 8 Cal.2d 444, 446, 65 P.2d 1296, 115 A.L.R. 1; Dare v. Board, supra, 136 P.2d page 310. If appellant presented all of his evidence before the board it was considered by the court below. If he did not present it he may not have a trial de novo merely to gain the chance of a court's reaching a conclusion contrary to that of the board. The law looks with disfavor upon a litigant who, having been cited before an administrative board, withholds his evidence for only judicial ears. Dare v. Board, supra.

[23, 24] (6) Finally, there was no abuse of discretion in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend. From the recitals in this discussion it must appear that the phonographic record discloses a fair trial upon the complaint. No proposal was made in the petition that any designated evidence would overcome the testimony before the board. No witness was named. No document was suggested that would tend to establish that appellant had not approved of the alteration of signed instruments and of fraudulent misrepresentations, or that he had not disobeyed any law relating to the conduct of used car dealers. If he had such proof it was incumbent upon appellant to allege its availability and his reason for not offering it at the hearing. Failing thus to enliven his amended pleading it was proper to deny him further opportunity to amend. He was not entitled to a writ merely for the asking. He was required to plead such facts as would show that his rights had been abridged by the police commissioners. He failed to do so although he attached the reporter's transcript of the hearing. Just as the superior court may exercise a wise discretion in granting or denying either the alternative or the peremptory writ (Dare v. Board, supra; Bartholomae Oil Corp. v. Superior Court, 18 Cal.2d 726, 117 P.2d 674), by the same process it may conclude that further efforts to state a cause of action would be idle in view of the insipid showing made by appellant as against the testimony adduced against him.

[25] The further attack on the ground that the Board had prejudged the guilt of appellant is answered by the foregoing. Intelligent inquiries or observations by a board member during the course of the trial of a permittee are not alone proof that the issue has been prejudged.

Judgment affirmed.

McCOMB, J., concurs.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 125

POE et al. v. LAWRENCE.

Civ. 14034.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 5, 1943.

1. Appeal and error 🔑931(1)

On appeal, the facts must be considered in the light most favorable to findings and judgment of trial court.

2. Automobiles 🔑244(11)

Though negligence cannot be predicated on driver's inexperience or type of license in absence of causal connection between such facts and happening of accident, court was entitled to consider such facts in determining probability of testimony that driver traveling on through highway attempted to beat automobile approaching from the right through intersection. Vehicle Code, § 253, St.1939, p. 1434.

3. Automobiles ⚷244(31)

Court was entitled to draw from proof of driver's inexperience and limited type of license such deductions as were warranted by a consideration of the usual propensities of people, as well as the course of nature and to ground thereon such inferences as reason would direct. Vehicle Code, § 253, St.1939, p. 1434; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1958, 1960.

4. Appeal and error ⚷204(2)

Motorist could not complain for the first time on appeal of admission of testimony concerning his inexperience and the limited type of driver's license possessed by him. Vehicle Code, § 253, St.1939, p. 1434.

5. Automobiles ⚷244(11, 35)

Experienced that inexperienced holder of limited driver's license, while driving at night on through highway at speed of 40 to 45 miles per hour in 25-mile zone, was struck by automobile approaching from right which he attempted to beat through intersection after he should have seen that it did not intend to make required stop and consequently collided head on with plaintiffs' automobile sustained judgment holding inexperienced driver liable for plaintiffs' damages. Vehicle Code, § 253, St.1939, p. 1434; Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1958, 1960.

6. Appeal and error 989

Where judgment is attacked on ground that it is unsupported by the evidence, reviewing court's jurisdiction is limited to determining whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, that will support judgment.

7. Appeal and error ⚷931(1)

On appeal from judgment for plaintiffs in action for damages for negligence, all conflicts in the evidence must be resolved in favor of prevailing party.

8. Appeal and error ⚷996

Since all intendments are in favor of judgment arrived at upon conflicting evidence, fact that contradictory inferences can reasonably be drawn from facts in evidence does not authorize appellate tribunal to substitute other inferences for those drawn by trier of the facts.

9. Appeal and error ⚷995

Evidence that is inherently improbable may be disregarded by reviewing court, but, to warrant such action, there must exist a physical impossibility that such evidence is true or its falsity must be apparent without any resort to inferences or deductions.

10. Automobiles ⚷171(13)

Motorist, traveling at night on through highway at excessive speed and entering intersection without slackening speed after he should have seen that automobile approaching from right would not make required stop, was not entitled to assume that driver of such automobile would exercise due care and not violate traffic laws.

11. Negligence ⚷1

One relying on assumption that another will exercise reasonable care and obey the law may be guilty of negligence, unless there is nothing in the situation to warn him of impending danger.

12. Negligence ⚷136(14)

The reasonableness of conduct of a person relying upon the assumption that another will obey the law is ordinarily a question for determination by the trier of facts.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by Robert W. Poe and Beverly Poe against Talmadge O. Lawrence for injuries sustained by Beverly Poe in an automobile accident and consequential damages sustained by her husband, Robert W. Poe. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Crider, Runkle & Tilson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Gordon M. Snyder and Francis A. Cochran, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WHITE, Justice.

Plaintiffs instituted this action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff Beverly Poe and consequential damages sustained by her husband, plaintiff Robert W. Poe, while riding in their automobile, operated by the latter and which was struck by another automobile operated by defendant Talmadge O. Lawrence. Plaintiffs' complaint alleged that the injuries and damage sustained by them proximately resulted from the careless and negligent manner in which defendant operated his motor vehicle. By his answer the defendant denied all of the material allegations contained in plaintiffs' complaint, and by way of a further and separate defense alleged that if plaintiffs did suffer any damages the whole thereof were the direct and proximate result of circumstances beyond defendant's control and which occurred without any negligence or fault whatsoever upon his part. The cause was tried before the court sitting without a jury, resulting in a judgment for plaintiffs in the sum of $11,759.72. From such judgment defendant prosecutes this appeal.

[1] Stating the facts in a light most favorable to the findings and judgment, as we are required to do, the record discloses testimony that the accident occurred about 11 o'clock on the night of September 5, 1941, in the city of South Gate, Los Angeles County, a few feet west of the intersection of San Vincente Avenue and Tweedy Boulevard. San Vincente Avenue is a level, paved highway thirty feet wide, extending in a northerly and southerly direction; intersecting Tweedy Boulevard at right angles. The last named boulevard is a level, paved, through highway, extending approximately in an easterly and westerly direction. It is a through highway protected in that entire area by boulevard stop signs at all intersecting north and south streets. At the time the accident here in question occurred, the boulevard stop sign located at the northwest corner of this intersection, and facing toward the north, to apprise anyone driving an automobile in a southerly direction on San Vincente Avenue of the requirements to stop at that point, was not standing erect and apparently was down on the ground. By stipulation of the parties, Tweedy Boulevard, at the point of this accident, was conceded to be a 25-mile zone, correctly posted as such for a distance of ten blocks west and seven blocks east of the intersection of San Vincente Avenue. On the northeast corner of the intersection there was a vacant lot which extended east from San Vincente Avenue for a distance of 70 feet to a duplex residence (referred to throughout the trial as the "double house"). On the night of the accident there was nothing on the vacant lot to obstruct one's vision.

Just prior to the accident plaintiffs were traveling east on Tweedy Boulevard in their Chevrolet coupe with a woman companion, while defendant was traveling west in his Plymouth sedan.

Plaintiff Robert W. Poe testified he first saw the defendant when the latter was some distance east of the double house, at which time defendant was traveling on his own right side of the highway at a speed ranging from 40 to 45 miles per hour. At about the time appellant reached the double house, where concededly he had an unobstructed view north on San Vincente for 135 feet, he commenced to turn his vehicle gradually toward the center line of Tweedy Boulevard. Mr. Poe believed, when he first saw defendant start to move toward the center, that the latter was getting into a position to make a left turn south on San Vincente. However, observing that as defendant came closer to the intersection he did not slacken his speed, Mr. Poe concluded that defendant was traveling too fast to attempt to make such a turn. As defendant's automobile entered the east boundary of the intersection, he crossed the center line of Tweedy Boulevard on to the south half, upon which Mr. Poe was lawfully traveling eastward. At this time, according to plaintiff Mr. Poe, the defendant's speed continued at from 40 to 45 miles per hour. Defendant continued to travel on Mr. Poe's side of the road toward the latter until the former was about two-thirds through the intersection where he collided with a Pontiac automobile driven by one William Leon Cook and which vehicle had entered the intersection going in a southerly direction and without making the boulevard stop. The Cook car collided with the right side of defendant's car and damaged the right running board toward the rear and the right rear fender as well as the right rear wheel of defendant's vehicle. After the collision with Cook's car, defendant continued on through the intersection, and a few feet west of the intersection he struck plaintiffs' vehicle head on, i.e., the right front of defendant's car struck the left front of plaintiffs' automobile. According to plaintiff Mr. Poe, defendant was still traveling 40 to 45 miles per hour at the time he collided with the plaintiffs' automobile. Plaintiff Mr. Poe testified that immediately before the collision he was on the south half of Tweedy Boulevard traveling at a speed of 20 to 25 miles per hour. When he observed defendant cross over on to the wrong side of the road, Mr. Poe applied his brakes and had skidded some 5 feet when struck by defendant's car. There were skid marks from no automobiles except that of plaintiffs.

In general defendant testified that he was traveling along Tweedy Boulevard at a rate of speed averaging 25 to 30 miles an hour on his own right side of the boulevard; that he was looking straight ahead; that he observed the Pontiac car just as it entered the intersection from the north. To quote his testimony: "I was looking straight ahead and the traffic was light and I knew that Tweedy was a boulevard stop street, and of course I was not expecting a car to come flying out of there at that speed." Defendant testified that the Pontiac car collided with him, causing his automobile to deviate from its course of travel and to collide with plaintiffs' automobile.

Throughout the trial it was the claim of appellant that he was free from negligence because, as he contended, he was traveling on a through highway protected by boulevard stop signs, at a proper rate of speed on the right-hand side of the road, and that he had a right to rely on the presumption that Mr. Cook, driving the Pontiac car, would obey the law and make the boulevard stop. Defendant further contended that he did not see the Pontiac until it entered the intersection. It was further urged by defendant that the Pontiac struck his car thereby forcing him to change his course of travel and to collide with plaintiffs' vehicle.

On the other hand, it was plaintiffs' theory that defendant was negligent because after he passed the double house he had a clear view across the vacant lot of the Pontiac car approaching from the north on San Vincente; that defendant concluded that the driver of the Pontiac was not going to make a boulevard stop and the defendant decided to "Beat Mr. Cook through the intersection"; and in pursuance of such plan he started to change his course of travel as well as position on the highway by driving toward the center line of the boulevard at about the time he passed the double house and approximately 70 feet before he entered the intersection. That defendant was traveling at a speed of 40 to 45 miles an hour in a 25-mile zone, and did not at any time apply his brakes or attempt to slacken his speed. It was plaintiffs' contention that defendant was unsuccessful in his attempt to "Beat Mr. Cook through the intersection"; collided with him and then with plaintiffs' car. Plaintiffs contended that the collision could have been avoided had defendant not deviated from his original course of travel along the right-hand side of Tweedy Boulevard and had he confined his speed within the 25-mile speed limit or, as plaintiff expresses it, "he could have avoided the collision, even at his excessive speed, by merely applying his brakes and slackening his speed, without the necessity of coming to a stop". It might here be noted that defendant's testimony was corroborated to some extent by testimony of Mr. Cook who was driving the Pontiac, but the record reveals that the trial court was not impressed with the verity of Mr. Cook's testimony because of the fact that the latter had stolen the Pontiac car which he was driving, and in rejecting Cook's testimony the trial judge said: "A man who would steal, certainly won't hesitate about lying, and this young man, from his own statement, has a very deplorable record. He has been incarcerated in institutions at least four times and is an admitted thief".

[2-4] It might also be noted that defendant Lawrence's experience in driving motor vehicles was limited to some five or six months; that he possessed a restricted type of operator's license which he characterized as a "permit license" or a license "whereby you were allowed to drive if you had someone with you". Section 253, Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 129 as amended by St.1939, p. 1434. At the time of the accident here in question defendant was not accompanied by a licensed driver. Appellant complains that the trial court gave "considerable thought" to the fact that defendant was an inexperienced driver and possessed only a limited type of driver's license. It is true that in the absence of some causal connection between the inexperience of, and form of driver's license possessed by, a party involved in an accident, and the happening of such accident, no negligence can be predicated on either the driver's inexperience or his type of license. Nevertheless the court was entitled to take those factors into consideration in determining the probability or improbability that defendant, as plaintiff contended, attempted to "beat Mr. Cook through the intersection" when he could have avoided the collision by slackening his speed and continuing along on the right-hand side of Tweedy Boulevard. When the fact of inexperience and restricted license was legally proven, the court was entitled to draw therefrom such deductions as were warranted by a consideration of the usual propensities of people, as well as the course of nature, and to ground thereon such inferences as reason would dictate. Sections 1958, 1960, Code of Civil Procedure. In any event, no objection was made to this line of testimony at the trial and objection thereto cannot be urged for the first time on appeal. Hurd v. Walker, 9 Cal.App.2d 525, 527, 50 P.2d 1074.

[5-9] A review of the record herein generates the conclusion that there was substantial oral testimony which, if believed by the court, coupled with physical facts, amply supports the findings made and the judgment entered thereon. True, there was a conflict in the evidence and had a judgment been rendered for defendant it would be sustained. But that is not the test on appeal. Legion of authority supports the statement that when an attack is made upon a judgment on the ground that it is unsupported by the evidence, the power of reviewing courts is limited to a determination of whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the judgment rendered. Therefore, on appeal from a judgment for plaintiffs in an action for damages for negligence, all conflicts in the evidence must be resolved in favor of the prevailing party. Because it is the rule that all intendments are in favor of the judgment arrived at upon conflicting evidence, the fact that contradictory inferences can reasonably be drawn from the facts in evidence does not authorize an appellate tribunal to substitute other inferences for those drawn by the constitutional and statutory arbiter of the facts. Of course, if the evidence is inherently improbable it may be disregarded, but before such action is warranted there must exist a physical impossibility of the evidence being true, or its falsity must be apparent without any resort to inferences or deductions. Whitsett v. Morton, 138 Cal.App. 628, 629, 630, 33 P.2d 54; Arundel v. Turk, 16 Cal.App.2d 293, 295, 296, 297, 60 P.2d 486. Since the record herein discloses substantial testimony to warrant the trial court in finding defendant guilty of negligence in driving upon the wrong side of the road (Temple v. De Mirjian, 51 Cal.App.2d 559, 561, 125 P.2d 544), the court not being bound to accept defendant's version of the reason for such action, and being entitled to infer under all the circumstances and the testimony of plaintiff Robert W. Poe that defendant's presence on the wrong side of the boulevard was attributable to his unsuccessful and ill-advised attempt to "beat Cook through the intersection", we cannot disturb the conclusion arrived at by the trial court. Further evidence of defendant's negligence, if believed by the trial court, is supplied by the unreasonable rate of speed at which it was testified he was driving, in violation of law and in disregard of the safety of other users of such highway. Matsuda v. Luond, 52 Cal.App.2d 453, 458, 126 P.2d 359. There was also evidence justifying a finding of negligence upon the part of defendant due to his failure to apply his brakes, and thereby slacken his speed, when he saw, as he clearly could have seen, had he looked, that Cook, driving the Pontiac automobile, was not going to make the boulevard stop. Boccalero v. Wadleigh, 113 Cal.App. 376, 379, 298 P. 526.

[10-12] Appellant's contention that he had a right to rely upon the fact that he had no reason to believe Cook or anyone else would unlawfully proceed into Tweedy Boulevard from San Vincente Avenue in violation of the boulevard stop law cannot aid him for as we have pointed out there was substantial evidence to support the finding that appellant himself was not exercising due care as he approached the intersection of San Vincente Avenue. He was not entitled, under such circumstances, to assume that Cook would exercise due care. Doyle v. Loyd, 45 Cal.App.2d 493, 496, 114 P.2d 398. One may not close his eyes to threatening danger and blindly rely upon the assumption that the other party will use reasonable care and prudence and obey the traffic laws. Only when there is nothing in the situation to warn him of impending danger is he not guilty of negligence in relying upon such assumption. Simonsen v. L. J. Christopher Co., 186 Cal. 786, 788, 200 P. 615; Edlund v. Los Angeles R. Co., 14 Cal.App.2d 673, 675, 58 P.2d 928. Finally, the reasonableness of the conduct and actions of a person relying upon the assumption that another will obey the law is primarily a question for determination by the trier of fact. White v. Davis, 103 Cal.App. 531, 284 P. 1086.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

60 Cal.App.2d 218

FAY v. NORQUIST.

Civ. 12471.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 12, 1943.

1. Appeal and error ⚿110

An order denying new trial is not "appealable". Code Civ.Proc. § 963.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Appealable Order".

2. Quieting title ⚿34(1)

In quiet title proceeding, direct prayer to cancel or set aside deed from plaintiff to defendant is not necessary. Code Civ.Proc. § 738; Civ.Code, § 3412.

3. Deeds ⚿54

A deed not delivered to grantee by grantor is void.

4. Quieting title ⚿39

In quiet title proceeding, defendant's cross-complaint, containing usual broad allegations, to quiet title, was sufficient, though it did not set up deed, on which defendant relied, from plaintiff to defendant.

5. Appeal and error ⚿1042(2)

In quiet title proceeding, where defendant filed cross-complaint to quiet title, without setting up deed from plaintiff to defendant, and evidence and findings were pertinent to pleadings without reference to allegation on information and belief in answer to cross-complaint that defendant would rely on such deed, which such answer attacked as not delivered to defendant, order denying motion to strike such allegation was not prejudicial to defendant.

6. Deeds ⚿208(1)

In quiet title proceeding, where defendant filed cross-complaint to quiet title in her, evidence held substantially sufficient to sustain trial court's finding that deed from plaintiff to defendant, who relied thereon, was manually transferred to defendant by plaintiff without intent to pass title to realty and hence not delivered.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Rena Fay against Rose Norquist, who filed a cross-complaint to quiet title. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals.

Appeal from order denying new trial dismissed, and judgment affirmed.

Harry F. Sullivan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Keyes & Erskine, Leslie L. Roos, and W. B. Ryder, all of San Francisco (J. Benton Tulley, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

WARD, Justice.

[1] This is an appeal by defendant and cross-complainant from a judgment and order denying a new trial in an action to quiet title. The order is not appealable, Code Civ.Proc. sec. 963, and the appeal therefrom will therefore be dismissed.

The complaint is in the ordinary form to quiet title to certain real property, with the usual allegations and prayer. Defendant answered, alleging that prior to September 26, 1928, plaintiff was the owner of the property, but that since that date she, the defendant, is the true owner thereof, and in a cross-complaint prayed that her title be quieted. In an amended answer to the cross-complaint plaintiff denied generally the claims thus set up and pleaded that the alleged cause of action is barred by section 318 of the Code of Civil Procedure. She also set forth that: "Plaintiff and cross-defendant is informed and believes and therefore alleges that the alleged cause of action set forth in said cross-complaint is based upon a certain deed of gift from plaintiff and cross-defendant to defendant and cross-complainant dated September 26, 1928, and recorded January 3, 1941, in Liber 3715 of the Official Records of the City and County of San Francisco, at page 19. That there was never any delivery of the said deed, but in any event defendant and cross-complainant is barred by her laches in failing to assert any claim to the ownership and/or possession of the real property herein involved from the date of said deed until June, 1941, for the reason that during said interval of approximately thirteen years, plaintiff and cross-defendant was in possession of said real property at all times, paid all taxes assessed against said real property and/or improvements thereon, improved said real property and contracted for and paid for various and sundry repairs to the improvements of said real property. That defendant and cross-complainant at all times during said period had full and complete knowledge of all of said acts of plaintiff and cross-defendant, but took no action with regard thereto."

The evidence on each side was addressed primarily to the circumstances surrounding the transaction, whereby the defendant, Mrs. Norquist, came into possession of the deed. Called as a witness by plaintiff, she testified that the parties were close friends, but are not related; that prior to September 26, 1928, while at a doctor's office, plaintiff, who was "not feeling very well," said: "'Well,' * * * I think she says, 'I will deed that little bungalow, the first little bungalow.' She has two bungalows, she built that one first, and the second one afterwards. She said, 'I want to give you that bungalow. I want to make a gift to you.' So she said 'Get in touch with your lawyer.'" Defendant further testified that at her suggestion the parties went to her lawyer the next day and he drew the deed, which was signed and acknowledged, plaintiff requesting her not to record it until after the death of Mrs. Fay's husband. There is other evidence that the deed was not to be recorded until after the death of Mrs. Fay. Defendant admitted that during the years that followed she made no effort to collect rents from the tenants of the property in question; that in fact she paid Mrs. Fay rental for the place while she lived there for a short period; that she never paid taxes, nor the cost of improvements, repairs or insurance. Mr. Fay died in 1932 and while, according to defendant's statement, she might then have filed the deed and received the benefits of the property, she applied to the Relief Administration in 1934 for aid, stating in her application therefor that she owned no real property. As stated, the deed was not recorded until 1941.

Plaintiff testified that defendant agreed never to ask for the property during the lifetime of the grantor; that the grantee understood the deed was not to be recorded, and that the property "was still mine." The deed was signed, acknowledged and left upon the desk of defendant's attorney. From the plaintiff's testimony it appears that there was no intent to pass a present title.

Plaintiff's physician testified that she told him she had signed a deed to the property but that it was not to be recorded until after her death.

The attorney for the defendant testified that there was a statement made in his office that the deed was not to be recorded until the death of Mr. Fay; that he advised plaintiff that she would have to hand the deed personally to defendant and tell her she was making an absolute delivery, which instruction was followed; that plaintiff's reason for not wishing the deed to be recorded until the death of Mr. Fay was "because the income of the property was necessary to take care of him during his lifetime."

The trial court in effect found that plaintiff's claim to the property was good and valid; that although there had been a manual delivery of the deed there was no intent to pass title; that defendant's claim was barred by reason of laches, and that plaintiff had been in adverse possession of the property for over five years. Judgment for plaintiff was rendered based upon such findings.

Appellant, Mrs. Norquist, contends that there is no prayer nor request by respondent, Mrs. Fay, in the pleadings for a cancellation of the deed or to set it aside; that the allegations relative to non-delivery were made on information and belief and that the deed having been recorded several months prior to the filing of the complaint and answer to the cross-complaint respondent was deemed to have notice of the public record; that therefore the pleading upon information and belief precluded findings thereon.

[2, 3] In a quiet title proceeding under the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure, sec. 738, it is not necessary that there be a direct prayer to cancel or set aside a deed, as is usual under the provisions of Civil Code, sec. 3412. If, as the court found, the deed was not delivered, it is void, and an order of cancellation would be superfluous. Cutler v. Fitzgibbons, 148 Cal. 562, 88 P. 1075; Nelson v. Thomas, 36 Cal.App. 433, 172 P. 398; Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 P. 1, Ann.Cas.1916E, 703. In the present case there is no contention that the deed was obtained by fraud.

[4, 5] Appellant of necessity was forced to rely on the deed if title was to be established in her favor. Instead of setting up the deed in the answer, she entered a general denial, and the cross-complaint contains the usual broad allegations, and is sufficient. Bertelsen v. Bertelsen, 49 Cal.App.2d 479, 122 P.2d 130. From the allegations of the cross-complaint respondent could not be sure what claims appellant would present. As a matter of precaution in her amended answer to the cross-complaint respondent proceeded to allege on information and belief that appellant would rely on a certain deed, and then proceeded to attack such deed. Respondent should not be penalized for her effort to inform the court of the possible evidentiary issues. There was a motion to strike the allegation based on information and belief, which was denied. Assuming that the motion should have been granted, appellant was not prejudiced by the order denying it. The evidence adduced and the findings are pertinent to the pleadings without reference to the matters stated on information and belief. The answer to the complaint alleged appellant's title as of September 26, 1928, which is the date of the purported deed.

[6] The vital question in this case is the validity of the delivery of the deed. Appellant Norquist contends that the evidence shows a valid delivery to have been made. The trial court found there was no delivery, but that the deed was manually transferred, thereby reducing the issue to the question of intent to create a present estate in appellant. This puts Mrs. Norquist to the necessity on appeal of demonstrating that the evidence does not support the finding that the manual transfer was "with no intent to pass title." This she is unable to do as a matter of law, as the evidence heretofore referred to is substantially sufficient to sustain the finding under the recent decision in Dinneen v. Younger, 57 Cal.App.2d 200, 134 P.2d 323. In that case it was held that the handing of a signed and acknowledged deed establishes a prima facie case of execution and intent to make a delivery and transfer of title, but that the presumption of legal delivery is not conclusive. The court there said (57 Cal. App.2d at page 204, 134 P.2d at page 325):

"The concept of delivery involves more than merely physically handing possession of the deed to the grantee or someone on his behalf. Piercy v. Piercy, 18 Cal.App. 751, 124 P. 561; Baker v. Baker, 9 Cal.App. 737, 100 P. 892. The act of delivery must be accompanied with the intent that the deed shall become presently operative as such, that is, must be accompanied with the intent to presently pass title, even though the right to possession and enjoyment may not accrue until some future time. (See cases collected 9 Cal. Jur., p. 153, § 52.) The rule applies not only where possession of the deed is given to a third person, but also where such possession is given to the grantee directly. Marple v. Jackson, 184 Cal. 411, 193 P. 940; Stone v. Daily, 181 Cal. 571, 185 P. 665; Hefner v. Sealey, 175 Cal. 18, 164 P. 898; Cox v. Schnerr, 172 Cal. 371, 156 P. 509; Bias v. Reed, 169 Cal. 33, 145 P. 516; Kenney v. Parks, 137 Cal. 527, 70 P. 556. Intention to part with title is indispensable—that is the factor that gives vitality to the delivery. Ruiz v. Dow, 113 Cal. 490, 45 P. 867; Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 P. 1, Ann.Cas.1916E, 703, and see cases cited 9 Cal.Jur., § 52 at p. 155, fns. 19 and 20.

"It is also clear that where a valid delivery is established subsequent acts and declarations of the grantor in disparagement of his deed, outside the presence of the grantee, are not admissible. Such declarations or acts are hearsay and self-serving. See cases cited infra. But when the very question presented is whether or not the alleged grantor intended a valid delivery—that is, intended to divest himself of title—his declarations and acts made and done outside the presence of the grantee after physically delivering possession of the deed to the grantee or to a third person, are admissible as bearing upon the vital question of intent."

In Whitlow v. Durst, 20 Cal.2d 523, 524, 525, 127 P.2d 530, 531, the court said: "When intent is a material element of a disputed fact, declarations of a decedent made after as well as before an alleged act that indicate the intent with which he performed the act are admissible in evidence as an exception to the hearsay rule, and it is immaterial that such declarations are self-serving. Thus, in cases involving the delivery of deeds, declarations of the alleged grantor made before and after the making of the deed are admissible upon the issue of delivery, and it is immaterial that such declarations are in the interest of the party producing them."

In view of the finding, based upon substantial evidence, that there was no delivery of the deed, it is not necessary to consider additional contentions that if there was a valid delivery appellant's claim is nevertheless barred by laches and that respondent acquired the title by adverse possession.

The appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed. The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concur.

60 Cal.App.2d 211

WILSON et al. v. SMITH et al. (WILSON, Intervener).

Civ. 14121.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 11, 1943.

1. Appeal and error ⚷773(3)

The former policy of considering filing of belated opening brief after notice of motion to dismiss a sufficient answer to the motion, where no appreciable delay had been occasioned in the hearing, must be abandoned in view of Supreme Court's decision that Rules of Court have effect of law and must be followed. Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 1, § 4.

2. Appeal and error ⚷773(3)

Motion to dismiss appeal because of failure to file opening brief within time prescribed by Rules, and motion to be relieved from default on ground of excusable delay and neglect, are addressed to the sound discretion of the court. Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 1, § 4.

3. Appeal and error ⚷773(3)

In view of short time intervening between Supreme Court decision effectuating a change of policy and motion to dismiss appeal for failure to file brief within time and facts that hearing would not be appreciably postponed, and that brief had been proffered for filing before hearing of motion to dismiss, and showing made by appellant, motion to dismiss would be denied. Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 1, § 4.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Newcomb Condee, Judge.

Action by Edward N. Wilson, sometimes known as E. N. Wilson, a judicially declared incompetent person, by Mary Ellen Wilson, guardian of his person and estate (Donald P. Lane, in the capacity of and as special administrator of the estate of Edward N. Wilson, deceased, substituted party plaintiff), against Laurel Edward Smith, the estate of Emma Wilson Smith, deceased, Laurel Edward Smith, as executor of the last will and testament of Emma Wilson Smith, deceased, Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles, as trustee, Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles, wherein Mary Ellen Wilson, intervened. From the judgment rendered, the intervener appeals. On respondents' motion to dismiss appeal.

Order in accordance with opinion.

A. Brigham Rose, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Newton M. Todd and Fred A. Watkins, both of Long Beach, for respondents.

WHITE, Justice.

Respondents have moved to dismiss this appeal as appellant's opening brief was not filed within the time prescribed by Rule 1, Section 4, of the Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, in effect at the time this motion was filed and heard. Appellant has moved to be relieved from default for the claimed reason that her delay and neglect were excusable.

The clerk's and reporter's transcripts on appeal were filed April 13, 1943, and the notice of motion to dismiss was filed June 4, 1943, at which time appellant's brief was 22 days overdue. Two days prior to the hearing on said motion, appellant served upon respondents and offered for filing in this court her opening brief, a reading of which impresses us that it presents for determination substantial questions.

The affidavit filed by appellant in her effort to secure a relaxation of the pertinent rule, while not too definite or altogether satisfactory, does nevertheless give as reasons for the delay in filing the brief that "Affiant anticipated that out of monies in possession of the estate and which were allowed to appellant, she would be able to pay for the costs, but, notwithstanding that there are funds in the estate, no payments have been made to her"; that counsel for appellant "has been engaged in a multitude of legal proceedings engaging his time"; that counsel was preparing the brief when he was advised by the clerk of this court that the appeal herein was improperly taken to the District Court of Appeal and had been transferred to the Supreme Court; that "affiant being mindful of the fact that the Supreme Court has consistently transferred appeals taken thereto in other than capital cases to the District Court, naturally awaited advices respecting the re-transfer of the case to the District Court of Appeal, but received no such advices". To the foregoing might be added the fact, heretofore noted, that prior to the hearing of the motion to dismiss, appellant proffered her brief for filing in this court.

[1, 2] It is true that since the decision by our Supreme Court in the case of Murphy v. Krumm, 136 P.2d 8, we must abandon the former policy prevailing in this Division of considering the filing of the delinquent opening brief after the notice of motion to dismiss was given and before the same was made in open court, a sufficient answer to the motion, where no appreciable delay had been occasioned in the hearing of the case, because in the cited case it was held that the applicable rules of court have the effect of law and must be followed. Nevertheless, motions of the nature here presented are addressed to the sound discretion of the court before which the motion is made, and the action of courts on such motions, upon pleas to be relieved from default is not governed or controlled by any hard and fast rules. Were we to apply with absolute strictness the pertinent rules, grave injustice might ensue and a litigant acting in good faith might be deprived of his day in court, notwithstanding the merits of his case, because forsooth he relied upon the representation of competency upon the part of his attorney, which competency, to a degree at least, must be implied from the licensing of the latter to practice his profession. Insofar as our policy in connection with the disposition of motions of the character here presented is concerned, we find ourselves in accord with the views presented with such clarity by Mr. Justice Marks, speaking for the Fourth District Court of Appeal in the case of Strong v. Mack, 137 P.2d 748. Furthermore, it is noteworthy that with reference to dismissal of appeals for failure to file an opening brief within the prescribed time, the new rules on appeal, adopted by the Judicial Council and effective July 1, 1943, provide as follows: "Rule 17. Failure to file brief. (a) (Opening brief) If the appellant's opening brief is not filed within the time prescribed in subdivision (a) of Rule 16, the clerk of the reviewing court shall notify the parties by mail that if the brief is not filed within 30 days after the date of mailing of the notification, the appeal will be dismissed, unless good cause is shown for relief. If a sufficient written showing of excuse is made within such 30-day period, the Chief Justice or Presiding Justice may grant additional time to file the brief subject to such conditions as he may deem proper to impose; otherwise the appeal may be dismissed forthwith. If the notification is not mailed by the clerk or the appeal is not dismissed on the court's own motion, the respondent may move to dismiss the appeal." In other words, under the new rules now in effect, this appellant would have been entitled to a notice from the clerk of this court when the allotted 30 days to file her brief had expired. That unless the document was served and filed within another 30 days, the appeal would, in the absence of a showing for relief, be dismissed, and in the instant case some 8 days would have remained after the date when the notice of motion to dismiss was filed herein within which appellant could have presented her opening brief for filing.

[3] In view of the change required in our former policy and ruling upon motions of this kind under the rules prevailing prior to July 1, 1943, and the short time intervening between the rendition of the Supreme Court decision in Murphy v. Krumm, supra (April 12, 1943), and the filing of the motion to dismiss the appeal herein (June 4, 1943), we feel that some liberality in ruling upon such motions is warranted because of the short time afforded members of the bar to inform themselves of the required change in our former liberal policy. Furthermore, in the instant case were we to relax the rule and relieve the delinquent appellant from default, the hearing of the appeal upon its merits will not be appreciably postponed. Chapman v. Bank of California, 88 Cal. 419, 421, 26 P. 608.

For the foregoing reasons the motion to dismiss the appeal herein is denied; the clerk of this court is directed to file the opening brief served upon respondent and presented for filing; respondents to have 30 days from and after the filing of this decision within which to serve and file their brief, and appellant to have 20 days from and after the service upon them and filing of respondents' brief in which to serve and file her reply brief.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

60 Cal.App.2d 63

PEOPLE v. GARNER.

Cr. 3690.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 30, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 9, 1943.

Hearing Denied Aug. 26, 1943.

1. Abortion ⚷11

Defendant could not be convicted of using an instrument to bring about a miscarriage in violation of statute upon testimony of woman upon or with whom offense was allegedly committed, unless she was corroborated by other evidence, but defendant himself could be source of the necessary corroboration Pen.Code, §§ 274, 1108.

2. Abortion ⚷11

Defendant's statement as to his examination of complaining witness, together with his subsequent actions, was sufficient "corroboration" of testimony of complaining witness and friend who took her to keep appointment with defendant to support conviction of employing an instrument to procure a miscarriage. Pen.Code, §§ 274, 1108.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Corroboration".

3. Criminal law ⚷1036(6), 1044

Defendant was in no position to complain of error, if any, in admission of physician's opinion that an abortion had been induced, where no objection was made to any of questions which elicited opinion, although opportunity for an objection existed, and there was no motion to strike opinion when given.

4. Criminal law ⚷1069(6)

Where appeal was taken orally at time of pronouncing sentence, over a month after defendant's motion for new trial had been denied, attempted appeal from order denying new trial was too late, and such appeal was dismissed. Pen.Code, § 1239.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; A. A. Scott, Judge.

Juno N. Garner was convicted of violating section 274 of the Penal Code, in that he employed an instrument to procure a miscarriage, and he appeals from the judgment of conviction and from order denying motion for new trial.

Appeal from order dismissed, and judgment affirmed.

James O. Warner, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Gilbert F. Nelson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BISHOP, Justice pro tem.

The defendant was found guilty of violating section 274, Penal Code, in that he employed an instrument to procure a miscarriage, and was sentenced to state prison. On his appeal from the final judgment of conviction, the defendant makes but two points: First, that the testimony of the accomplices was not corroborated; and, second, that error was committed in permitting Dr. Wright to testify that the abortion had been induced. We find neither ground sufficient to sustain a reversal of the judgment.

[1, 2] The testimony of the woman upon whom the crime was committed, to whom we shall hereafter refer as the complaining witness, was ample to support the conclusions which the trial court's judgment indicates was reached, that is, that she was pregnant and that the defendant used an instrument to bring about the miscarriage which followed shortly after her visit to him. By the provisions of section 1108, Penal Code, in a case such as this "the defendant cannot be convicted upon the testimony of the woman upon or with whom the offense was committed, unless she is corroborated by other evidence." The defendant himself may, however, be the source of the necessary corroboration (People v. Collins, 1935, 4 Cal.App.2d 86, 87, 40 P.2d 542; People v. Pritchard, 1943, 58 Cal.App.2d 791, 137 P.2d 697), and that was so in this case. His story closely paralleled that of the complaining witness except, of course, the operation of which she spoke was, in his version, only an examination. His subsequent actions, however, were such that the trial judge was warranted in viewing them as admissions of guilt. Although the complaining witness had paid him $70, he told the police officers who questioned him that she had not. Some time after June 30, the day of the "examination," he made an attempt to obtain the signature of the complaining witness to this letter: "June 30, 1942. This is to certify that, believing myself to be pregnant I have attempted to abort myself and find myself in much difficulty due to vaginal bleeding and passage of material from the vagina. I hereby authorize Dr. J. N. Garner to do anything necessary to relieve my condition and will not in any way hold him responsible for any further complications that may arise." The complaining witness refused to sign this statement, so a second letter, also dated June 30, was then presented to her by the defendant. Because she needed the $70 that was to be returned if she signed the second letter, she did so. It reads: "This is to certify that I, Mrs. Ollie V. Beggs am suffering from nausea and vomiting, vaginal bleeding and pain and that I hereby authorize Dr. J. N. Garner to carry out any procedures that he may deem necessary. Further, I hereby relinquish any claim of any sort whatsoever upon Dr. J. N. Garner for any complications which may develop. signed: Mrs. Ollie V. Beggs Mr. O. V. Beggs 257 W. Beach Inglewood." For the sufficiency as corroborative evidence of the acts of a defendant which reveal consciousness of guilt, see People v. Collins, cited above, and People v. Hoyt, 1942, 20 Cal.2d 306, 313, 125 P.2d 29.

Further corroboration of the testimony of the complaining witness came from the friend who took her to keep her evening appointment with the defendant. This friend described the complaining witness as in very good spirits on the way to the appointment, in great agony as she returned from it three quarters of an hour later.

[3] The defendant is in no position to complain of the error, if it was an error, in the admission of Dr. Wright's opinion that an abortion had been induced, as no objection was made to any of the questions which elicited the opinion, although the opportunity for an objection existed, nor was there a motion to strike the opinion when given. People v. Rucker, 1936, 11 Cal.App.2d 609, 612, 54 P.2d 508.

[4] The appeal in this case was taken orally, at the time of pronouncing sentence, over a month after defendant's motion for a new trial had been denied. The attempted appeal from the order denying a new trial was thus taken too late, Pen.Code, sec. 1239, and that appeal is dismissed. The final judgment of conviction is affirmed.

SHINN, Acting P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

Hearing denied; CARTER, TRAYNOR, and SCHAUER, JJ., dissenting.

STOCKTON v. DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT et al.

Civ. 6871.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, Sacramento, California.
July 31, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 30, 1943.
Hearing Granted Sept. 27, 1943.

1. Officers 🔑4

The right to retain an office or employment of indefinite term depends upon existence of department or agency to which the services belong, and where agency is lawfully terminated in good faith, office or employment ceases to exist when agency is abolished.

2. States 🔑67

The California Employment Commission had sole right to abolish Division of State Employment Agencies and to transfer duties of Chief of Division to another officer provided change was lawfully made. St.1937, p. 187, § 56; St.1939, p. 2510, § 172; St.1935, pp. 1241–1243, §§ 75, 88, 93.

3. Officers 🔑69

The purpose of Civil Service System is not to perpetuate offices, but to preserve status of state employees as a reward for faithful services and for welfare of government, and hence a state agency may be abolished in interest of economy or efficiency, regardless of whether there are sufficient funds to run the agency. St.1939, p. 2510, § 172.

4. Mandamus 🔑81

The statutory discretion conferred upon California Employment Commission to abolish Division of State Employment Agencies, and to consolidate its functions with Department of Employment cannot be interfered with by the courts in absence of proof of bad faith, fraud or violation of statute. St.1937, p. 187, § 56; St.1939, p. 2510, § 172; St.1935, pp. 1241–1243, §§ 75, 88, 93.

5. Officers 🔑69

The California Employment Commission could abolish Division of State Employment Agencies and transfer duties of chief of division to Director of Department of Employment notwithstanding that Director might not have enjoyed a civil service status, provided transfer of duties was lawfully accomplished. St.1937, p. 187, § 56; St.1939, p. 2510, § 172; St.1935, pp. 1241–1243, §§ 75, 88, 93.

6. Mandamus 🔑77(4)

Mandamus directing reinstatement of Chief of Division of State Employment Agencies which division had been abolished by California Employment Commission which transferred chief's duties to Director of Department of Employment was improperly granted in absence of proof of fraud, bad faith or violation of statute by Commission. St.1937, p. 187, § 56; St.1939, p. 2510, § 172; St.1935, pp. 1241–1243, §§ 75, 88, 93.

7. Officers 🔑76
States 🔑44

Where Division of State Employment Agencies was legally abolished by California Employment Commission, office of Chief of Division ceased to exist, notwithstanding chief's duties were transferred to Director of Department of Employment, and hence in absence of proof of fraud, bad faith or violation of statute, Personnel Board had no jurisdiction to direct chief's reinstatement. St.1937, p. 187, § 56; St. 1939, p. 2510, § 172; St.1935, pp. 1241–1243, §§ 75, 88, 93.

8. Mandamus 🔑179

A writ of mandamus directing Director of Department of Employment to reinstate deposed Chief of Division of State Employment Agencies which Division had been lawfully abolished by California Employment Commission was void where neither the commission nor its members were parties to the proceeding. St.1937, p. 187, § 56; St.1939, p. 2510, § 172; St.1935, pp. 1241–1243, §§ 75, 88, 93.

9. Mandamus 🔑187(9)

On appeal from order granting peremptory writ of mandamus, appellate court may examine record of proceedings for purpose of determining whether trial court acted arbitrarily.

10. Mandamus 🔑187(9)

On appeal from judgment directing reinstatement of Chief of Division of State Employment Agencies which Division had been abolished by California Employment Commission, appellate court would review record to ascertain whether there was evidence to support charge that commission acted in bad faith. St.1937, p. 187, § 56; St.1939, p. 2510, § 172; St.1935, pp. 1241–1243, §§ 75, 88, 93.

11. Evidence 🔑83(1)

In absence of evidence to the contrary, court must presume that California Employment Commission acted lawfully in abolishing Division of State Employment Agencies and transferring duties of Chief of Division to Director of Department of Employment. St.1937, p. 187, § 56; St. 1939, p. 2510, § 172; St.1935, pp. 1241–1243, §§ 75, 88, 93.

12. Mandamus 🔑168(4)

Evidence failed to show fraud, bad faith or violation of statute by California Employment Commission in abolishing Division of State Employment Agencies and transferring duties of Chief of Division to Director of Department of Employment, so as to authorize order directing reinstatement of the Chief. St.1937, p. 187, § 56; St.1939, p. 2510, § 172; St.1935, pp. 1241–1243, §§ 75, 88, 93.

13. Mandamus 🔑151(2)

A petition against Department of Employment, executive director thereof, State Controller, State Treasurer and an employee for mandamus to require reinstatement of Chief of Division of State Employment Agencies which Division had been abolished by California Employment Commission was demurrable for misjoinder of parties, since the commission, or its members, were "necessary parties." St. 1937, p. 187, § 56; St.1939, p. 2510, § 172; St.1935, pp. 1241–1243, §§ 75, 88, 90, 91, 93; Code Civ.Proc. § 389.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Necessary Party".

14. Officers 🔑94

A civil service employee wrongfully deprived of his position may recover amount of his accrued salary during period he is prevented from performing his duties, less the sum he receives from private or public employment during that period.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Raymond T. Coughlin, Judge.

Mandamus proceeding by Roy S. Stockton against the Department of Employment of the State of California and others to require the reinstatement of the petitioner to his former position of Chief of the Division of State Employment Agencies, and requiring the payment of his salary from the date at which the Division was abolished and his office as chief was terminated, wherein the respondents filed a demurrer. From a judgment for petitioner, the respondents appeal.

Reversed with directions.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and John J. Dailey, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellants.

A. J. Kennedy, Albert E. Sheets, and Carl Kuchman, all of Sacramento, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice.

The respondents named in the petition will be referred to as defendants, pursuant to Section 1063 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

They have appealed from a judgment granting a peremptory writ of mandamus directing the reinstatement of the petitioner, Roy S. Stockton, to his former position of Chief of the Division of State Employment Agencies, and requiring the payment of his salary at the rate of $440 per month from July 20, 1940, at which time the Division was abolished and his office as Chief was terminated. The defendants demurred to the petition on the ground of misjoinder of parties and for failure to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. It was asserted the California Employment Commission (formerly the Unemployment Reserves Commission) or its members are necessary parties defendant in this proceeding, since Section 75 of the Unemployment Insurance Act constituted the Commission the sole governing agent of the Department of Employment. (Stats.1935, ch. 352, p. 1226, and amendments thereto, Deering's Supp. to Calif. Laws of 1935, p. 2039, Act 8780d.) The demurrer was overruled. The defendants filed their return and answer to the petition, setting up the same issues of alleged misjoinder of parties and failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. At the hearing, when the petitioner's evidence was completed, the defendants moved for a nonsuit, which was denied. The defendants then adduced evidence of the regularity of the proceedings of the Commission in abolishing the Division of State Employment Agencies, and the cause was argued and submitted. Findings were adopted by the trial court favorable to the petitioner. The peremptory writ of mandamus was issued directing the reinstatement of the petitioner and the payment of his salary as prayed for.

The Department of Industrial Relations was divided into five divisions (Sec. 56, Labor Code, St.1937, p. 187, former Pol.Code Sec. 364a), one of which was the Division of State Employment Agencies. From and after December 13, 1934, the petitioner, Roy S. Stockton, was employed and served as Chief of the Division of State Employment Agencies, in the Department of Industrial Relations. On July 1, 1936, this Division was transferred to the Department of Employment, with Stockton as its Chief. He served in that capacity until July 23, 1940, at a salary of $440 a month. On that date, in the interest of economy and efficiency, the Division was abolished by resolution of the Commission and its functions were combined with those of the Department of Employment, over which R. G. Wagenet presided as Director of the Department. Stockton was then placed on the lay-off list as provided by Section 172 of the Civil Service Act St.1939, p. 2510. (Stats.1937, p. 2085, and amendments, 1 Deering's Gen.Laws of 1937, p. 742, and Supp.1939, Act 1404.)

The California Unemployment Insurance Act was adopted and became effective September 15, 1935. Section 75 of that Act provides: "This act shall be administered by the Unemployment Reserves Commission of this State, to be appointed by the Governor, by and through the State Department of Employment which is hereby created and of which such commission shall be the governing body."

Section 88 of that Act provides: "The commission may appoint and employ an executive officer, who shall act as the secretary of the commission, and shall be Director of the Department of Employment. The commission may employ such assistance as seems to it necessary for the administration of this act, subject to the provisions of the Civil Service laws."

Section 93 of that act provides in part: "On July 1, 1936, the Division of State Employment Agencies of the Department of Industrial Relations shall become and remain the Division of State Employment Agencies in the Department of Employment. All persons employed in such division and the records and property thereof shall, upon such change, become the employees, records and property of the Department of Employment. All persons employed in any capacity in such division shall continue and remain in such capacity in such division after the change, subject to the power of the commission as the governing body of the department to abolish such division, change old divisions or create new divisions, change duties and powers of such division, or impose upon it new and additional powers and duties.

"The State of California hereby accepts the provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act, approved June 6, 1933, passed by the Congress of the United States, and entitled 'An act to provide for the establishment of a National employment system and for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such system, and for other purposes,' in conformity with section 4 thereof, and will observe and comply with the requirements of said act of Congress.

"The Division of State Employment Agencies in the Department of Employment shall be the agency of this State for the purposes of said act." (Italics added.)

Pursuant to Section 93 of that Act, the Commission, as the governing body of the Department of Employment, for the avowed purpose of economy and efficiency, adopted a resolution on June 14, 1940, as previously stated, abolishing the Division of State Employment Agencies, over which the petitioner presided as Chief officer, and transferred his duties to R. G. Wagenet, the Director of the Department of Employment. All civil service employees of the abolished division, except Stockton and his assistant, were transferred to positions in the Department of Employment having duties comparable with those which they previously performed. Mr. Stockton was then placed on the list of lay-off employees as provided by Section 172 of the State Civil Service Act. (Stats.1937, p. 2085, 1 Deering's Gen.Laws of 1937, p. 742, and Supp.1939, Act 1404.) That resolution provides in part:

"Resolved, that the California Employment Commission, pursuant to the authority conferred upon it by law, and for the purpose of achieving economy, efficiency of operations, and for the purpose of simplifying the operating functions of the Department of Employment, does hereby order the reorganization of the Department of Employment as follows:

"1. The existing position or office of the Executive Director is hereby abolished and in lieu thereof is hereby created the position or office of Director of the Department of Employment, said position or office to be held by the present incumbent of the former position or office, Mr. R. G. Wagenet.

"2. The existing Division of State Employment Agencies, as such, (otherwise known as Division of Employment Service) of the Department of Employment is hereby abolished; and it is hereby ordered that lay-offs shall be made forthwith from the positions or offices of Chief and Associate Chief of said division. The aforementioned lay-offs are hereby expressly declared to be for the purpose of economy and increased efficiency of operations. All other personnel in said division are hereby assigned, under the direction of the Director of the Department, to positions of similar class and responsibilities in the Department of Employment. All duties and responsibilities heretofore performed in the positions of Chief and Associate Chief of said division are hereby transferred to said Director of the Department of Employment and shall be performed by said Director in addition to his existing duties and responsibilities. * * *"

The foregoing Resolution was duly served on the petitioner. No further duties were thereafter performed by him. He was prevented from doing so by the Director of the Department of Employment, who assumed the duties and performed them as directed by the Commission, in addition to his own obligations. On July 21, 1940, the petitioner appealed under Section 172(k) of the Civil Service Act, St.1939, p. 2510, to the Personnel Board from the order abolishing the Division and transferring the duties of the Chief to the Director of the Department of Employment. That appeal to the Personnel Board was taken on the ground that the abolition of the Division and the transfer of the duties of Chief thereof to the Director of the Department of Employment were illegal and void for the reason that those acts were performed in bad faith by the Commission for the purpose of depriving the petitioner of his civil service status. It was also asserted the change in that service was not made on account of a lack of either work or funds in that Division. The petitioner asked the State Personnel Board to reinstate him as Chief of the Division and to direct the payment of his salary of $440 per month from July 20, 1940. Several hearings of the Board were held on that appeal, which was submitted September 4, 1940. Counsel for the petitioner and for the Department of Employment were present and participated in the hearings. Oral and documentary evidence was adduced in behalf of both parties. October 17, 1940, the Personnel Board rendered its decision which contained the following language:

"Decision

"It Is Hereby Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed that the Department did not comply with Section 172 of the State Civil Service Act of 1937, as amended, and said layoff was improper.

"It Is Further Ordered that the petition of said Roy S. Stockton be granted and petitioner be reinstated to his position as Chief, Division of State Employment Agencies, as of July 20, 1940, and that he be granted his salary from and after said date."

A petition for rehearing before the State Personnel Board was denied. The Department of Employment, however, refused to comply with that order to reinstate the petitioner or to pay his salary, as directed by the Board. This petition for a writ of mandamus was then filed in the Superior Court of Sacramento County. The defendants demurred to the petition on the grounds previously stated. The demurrer was overruled. The answer and return of the defendants was then filed denying the material allegations of the petition. The trial of the mandamus proceeding began January 12, 1942, and was concluded on January 15th. On April 8, 1942, the court adopted findings favorable to the petitioner. Finding "X" determines: "That it is true said lay-off of petitioner was made in bad faith and for the purpose of depriving petitioner of his civil service rights; that it is true said lay-off was not made because of lack of work or lack of funds; that it is true no interests of economy were served by reason of said lay-off."

The court further found that the petitioner, since December 13, 1934, has been and now is the holder of the permanent civil service position of Chief of the Division of State Employment Agencies, at a salary of $440 per month. A peremptory writ of mandamus was issued, directing the reinstatement of Roy S. Stockton to the position of Chief of the Division of State Employment Agencies, and ordering the payment of his salary at the rate of $440 per month from July 20, 1940. From that judgment this appeal was perfected.

On January 1, 1942, while this proceeding was pending in the trial court, the Division of Employment Agencies was transferred to Federal control and all of its employees were inducted into the service of that department of the United States government, with Federal civil service status. The Director of the State Department of Employment, however, failed and refused to certify the petitioner Stockton as an employee of the Federal government.

The petitioner concedes that the appellants correctly state in their opening brief the question to be determined on this appeal, which reads: "Did the State Personnel Board have authority to reinstate petitioner after the Employment Commission abolished the Division of Employment Agencies?"

The petitioner states the issue in his own language as follows: "The question thus propounded by appellants is the sole issue on this appeal; it has been the only issue in the case since its inception. The solution of the question involves a determination of the essential jurisdiction of the State Personnel Board over layoffs in the State civil service. In short, the basic question is: What is the jurisdiction of the State Personnel Board?"

A consideration of this question prompts the further inquiry: How could the Personnel Board or the trial court act within its jurisdiction in assuming to direct the reinstatement of the petitioner, Stockton, to a position which was eliminated as the result of abolishing the Division of State Employment Agencies, as permitted by statute, in the absence of proof of fraud, bad faith or violation of the statute on the part of the Commission?

Another preliminary question is involved regarding the failure of the trial court to require the Commission or its members, as indispensable parties, to be joined as defendants in this proceeding. It is contended that since the Commission and its members are indispensable parties, the peremptory writ is ineffectual.

[1] The petitioner suggests that the position formerly occupied by him consists of the particular duties which he performed rather than the office of Chief of Division, and that so long as the service remains and there is ample work and funds with which to maintain it, the office may not be dispensed with. The right to retain an office or employment of indefinite term depends upon the existence of the department or agency to which the services belong. Where the statute authorizes the abolishing of the agency, and it is lawfully terminated in good faith, the office or employment ceases to exist when the agency is abolished. In the case of Tanner v. Edwards, 31 Utah 80, 86 P. 765, 766, 120 Am. St.Rep. 919, 10 Ann.Cas. 1091, it is said: "The term 'office' is defined as 'a right to exercise a public or private employment, and to take the fees and emoluments thereunto belonging.' * * * It embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emoluments, and duties, and these ideas or elements cannot be separated, and each considered abstractly. All, taken together, constitute the office * * *." See 29 Words and Phrases, Perm. Ed., p. 248.

[2, 3] In the present case the Chief of Division had no fixed term of office. His duties were those which were prescribed by the Commission. It had the sole right to abolish the agency under which the office existed, and to transfer those duties to another officer, provided the change was made pursuant to statute for the purpose of economy or efficiency. The purpose of the Civil Service system is not to perpetuate offices but rather to preserve the status of state employees as a reward for faithful and efficient services and for the welfare of government. We know of no statute which prohibits the abolishing of a division of state service, when that change is made in the interest of economy or efficiency, regardless of whether there are sufficient funds in the particular department with which to pay for its maintenance or its officers. A department of state may exercise economy by conservative and prudent expenditures of money even when it has access to an inexhaustible fund for that purpose. It should be the policy of the legislature to encourage public officers and commissions to exercise economy. If a state agency, such as the Department of Employment, may be just as efficiently and more economically operated by abolishing a division thereof pursuant to law and uniting its functions with another similar agency, we know of no reason why that may not be done, even though that procedure leaves one of the principal officers without a job. Indeed, we think that was the very purpose of the adoption of Section 93 of the Unemployment Insurance Act. When separate branches of similar state agencies in effect are united for convenience, efficiency or economy, and the duties of the chief officer of the abolished division are transferred to and imposed upon the principal officer of the department, it reasonably follows that the impelling object of that transfer of obligations would be to save the unnecessary expense of paying two high-salaried officers when one can just as well perform the duties of both.

[4, 5] In the present case it was the province of the Commission, as the governing body of the employment agencies, to determine whether Wagenet, as Director of the Department of Employment, was qualified to efficiently perform the duties of both offices. The Commission determined that Wagenet could efficiently and more economically perform those services. We assume the Commission concluded it was unnecessary to retain and pay both officers. Since a discretion was conferred by statute upon the Commission to abolish the Division and to consolidate the functions with the Department of Employment, we may not interfere with that discretion in the absence of proof of bad faith, fraud, or violation of the statute. Stockton was then placed on the lay-off list of employees pursuant to the provisions of the Civil Service Act. We are not informed as to whether Wagenet possessed civil service status or not. As Director of the Department of Employment and Secretary of the Commission he occupied a confidential relationship toward the Commission, and it was not necessary that he should possess civil service status. We think it is immaterial whether or not he held civil service standing. We know of no law which forbids the imposing of duties formerly performed by a civil service employee upon the executive head of another branch of the same service, even though the latter officer may not enjoy civil service status, provided the transfer of duties is lawfully accomplished in the interest of economy or efficiency, and not for ulterior purposes.

[6] We are persuaded the record is devoid of proof of fraud, bad faith or violation of the statute on the part of the Commission in abolishing the Division and transferring the duties of the petitioner, Stockton, to the Director of the Department of Employment. Without that evidence, the trial court exceeded its jurisdiction in issuing the writ.

In the case of Bank of Italy v. Johnson, 200 Cal. 1, at page 34, 251 P. 784, 797, which was a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel the Superintendent of Banks to issue a certificate authorizing the establishing of a branch bank in Los Angeles, the court said with respect to the lack of proof of fraud or bad faith on the part of a commissioner having discretionary powers in that regard, quoting with approval from the case of Doble Steam Motors Corp. v. Daugherty, 195 Cal. 158, 232 P. 140, that: "'When subordinate boards or commissioners were by statute invested with discretion with respect to the exercise of their powers, courts would not interfere with such discretion, in the absence of grave reasons tending to show that fraud, corruption, improper motives or influences, plain disregard of duty, gross abuse of power, or violation of law had entered into or characterized the determination of such body; and that, in the absence of such showing of an abuse of discretion, the determination of such board or commission would not be interfered with or overthrown.'" For discussion of that principle see Stewart v. Stockburger, Cal.App., 62 P.2d 758, 762.

We therefore conclude that the Commission was authorized by law to abolish the Division and to transfer the duties of the Chief thereof to the Director of the Department of Employment in addition to his former responsibilities, notwithstanding the fact that he may not have enjoyed a civil service status.

[7] It is conceded the Personnel Board, on appeal, would have had the right to determine from competent evidence adduced, that the petitioner, Stockton, had been illegally deposed from office by means of fraud, the exercise of bad faith or in violation of the statute with relation thereto, and to reinstate him under such circumstances, on the theory that the abolishing of the Division and the transfer of his duties would therefore have been void. But clearly, if the Division in which he held the office of Chief was legally abolished, that office ceased to exist, even though the duties were transferred to another duly qualified officer and, in the absence of proof of fraud, bad faith or violation of the statute, neither the Personnel Board nor the trial court had jurisdiction to direct his reinstatement to an office which did not exist.

In the present proceeding the trial court, upon the petition for a writ of mandamus, heard the case on its merits and issued the writ, commanding Wagenet, "as Director of the Department of Employment," to "forthwith reinstate petitioner Roy S. Stockton in the position of Chief, Division of State Employment Agencies," and to certify his name, as such Chief, to the State Personnel Board, with allowance of his salary at the rate of $440 per month from July 20, 1940, to be approved and certified by the Board to the State Controller. The writ also commanded Wagenet, as such Director, to "transfer and induct petitioner Roy S. Stockton into the civil service and pay of the United States Government with his civil service title of Chief, Division of State Employment Agencies, at his salary therefor of $440.00 per month, as of January 1, 1942." The writ then directed the State Controller to allow petitioner's claim for $440 per month from July 20, 1940 to January 1, 1942, and to draw his warrant for that amount. Finally the writ directed the State Treasurer to pay that warrant.

[8] It will be observed the writ orders Wagenet, as Director, to perform all acts necessary to reinstate the petitioner as Chief of the Division which was abolished by the Commission, independently of the necessary approval and affirmative action of the Commission, which is the sole governing body of that agency. Neither the Commission nor its members are parties to this proceeding. We assume Wagenet, as Director, could not usurp the powers of the Commission and therefore had no ability or authority to comply with the writ or to perform any of the mandates of that order. It follows that the writ is ineffectual and void on account of an excess of jurisdiction of the trial court.

Conceding that the trial court had a right to review the proceedings of the Personnel Board to determine whether it acted arbitrarily or contrary to law and therefore without jurisdiction in directing the reinstatement of the petitioner without proof of bad faith or illegal action in abolishing the Division and transferring petitioner's duties to the Director of the Department of Employment, it appears that the trial court also exceeded its jurisdiction in adopting findings and directing the issuance of the peremptory writ of mandamus without proof of bad faith or violation of the statute on the part of the Commission. The trial court's judgment would therefore be void for the same reason. It exceeded its jurisdiction.

The Personnel Board did not find that the Commission acted in bad faith. It merely determined that the proceedings of the Commission "did not comply with section 172 of the State Civil Service Act of 1937, as amended, and said layoff was improper." But the trial court did find, "That * * * said lay-off of petitioner was made in bad faith and for the purpose of depriving petitioner of his civil service rights"; that the lay-off was not in the interest of economy, or on account of a lack of work or funds in that Division.

[9, 10] This court, on appeal from the order granting the peremptory writ of mandamus, may examine the record of proceedings in the trial court for the purpose of determining whether it acted arbitrarily, without or in excess of its jurisdiction, or contrary to law. For that purpose this court may review that record to ascertain whether there is any evidence to support the charge that the Commission acted in bad faith and contrary to law in abolishing the Division and in transferring the duties of the petitioner to the Director of the Department of Employment. Drummey v. State Board of Funeral Directors and Embalmers, 13 Cal.2d 75, 87 P.2d 848; Cullinan v. Superior Court, 24 Cal.App.2d 468, 472, 75 P.2d 518, 77 P.2d 471; Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Commission, 187 Cal. 533, 202 P. 874; 16 Cal.Jur. 815, sec. 31. In the Cullinan case, supra, in which the petitioner sought by means of a writ of prohibition to prevent the trial court from reviewing in a mandamus proceeding the evidence adduced before the State Personnel Board, which resulted in the reinstatement of petitioner to the office from which he had been discharged, this court said [24 Cal.App.2d 468, 75 P.2d 520]:

"If that board was without jurisdiction to make the order for the reason that there was no evidence or lawful proceedings upon which to base it, the order would be void and the superior court would lack authority to direct his reinstatement. Upon the petition for a writ of mandamus the court has a right to review the proceedings before the state personnel board to determine whether it had jurisdiction to reinstate the petitioner. For the purpose of determining whether the inferior tribunal had jurisdiction a court may examine a record or even receive evidence upon a petition for a writ of mandamus. It is said in 16 California Jurisprudence, p. 815, § 31, in that regard:

" 'The question whether a board, * * * is acting without jurisdiction or in excess of jurisdiction cannot be finally settled and determined by the board itself beyond the power of review of such determination by a court.'

"The preceding declaration is supported by California authorities. The superior court, therefore, has a right to review the proceedings of the board which resulted in reinstating the petitioner for the purpose of ascertaining whether it had jurisdiction to make the order. In 38 Corpus Juris, page 703, § 287, it is said:

" 'But even where mandamus is considered a proper remedy for the enforcement of the provisions of these (civil service) statutes, the discretion of the officers or board in passing on the qualifications of applicants is not subject to review or control by the courts, except in cases where it clearly appears that there has been an abuse of this discretion, or that the officer has acted in bad faith and with intent to evade the law.' "

[11] Assuming from the foregoing authorities that the trial court had power to review the proceedings before the Personnel Board and to admit evidence to prove the alleged bad faith of the Commission or the illegality of its proceedings in abolishing the Division of which the petitioner Stockton was Chief, to transfer his duties to the Director of the Department of Employment, and to authorize the placing of his name on the lay-off list, it was not the province of that court to direct the reinstatement of the petitioner without evidence tending to prove bad faith or illegality of procedure on the part of the Commission. With that issue in view, we have carefully read the entire record. The Attorney General challenges the petitioner to point to any evidence in the record which even tends to show bad faith or fraudulent intent on the part of the Commission in abolishing the Division or in transferring the duties of the Chief to the Director of the Department of Employment. We think the petitioner has failed to meet that challenge. We are directed to no evidence which shows a violation of the statute in any particular with respect to the proceedings of the Commission. The Commission was authorized, by Section 93 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, to abolish the Division and to reorganize the service by transferring the duties thereof to appropriate officers of the Department of Employment. Its action was lawful in that regard. We find no evidence in the record to support the findings of the trial court to the effect that the Commission acted in bad faith or for the purpose of depriving petitioner of his civil service rights. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, we must presume that the Commission performed its duty in a lawful and proper manner and that it was guilty of neither bad faith nor fraud in so doing. Hayman v. City of Los Angeles, 17 Cal.App.2d 674, 62 P.2d 1047; Nilsson v. State Personnel Board, 25 Cal. App.2d 699, 78 P.2d 467.

[12] We therefore conclude the Division of State Employment Agencies was lawfully abolished in good faith by the Commission, and that the duties of that service which were formerly performed by the petitioner Stockton were properly transferred to the Director of the Department of Employment. It follows that the findings and judgment of the trial court with respect to the alleged bad faith of the Commission are not supported by the evidence.

[13] We are of the opinion the appellants' demurrer to the petition for a writ of mandamus, on the ground of misjoinder of parties defendant, should have been sustained. The suit was commenced against the "Department of Employment", the "Executive Director" thereof, the State Controller, the State Treasurer, and one Raphael M. Dorman, an employee. Neither the California Employment Commission nor its duly appointed members are parties to the action. The Commission, by the provisions of the statute, has sole supervision and control of the administration of the Act in question. It was that Commission that abolished the Division. It would appear that neither R. G. Wagenet as Director of the Department of Employment nor any other officer or individual has power to reinstate Stockton, the former Chief of the Division of State Employment Agencies. His reinstatement may be accomplished only by action of the Commission. It may not be done by the Director of the Department of Employment independently of the approval or action of the Commission. We are therefore persuaded the writ of mandamus is ineffectual to reinstate the petitioner under any circumstances since the Commission appears to be an indispensable party to the action, and the mandate runs only against the Department of Employment and certain specified officers and individuals, who apparently have no authority to perform the acts required until the Commission has first authorized them. Sec. 389, C.C.P.; Ambassador Petroleum Co. v. Superior Court, 208 Cal. 667, 284 P. 445; 20 Cal.Jur. 531, secs. 32 and 33. On page 533 of the authority last cited it is said: "Where it appears that there can be no binding adjudication without the joinder of other parties, it is the imperative duty of the court to require the pleadings to be so amended as to bring them in."

Section 75 of the Unemployment Insurance Act declares that the Commission shall be the governing body in the administration of the Department of Employment. The Department is administered by the authority of five commissioners who are appointed by the Governor (Sec. 78). Section 88 of the Act provides: "The commission may appoint and employ an executive officer, who shall act as the secretary of the commission, and shall be Director of the Department of Employment. The commission may employ such assistance as seems to it necessary for the administration of this act, subject to the provisions of the Civil Service laws." (Italics added.)

The powers of the Commission are enumerated in Sections 90 and 91 of the Act. Complete power is conferred on the Commission to administer the statute (Sec. 75). That Commission or its members therefore appear to be necessary parties to carry out the mandate of the court. We are of the opinion they are indispensable parties to the proceeding and should have been joined as defendants. The demurrer was erroneously overruled.

[14] The trial court directed the allowance of petitioner's full salary of $440 per month from July 20, 1940, without deducting remuneration from any gainful employment, which he may have subsequently received. The rule is well established that a civil service employee who has been wrongfully deprived of his position is entitled to recover the amount of his accrued salary during the period he is prevented from performing his duties, less the sum he receives from private or public employment during that period. State Board of Equalization v. Superior Court, 20 Cal.2d 467, 474, 127 P.2d 4; Rexstrew v. City of Huntington Park, 20 Cal.2d 630, 634, 128 P.2d 23; Wiles v.

State Personnel Board, 19 Cal.2d 344, 352, 121 P.2d 673. A different rule prevails with respect to public officers with fixed salaries, as distinguished from mere employees. 43 Am.Jur. 164, sec. 382; 53 A. L.R. 924 note.

The judgment is reversed and the trial court is directed to enter judgment denying the prayer of the petitioner.

PEEK, J., and ADAMS, P. J., concur.

60 Cal.App.2d 42

EDDY et ux. v. HOME FEDERAL SAVINGS & LOAN ASS'N.

Civ. 2890.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 28, 1943.

Hearing Denied Sept. 23, 1943.

1. Building and loan associations 🔑1, 24

Rule that powers granted to national banks exclude and withhold those powers not expressly granted is not applicable to a "building and loan association" organized under the Home Owners' Loan Act, since such association is not a "national bank" and the powers and duties of the two differ materially. Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, § 5 et seq., as amended, 12 U.S.C.A. § 1464 et seq.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Building and Loan Association" and "National Bank".

2. Building and loan associations 🔑38(2)

Provisions in application to federal savings and loan association for a loan and in trust deed securing such loan requiring borrowers to pay fire insurance premiums, were not void as an attempt to exact an illegal fee, consideration, or award for making the loan contrary to Home Owners' Loan Act. Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, § 8(e), as amended, 12 U.S.C.A. § 1467(e).

3. Building and loan associations 🔑38(2)

That president and general manager of federal savings and loan association as insurance agent received a commission on fire policy covering premises mortgaged to secure loan from association did not constitute receipt of a fee or "compensation for making the loan" prohibited by regulation governing such associations. Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, § 5, as amended, 12 U.S.C.A. § 1464.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Compensation for Making Loan".

4. United States 🔑53

Congress in adopting Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 was entitled not only to prevent misapplication of public funds and protect officials concerned, from being misled, but also to protect borrowers from being imposed upon. Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, § 5 et seq., as amended, 12 U.S.C.A. § 1464 et seq.

5. Building and loan associations 🔑38(2)

Where premium on fire insurance covering premises mortgaged to secure loan from federal savings and loan association was not an improper charge against mortgagors and placed no added burden on mortgagors, collection of premium through president and general manager of association, who as insurance agent received a commission on such premium, did not violate spirit of Home Owners' Loan Act or of regulations adopted thereunder governing savings and loan associations. Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, § 5 et seq., as amended, 12 U.S.C.A. § 1464 et seq.

6. Contracts 🔑123(1)

Provision of trust deed authorizing federal savings and loan association to place all insurance on mortgaged premises was not prohibited by statute or by regulations governing such associations and was not wrong in itself or against "public policy", though president and general manager of association as insurance agent received a commission on premiums paid by mortgagors, and hence right to place insurance was a matter of private contract and binding upon mortgagors. Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, §§ 5 et seq., 8(e), as amended, 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1464 et seq., 1467(e).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Public Policy".

7. Building and loan associations 🔑38(2)

Where mortgagors executed trust deed securing loan from federal savings and loan association knowing that it contained an ultra vires provision from which they suffered no detriment and received the benefits of transaction, while retaining such benefits, they were "estopped" from asserting invalidity of such provision. Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, § 5 et seq. as amended, 12 U.S.C.A. § 1464 et seq.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Gordon Thompson, Judge.

Action by James D. Eddy and Emily Eddy, husband and wife, against Home Federal Savings and Loan Association for a declaratory judgment as to defendant's right under trust deed to place the insurance on building subject to deed. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

Luce, Forward, Lee & Kunzel, of San Diego, for appellants.

Higgs, Fletcher & Glen, of San Diego, for respondent.

MARKS, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment rendered in an action for declaratory relief which upheld the validity of a clause in a deed of trust executed by plaintiffs to secure their promissory note, dated July 15, 1938, in the sum of $1,968, payable to defendant.

Defendant is a Federal Savings and Loan Association organized under the Home Owners' Loan Act, 1933, as amended. Title 12, U.S.C.A. § 1464 et seq. Charles K. Fletcher was president and general manager of defendant. He was also agent of a fire insurance company authorized to issue fire insurance policies. He received a thirty per cent commission on the premiums of such policies written on houses within the city of San Diego.

At the time of the loan to plaintiffs, their building was covered by a fire insurance policy in the sum of $2,000 which was accepted by defendant. This policy expired on August 23, 1941, and prior to the expiration date plaintiffs obtained and tendered to defendant a policy of fire insurance issued by the New York Underwriters Insurance Company in the sum of $2,000. Defendant refused to accept this policy and obtained one in the same amount in the National American Fire Insurance Company through the agency of Charles K. Fletcher who admitted that he received a commission of thirty per cent of the premium. Defendant charged the premium on this policy to plaintiffs and added that amount to the principal of the loan. Plaintiffs objected to this procedure and brought this action to determine their right to obtain an insurance policy themselves under their contract with defendant. The trial court held that defendant could place the insurance and this appeal followed.

The premium on each policy was $18. The policies did not differ in legal effect and it is admitted that both of the insurance companies were perfectly responsible financially. Because of the insignificant amount involved it would seem that this action was instituted to determine a legal right rather than to settle a financial responsibility.

The application for the loan, which was signed by James D. Eddy, contained the following: "It is understood that the Association shall have the right to place all fire insurance policies covering said premises, including the fallen building clause waiver, during the life of this loan, the premiums to be paid by the trustor." This clause in the application was underscored and it is admitted that it was discussed with plaintiffs prior to the time Eddy signed the application.

The deed of trust securing the note evidencing the loan, which was signed and acknowledged by both plaintiffs, contained the following: "It is understood that the beneficiary shall have the right to place all fire insurance policies on said premises, including the fallen building clause waiver, during the life of this loan, the premiums to be paid by the trustor." This clause was initialed by both plaintiffs and it is admitted that they had actual notice of this provision before they executed the deed of trust.

Deceit, oppression or fraud on the part of defendant are entirely lacking in this case, and the only question presented is the legal right of defendant to insert the quoted clauses in the application for the loan and in the deed of trust and to insist on their enforcement.

Plaintiffs urge, first, that as the insertion of the quoted paragraphs in the application and deed of trust was not authorized by law, the provisions were void, and, second, that because an officer of defendant profited by the transaction it was contrary to law and void. We are cited to no express language of the Home Owners Loan Act which prohibits the transaction involved here. We are cited to no authority directly in point.

[1] Plaintiffs argue that since the powers granted to national banks, generally, are held to exclude and withhold those powers not expressly granted, we should apply the same rule to building and loan associations organized under the Home Owners' Loan Act. They rely on the case of Standard Livestock Co. v. Bank of California, 67 Cal.App. 381, 227 P. 962, where unauthorized and ultra vires acts of a national bank were involved. The effect of the holding in that case is considerably weakened because in denying a hearing the Supreme Court expressly withheld approval of the portion of the opinion which plaintiffs quote and upon which they rely. Further, a building and loan association organized under the Home Owners Loan Act is not a national bank and the powers and duties of the two materially differ. In the entire absence of any authority on the question we will not extend the rule, contended for by plaintiffs, to such associations.

It is also argued that the clauses under consideration here are contrary to the provisions governing these associations as set forth in section 1467, Title 12, U.S.C.A. Subdivisions (a to d), inclusive, of that section, have no bearing on this case. Subdivision (e) provides in part as follows: "No person, partnership, association, or corporation shall, directly or indirectly, solicit, contract for, charge, or receive, or attempt to solicit, contract for, charge, or receive, from any person applying to the Corporation for a loan, (1) any fee, charge, or other consideration, whether bond or cash, except ordinary fees authorized and required by the Corporation for services actually rendered for examination and perfection of title, appraisal, and like necessary services, * * *."

[2] We fail to understand how those provisions of the section can be applicable here. Common business prudence would require any person or corporation making a loan on the security of a mortgage or deed of trust on improved real property to require fire insurance on the improvements. It is also universal practice to require the borrower to bear the cost of the insurance. This practice is so universal in California that it should be regarded as contemplated and understood by all parties to such a loan. Requiring the borrowers to pay the fire insurance premiums cannot be regarded as an attempt to exact an illegal fee, consideration or reward for making the loan.

Section 1464 of Title 12, U.S.C.A., authorizes the adoption of rules and regulations for the operation and regulation of Federal Savings and Loan Associations. Pursuant to that authority, regulation number 203.10 was adopted, which contains the following: "(c) Initial Loan Charges. No director, officer, or employee of a Federal association shall receive any fee or other compensation of any kind in connection with the procuring of any loan made by such association. Borrowers may be required to pay the necessary initial charges in connection with the making of a loan, * * *."

[3] Plaintiffs argue that this regulation prohibited defendant from placing the fire insurance with its president and general manager because he received a commission of $5.40 for writing the policy. This argument is not supported by the regulation which very properly prohibits any charge not directly authorized to be paid in connection with making the loan. The insurance was not written in connection with making the loan but to provide insurance coverage which commenced over three years after the loan was made. Had the policy been written at the same time the deed of trust was given, the fact that the agent would receive a portion of the premium could hardly be classified as a fee or compensation for making the loan and thus prohibited by the regulation. The premium was the standard sum charged for similar insurance and because an officer of defendant received a commission for writing the policy placed no added burden on the plaintiffs.

[4, 5] One of the purposes of these restrictions which were placed in the act is thus stated in Kay v. United States, 303 U.S. 1, 58 S.Ct. 468, 472, 82 L.Ed. 607: "Congress was entitled not only to prevent misapplication of the public funds and to protect the officials concerned from being misled, but also to protect those who sought loans from being imposed upon by extravagant or improper charges for services in connection with their applications. This would be in the interest 'not only of themselves and their families but of the public.' See Yeiser v. Dysart, 267 U.S. 540, 541, 45 S.Ct. 399, 400, 69 L.Ed. 775; Nebbia v. NewYork, 291 U.S. 502, 535, 536, 54 S.Ct. 505, 515, 78 L.Ed. 940, 89 A.L.R.

1469." As the insurance premium was neither an extravagant nor an improper charge and placed no added burden on plaintiffs, the collection of the premium through an officer of defendant should not be held to be a violation of the spirit of the act of Congress or of the regulations adopted under its provisions.

[6] Since the clause in question in the deed of trust was not prohibited by statute nor by the rules and regulations adopted for the government of defendant, and since it was not wrong in itself nor against public policy, we regard the right given to defendant to place the fire insurance on the premises as a matter of private contract between plaintiffs and defendant and thus binding upon them. Mortgage Guarantee Co. v. Patch, 116 Cal.App. 584, 3 P.2d 35; Feldman v. Costa, Tex.Civ.App., 171 S.W. 2d 200; Biggs v. Carbondale Building, Loan & Homestead Ass'n, 194 Ill.App. 171.

[7] If it be assumed that the provision allowing defendant to place the fire insurance was ultra vires, still plaintiffs knew that it was in the deed of trust when they executed it. They received the benefits of the transaction and still retain the same. While retaining those benefits they should be estopped from asserting the invalidity of this portion of the contract from which they suffered no detriment. California C. P. Growers v. Harkey, 11 Cal.2d 188, 78 P.2d 1137.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concur.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

---

59 Cal.App.2d 764

O'BRIEN v. SCHELLBERG et al.

Civ. 14008.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 23, 1943.

Hearing Denied Sept. 20, 1943.

1. Automobiles 🔑217(2)

A pedestrian was not necessarily free from negligence because he was in a marked cross-walk when struck by automobile at street intersection, since a pedestrian must exercise reasonable care at all times within marked cross-walk. Vehicle Code, § 560, St.1935, p. 188.

2. Automobiles 🔑217(1)

A pedestrian must exercise reasonable care while crossing a street of heavy traffic and such duty continues through his passage.

3. Automobiles 🔑245(6, 46, 72)

In action for death of pedestrian struck on marked cross-walk by automobile proceeding at 25 miles per hour at night on eight-lane highway, pedestrian's contributory negligence and motorist's negligence were for jury. Vehicle Code, § 560, St. 1935, p. 188.

4. Appeal and error 🔑996

If jury was justified in drawing inferences to overcome presumption of decedent's freedom from negligence, finding that decedent was contributorily negligent was "final".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Final Finding".

5. Automobiles 🔑244(50)

A finding whether pedestrian was contributorily negligent when struck by automobile was to be derived from consideration of all the circumstances including conduct of parties just prior to the impact.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1001(1)

The appellate court may not interfere if record shows any substantial evidence in support of verdict.

7. Appeal and error 🔑996

Where two sets of inferences can be reasonably drawn from same facts, appellate court cannot substitute conclusion derived from one group of inferences for that arising from contrary inferences.

8. Trial 🔑260(1)

A requested instruction covered by instruction given was properly refused.

9. Trial 🔑260(8)

An instruction that motorists' failure on highway to keep a vigilant lookout ahead to see the visible so as to avoid collisions is negligence as matter of law was properly rejected, in view of given instruction that person who does not see a clearly visible object is negligently inattentive.

10. Trial ⚷260(8)

An instruction that deceased pedestrian who was struck by automobile was presumed to have been taking care of his own concerns and obeying the law which presumption should prevail as evidence unless overcome was properly rejected in view of instruction that each party was entitled to presumption that every person takes ordinary care of his own concerns and obeys the law.

11. Appeal and error ⚷882(12)

An appellant could not claim error in instruction given at appellant's request.

12. Trial ⚷260(8)

An instruction requiring a greater amount of care of motorist because of dangerous instrumentality under his control was properly rejected in view of instruction given that careful motorist will be alertly conscious of fact that he is in charge of a machine capable of "projecting into serious consequences any negligence of his own".

13. Automobiles ⚷243(5)

In action for death of pedestrian struck by motorist at street intersection, testimony regarding motorist's prior observation of pedestrians at intersection was properly excluded as irrelevant.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Caryl M. Sheldon, Judge.

Action by Marie Theresa O'Brien, as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of John L. O'Brien, deceased, against Clyde Schellberg and John F. Schellberg to recover for the death of plaintiff's decedent who was struck by named defendant's automobile which was driven by last named defendant. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

A. F. Mack, Jr., of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Paul Nourse and Pat. A. McCormick, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Two questions are presented by this appeal, viz.: (1) Does the uncontradicted testimony entitle plaintiff to a judgment as a matter of law? (2) Did the refusal of certain offered instructions constitute prejudicial error?

The action was brought by the administratrix with will annexed of the estate of decedent on behalf of the widow and three adult children against John Schellberg, owner of the Chevrolet and Clyde Schellberg, his agent who collided with plaintiff's decedent. Plaintiff alleged that the death of her husband was caused solely by the negligent operation of the car, causing his heirs general and special damages. There is no contradictory testimony. Whether the story told by the single witness, Clyde Schellberg, compels a judgment for plaintiff or whether from it inferences may fairly be drawn that overcome the presumption of Clyde's negligence must be resolved by a scrutiny of the facts, of the inferences flowing therefrom and by the application of legal presumptions.

On the evening of November 29, 1940, while Clyde was driving westerly on Riverside Drive in Los Angeles, he approached Pirtle Street at a speed of 25 miles per hour. His own headlights illuminated the roadway so that he could see about 100 feet in advance of his car. At the intersection of Pirtle Street Riverside Drive is 70 feet wide, with four lanes of travel on each side of the center stripe. The Chevrolet was in the fifth lane, that is, the first lane north of the center stripe. To Clyde's right and almost abreast of his automobile, two other cars in lanes six and seven were traveling in the same direction. A pedestrian crosswalk, seventeen feet wide, running across Riverside Drive was marked on the west side of Pirtle. As Clyde approached the intersection, two cars coming in lanes three and four next to the stripe added their illumination to that of the cars on the north side of the center line. He was looking straight ahead prior to the accident except for a momentary glance to his right as he entered Pirtle Street. He had no knowledge of the presence of decedent until within eight or ten feet of him when he discovered Mr. O'Brien directly in front of the left front fender of his Chevrolet and in the crosswalk. He was unable to tell whether decedent was walking, running, or standing. He did not determine in which direction he was facing. He saw him only in a fleeting glance before the impact. At the time of the collision, decedent was about three feet north of the center line. His body was thrown about 20 feet and came to rest about two feet south of the center stripe. An unnamed automobile preceded the Chevrolet by about sixty feet in the same lane just before the accident. It was clearly visible to Clyde as he proceeded along the highway.

Proof was made of the family relations of the deceased showing that he was separated from his wife from 1920 until 1937 during which time he supported her with the sum of $75 per month until 1929 and thereafter with $60 per month. Also, he supported her during the three years they lived together preceding his death. Decedent was 68 years of age with a life expectancy of 9.4 years. Mrs. O'Brien was 67 years old with a life expectancy of 10 years. At the time of his decease Mr O'Brien had retired for three years on a life pension of $103.54 per month. Funeral expenses paid by Mrs. O'Brien totaled $558.78. By a vote of 9 to 3 the jury returned a verdict in favor of defendants.

[1-4] Appellant contends that because decedent was, at the instant of the impact, in a marked crosswalk, the driver of the Chevrolet was required by Section 560 Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 188, to yield the right of way; that therefore defendant driver was negligent per se; that decedent was entitled to presume that the driver of the Chevrolet would exercise due care under the circumstances (Torrey v. Nelson, 51 Cal.App.2d 191, 124 P.2d 336); that the presumption that a person takes ordinary care of his own concerns was itself proof of Mr. O'Brien's caution. But freedom from negligence (Speck v. Sarver, 20 Cal.2d 585, 128 P.2d 16) does not necessarily follow from the fact that deceased was in a marked crosswalk. It is the duty of every pedestrian before entering a highway to make reasonably careful observations to ascertain traffic conditions to be encountered. It is his duty to look in the direction from which an approaching motorist might endanger his safety, to exercise reasonable care at all times within the marked crosswalk, and to continue to be alert to safeguard against injury. Lavin v. Fereria, 10 Cal.App.2d 710, 52 P.2d 518; Gibb v. Cleave, 12 Cal.App.2d 468, 55 P.2d 938. It is the duty of a pedestrian to exercise reasonable care while crossing a street of heavy traffic and such duty continues throughout his passage. Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 479, 166 P. 8, 2 A.L.R. 1493. Whether he did so and whether the motorist who struck him exercised the proper amount of vigilance are questions for the jury's determination. Notwithstanding the presumption of the freedom from negligence on the part of decedent, the physical facts presented by the evidence may reasonably have justified the jury in drawing rational inferences to overcome such presumption. If such inferences were so justified the finding is final.

In view of the fact that an automobile preceded the Chevrolet by only 60 feet, it may fairly have been inferred that Mr. O'Brien stepped from the center stripe into the path of the approaching Chevrolet. In support of this inference the testimony of Clyde Schellberg is that he did not see the form of the decedent at any place on the right hand side of the Chevrolet in front of either of the cars to his right. The north half of the highway was illuminated by the headlights from the three cars proceeding westerly in lanes five, six, and seven. Had decedent been crossing the roadway from north to south the car ahead of the Chevrolet would in all probability have struck down the deceased before the arrival of the Schellberg car. Although there was no fog visibility was poor. It was dark and all of the automobiles approaching the scene from either direction had their headlights aflame. The deceased was in a position from which he could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have observed the number of vehicles approaching the crosswalks from both directions and could have observed that the Chevrolet was approaching at a distance of 50 or 60 feet away and that its speed would endanger his safety should he step into its path. Under such circumstances it was negligence on the part of decedent to step into the lane of the oncoming Chevrolet. If he looked to the right he necessarily saw the headlights of the Chevrolet. If he saw them coming at a short distance, it was negligence for him to step in front of them. If on the other hand, he did not look to his right, he was negligent in not looking. Whichever was his negligence it necessarily contributed to his injuries and his death.

[5-7] We are not holding that deceased was negligent as a matter of law, but rather that it was a question of fact for the determination of the jury and of the trial court whether deceased was guilty of contributory negligence in entering the lane of the oncoming Chevrolet. A finding was to be derived from a consideration of all the circumstances, including the conduct of the parties just prior to the impact.

After such determination by the trial court, the appellate court may not interfere if the record shows any substantial evidence in support of the verdict. Fischer v. Keen, 43 Cal.App.2d 244, 248, 110 P.2d 693. In a case where two sets of inferences can be reasonably drawn from the same facts we cannot substitute the conclusion derived from one group of inferences for that arising from the contrary inferences. (Ibid.) Otherwise, the constitutional right to have a jury decide the facts would be effectually abolished or the power of the trial judge to supervise the proceedings to determine the facts would as a result of such stealthy intervention pass into limbo.

[8, 9] The second contention made by appellant is likewise unavailing. She presented four instructions which she insists were erroneously rejected to her prejudice because they were necessary to a proper presentation of the law in view of the facts proved. The first was to the effect that conduct of a motorist contrary to section 560 Vehicle Code is negligence per se. The identical sentiment and words are contained in an instruction given. The second instruction rejected is to the effect that the failure of motorists on a public highway to keep a vigilant lookout ahead to see the visible so as to avoid collisions is negligence as a matter of law. The benefit of such doctrine was embodied in the instruction that when a person looks toward a clearly visible object, he sees it and if he does not see it he is negligently inattentive.

[10, 11] The third refused instruction was to the effect that "every man obeys the law"; that John L. O'Brien is presumed to have been "taking care of his own concerns and obeying the law"; and that this presumption as evidence shall prevail unless overcome by satisfactory evidence. This thought was likewise included in a given instruction which declared that "each party was entitled to the presumption that every person takes ordinary care of his own concerns and obeys the law." Appellant makes a special attack upon this instruction because of the last quoted clause. This she says is contrary to the language of Speck v. Sarver, 20 Cal.2d 585, 128 P.2d 16, 18, wherein it is said that the presumption that a person takes ordinary care of his own concerns "should not be given where the evidence introduced by the plaintiff discloses the acts and conduct of the injured party immediately prior to or at the time in question. * * *" However, unfortunately for appellant, the criticized instruction was given at her request. She is therefore not entitled to benefit by the court's error induced by her request. Hartman Ranch Co. v. Associated Oil Co., 10 Cal.2d 232, 73 P.2d 1163; Buckley v. Shell Chemical Co., 32 Cal.App.2d 209, 89 P.2d 453.

[12] Finally, appellant complains that her proposed instruction requiring a greater amount of ordinary care was required of defendant driver because of the dangerous instrumentality under his control with which he could inflict serious injuries should not have been rejected. The same principle was contained in an instruction read to the jury declaring that "the driver of a motor vehicle, when ordinarily careful, will be alertly conscious of the fact that he is in charge of a machine capable of projecting into serious consequences any negligence of his own." The instruction quoted from covered fully the point advanced by the rejected instruction and to no more was he entitled. Hicks v. Ocean Shore Railway, Inc., 18 Cal.2d 773, 117 P.2d 850.

[13] The final assignment is the order sustaining an objection by defendant to the following question addressed to Clyde Schellberg: "Before the day of the accident had you ever seen any pedestrians crossing Riverside Drive at that particular intersection?" The "cue" for such question says appellant is the rule that prior knowledge of a condition has a direct bearing on the degree of care with which a person may be charged. She analogizes the circumstances confronting the witness to those in which a motorist is required to have observed children of tender years at play in the vicinity of the scene where such motorist has caused injuries to an infant. Citing Parra v. Cleaver, 110 Cal.App. 168, 294 P. 6; Moore v. Bishop, 113 Cal.App. 25, 297 P. 580. The question was irrelevant. The authorities cited relate to those situations in which children were known by the tort feasor to be actually present at the time of the accident or in which children in great numbers thronged the avenue where the careless motorist drove. Schellberg owed the duty to yield the right of way to Mr. O'Brien, whether he had seen none or a thousand cross Riverside Drive in the crosswalk at Pirtle.

The judgment is affirmed.

McCOMB, J., concurs.

59 Cal.App.2d 812

In re KEIG'S ESTATE.

Civ. 12416.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

July 26, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 25, 1943.

Hearing Denied Sept. 23, 1943.

1. Marriage ⇨3

The law of the place of a marriage normally controls question of its validity. Civ.Code, § 63.

2. Marriage ⇨48

In determining existence of common-law marriage, evidence of cohabitation is admissible as proof tending to show mutual consent.

3. Marriage ⇨50(1)

In order to establish existence of "common-law marriage" under Nevada law, mutual consent of parties must be shown and there must be evidence of cohabitation or proof of a holding out that the parties are married. Comp.Laws Nev. § 4050.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Common-Law Marriage".

4. Marriage ⇨52

In proceeding on claim of petitioner who sought to establish right in decedent's estate as his surviving common-law wife, wherein basis of claim was that agreement of marriage was made while decedent and petitioner were traveling from point in California to point in Nevada, the court did not err in instructing jury regarding law of California which did not permit common-law marriages. Comp.Laws Nev. § 4050; Civ.Code, § 63.

5. Marriage ⇨20(1)

Consent to marriage is not "mutual" as required for valid common-law marriage under Nevada law, unless each party agrees in the same sense on terms of agreement. Comp.Laws Nev. § 4050.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mutual Consent".

6. Marriage ⇨50(1)

Evidence was insufficient to establish mutual consent of decedent and petitioner to enter into common-law marriage and a holding out of the parties as man and wife, necessary to establish "common-law marriage" under Nevada law, so as to entitle petitioner to share in decedent's estate. Comp.Laws Nev. § 4050; Civ. Code § 63.

7. Marriage ⇨20(2)

Under Nevada law a "common-law marriage" must be by words of present assent. Comp.Laws Nev. § 4050.

8. Evidence ⇨52, 517

Taking of judicial notice of laws of Nevada and of their interpretation in Nevada was sufficient proof of such laws and permitting expert witness to testify concerning proper construction of Nevada statutes as applied to hypothetical facts was not commendable. Code Civ.Proc. § 1875.

9. Appeal and error ⇨854(2)

Appellant could not complain that in accepting proof of law of another state trial court adopted wrong method of reaching right conclusion.

10. Appeal and error ⇨1050(1)

Any error in proving Nevada law regarding common-law marriages through testimony of expert witness concerning proper construction of Nevada statutes as applied to hypothetical facts was not prejudicial where under the evidence no common-law marriage was established. Comp.Laws Nev. § 4050; Civ.Code, § 63; Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1875, 1902.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Percy S. King, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Daniel T. Keig, deceased, wherein Edith Keig filed a petition opposed by R. E. Keig and others, wherein the petitioner claimed an interest in the estate of the deceased as his surviving common-law wife. From an adverse judgment, petitioner appeals.

Affirmed.

O'Gara & O'Gara and John O'Gara, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Palmer & York, of Napa, for respondents.

WARD, Justice.

Petitioner Edith Keig, claiming to be the common-law spouse of Daniel T. Keig, deceased, appeals from a judgment and decree, following a verdict by a jury, determining that she was never married to him, is not his surviving wife and is not entitled to any interest in his estate. The respondents are the brother, sisters, and the children of a predeceased brother.

The petitioner was the daughter of the housekeeper and cook for Mr. and Mrs. Keig and was in the habit of visiting her mother at their home in the year 1927 while she was a first year high school student. The Keigs, who were childless, became interested in her and, although at that time her mother no longer worked for them, they took her into their home at the commencement of her second year in high school, and for the next three years she lived with them. During this period the Keigs also had in their home a young niece of Mrs. Keig and both girls were treated as members of the family. In 1931 petitioner went to work at one of the business enterprises of Mr. Keig in Napa and continued to work in businesses in which he was interested until the time of his death. After she started to work, and prior to the death of Mrs. Keig in 1940, she was in the habit of taking lunch at the Keig home; she accompanied Mr. and Mrs. Keig to the theatre and on trips, remained in their home while they were abroad and was on terms of friendship with them both. She testified that during this period, as time went on she and Mr. Keig became very much in love, and frequently kissed and embraced each other; that the affair, however, never went any further; that she knew she was not doing the right thing and so told Mr. Keig; that he and she discussed his obtaining a divorce in order to marry her, but decided that it would not be the fair and just thing to do. She further testified that in November 1940, following his wife's death in July, Mr. Keig asked her to marry him, and that she consented, although no time was set for their marriage partly because she realized that it would cause talk, and, since her sister was to be married very soon, she preferred to do nothing at that time which would mar the latter's happiness. She testified that on different occasions she and Mr. Keig spoke of places where they could be married, Mr. Keig desiring to keep the marriage secret because of the opposition of his family. On March 14, 1941, prior to a contemplated trip to Nevada the next day for the purpose, as petitioner testified, of being married, Mr. Keig purchased an engagement and a wedding ring for her. She accepted the engagement ring but declined to keep the wedding ring in her possession "because I—I think it is bad luck to have a wedding ring in your possession before it is given to you." The parties left Napa for Nevada in Mr. Keig's automobile on Saturday evening, intending to remain for the week end. They took turns driving, and, petitioner testified, had some little disagreement en route as to when drivers should change, Mr. Keig saying at the time "My little wife is not going to be cross with me, is she?" This remark, petitioner stated, was made after they had crossed the Nevada state line. Petitioner said she realized the childishness of arguing about so trivial a matter, said she was sorry, and they kissed, made up and continued their trip. They registered at a hotel in Reno as Mr. and Mrs. Thomas of Vallejo at about 1:45 a. m., petitioner testifying in this regard that Mr. Keig went into the hotel first and registered; then came out for her, saying "All right, Mrs. Thomas, will you come in?" They were desirous of obtaining some coffee—something warm—but the coffee shop was closed, so, on the way to their room, at the suggestion of the bell boy, they ordered buttered rum from the bar. This was brought to their room, where they had partially disrobed, and, petitioner testified, they drank a toast to their new life together. Shortly after being shown to their room, Mr. Keig suffered a stroke of paralysis from which he did not recover. There is testimony that petitioner told the doctor who was summoned, also a nurse at the hospital to which he was taken, that she was not the wife of Mr. Keig, but his friend; that they had come to Reno to be married. She testified, also, that in consenting to occupy a room with him she had insisted that there be twin beds, and that she had never had carnal knowledge of any man, including Mr. Keig.

It is petitioner's contention that the evidence supports a "common-law" marriage between herself and Mr. Keig by mutual consent or agreement, valid under the Nevada statute and entitled to recognition in California.

Petitioner testified that she did not know anything about common-law marriages; that she and Mr. Keig had planned for a ceremonial marriage, but that the details thereof had not been decided upon; that at the time of Mr. Keig's stroke, and even after his death, her impression was that they had not been married; that prior to leaving Napa, Mr. Keig gave her about half the money he planned taking on the trip "in case either of us lost it, why we would always have sufficient money. That was his habit." She later asked Mr. Keig's sister whether it was proper for her to keep the money since she and Mr. Keig had "not married." For a period of six months petitioner used her maiden name, and during this period she did not in any way hold herself out, or claim to be the widow of Keig.

Respondents contend that the evidence would not support a finding of common-law marriage by mutual consent, and that, in addition, in order to constitute a valid marriage in Nevada, there must have been an open assumption of marital rights, duties and obligations.

[1] The least that is necessary to establish a valid common-law marriage in any jurisdiction is mutual consent of the parties. The weight of authority, however, seems to be that there must be some evidence of consummation or a holding out that the parties are married by their living together, or in some way showing that the marriage relationship exists. The law of the place of marriage normally controls the question of its validity. Civil Code, sec. 63; Restatement, Conflicts, sec. 121; 5 Cal.Jur. 441; 18 R.C.L. 388; 39 A.L.R. 559.

Section 4050 of the Nevada Compiled Laws of 1929 provides: "That marriage, so far as its validity in law is concerned, is a civil contract, to which the consent of the parties capable in law of contracting, is essential."

Both parties to the appeal cite and rely upon the following four Nevada cases, placing their respective favorable constructions thereon: State v. Zichfeld, 23 Nev. 304, 46 P. 802, 34 L.R.A. 784, 62 Am.St. Rep. 800; Parker v. De Bernardi, 40 Nev. 361, 164 P. 645; Clark v. Clark, 44 Nev. 44, 189 P. 676, 194 P. 96, and Dahlquist v. Nevada Industrial Commission, 46 Nev. 107, 206 P. 197, 207 P. 1104. The facts of all these cases differ from those herein. In all four there was a mutual agreement, followed by some action of general repute or otherwise showing the relation of a marriage. The opinions in the first three cases could be construed to mean that the Nevada statute required only consent, but in the Dahlquist case the question is set at rest. The court there said (page 199 of 206 P.):

> "A marriage, whether of common-law or ceremonial character, is the consequence of a contractual relationship. In the one case it is the result of present assent, between parties capable of contracting marriage, followed by subsequent cohabitation as husband and wife, and the holding out to the world of each other as such. Such a marriage has all the binding force of a ceremonial marriage; and one who enters into such a marriage without being divorced, may, during the lifetime of such a common-law spouse, be guilty of bigamy, as was held by this court in State v. Zichfeld, 23 Nev. 304, 46 P. 802, 34 L.R.A. 784, 62 Am. St.Rep. 800. [Italics added.]
>
> "We think the rights, obligations and liabilities of those entering into a common-law marriage have been clearly established by this court in the following cases: Parker v. De Bernardi, 40 Nev. 361, 164 P. 645; Clark v. Clark, 44 Nev. 44, 189 P. 676, 194 P. 96."

If there is any conflict in the opinions, the latest should be given preference. 7 Cal.Jur., p. 630, sec. 38. The opinion in the Dahlquist case is in harmony with the modern and reasonable trend of thought that there must be a consummation of the contract which results in honest wedlock for the purpose of establishing a home.

[2, 3] In common-law marriages in which the contract is admitted, proof of "holding out" is less essential though such fact may appear as a matter of evidence. Consent is the primary essential in proof of the claim of a marriage contract. The seeming conflict in decisions arises merely as the result of statements in opinions dealing with specified facts, secret contracts or illicit relations. 35 Am.Jur. 198; In re Peters' Estate, 73 Colo. 271, 215 P. 128, 33 A.L.R. 27; Lefkoff v. Sicro, 189 Ga. 554, 6 S.E.2d 687, 133 A.L.R. 758. In some jurisdictions proof of cohabitation is not necessary, but under any circumstances evidence of cohabitation is always admissible as proof tending to show mutual consent. The holding in the Dahlquist case places Nevada definitely in the list of states requiring subsequent cohabitation or proof of repute as essential in establishing a valid marriage from the outset. For this reason the giving of certain instructions claimed by petitioner to be erroneous was proper. The instructions were directed to the general theory that there must be repute among intimates and associates that the parties are husband and wife.

[4] It was not error to instruct the jury relative to the law of California. It was necessary to impress upon the members thereof that the law of Nevada was controlling and that they were not bound by the California law which does not permit common-law marriages. The instruction was proper because the basis of petitioner's claim is that the agreement of marriage was made while traveling from Napa to Reno. There is evidence that the statement of decedent "My little wife is not going to be cross with me, is she?" was made after the parties had crossed the Nevada boundary line, but the jury was not bound by that testimony. Impliedly the jury found that such statement did not constitute mutual consent to marriage. Petitioner's reply was in effect that she was sorry she had been cross. The above question claimed to have been made by decedent is the only one in which he referred to petitioner as his wife. After deliberating the jury returned to the court room and requested further instructions. It was made plain that the subject of confusion arose from the following instruction:

"The Court: * * * I will read you this further instruction which I gave before. (reading) 'The consent to the marriage must be mutual—that is to say, each must have been in agreement with the other to take the other as his or her spouse forthwith or presently. They must have agreed that they were married by their agreement and the consent must be to enter into the matrimonial union. Thus, if you find that Daniel T. Keig entered into an agreement to marry the petitioner at a future time, that alone would not amount to a common law marriage. It is necessary, that there be a consent by both parties that by mutual agreement they enter into the matrimonial union permanent and exclusive of all others and at the time of the agreement.' Is that the one you have in mind?

"A Juror: * * * Yes, that answers my question."

Thereafter the jury returned a unanimous verdict against petitioner.

The conversation referring to petitioner as "my little wife" was made, and may have been received, in jocular vein, having reference to the marriage ceremony the parties expected to have performed in Reno. If decedent at the time considered petitioner his wife, there was no purpose in registering at the hotel under an assumed name and giving a false place of residence upon the theory that "if someone from Napa * * * sees the hotel register, they will know that we are married."

Assuming that decedent intended a contract of marriage, it still appears that there was no mutual agreement unless petitioner knew and understood the purport of his question. It appears that petitioner also expected a marriage ceremony to be performed and refused to wear the wedding ring until such time; that she did not know anything about common-law marriages; that she did not claim while in Reno to be decedent's wife, nor, upon her return to Napa, his widow, until six months later.

[5-7] Consent is not mutual unless each party agrees in the same sense on the terms of the agreement. There is evidence in this case that the parties intended to enter into a contract of marriage in the near future, but, as stated, there is no evidence of any change in the situation by anything that occurred on the road to Reno or thereafter. Terry v. White, 58 Minn. 268, 59 N.W. 1013. Following the death of Mr. Keig, and until approximately six months later, whenever the occasion arose, petitioner denied that she was the wife of Mr. Keig and did not do the one act that might be considered in her favor—she did not wear the wedding ring. In Nevada to constitute a common-law marriage, it is necessary that it be "by words of present assent." Parker v. De Bernardi, supra, 164 P. page 646; Dahlquist v. Nevada Industrial Commission, supra.

Some comment is made by petitioner with reference to reading a decision from Nevada during the trial. The record discloses that counsel for petitioner agreed that the whole case should be read if it was deemed advisable. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1902.

[8-10] Each side introduced a witness skilled in the laws of the state of Nevada (Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1902), and the trial court took judicial notice of such laws, and their interpretation in Nevada as demonstrated by the instructions to the jury, which was sufficient. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1875. An expert witness, introduced by respondents, testified as to the proper construction of the Nevada statutes as applied to certain hypothetical facts. This method of approach in proving the Nevada law is not to be commended, but appellant may not complain if, in accepting proof of the law of another state or territory, "the court adopted a wrong method of reaching a right conclusion." Duluz v. Alaska Packers' Ass'n, 177 Cal. 465, 470, 170 P. 1133, 1135. The scope of section 1902 seems to have been considered rather broadly and leniently. In Re Estate of Faber, 168 Cal. 491, 495, 143 P. 737, 739, it was held that one skilled in the law need not be "a lawyer, or a professor of law." Assuming that there was error in the questions propounded, and in the answers thereto, it may not he held prejudicial in view of the admitted fact that there was no cohabitation, and impliedly, by the verdict, no assent to a common-law marriage.

In view of the conclusion reached, it is not necessary to pass upon the additional contentions of respondents.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 32

RISLEY et al. v. BOARD OF CIVIL SERVICE COM'RS OF CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.

Civ. 13883.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 28, 1943.

Hearing Denied Sept. 23, 1943.

1. Municipal corporations 🔑123

Civil service employees of city of Los Angeles fill positions created by and under city charter which do not rise to the dignity of "offices" because not clothed with a part of the sovereignty of the state, but which do partake of the other attributes of office and lack those arising out of contract. St.1925, p. 1062, § 100 et seq.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Office".

2. Municipal corporations 🔑123

References in Los Angeles City Charter to "positions" and "appointments" of civil service employees and transfer from one position to another connote a place that exists independently of presence of person in it because created by and under the charter and not by virtue of an agreement of the parties and hence is a "position" or "office" and not a "contractual relationship". St.1925, p. 1062, § 100 et seq.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Appointment", "Contractual Relationship" and "Position".

3. Constitutional law 🔑140(1), 277(2)

Civil service employees of city of Los Angeles have rights which courts will protect against infringement, but such rights are not "vested contractual rights" protected by the state and federal constitutional provisions forbidding "impairment of contracts" and taking of property without "due process of law" so as to prevent city from changing such rights. St.1925, p. 1062, § 100 et seq.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law", "Impairment of Contracts", and "Vested Contractual Right".

4. Municipal corporations 🔑215

Rights of civil service employees of city of Los Angeles under city charter may be lost by repeal of the provisions or modified by an amendment of such provisions at the will of those who determine what the charter's terms shall be. St.1925, p. 1062, § 100 et seq.

5. Constitutional law 🔑205(2)
Municipal corporations 🔑215

The statute enlarging class of civil service employees of city of Los Angeles is not unconstitutional as granting "special privileges or immunities". St.1941, p. 3501, § 126; Const. art. 1, § 21.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Special Privileges or Immunities".

6. Statutes 🔑79(1)

The statute enlarging class of civil service employees of city of Los Angeles is not unconstitutional as a "local or special law" granting "special rights, privileges, or immunities." St.1941, p. 3501, § 126; Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 19.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Local or Special Law" and "Special Rights, Privileges, or Immunities".

Appeal from judgment of Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by Fred G. Risley, LeRoy W. Wallace, John P. Hayhurst, and James F. Owsley, suing for and on behalf of himself and other employees of the City of Los Angeles similarly situated, against Board of Civil Service Commissioners of the City of Los Angeles and Guy W. Wadsworth, Jr., Samuel A. Lindauer, Emery E. Olson, Justin W. Gillette, and Frederic P. Woellner, as members of Board of Civil Service Commissioners of City of Los Angeles, to have statute relating to civil service declared void and to prevent its enforcement. From a judgment for defendants, the plaintiffs appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

Entenza & Gramer, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., Frederick von Schrader, Asst. City Atty., and George William Adams, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BISHOP, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiffs for some years past have been in the service of the Bureau of Power and Light of the Los Angeles Department of Water and Power. They gained admission to this service by passing civil service examinations, and by virtue of the passing of the years have acquired, under the provisions of the city charter, certain seniority rights which give them an advantage when promotional examinations are held and preferential treatment when slackness of work necessitates a reduction in the working force. Now a group of over five hundred former employees of the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Corporation and of the Southern California Edison Company will become competitors of the plaintiffs for the preferential treatment and advantages which go with seniority rights if section 126, added to the city charter in 1941 (Stats. 1941, p. 3501), is permitted to have its way. This section reads:

"Except as otherwise provided in Section 111 hereof, every person who is, on the effective date hereof, retained and employed by the City or any Department thereof pursuant to the terms of Section 431 of this Charter, shall forthwith be and become a member of the classified Civil Service of the City of Los Angeles as defined in Section 100 of this Charter, and shall be conclusively deemed to have been regularly appointed to the position in the class in which he is so retained and employed and to have served, in that position and class, the probationary period prescribed in Section 109.

"Every such person shall be conclusively presumed to have served in the class and in the department and major division in which he is so retained and employed on the effective date hereof, for the total of the following periods:

"1. The actual length of time, not to exceed three years, such person was employed in the service of the public utility acquired by the City or any department thereof, regardless of the duties performed, or the titles held by such person in such service.

"2. The total length of his service in the class and in the department and major division in which he is so retained and employed on the effective date hereof.

"The total of such service as specified in subdivisions 1 and 2 hereof, shall also be deemed to have been performed since original regular appointment to such class in the classified civil service. Where such person shall have taken and passed a civil service examination for the position in which he was theretofore so retained and employed and is on the effective date of this section retained and employed in such position, although classified as a civil service employee, he shall be entitled to and shall receive all of the benefits and rights granted by this section.

"Except as in this section otherwise specifically provided, the provisions of Article IX of this Charter and of the rules and regulations of the Board of Civil Service Commissioners adopted pursuant thereto shall apply to persons so employed to the same extent and in the same manner as to all other persons employed in the classified civil service."

To protect themselves against the invasion of those who, but for section 126, would be strangers to civil service, the plaintiffs have brought this action with its prayer that the section be adjudged void and that the steps necessary to carry its provisions into effect be halted. From a judgment denying them any relief, and affirming the validity of section 126, the plaintiffs have appealed. Our conclusion is that the section is not vulnerable to any of the attacks plaintiffs have made upon it.

This case may be said to be a sequel to Wallis v. Board of Civil Service Com'rs, 1938, 11 Cal.2d 430, 80 P.2d 972, 973, 81 P.2d 428. And see also Austin v. Board of Civil Service Com'rs, 1942, 50 Cal.App.2d 436, 123 P.2d 119. There the section of the Los Angeles City Charter that was involved was section 431, providing that: "All persons employed in the operating service of any public utility hereafter acquired by the city, or any department thereof, at, and for at least one year immediately prior to, the date of such acquisition, may be retained and employed by the city, or such department, in their respective positions, as nearly as may be, and, so long as continuously so retained and employed in such positions, shall be exempt from the civil service provisions of this charter * * *." This section was added to the charter in 1935 (Stats. 1935, p. 2356), and thereafter the city had acquired the electrical distributing system of the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Company, and with it a considerable number of those employed in its operating service. A slack period developed in a branch of the city's service and some of the regular civil service employees of the department of water and power were laid off, while the newly acquired employees, who had not entered through the civil service gates, and were exempt from civil service, continued at work. The precise question before the court was whether the employees who were exempt from civil service, by reason of section 431, could lawfully be retained in service in preference to civil service employees at a time when a reduction in the number of employees was necessary. But for section 431, by other previously existing sections of the charter the department would have been compelled to lay off employees not under civil service before dispensing with those who had a civil service status and appurtenant rights. In deciding that section 431 created a class of employees exempt from civil service who did not have to give way to civil service employees, when slackness of work required some to go, our Supreme Court stated (11 Cal.2d at page 435, 80 P.2d at page 975): "It is a special provision applicable to the class to which the petitioners [former L. A. Gas and Electric employees] belong. The people of the city have so provided in their charter and there can be no question of their power so to do."

If the plaintiffs in the case before us are correct in the positions they take, then the Supreme Court was in error in its conclusion in the Wallis case, for section 431, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, is not to be distinguished from section 126, as regards the evils plaintiffs see in it. According to plaintiffs, section 126 is an unconstitutional attempt to impair the contracts they have with the city; its effect would be to deprive plaintiffs of their property without due process of law; it purports to grant privileges and immunities to a class of citizens which are not granted to all; and it is a special law granting special or exclusive rights, privileges and immunities.

[1, 2] We should note, first of all, that, basically, plaintiffs' relation with the city of Los Angeles is not a contractual one, entered into after a meeting of the minds fixing the terms of the employment, including the usual terms concerning its duration, compensation, and the duties to be rendered. By the very provisions of the city charter upon which plaintiffs rely—those giving them civil service status (Article IX, St.1925, p. 1062), with protection against discharge, other than for cause; with a right of review, if discharged or suspended; with promotional rights; etc.—plaintiffs are filling positions created by and under the charter. These "positions" do not rise to the dignity of "offices," perhaps, because not "clothed with a part of the sovereignty of the state" (People ex rel. Chapman v. Rapsey, 1940, 16 Cal.2d 636, 640, 107 P.2d 388, 391), but they partake of the other attributes of "office," and lack those arising out of contract. Pacific Finance Corp. v. City of Lynwood, 1931, 114 Cal.App. 509, 514, 300 P. 50, 1 P.2d 520. We note just a few expressions used in Article IX of the Los Angeles Charter to illustrate what is meant. We find repeated references to "positions" to which "appointments" may be made. "* * * in all cases where it is practicable * * * vacancies shall be filled by promotion." A transfer may be made "from one position to another." All of these expressions connote a place, whether office or position is unimportant, "that exists independently of the presence of a person in it" because created by and under the charter, and not by virtue of an agreement of the parties, and so is a position or office and not a contractual relationship. See case last cited and the authorities to which it refers.

[3, 4] Plaintiffs' first two contentions may be considered together, as they involve the same fallacious concept, which is that plaintiffs have a vested, contractual, right to have the terms of their employment continue unaffected by charter amendments. That they have rights, by virtue of the provisions of the charter, which the courts will protect against unauthorized infringement by the city or any of its legislative or executive officers or boards, is undoubtedly true, and is recognized in the large number of cases cited by the plaintiffs. But that these rights are vested, contractual, rights, protected by the state and federal constitutional provisions forbidding the impairment of contracts and the taking of "property" without due process, so that they cannot be changed, is not true, and none of the cases relied upon by plaintiffs hold it to be true. The rights to which plaintiffs would cling are created by or under the provisions of the charter and are dependent upon those provisions. They may all be lost by the repeal of the provisions or modified by an amendment to the provisions, at the will of those who determine what the charter's terms shall be.

The principle involved is not unknown in the appellate reports of this state. In Cornell v. Harris, 1936, 15 Cal.App.2d 144, 59 P.2d 570, the plaintiff, a deputy sheriff, sought to avoid a threat to his official life which he saw in an amendment to the San Diego County Charter providing for civil service. The situation is revealed in this statement of one of his contentions (15 Cal.App.2d at page 146, 59 P.2d at page 571): "(1) That as he was appointed, qualified, and took office under the provisions of the charter * * * before the civil service provisions of the charter became effective, he had a vested right to his office of which he could not be deprived in the manner contemplated here." Concerning plaintiff's position the court observed (15 Cal.App.2d at pages 146, 147, 59 P.2d at page 571): "Plaintiff's first contention is answered by the case of Boyd v. Pendegast, 57 Cal.App. 504, 207 P. 713, 714, where it is said concerning the removal of a police officer of the city of Los Angeles: 'The possession of an office, or the enjoyment of employment with the government, or under any of its agencies, does not confer a vested property right of any quality whatsoever. The more ancient offices to which the common law attached the property character of incorporeal hereditament find no legal counterpart under the political systems of government in this country.'"

In Mansfield v. Chambers, 1915, 26 Cal. App. 499, 147 P. 595, it was questioned whether or not the office of superintendent and cashier of the motor vehicle department had been abolished. In its discussion of the problem the court made these statements and quotations (26 Cal.App. at page 504, 147 P. at page 597):

"It will not be disputed that: 'A public officer, at least one whose term and compensation are not prescribed by the Constitution, has no contract by which he can have or hold either his office or his salary against the legislative will.' Pennie v. Reis, 80 Cal. 266, 269, 22 P. 176. Or, as is said in Miller v. Kister, 68 Cal. [142], 144, 8 P. [813], 814: 'Salaried public offices created by the Legislature are not held by contract or grant. The Legislature has full control over them, unless restricted by the Constitution, and may abolish them altogether, or impose upon them new duties or reduce their salaries.'

"Under the well-settled rule as thus stated, it will not for an instant be questioned that it lies within the legitimate power of the Legislature to abolish at any time any public office created by it; there being no constitutional limitation upon the exercise of such power in the particular case by the Legislature."

In Butterworth v. Boyd, 1938, 12 Cal.2d 140, 150, 82 P.2d 434, 439, 126 A.L.R. 838, this statement is made: "It is well settled that public employees have no vested right in any particular measure of compensation or benefits, and that these may be modified or reduced by the proper statutory authority." The principle is recognized in these further cases: In re Carter, 1903, 141 Cal. 316, 319, 74 P. 997; Ludolph v. Board of Police Com'rs, 1938, 30 Cal.App.2d 211, 216, 86 P.2d 118, 121; Nider v. City Commission, 1939, 36 Cal.App.2d 14, 30, 97 P.2d 293, 301.

As we have already stated, none of the cases relied upon by the plaintiffs and, we add, none of which we are aware, holds that rights such as plaintiffs have are "vested" in the sense that they are constitutionally immune from modification or destruction. We need not find fault with the use of the word "vested," in such cases as Eisenhuth v. Department of Motor Vehicles, 1934, 2 Cal.App.2d 207, at page 214, 37 P.2d 725, at page 728, where it appears in the sentence "That [civil service] tenure is a vested right is no longer open to question in this state," if we do not fail to see that a right may be vested so as to be the object of the court's protection, without being so vested that it may not be the subject of legislative control. As already noted, plaintiffs refer to many cases where the rights of those in the civil service are protected by the courts from unauthorized rules or ordinances or executive challenge. The basis of these decisions is not that the vested right may not be taken away or modified by the power which created it, but that the officer or board who has attempted to override it has not been vested with the right to do so. The thought is illustrated in this quotation from Mansfield v. Chambers, supra, 26 Cal.App. 499, at pages 504, 505, 147 P. 595, at page 597, following the portion of the opinion already quoted by us: "The case of Marquis v. City of Santa Ana, 103 Cal. 661, 37 P. 650, cited by the petitioner, is not opposed to the views thus expressed. The decision in that case merely amounts to this: That a municipal office created by the Legislature cannot directly or indirectly be abolished by a municipal corporation organized as such under the municipal corporation act, * * * which is a general law of the state. * * * But we think no one will question the proposition that, had the office of city assessor of Santa Ana been solely the creature of an ordinance passed by the governing body of that city in the exercise of corporate powers conferred upon it by the municipal corporation act, which placed no restriction upon the corporation in that respect, such governing body could at any time abolish said office by ordinance, thus exercising the identical power within the sphere of its corporate jurisdiction that rests in the Legislature with respect to offices created by it and as to the right to abolish which at any time no restriction or qualification is imposed by the Constitution."

Nor in the field of the pension cases do we find a decision that causes us to doubt the correctness of our conclusion, although some things have been said which, if controlling, would be disturbing. We have particular reference to these words, found in Dryden v. Board of Pension Com'rs, 1936, 6 Cal.2d 575, 579, 59 P.2d 104, 106: "It has been clearly held that the pension provisions of the city charter are an integral portion of the contemplated compensation set forth in the contract of employment between the city and a member of the police department, and are an indispensable part of that contract, and that the right to a pension becomes a vested one upon acceptance of employment by an applicant. O'Dea v. Cook, 176 Cal. 659, 169 P. 366; Aitken v. Roche, 48 Cal.App. 753, 192 P. 464; French v. Cook, 173 Cal. 126, 160 P. 411; article 17, § 183, Charter of the City of Los Angeles." We do not find this statement controlling in our case because it is plainly dictum and the cases cited by the author of the opinion, which was not written in but was adopted by the Supreme Court, do not support the statement. The cases, where the question is before the court, agree that the right to a pension is not a part of a contract which, having been entered into, cannot constitutionally be altered. The leading case is that of Pennie v. Reis, 1889, 80 Cal. 266, 22 P. 176, 177. The plaintiff was the administrator of the estate of one who for over ten years had had two dollars each month "deducted" from his compensation as a police officer under a statute which provided that upon his death the sum of one thousand dollars should be paid his estate. Within a month before his death the statute was supplanted by one with different terms. The plaintiff claimed that his intestate had a vested right to the thousand dollars, safe from legislative change. The Supreme Court held "no"; (80 Cal. at page 269, 22 P. at page 177) "A public officer—at least one whose term and compensation are not prescribed by the constitution—has no contract by which he can have or hold either his office or his salary against the legislative will." The same conclusion was reached in Clarke v. Police, etc., Board, 1898, 123 Cal. 24, 26, 55 P. 576, 577, where, speaking of the Pennie case, the court stated: "It was there held * * * that the act did not violate the constitution of the United States, because the member of the police department had no contract which he could assert against the legislative will. The office was accepted with the distinct understanding that the legislature may modify or amend all laws providing for his compensation during the term." The Pennie case was also cited by the court in Butterworth v. Boyd, supra, 12 Cal.2d 140, 82 P.2d 434, 126 A.L.R. 838, in support of the statement which we have already quoted from that case. See also, Richards v. Wheeler, 1935, 10 Cal.App.2d 108, 115, 51 P.2d 436; Jordan v. Retirement Board, 1939, 35 Cal.App.2d 653, 656, 657, 96 P.2d 973, 976; Sweesy v. Los Angeles, etc., Retirement Bd., 1941, 17 Cal. 2d 356, 362, 110 P.2d 37.

So far we have been considering plaintiffs' first two objections to the validity of section 126. Their next two objections may also be considered together; that is, that the section is obnoxious to section 21 of art. I and to the nineteenth subdivision of section 25, article IV, of our state constitution. Section 21, art. I, reads: "No special privileges or immunities shall ever be granted which may not be altered, revoked, or repealed by the Legislature; nor shall, any citizen, or class of citizens, be granted privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not be granted to all citizens." In the nineteenth subdivision of section 25, art. IV, we find:

"The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say: * * *

[5, 6] "Nineteenth—Granting to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive right, privilege or immunity."

Clearly section 126 violates neither of these provisions. Section 21 of Article I must embarrass plaintiffs, for they have taken the position that special privileges, which have been granted to them, may not be altered by granting like privileges to others. Their emphasis is on the latter portion of the section, however. With respect to this, and to subdivision 19 of section 25, we find it unnecessary to do more than observe that those who, in the competitive business world, secured and kept their positions with public utilities for at least a year, thereby acquiring experience and as surely proving their fitness to continue as though they had passed a civil service examination, constitute a class which may, without constitutional objection, be accorded such special privileges as are accorded them by section 126. Cook v. Mason, 1929, 103 Cal.App. 6, 9-11, 283 P. 891.

Plaintiffs suggest that section 126 is unconstitutional on other grounds which we deem so lacking in merit that they need not be discussed. The trial court properly found the section to be intelligible and valid.

The judgment is affirmed.

SHINN, Acting P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

60 Cal.App.2d 66

PEOPLE v. CORRAL.

Cr. 3699.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.
July 30, 1943.

1. Burglary 🔑4

The word "store" within statute defining burglary is broad enough to include a modern department store even though at time statute was enacted stores were not of the large size and multifarious character now attained. Pen.Code §§ 459, 484, 490a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Store".

2. Burglary 🔑4

The word "building" within statute defining burglary is broad enough to include a large, modern department store. Pen.Code §§ 459, 484, 490a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Building".

3. Burglary 🔑9(2)

That the building which defendant entered in committing burglary was a department store which the public in general was invited to enter did not establish that defendant's entry was not wrongful. Pen. Code §§ 459, 484, 490a.

4. Burglary 🔑9(2)

An entry with owner's consent into any of the places mentioned in statute defining burglary would nevertheless constitute a "burglary" if made with intent to commit a felony therein. Pen.Code §§ 459, 484, 490a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Burglary".

5. Burglary ⚷2

To prove a burglary it must be shown that one of the places mentioned in statute defining burglary was entered with the purpose of committing a theft or a felony. Pen.Code §§ 459, 484, 490a.

6. Burglary ⚷41(3)

Evidence that defendant, when he made his entry into department store, wore a belt which could be so adjusted as to make possible the concealment of a suit within his clothes and that by this means he took from the store and concealed one suit and after disposing of it returned and took another suit concealed in the same manner, was sufficient to show that defendant entered store with intent to commit theft. Pen.Code §§ 459, 484, 490a.

7. Burglary ⚷41(1)

Evidence as to the commission of a burglary by defendant was not inherently improbable so as to preclude conviction for burglary in the second degree. Pen. Code §§ 459, 484, 490a.

8. Burglary ⚷28(7)

In prosecution for burglary by entering a store and taking and carrying away some clothes, it was unnecessary for representative of the store to appear and testify as to ownership of the clothes. Pen.Code §§ 459, 484, 490a.

9. Burglary ⚷28(7)

A showing as to ownership of clothes taken from a department store was not material to the burglary charge, except as bearing on question of intent in entering the store, for burglary would be complete without an actual theft. Pen.Code §§ 459, 484, 490a.

10. Burglary ⚷41(1)

Ownership of suits taken from a store in a burglary was sufficiently proved by the showing that when defendant took suits they were in possession of the store on hangers which were on racks in the salesroom. Pen.Code §§ 459, 484, 490a.

11. Burglary ⚷46(1)

In prosecution for burglary where the court gave jury a definition of burglary in the words of the statute, except that "theft" was substituted for "larceny" under amending statute, failure to give further instruction defining theft was not error. Pen.Code §§ 459, 484, 490a.

12. Burglary ⚷46(7)

In burglary prosecution, trial court properly instructed that where goods have been feloniously taken by means of a burglary and they are immediately or soon thereafter found in possession of a person who gives a false account or refuses to give any account of the manner in which he came in their possession, proof of such possession and guilty conduct is evidence, not only that he stole the goods, but that he made use of means by which access to them was obtained. Pen.Code, §§ 459, 484, 490a.

13. Burglary ⚷46(7)

Where defendant charged with burglary failed to give any explanation of his possession of stolen suits, trial court properly instructed that such unexplained possession was evidence of guilt. Pen.Code §§ 459, 484, 490a.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harold B. Landreth, Judge.

Charles Corral was convicted of burglary in the second degree, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Redmond & Redmond, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Eugene M. Elson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHAW, Justice pro tem.

After a trial by jury defendant was convicted of burglary in the second degree, and appeals from the judgment. The charge against him was that he entered the store and building of the Fifth Street Store, a corporation, with intent to commit theft.

Briefly stated, the evidence for the people shows the following facts. The Fifth Street Store is a large department store in the City of Los Angeles. Mrs. Myrtle Norton, a store detective in the employ of that store, saw defendant, accompanied by another man, walk into its men's suit department, take a suit down and hand it to the other man, who tried to put it under his coat. The defendant then took this suit from the other man, folded it over the hanger and put it down inside his trousers. The two men left the store, followed by Mrs. Norton, and went to a parking lot, where they entered an automobile and sat in the back seat. Mrs. Norton looked for an officer but could find none. Defendant and the other man entered another store near by, where Mrs. Norton picked up a store detective of this store, Mrs. Wills, and the two of them watched and followed defendant and the other man, who looked at some women's coats, but took nothing. The two men returned to the Fifth Street Store and went again to the men's suit department. There defendant took another suit off the rack, wrapped it around a hanger and put it inside his trousers. The defendant did not, on either of these visits to the Fifth Street Store, speak to any salesperson and there was none near where he took the suits. After taking the second suit the two men again left the store and went to the same parking lot as before. On the way Mrs. Norton met a special police officer named Chatterton, who went with her. At the parking lot Chatterton arrested defendant and while he was doing so the other man escaped. The first suit taken by defendant was found concealed in a compartment back of the back seat of the automobile to which he went the first time, and the second suit was found in defendant's trousers. When this suit was found, defendant said "I give up." Mrs. Norton testified to all these facts, and she was corroborated by Mrs. Wills as to all the happenings after Mrs. Wills joined Mrs. Norton. Chatterton also testified to the arrest of defendant and the finding of the suits, but said that both of them were found in defendant's clothes. Of this location he seemed not to be certain, however. Mr. Simpson, a superintendent of store detectives, who went to the parking lot after defendant's arrest, testified that he saw one of the suits in a special compartment built in back of the back seat of defendant's car.

The defendant took the stand and denied taking either of the suits and laid the blame therefor on the man who got away. He also made an experiment intended to show the impossibility of putting a suit inside of his trousers. However, a police officer testified that when defendant was arrested he wore an unusually long belt and that by extending this a suit could be put inside the trousers. Defendant's credibility may have been considerably impaired with the jury by the fact that on direct examination he testified that the other man, whose name he did not know, picked defendant up and gave him a ride down town, while on cross-examination defendant admitted that the car was his and said that he picked up the other man and gave him a ride.

Appellant's brief appears to raise the following points: (1) that the place entered by defendant does not come within the list of places, entry in which is necessary under section 459 of the Penal Code to constitute burglary; that the evidence is not sufficient to show (2) a wrongful entry, or (3) the intent required by that section; (4) that the evidence is inherently improbable; (5) that the owner of the property stolen did not testify and there is no evidence of ownership thereof; that the court erred in its instructions (6) by failing to give the jury a definition of theft, and (7) by giving an instruction regarding possession of stolen property.

[1, 2] Section 459 of the Penal Code provides that "Every person who enters any house, room, * * * shop, * * * store * * * or other building * * * with intent to commit grand or petit larceny or any felony is guilty of burglary." The name of the crime formerly known as "larceny" having been changed to "theft" (Pen.Code, § 484, as amended in 1927, St. 1927, p. 1046,), section 459 is to be read as if it used the word "theft" instead of "larceny." (Pen.Code, § 490a; People v. Bayne (1934) 136 Cal.App. 341, 348, 28 P.2d 1068.) Defendant's contention under his first point seems to be that when section 459 was adopted in 1872, and even when it was last amended in 1913, stores were not of the large size and multifarious character now attained by modern department stores, especially that where defendant was charged with committing his crime, and therefore such modern department stores are not to be deemed within the meaning of the word "store" as used in that section. There is no merit in this contention. The character of a place as a store does not depend upon its size or the number of departments contained in it; but if it did, section 459 contains also the word "building," and in view of its context no legislative intent can be discerned to limit this word to anything less than its broadest meaning (People v. Burley (1938) 26 Cal.App.2d 213, 79 P.2d 148), which undoubtedly comprehends the building housing the store in question.

[3-6] Defendant's second and third points may be discussed together. It is true, as he contends, that the public in general are invited to enter such places of business as that here involved; but this invitation is not extended to those who enter for the purpose of theft. (People v. Barry, (1892) 94 Cal. 481, 483, 29 P. 1026; People v. Brittain, (1904) 142 Cal. 8, 10, 75 P. 314, 100 Am.St.Rep. 95.) Moreover, even an entry with the owner's consent into one of the places mentioned in section 459 would nevertheless constitute a burglary if made with the intent specified in that section. (People v. Descheneau, (1921) 51 Cal.App. 437, 197 P. 126; People v. Barry, supra, 94 Cal. at page 482, 29 P. 1026; People v. Brittain, supra, 142 Cal. at page 9, 75 P. 314, 100 Am.St.Rep. 95.) Such an intent must be shown to prove a burglary, and here the information narrows the necessary proof to that of an intent to commit theft. Perhaps the mere fact that defendant committed a theft while inside the store is not sufficient to show his intent when he entered (see People v. Barry, supra, 94 Cal. at page 484, 29 P. 1026), but here there are other facts. The defendant had on, when he made his entry, a belt which could be so adjusted as to make possible the concealment of a suit within his trousers; and not only did he take and conceal by this means one suit from the store, but after disposing of it he returned there and took another suit and concealed it in the same manner. These and the other circumstances shown are ample to support a finding that he entered the store with intent to commit theft.

[7] Defendant's fourth point, that the evidence against him is improbable, may be dismissed with the statement that to one reading it the impression is quite to the contrary. The question of its credibility was one for the jury.

[8-10] It was not necessary for any representative of the store to appear and testify to its ownership of the suits. Except for the bearing of that fact on the question of defendant's intent in entering the store, it was not material to the charge of burglary, for burglary would be complete without an actual theft (4 Cal.Jur. 720); and it was sufficiently proved by the showing that when defendant took the suits they were in possession of the store on hangers which were on the racks in its salesroom. (People v. Hayes, (1925) 72 Cal.App. 292, 299, 237 P. 390; People v. Brannon, (1939) 30 Cal.App.2d 445, 86 P. 2d 842.)

[11] The trial court gave the jury a definition of burglary in the words we have above quoted from section 459 of the Penal Code, except that "theft" was substituted for "larceny." Defendant now complains that no further instruction was given defining theft, pointing out that section 484 of the Penal Code defines theft so as to include several different acts, and arguing that for lack of a definition of theft the jury were left in ignorance of the precise nature of the intent on defendant's part which must be shown to support a conviction. It may well be that in some cases of burglary such an argument would be well taken, but this is not one of them. Only one sort of theft—larceny—was indicated by the evidence, and the showing of defendant's intent to commit that crime is so clear that we do not see how the jury could have had any doubt about it, or misunderstood the instruction. (See People v. Tibbitts, (1939) 35 Cal.App.2d 669, 673, 96 P.2d 812.) Even if such an instruction should properly have been given here, its absence has not resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

[12, 13] The trial court also gave the following instruction, to which objection is made: "Where goods have been feloniously taken by means of a burglary and they are immediately or soon thereafter found in the possession of a person who gives a false account or refuses to give any account of the manner in which he came in their possession, proof of such possession and guilty conduct is evidence, not only that he stole the goods, but that he made use of means by which access to them was obtained."

This instruction is correct. It is copied from a statement made in People v. Lang, (1904) 142 Cal. 482, 485, 76 P. 232, except that the trial court, before giving it, eliminated the word "presumptive," which appears in People v. Lang before the word "evidence." This statement from People v. Lang has been quoted and approved in People v. Morrell, (1915) 28 Cal.App. 729, 733, 153 P. 977; People v. Farrell, (1924) 67 Cal.App. 128, 133, 227 P. 210; People v. Murphy, (1928) 91 Cal.App. 53, 54, 266 P. 374; People v. McClain, (1931) 115 Cal. App. 512, 514, 1 P.2d 1023; People v. Robertson, (1931) 117 Cal.App. 413, 415, 3

P.2d 946; People v. Darnel, (1938) 28 Cal. App.2d 122, 126, 82 P.2d 209. People v. Lang, supra, was cited and followed on this point, though not quoted, in People v. Le Roy, (1923) 192 Cal. 498, 500, 221 P. 353. Substantially the same rule as that stated in the foregoing instruction was declared in People v. Russell, (1932) 120 Cal. App. 622, 625, 8 P.2d 209; People v. Reynolds, (1933) 130 Cal.App. 754, 757, 20 P.2d 952; People v. Taylor, (1935) 4 Cal. App.2d 214, 217, 40 P.2d 870; and People v. Russell, (1939) 34 Cal.App.2d 665, 669, 94 P.2d 400. The court, in giving the instruction, omitted the word "presumptive," on which criticism of an instruction containing it, and of People v. Lang, supra, was based in People v. Enriquez, (1940) 39 Cal. App.2d 168, 174, 102 P.2d 770. The instruction was applicable to the evidence, for not only did the defendant, when arrested and found in possession of the stolen suits at the parking lot, fail to give any explanation of that possession, but he spoke the words "I give up," which are indicative of guilt.

The judgment is affirmed.

SHINN, Acting P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

---

59 Cal.App.2d 744

In re McCOLLUM'S ESTATE.

YOUNG et al. v. BIAS et al.

Civ. 2871.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 22, 1943.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)

Conflicts in the evidence are addressed to the trier of fact, and a judgment may not be reversed because of such conflicts where there is substantial evidence supporting the findings and judgment.

2. Wills 🔑155(1)

Such "undue influence" as will invalidate a will must be such as overpowers the will of the testatrix so that the will of another is substituted.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Undue Influence".

3. Wills 🔑166(1)

Positive testimony that testatrix acted of her own free will and not under undue influence which was contradicted only by inferences and presumptions sustained judgment upholding validity of will against contention that it was procured by undue influence.

4. Evidence 🔑571(2)

Physician's testimony that in his opinion testatrix was incompetent to make a will, though entitled to be carefully weighed by trial judge, was not conclusive.

5. Wills 🔑55(1)

Adjudication on day after execution of will that testatrix was unable unassisted properly to manage and take care of herself and her property and appointment of guardians of her person and estate, though evidence to be considered on issue of mental capacity to make a will, did not necessarily establish that testatrix was of unsound mind at time of adjudication or incompetent to make a valid will.

6. Wills 🔑55(1)

Finding in guardianship proceeding that alleged incompetent by reason of age, disease, and physical infirmity was unable unassisted properly to care for herself and property inferentially negatived allegation of petitioner that she was mentally incompetent and wholly incompetent to transact business and together with appointment as guardian of person requested by alleged incompetent constituted strong evidence of mental capacity of alleged incompetent to make a will.

7. Wills 🔑55(1)

Conflicting evidence sustained judgment upholding validity of a will against contention that testatrix lacked mental capacity.

8. Wills 🔑384

In will contest, exclusion of evidence that property of testatrix had its origin in the separate property of her deceased husband whose children by former marriage would receive nothing under the will was not prejudicial where such fact sufficiently appeared from the record.

9. Appeal and error ⚷1048(6)

Any error in refusing to permit contestants to cross-examine a beneficiary under the will when called as a witness by contestants was not prejudicial, where contestants cross-examined such witness at length and without limitation when she was called as a witness by proponents. Code Civ.Proc. § 2055.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Edward J. Kelly, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the application of J. Belden Bias and another for admission to probate of the last will and testament of Lulu A. McCollum, deceased, wherein Jennie McCollum Young and others instituted a contest. From a judgment admitting the will to probate and appointing an executor, contestants appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

F. F. Grant, of San Diego, and Don. C. Bitler, of El Centro, for appellants.

P. A. Whitacre and J. A. Donnelley, both of San Diego, and Lucas & Wyckoff, of Santa Cruz, for respondents.

MARKS, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment admitting to probate the last will and testament of Lulu A. McCollum, deceased, and appointing an executor. The proponents of the will are two nephews of deceased who were named in it as principal beneficiaries. The other beneficiary is Beatrice Burger who was an intimate friend of deceased. The contestants are stepchildren of deceased.

Emmet S. McCollum went to Imperial Valley in 1902. He was then married and had seven children. He bought property there which he operated as a dairy with the help of his children. His wife died in 1905 and he married his second wife in 1909, the Lulu A. McCollum whose estate is involved here.

The dairy farm was sold and Mr. and Mrs. McCollum bought a home in San Diego, the title to which was placed in the name of Mrs. McCollum, as was a smaller farm which was purchased in Imperial Valley. The record titles remained in her name until the day after the death of Mr. McCollum on September 17, 1938. Mr. and Mrs. McCollum were a happy, devoted and affectionate married couple.

There is no showing that Mrs. McCollum had any property at the time of her marriage nor that she engaged in any gainful occupation. As far as the record discloses the property belonging to Mrs. Collum at the time of her death represented the proceeds of that owned by Mr. McCollum at the time of their marriage, and increases resulting from it. After coming to San Diego the couple lived on the income from that property.

There was no issue from this marriage and the heirs at law of Mrs. McCollum at the time of her death in 1939 were nephews and nieces and their children.

After the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. McCollum in 1909, Mr. McCollum's seven children remained in the family home, but within a few years the older ones began drifting away because they did not like the family discipline of the stepmother. While there seemed to be some affection between Mrs. McCollum and two of the children, this did not seem to extend to the other five. There is evidence in the record indicating that Mrs. McCollum regarded all of these children as shiftless and inconsequential.

Mrs. McCollum lived in Santa Cruz prior to her marriage. Harry J. Bias and J. Beldon Bias, residents of the same city, were her favorite nephews and she entertained a strong affection for them. Mr. and Mrs. McCollum visited them in Santa Cruz and they visited at the San Diego home of the McCollums. Harry J. Bias was an attorney at law. Robert B. Bias, the son of J. Belden Bias, was admitted to practice law in 1938. He was employed in the office of his uncle until about September, 1941, when he entered the office of the general counsel for the Civil Aeronautics Board in Washington, D. C.

Mr. and Mrs. McCollum became financially embarrassed during the depression and Mrs. McCollum's nephews came to their assistance with loans which were not repaid. The record indicates that but for this financial assistance Mr. and Mrs. McCollum might have lost their properties.

Mrs. McCollum executed a will dated March 24, 1930, in which she left all of her property to her husband, or, in case he predeceased her, to his seven children. She executed another will dated August 31, 1934, leaving her husband a life estate in her property with the fee, subject to this life estate, to the seven children.

Mrs. McCollum had a paralytic stroke in 1937 and thereafter had difficulty with her speech. She was very heavy, had high blood pressure and in the last year of her life could not walk without assistance.

Mr. McCollum executed a will the day before he died. In it he nominated Letha O. W. Cordrey, a friend, as executrix and as guardian of his wife, reciting that Mrs. McCollum was not competent to manage her affairs.

On September 18, 1938, the day following Mr. McCollum's death, Mrs. Cordrey took charge of Mrs. McCollum and her properties. She recorded two deeds conveying the property in Imperial Valley and the home in San Diego from Mrs. McCollum to Mr. McCollum. Mrs. Cordrey, with her associate, Miriam W. Hezar, were indebted to Mrs. McCollum in the sum of approximately $10,000.

On January 14, 1939, Mrs. Cordrey filed a petition to be appointed guardian of the person and estate of Mrs. McCollum. This petition did not list as assets of the estate the real property, deeds to which had been recorded after the death of Mr. McCollum. A contest to the petition was filed by J. Belden Bias on the ground that Mrs. Cordrey was indebted to the guardianship estate and that the recording of the two deeds had clouded the title of the real estate of Mrs. McCollum, necessitating suits to quiet title against the estate of Emmet S. McCollum.

A physician employed by Mrs. Cordrey filed an affidavit in the guardianship proceedings reciting that Mrs. McCollum, because of physical disability and general mental incompetency, could not attend the guardianship hearing. This affidavit was sworn to on January 19, 1939. The hearing was had on January 27, 1939, and Mrs. McCollum not only appeared in court but was interrogated by the judge who presided at the hearing. She requested the appointment of Beatrice Burger, a long time friend, as her guardian.

The trial court found that Mrs. McCollum, "by reason of old age, disease, and physical infirmity, is unable, unassisted, properly to manage and take care of herself or her property, * * *." The petition of Mrs. Cordrey was denied and Mrs. Burger was appointed guardian of the person, and a San Diego bank was appointed guardian of the estate of Mrs. McCollum. We find in the record an order authorizing and directing the guardian of the estate to institute suits against the estate of Emmet S. McCollum to quiet title to the San Diego home and the Imperial County farm. We are informed by counsel for respondents that both actions have been filed and that judgment quieting title to the San Diego home has been entered and that the other action is pending in Imperial County.

On January 26, 1939, Mrs. McCollum executed a third will revoking all previous wills, leaving the San Diego home to Harry J. Bias, the Imperial County farm to J. Belden Bias, her jewelry and personal effects to Mrs. Burger and the residue equally to her two nephews. J. Belden Bias was named as executor and he filed this will for probate. A contest was instituted by the seven children of Mr. McCollum on the grounds of mental incompetency, duress, menace and undue influence of the three legatees, and improper execution of the will. After a trial before the court without a jury this will was admitted to probate and the contestants have appealed.

The trial court found all facts in favor of the petitioner and against the contestants. The insufficiency of the evidence to support these findings, together with errors in receiving and rejecting evidence, are urged as grounds for reversal of the judgment.

Little need be said about the due execution of the will. All the evidence on this subject shows that the formalities of law were observed and the findings upholding due execution may not be questioned. There was no evidence of menace or duress so these grounds of contest may be summarily dismissed from consideration here, leaving the questions of mental capacity and undue influence to be considered.

The evidence of proponents discloses that Harry J. Bias visited his aunt in San Diego just after the death of her husband; that Mrs. McCollum told him that the death of her husband had changed the situation concerning the disposition of her property; that she wanted to make a new will and leave the San Diego home to Harry, the Imperial County farm to J. Belden Bias, and some remembrance to Mrs. Burger. Harry J. Bias discovered that Mrs. Cordrey had recorded the two deeds but he did not tell his aunt of this because he did not want to cause her worry. He did advise her to obtain independent legal advice from some attorney in San Diego.

J. Belden Bias and his wife visited Mrs. McCollum in October and again in December, 1938. She expressed to them the same desires concerning the testamentary disposition of her property.

On January 13, 1939, Mrs. Burger took Mrs. McCollum to interview an attorney whom Mrs. McCollum authorized, in writing, to act for her and to represent her in every way in protecting her property rights. This attorney was the personal attorney of Mrs. Burger. He had not met Mrs. McCollum prior to that date. He did not know Harry J., nor J. Belden Bias, and did not meet either of them until about January 26, 1939.

Robert B. Bias was the grand nephew of Mrs. McCollum. He, with J. Belden Bias and his wife, came to San Diego on January 25, 1939, and saw Mrs. McCollum on that and the two succeeding days. Mrs. McCollum again explained the disposition she desired to make of her property. Robert made pencil notes of the directions given him by Mrs. McCollum which he took to the office of the San Diego attorney the following morning. The attorney dictated the will which was delivered to Robert after it had been transcribed. On the afternoon of the same day J. Belden Bias, his wife and Robert, took Mrs. McCollum to the home of Thomas A. Bruning, an intimate friend of long standing of Mr. and Mrs. McCollum. The will was read to Mrs. McCollum by Robert in the presence of Mr. Bruning, his wife and daughter, and Mr. and Mrs. Bias. All of these persons, except Mr. Bruning who had died, testified that Mrs. McCollum understood the contents of the will; that she said it was just what she wanted; that it was executed in accordance with the formalities of law. All of these witnesses testified that Mrs. McCollum understood the terms of the will, knew what she was doing, that she was mentally competent to make a will and was acting of her own free will and not under undue influence.

[1] There are only inferences, and perhaps presumptions, to contradict this testimony. These inferences and presumptions are not conclusive and while they might have created a conflict in the evidence, that conflict was resolved against contestants by the trial court. Of course conflicts in the evidence are settled in the trial court and a judgment may not be reversed because of such conflicts, where, as here, there is material and substantial evidence supporting the findings and judgment.

[2, 3] Undue influence must overpower the will of the testatrix so that the will of another is substituted for hers. In re Estate of Bryson, 191 Cal. 521, 217 P. 525; In re Estate of Shay, 196 Cal. 355, 237 P. 1079; In re Estate of Smith, 200 Cal. 152, 252 P. 325; In re Estate of Finkler, 3 Cal. 2d 584, 46 P.2d 149. Instead of leading us to the conclusion that the two nephews had overpowered the will of Mrs. McCollum and substituted their testamentary desires for hers, a study of the record indicates that the will was the result of the free and voluntary act of Mrs. McCollum. Mrs. Burger did not know the will was being executed so no charge of undue influence can be directed at her.

The evidence on the question of the mental capacity of Mrs. McCollum to execute a will is hopelessly conflicting. The witnesses for contestants were of the opinion that Mrs. McCollum was incompetent and the majority pictured her as a person entirely without understanding. Two of those witnesses, Mrs. Cordrey and the nurse who cared for Mrs. McCollum, after testifying that she could only mumble and use monosyllables, detailed conversations with her, thus in effect impeaching themselves. One of these conversations pertained to the title to real property and the witness, after reciting the conversation, explained that Mrs. McCollum had carried on her part of it largely by means of gestures. The trial judge, in commenting on this evidence, remarked that even a learned professor of law might have great difficulty in describing an estate in real property by means of gestures. If the explanation be assumed to be true, it would indicate that Mrs. McCollum had developed the art of pantomine to a high degree, exceeding the capabilities of the ordinary person.

[4] Contestants produced the only doctor who testified in the case. He was general practitioner and testified that in his opinion Mrs. McCollum was incompetent to make a will. While this opinion was entitled to be carefully weighed by the trial judge it was not conclusive on the subject, (In re Estate of Arnold, 16 Cal.2d 573, 107 P.2d 25), and like the evidence of any other witness could be rebutted by other satisfactory evidence.

The will was executed on January 26, 1939, and the next day Mrs. McCollum was adjudged to be "unable, unassisted, properly to manage and take care of herself and her property" and guardians of her person and of her estate were appointed.

[5] It is urged that this is strong evidence of mental incompetence on the day before. This was evidence to be weighed and considered by the trial court. As was said in Re Estate of Johnson, 200 Cal. 299, 252 P. 1049, 1052: "Adjudications of incompetency in the guardianship proceedings did not necessarily mean that the decedent was of unsound mind at the time of such adjudications, or that she was not then competent to make a valid will."

[6] A strong bit of evidence on the mental capacity of Mrs. McCollum is found in the record of the guardianship proceeding. In her petition Mrs. Cordrey had alleged that Mrs. McCollum was mentally incompetent, and wholly incompetent to transact business. While there is no direct finding on this allegation it was negatived by the finding that by reason of old age, disease and physical infirmity Mrs. McCollum was unable, unassisted, to properly take care of herself and of her property. Further, Mrs. McCollum was interrogated by the judge before whom the guardianship proceedings were held and he inserted in his judgment the following: "And said Lulu A. McCollum, did, in open Court, request that Beatrice Burger be appointed such guardian."

The judge had a number of years experience on the bench. He was trained by experience to observe witnesses and weigh their testimony. The question of mental competency was an issue before him. Had his interrogation of her, and her answers to his questions, raised any suspicion in his mind of her mental incompetency, he certainly would not have acted on her request nor would he have incorporated in his judgment that request as a reason for the appointment of Mrs. Burger as guardian. Thus we have, by inference at least, the opinion of an entirely disinterested trial judge, a trained observer, to the effect that Mrs. McCollum was not mentally incompetent on January 27, 1939.

[7] No good could be accomplished by further reviewing the conflicting evidence on the question of competency. There is ample evidence to support the finding of competency, as there is sufficient evidence to support one of incompetency had it been made. Such conflicts are addressed to the trier of fact and cannot be settled in an appellate court.

[8] Contestants urge that the trial court committed prejudicial error in excluding evidence that the property of Mrs. McCollum had its origin in the separate property of Mr. McCollum. As we have observed, we believe this sufficiently appears from the record so that further evidence on that subject would have been cumulative only. There was no prejudice in this ruling of the trial court.

[9] Contestants called Mrs. Burger as a witness under the provisions of section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On objection of proponents they were not permitted to cross-examine her at that time. We may assume that this ruling was error and still cannot reverse the judgment because of lack of prejudice in it. Mrs. Burger was called as a witness by the proponents of the will and was cross-examined at length by contestants. We have not found a single objection to any question propounded to her by counsel for contestants. Their cross-examination was not limited in any manner and they do not suggest what further facts they could have brought out had they been permitted to call her for cross-examination. The error, if any, was entirely abstract and no prejudice is shown to have resulted from it.

We have considered the other questions raised by contestants and they do not possess sufficient merit for detailed consideration here.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concur.

RIBLE v. HUGHES et al.

Civ. 6863.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
Sacramento, California.
July 31, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 30, 1943.
Hearing Granted Sept. 27, 1943.

1. Schools and school districts 🔑55, 144(4)

A school board is authorized to exercise reasonable discretion in fixing teachers' salaries and to reduce a teacher's salary if such reduction is not arbitrary or discriminatory and to make reasonable rules for the government of schools in its district.

2. Schools and school districts 🔑144(4)

A city board of education was not authorized to promulgate a rule compelling its teachers to acquire additional college units by penalizing them by a reduction of their salary if they do not. School Code, §§ 5.120–5.152, 5.420, 5.530, 5.541 to 5.547, 5.650, 5.652 et seq., 5.731, 5.734.

3. Schools and school districts 🔑55

Since boards of education are "quasi municipal corporations" of limited power, they have only special powers and are powerless to impose penalties, which is a purely "legislative power" and such rules as such boards may be authorized to make must be reasonable and they can promulgate no rules in contravention of statutes, nor accomplish by indirection that upon which a statute has placed a ban. School Code, §§ 5.420, 5.530, 5.541 to 5.547, 5.650, 5.652 et seq., 5.731, 5.734.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Legislative Power" and "Quasi Municipal Corporations".

4. Schools and school districts 🔑141(1), 144(4)

A board of education cannot arbitrarily reduce salaries or change assignments of permanent teachers, and classification of teachers for salary purposes must be reasonable, natural, and based upon a substantial difference germane to the subject, or upon some basis having a reasonable relation to the work assigned. School Code, §§ 5.420, 5.530, 5.541 to 5.547, 5.650, 5.652 et seq., 5.731, 5.734.

5. Schools and school districts 🔑144(4)

A city board of education rule providing that as a condition to receipt of the annual salary increment that during each four year period teachers must complete in residence specified college units was invalid as applied to permanent high school English teacher, where rule, in contravention of statute, ignored successful experience as a factor in determining teachers' salaries, and ignored every other method by which teachers might acquire mental stimulus and was based on no valid classification of teachers or duties. School Code, § 5.734.

6. Schools and school districts 🔑144(4)

A city board of education rule providing that as a condition to receipt of the annual salary increment that during each four-year period, teachers must complete in residence specified college units was arbitrary and invalid as to permanent high school English teacher, where no basis appeared for fixing of annual increment, or the number of units required, or the requirement that university courses be taken every four years. School Code, § 5.734.

7. Schools and shcool districts 🔑144(4)

A city board of education rule providing that as a condition to receipt of the annual salary increment that during each four year period teachers must complete specified college units was invalid as imposing an unauthorized "penalty". School Code, §§ 5.420, 5.530, 5.541 to 5.547, 5.650, 5.652 et seq., 5.731, 5.734.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Penalty".

8. Schools and school districts 🔑144(4)

Where only salaries reduced were those of teachers who had not complied with condition of city board of education rule requiring teachers during each four year period to complete specified college units as a condition to receipt of the annual salary increment, English teachers with as little as ten years' experience were receiving the maximum salary, and petitioner, who was a permanent high school English teacher with 29 years' successful experience, after reductions because of failure to comply with the rule was the lowest paid among such teachers, rule, as applied to petitioner, was "discriminatory" and invalid. School Code §§ 5.420, 5.530, 5.541 to 5.547, 5.650, 5.652 et seq., 5.731, 5.734.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Discriminatory".

9. Schools and school districts ⚿144(4)

The fixing of permanent school teachers' salaries by school district boards of trustees must not be discriminatory, arbitrary, or unreasonable.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Dal M. Lemmon, Judge.

Action by L. M. Rible against Charles C. Hughes, as Superintendent of Schools of the City of Saramento and Secretary of the Board of Education of the City of Sacramento, and others for a writ of mandate to require the Board of Education of the City of Sacramento to pay to petitioner $96 deducted as a penalty from her salary as a teacher of English in the Sacramento high school for the school year 1939–1940. From a judgment denying the writ and discharging an alternative writ previously issued, petitioner appeals.

Reversed with directions.

Anthony J. Kennedy and Carl Kuchman, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

J. Q. Brown, Dist. Atty., and Wm. A. Green, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Sacramento, for respondent.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment denying to petitioner a writ of mandate requiring the Board of Education of the City of Sacramento to pay to her, a teacher of English in the Sacramento High School, the sum of $96 deducted as a penalty from her salary for the school year 1939–1940, and discharging an alternative writ previously issued.

The facts of the case, as found by the trial court, are as follows: The Sacramento High School is under the government of the Board of Education of the City of Sacramento (hereinafter called the Board). Petitioner is a graduate of Stanford University, with a Bachelor's Degree and three semesters of graduate work of 16 units each. On January 4, 1912, she was employed under contract as a teacher of English in the Sacramento High School, and at all times since has been under contract, the last written contract having been executed in 1921, on which year she became a permanent teacher under the tenure act. She has at all times possessed all necessary state and county credentials, including a life diploma issued to her in 1932. During the summer recesses of 1929–1938 petitioner traveled extensively for her professional improvement, her travels including trips to the British Isles, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Hawaii and Alaska. These travels were designed to have a definite bearing upon particular courses in her subject of literature, and independent research was done and data were collected on the works of Burns, Stevenson, Dickens, Shakespeare, Sheridan, and other authors. Such travels and research complied with a rule of the Board adopted in 1922 allowing "rating units" or credits for training, of which the petitioner accumulated some forty or fifty. That rule was abolished in 1935, at which time a new salary schedule was established.

When petitioner entered into her 1921 contract she was receiving the then maximum salary for high school teachers, to wit: $2,700 per annum, and she continued to receive this salary until July 1, 1939, when respondents reduced her salary to $2,604. A further reduction to $2,508 was made by respondents on July 1, 1940. At all times petitioner's duties and responsibilities have remained the same and have always been successfully discharged by her. Some other teachers of English, with like responsibilities and duties, now receive $2,748 per year. No disciplinary proceedings of any kind have ever been invoked against petitioner, and it is conceded that at all times there has been sufficient money to pay petitioner a salary of $2,748 annually, and of course sufficient for a salary of $2,700. No question is raised as to petitioner's efficiency or competency, and it is conceded that she is fully qualified to teach.

The reductions in petitioner's salary were made under the salary schedule adopted by the Board in 1935, which purported to base salary on years of service. Under said salary schedule in high schools the starting salary was fixed at $1,548 per annum, which should obtain for the first three years. The fourth year the salary was to increase to $1,740, and thereafter increase at the rate of $96 a year until the fourteenth year when a salary of $2,700 was reached. After fifteen years a maximum of $2,748 was to be paid. It was provided, however, as a "condition" to the receipt of the "annual increment" of $96, that during each four year period each teacher must complete "six semester units" "in courses open to undergraduates, or four semester units in courses open only to graduates, in an institution or institutions of four-year college rank accredited by the State Department of Education," the work to be done "in residence."

It was further provided that: "(5) Having reached the maximum salary, in order to retain it, the training condition must be met each four year period. If condition is not met by the beginning of the fifth year, the salary will be decreased by one annual increment each year until the condition is met, whereupon one annual increment per year shall be restored until the maximum is again reached."

The reductions of petitioner's salary were made solely because of petitioner's failure to secure the required semester units during the preceding four years.

On this appeal petitioner contends that California laws relating to credentials give exclusive authority to the State Board of Education to determine qualifications requisite for teaching positions, and grant to one qualified, rights which cannot be impaired by local rules relating to qualifications (School Code, §§ 5.120–5.152); that the salary reductions provided for by respondent Board are penal in their nature, are without authority in law and are in contravention of statutory rights of tenure; that the rights of the Board to fix salaries of permanent employees must be reasonably exercised and may not be exercised in a discriminatory or arbitrary manner, and that when schedules are adopted basing salary on years of training and years of service, there is a mandatory requirement that persons of equal years of training and experience shall receive the same salaries; that section 5.734 of the School Code requires that when a salary schedule is adopted, years of experience and training are the determining factors; and that the rule adopted by the Board reducing petitioner's salary, as was done, is arbitrary in its operation and in its administration.

Respondents in reply assert that even though petitioner's employment is on a contractual basis, it is subject to all reasonable rules established by the Board of Education; that the provisions of the salary schedule in question do not conflict with the authority given by law to the State Board of Education; that the salary deductions made by the Board are not a penalty and are not in contravention of tenure rights; that the law does not require that even when a salary schedule is adopted, teachers of equal years of training and experience must necessarily receive the same salary; and that the rule is not arbitrary or unreasonable in its operation.

[1] We are of the opinion that such a rule is arbitrary, unreasonable, discriminatory and oppressive and in excess of the powers of the Board. Conceding the power of a school board to exercise a reasonable discretion in the matter of fixing salaries (Fry v. Board of Education, 17 Cal.2d 753, 112 P.2d 229), and to reduce the salary of a teacher if such reduction is not arbitrary or discriminatory (Hodge v. Board of Education, 22 Cal.App.2d 341, 70 P.2d 1009), and to make reasonable rules and regulations for the control, management and government of the schools of their district, the rule under consideration does not even purport to relate to the control or management of the school or to the duties of the teachers therein as prescribed by the School Code (secs. 5.541–5.546). The diminution in petitioner's salary is not based upon any lack of efficiency on her part, since the trial court found "that at all times from and after on or about the 4th day of January, 1912, petitioner has successfully served and is now serving as a teacher of high school English in said position in the Sacramento High School"; and "that at all times from and after the 1st day of July, 1939, petitioner has successfully performed and discharged, and does now so perform and discharge the same duties and responsibilities as were performed and discharged by her many years prior to said date." It is based solely upon the failure of petitioner to fulfill the requirement as to additional college units. It ignores petitioner's years of training, service and experience, though section 5.734 of the School Code provides that "uniform allowance may be made in any schedule of salaries for years of training and for years of service." It assumes that, instead of qualifying, years of service and experience tend to disqualify—that teachers retrograde with experience, and that the taking of four or six units of some kind of university work once in four years is necessary in order to effect a stay of such retrogression.

Section 5.530 of the School Code provides that boards of school trustees and city boards of education shall have power and it shall be their duty to fix and prescribe the duties to be performed by all persons in public school service in the school district. Section 5.420 provides that they shall employ only persons holding proper credentials and certificates; section 5.731 imposes upon them the duty to fix and order paid the compensation of persons in public school service employed by them; sections 5.541–5.547 prescribe the duties of teachers; section 5.650 provides that no permanent employee of a school board shall be dismissed except for the reasons set forth therein, and section 5.652 et seq., provide the time and method by which charges must be made and heard. There is no provision in the law for disciplinary action against a teacher short of dismissal.

[2-4] It is not contended or even suggested by respondent herein that petitioner is subject to dismissal or that it would be within the power of the Board to promulgate and enforce a rule requiring that permanent teachers in its employ continue to take college courses. It is said in respondents' brief that "the question here is not whether the district can require the petitioner to take more training as a teacher in order to hold her position, but whether or not she can be required to take more training or else suffer a reduction in salary." Obviously, then, the Board is attempting to do indirectly what it could not do directly—that is, compel teachers to acquire additional college units by penalizing them by way of a reduction of salary if they do not. This, we believe, is in excess of the powers of the Board. Inasmuch as such boards are quasi municipal corporations of limited power, they have only special powers which may not be exceeded (23 Cal.Jur. 90; Pasadena School District v. City of Pasadena, 166 Cal. 7, 9, 134 P. 985, 47 L.R.A.,N.S., 892, Ann.Cas.1915B, 1039; Grigsby v. King, 202 Cal. 299, 304, 260 P. 789. They are powerless to impose penalties—a purely legislative power. Board of Harbor Commissioners v. Excelsior Redwood Co., 88 Cal. 491, 26 P. 375, 22 Am.St.Rep. 321; Gilbert v. Stockton Port District, 7 Cal.2d 384, 390, 391, 60 P.2d 847. And such rules and regulations as they may be authorized to make and enforce must be reasonable and not discriminatory or oppressive, or arbitrary. Dutart v. Woodward, 99 Cal.App. 736, 739, 740, 279 P. 493; Chambers v. Davis, 131 Cal.App. 500, 507, 22 P.2d 27; Lotts v. Board of Park Commissioners, 13 Cal.App. 2d 625, 57 P.2d 215; McLeod v. State, 154 Miss. 468, 122 So. 737, 63 A.L.R. 1161; Hutton v. Gill, 108 Ind.App. 1, 7 N.E.2d 1011; Hutton v. Gill, 212 Ind. 164, 8 N.E. 2d 818, 820; Valentine v. Independent School District, 187 Iowa 555, 174 N.W. 334, 6 A.L.R. 1525; 24 R.C.L. 575, sec. 23. They can promulgate no rules in contravention of statutory provisions, nor accomplish by indirection that upon which a statute has placed a ban. Fairchild v. Board of Education, 107 Cal. 92, 40 P. 26; Mitchell v. Winnek, 117 Cal. 520, 527, 49 P. 579; Dutart v. Woodward, supra. There can be no arbitrary or unreasonable exercise by the Board of its power to reduce salaries or change assignments of permanent teachers. Abraham v. Sims, 2 Cal.2d 698, 711, 42 P.2d 1029; Dutart v. Woodward, supra. And classification of teachers for salary purposes must be reasonable, natural, and based upon a substantial difference germane to the subject, or upon some basis having a reasonable relation to the work assigned. Hutton v. Gill, 212 Ind. 164, 8 N.E.2d 818, 820.

[5] In the case before us the rule enforced against petitioner by the reductions of her salary ignores successful experience and efficiency as a factor in determining salaries, in contravention of section 5.734 of the School Code; it arbitrarily assumes that a teacher becomes not more, but less efficient with experience; that failure to take additional college work makes a teacher less competent; it also assumes arbitrarily that the taking of any six (or four) units of college work every four years will restore efficiency (though only by degrees); it ignores rating credits acquired under the former salary schedule; it compels a teacher, at her own expense and on her own time, to leave her home and go to a college one semester each four years; it is not a rule governing the conduct of the schools under the jurisdiction of the Board, but of the teacher during her vacation from school duties; it ignores every other method by which a teacher might acquire mental stimulus; and in this case it implies inefficiency in conflict with the finding of the trial court of petitioner's efficiency. It is based upon no classification of either teachers or duties, unless it be contended that teachers are to be classified as those that do and those that do not take the prescribed additional college work; and such a classification would be purely an arbitrary one not based upon qualifications or experience, and could not be justified. Lotts v. Board of Park Commissioners, supra; Mansur v. City of Sacramento, 39 Cal.App. 2d 426, 103 P.2d 221.

[6] The rule is arbitrary also in that no basis appears for the fixing of the so-called "annual increment" of $96 deducted from appellant's salary, no basis for the number of college units teachers are required to complete, and no basis for the requirement that such university courses be taken every four years. If six college units every four years can be required, six units each year can be required; and if a penalty of $96 per annum can be imposed for noncompliance, any other arbitrary amount could be imposed and the advantages of tenure utterly defeated. It does not prescribe what kind of courses shall be taken by teachers, but merely the number of units that must be completed; so a teacher of English, if she so desired, might present six units of hygiene or home economics, kinesiology or Coptic. Though the rules of the Board provide that written standards shall be set up by the superintendent of schools to govern training conditions, it is admitted that none such were set up.

[7] Petitioner did not fail to perform any duty prescribed by the law or the Board. It is not contended that she has not kept up to date in her methods; and except for her failure to acquire the requisite college units her salary would have been the same as previously, $2,700. There was no change in her rank or grade, working hours or duties. The deductions were not made because of any inefficiency on her part, but as a penalty for failing to go to school. Respondents in their brief contend that there is no penalty involved; but we note that in the Bulletin issued by the Board in September, 1936, it is recited: "It was concluded that teachers reaching the maximum should be stimulated to maintain their professional proficiency by continued training. To make this effective, it was agreed that a salary penalty should be imposed upon those failing to do this within a reasonable length of time." (Italics ours.)

[8] Also, the rule as applied to petitioner is discriminatory. The evidence shows that high school teachers of English with as little as ten years of experience were receiving $2,748 per annum, while petitioner, with twenty-nine years of successful experience, was, after the reductions, the lowest paid among such teachers. There was no general reduction of salaries, the only ones reduced being those of teachers who had not complied with the "condition."

[9] In Kacsur v. Board of Trustees, 18 Cal.2d 586, 592, 116 P.2d 593, 596, the court said: "However, there are limitations on the powers of boards of trustees to change salaries of permanent teachers. One of the 'legal consequences' referred to in the Abraham case, supra [Abraham v. Sims, 2 Cal.2d 698, 42 P.2d 1029], is that the fixing of salaries must not be discriminatory, arbitrary or unreasonable. The above cited cases all so qualify the general power of the administrative agencies to fix the salaries of permanent teachers. Because of this qualification it necessarily follows that there must be a comparison with the salaries of other teachers or salaries of previous years. If this could not be done, the qualification would be meaningless." (Italics ours.)

The record there showed that the respondent board attempted to reduce appellants' salaries from $1,600 to $1,325, practically the minimum allowed by law. No other salaries were reduced; most of them were raised; and the salary of a teacher of approximately the same years of service, experience and qualifications remained the same. The court said: "These facts standing alone are sufficient to force the conclusion that the attempted action of the board was unreasonable and arbitrary. The fact that the salary of a teacher of like experience and years of service was not reduced is particularly strong in support of appellants' claim of discrimination. That there must be some degree of uniformity was recently recognized by this court in the case of Fry v. Board of Education, 17 Cal.2d 753, [at page 757], 112 P.2d 229, 233, wherein it is stated: '"It must be conceded that, within the limits fixed by the School Code, the Board has discretionary control over the salaries of teachers. (Citing cases.) However, it must also be conceded that the legislature has enjoined on such Boards, within reasonable limits, the principle of uniformity of treatment as to salary for those performing like services with like experience. * * *"'" And in that case the Supreme Court reversed the finding of the trial court that the Board had not acted arbitrarily.

We conclude that the rule of the Board requiring petitioner to acquire additional college units or suffer a reduction in salary to which she was otherwise entitled was in excess of the powers of the Board. The judgment is reversed and the lower court is directed to issue the writ of madamus as prayed.

PEEK and THOMPSON, JJ., concur.

Rehearing denied; THOMPSON, J., dissenting.

In re EASTER'S ESTATE.

CALIFORNIA TRUST CO. v. JONES et al.

JONES v. SECURITY-FIRST NAT. BANK OF LOS ANGELES et al.

Civ. 13920.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.
July 23, 1943.

As Corrected on Denial of Rehearing
Aug. 11, 1943.
Hearing Granted Sept. 20, 1943.

1. Wills ⇨506(2)

The word "heirs", as used in wills, designates the persons who would, by law, succeed to the estate of a person if he should die without disposing of it by will. Probate Code, § 108.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Heir".

2. Wills ⇨524(2)

Generally, in absence of clear indications of a different intention, the class described as testator's "heirs", or such persons as would take his estate by the rules of law if he had died intestate, to whom a remainder is given by will, is to be ascertained at testator's death, and mere words of futurity, without the adverb of time, are insufficient to preclude application of the general rule.

3. Wills ⇨629

In construing wills, words expressive of future time are to be referred to the vesting in possession, if they reasonably can be, rather than to the vesting in right.

4. Wills ⇨629

There is a presumption in favor of vesting of testamentary provisions at testator's death. Probate Code, § 28.

5. Wills ⇨524(2)

Under decree distributing testator's estate to a trustee to pay a specified portion of the income to testator's widow for life, and providing that the trust should terminate on widow's death and the trust fund "should go to" and "vest" in testator's heirs at law in accordance with the succession statute in force in March, 1920, notwithstanding that the widow was also an heir, identification of testator's heirs was determined as of his death, and not as of termination of the trust; the word "vest" referring to a vesting of the enjoyment only, rather than to the right to the fund; and effect of words "shall go to" as clear words of direct devise at the time of death, being unaffected by word "vest" or provision that trustee should "convey, deliver, and pay over" the trust fund.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Shall Go to" and "Vest".

6. Wills ⇨534

Although the circumstance that the one who is a member, or the sole member, of the class to which the limitation over is made, is the first taker, is considered in determining whether testator has impliedly excluded such first taker from participation in the gift over, it is not, of itself, sufficient to prevent the first taker from so participating.

7. Executors and administrators ⇨315(5, 6)

Decree of distribution, if inconsistent with will, must control, and, in construing decree, will can be considered only to clear up some ambiguity in decree.

8. Executors and administrators ⇨315(5)

Where decree distributing testator's estate in trust was not ambiguous and did not limit its benefits to those who were "of the blood" of testator, identity of testator's heirs was not determined as of termination of the trust on ground that the interpretation of a will by which property goes to those of testator's blood is preferred.

"Of the blood" is a technical legal phrase meaning to be descended from the person referred to or from the same common stock and from a common ancestor.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Of the Blood".

9. Husband and wife ⇨273(1)

Under statute providing that upon the husband's death, one-half of the community property goes to the surviving wife and one-third of the husband's separate property goes to the surviving wife where he leaves more than one child and no will, the share of the community property which the wife takes goes to her as an "heir" of her husband. Civ.Code, § 1386, subd. 1; § 1402.

10. Wills ⇨800

A widow's "election" as to whether to take under her husband's will or to assert her community rights is merely an election whether to take the provision made for her in her husband's will or to take her statutory share of the community property, but, if she takes under the will, her election so to do is to be strictly construed and no rights are surrendered by it except by clear and explicit language. Civ.Code, § 1386, subd. 1; § 1402.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Election".

11. Wills ⚿800

Where widow, on being required to elect whether to take under her husband's will or to assert her community rights elected to take under the will, widow did not "waive" her right to take under the will the share of the community property which the succession statutes of 1920 would give her as an heir. Civ.Code, § 1386, subd. 1; § 1402.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

PARKER WOOD, J., dissenting.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles C. Montgomery, Judge pro tem.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Alfred Easter, deceased, by the California Trust Company, as administrator, etc., and another, opposed by Paul W. Jones, as administrator, etc., and Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles, as trustee, and others. From adverse portions of an order construing a distribution decree, plaintiffs appeal.

Reversed with direction.

Stephens, Jones, Inch & La Fever, of Los Angeles, for appellant California Trust Co.

B. R. Ware, of Los Angeles, for appellant Paul W. Jones.

Craig & Weller and Frank C. Weller, all of Los Angeles, for respondents Martha B. Todd, Elizabeth B. Marriott, Grace Winkler, and Kathleen Broadridge.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and E. H. Conley, all of Los Angeles, for respondent Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles.

SHAW, Justice pro tem.

By the decree of distribution of the estate of Alfred Easter, deceased, a trust was set up under the provisions of his will. On the termination of this trust the trustee filed its final account with a request that the court construe that decree and determine to whom the trust property remaining in its hands should pass and be delivered. The trial court, proceeding under section 1200 of the Probate Code, made an order which, in part, determined that the trust property passed to respondents and directed that it be delivered to them. Other claimants have appealed from these parts of the order and their appeal is now before us for consideration.

The decree of distribution was made October 3, 1923, and distributed the entire estate to a trustee, in trust to manage the property and from the income to pay $300 per month to Catherine Easter, widow of Alfred, and the balance to the children of Alfred in a specified manner, with further provisions in case of the death of any child. This decree contained the following provision upon which the question before us arises: "Upon the death of the said Catherine Easter, the trust hereinbefore referred to shall terminate and all of the property then in the hands of the trustee or in its possession or control, shall go to and vest in the heirs at law of the said Alfred Easter, deceased, in accordance with the statute of succession of the State of California in force in the month of March, 1920, and the trustee is directed to convey, deliver and pay over all the corpus of said trust fund then in its possession or under its control unto such heirs in accordance with the statute of succession of the State of California in force in the month of March, 1920."

At the time of the death of Alfred Easter on February 1, 1923, his heirs, according to the statute here mentioned, were his widow, Catherine, a son, Ephraim, and three daughters, Martha B. Todd, Elizabeth Marriott and Kate B. Gherky. None of these children was the daughter of the widow. During the lifetime of the widow, the daughter Kate B. Gherky died, leaving two children, Grace Winkler and Kathleen Broadridge, and the son Ephraim died leaving no issue, so that, at the death of Alfred's widow on January 8, 1942, which terminated the trust, the heirs of Alfred, according to the statute referred to in the decree, if heirship were then ascertained, would have been the respondents herein, who are Martha B. Todd, and Elizabeth Marriott, his daughters, and Grace Winkler and Kathleen Broadridge, children of the deceased daughter. The question here for decision is, whether the identity of the "heirs" of Alfred Easter, to whom, by the decree of distribution, the remainder interest after the termination of the trust is distributed, is to be determined as of the time of his death or as of the time of termination of the trust. The respondents appeared in the trial court and claimed the whole of the property on the theory that the proper time was that of the termination of the trust, and they were therefore the only heirs. The trial court agreed with them and gave judgment accordingly. The appellants, who are the personal representatives of the estates of the widow and of the son, Ephraim, respectively, resisted this claim and now seek a reversal of the order on the theory that the time with respect to which the determination of the identity of the heirs of Alfred should be made is that of his death, that their respective decedents were heirs and took a vested interest in remainder at that time, and that therefore the estates represented by them are entitled to share with respondents in the trust property. We conclude that appellants' contention is well founded.

[1-5] The word "heirs," whether used in its ordinary sense or as a technical term, designates the persons who would, by law, succeed to the estate of a person in case he should die without disposing of it by will. (Estate of Watts, (1918) 179 Cal. 20, 175 P. 415; Prob.Code, sec. 108.)

"It is a general rule of testamentary construction, so universally recognized as to render unnecessary a full citation of the cases which support it, that, in the absence of clear and unambiguous indications of a different intention to be delivered from the context of the will, read in the light of the surrounding circumstances, the class described as testator's heirs, or such persons as would take his estate by the rules of law if he had died intestate, to whom a remainder is given by will, is to be ascertained at the death of the testator. (33 L. R. A. (N. S.), p. 2, note.)" (Estate of Newman, (1924) 68 Cal.App. 420, 424, 229 P. 898; see also note in 49 A.L.R. 178 and supplementary note in 127 A.L.R. 604, where substantially the same rule is stated, with many supporting citations.) In Estate of Newman, supra, the court further said, at page 429 of 68 Cal.App., at page 902 of 229 P.: "Mere words of futurity, without the adverb of time, are insufficient to preclude the application of the general rule. Mortimer v. Slater, L.R. 7 Ch.Div. 322. Words expressive of future time are to be referred to the vesting in possession, if they reasonably can be, rather than to the vesting in right. In re Kenyon et al., 17 R.I. 149, 20 A. 294, 296." This rule, with supporting authorities, also appears in notes, 49 A.L.R. 186, 187 and 127 A.L.R. 609, 610. The will considered in Estate of Newman, supra, provided that upon the termination of a trust created by it "said Trustee shall convey, deliver, pay and transfer to my heirs at law, wherever and whoever they may be, according to the laws of succession of the State of California, all of said trust estate." Applying the rules above quoted to this provision, the court held that those who were the testator's heirs at the time of his death took a vested remainder in the trust property. The words there construed are very much like those used in the decree of distribution here and we think the construction there adopted should be given the decree here. The statement in the decree that at the termination of the trust the property shall "vest" in the heirs can, when considered with its context, be construed as referring to a vesting of the actual enjoyment only, rather than the right to the property, and in view of the presumption in favor of the vesting of testamentary provisions at death (Prob.Code, sec. 28, formerly Civ.Code, sec. 1341; Estate of Newman, supra, 68 Cal.App. at page 424, 229 P. 898; In re De Vries, (1911) 17 Cal.App. 184, 190, 119 P. 109), it should be so construed here. This context includes the provision that on expiration of the trust the property "shall go to" the heirs. These are "clear words of direct devise" at the time of death (Estate of Wallace, (1938) 11 Cal.2d 338, 341, 79 P.2d 1094), and their effect to that end is not defeated by the company of the word "vest" (In re De Vries, supra, at pages 191, 192, 119 P. 109) nor by the provision that the trustees shall "convey, deliver and pay over" the trust fund. (Estate of Wallace, supra; Estate of Newman, supra.)

[6] The further question arises here, whether the fact that the life tenant, whose estate intervenes before that of the "heirs" who are to take in remainder, is also one of those heirs, affects or defeats the application of the rule of construction above stated. Nothing was expressly decided on this question in Estate of Newman, supra, but all save one of the life tenants

there were also heirs, and the decision upholds their right to share in the remainder as heirs. This holding was approved in Estate of Goldberg, (1938) 10 Cal.2d 709, 714, 76 P.2d 508, where the court further cited as authority a note in 13 A.L.R. 615, 620. In that note, at the place to which reference was thus made, appears this statement on the point: "It is held that although the circumstance that the one who is a member, or the sole member, of the class to which the limitation over is made, is the first taker, is properly to be taken into consideration in determining whether the testator has impliedly excluded such first taker from participation in the gift over, it is not, of itself, sufficient to prevent the first taker from so participating, both in cases where the first takers were a part of the members of the class [citing cases], and in cases where they were the sole members of the class [citing cases]." Further citations of cases to the same effect are made in supplements to this note, appearing in 30 A.L.R. 915, 917, and 61 A.L.R. 1011, 1014, and in other notes at 49 A.L.R. 182-183 and 127 A.L.R. 607. For an illustrative case see Brown v. Spring, (1922) 241 Mass. 565, 135 N.E. 701. Following this rule here we hold that no sufficient reason appears for excluding the estates represented by appellants from participation in the remainder interest.

[7,8] The trial court found that it was the intention of Alfred Easter to pass the trust estate on the termination of the trust to his blood relatives, and respondents now invoke the rule, declared in Estate of Hartson, (1933) 218 Cal. 536, 540, 24 P.2d 171, that "where the provisions of a will are capable of two interpretations, under one of which those of the blood of the testator will take, while under the other the property will go to strangers, the interpretation by which the property goes to those of the blood of the testator is preferred." The foundation of this rule is that the will be capable of two interpretations. We do not find that foundation present here. It is to be noted that we are dealing here with the decree of distribution, not the will, that if there should be any inconsistency between the two the decree must control, and that in construing the decree the will can be considered only for the purpose of clearing up some ambiguity, vagueness or uncertainty in the decree. (Estate of Goldberg, (1938) 10 Cal.2d 709, 713, 76 P.2d 508; Keating v. Smith, (1908) 154 Cal. 186, 191, 97 P. 300.) We find no such uncertainty, ambiguity or vagueness here when the decree is construed by the aid of the rules of interpretation already stated. The decree does not limit its benefits to those who are "of the blood" of Alfred Easter. That is a technical legal phrase, meaning, to be descended from the person referred to or from the same common stock or from a common ancestor. (11 C.J.S., Blood, p. 366.) A large part of the income of the trust here goes to Alfred's widow, and another part, in the contingency that his son Ephraim dies without issue—the contingency that in fact occurred—goes to Ephraim's widow. Neither of these beneficiaries is, in the legal sense, of the blood of Alfred, as far as appears from the record. The provision for disposition of the corpus is only that already quoted from the decree and it contains no words suggesting that the disposition of that corpus is limited to heirs who are "of the blood" of Alfred Easter. As the Supreme Court said in Estate of Watts, supra, (1918) 179 Cal. 20, 23, 175 P. 415, any such suggestion is based on mere conjecture and can have no force here.

[9] Our conclusion on the matter already discussed makes it necessary for us to consider another point. Alfred Easter declared in his will that his estate consisted largely of community property. The representative of his widow's estate offered evidence tending to show that certain specific parts of the remaining trust property were community property but this evidence was rejected on the ground that the widow had waived her right to claim any community property interest in the estate. Unless she had made such waiver and it was applicable here the evidence was clearly proper, for her right as heir would be greater in case of community property than it would in case of separate property. The statute of succession in force in 1920, referred to in the decree, was contained in the Civil Code, which then provided, so far as material here, that "upon the death of the husband one half of the community property goes to the surviving wife, and the other half is subject to the testamentary disposition of the husband" (Civ.Code, sec. 1402, as originally enacted in 1872), and that in case of the husband's separate property, where he leaves a wife and more than one child and no will, one third of such property goes to the surviving wife. (Civ. Code, sec. 1386, subd. 1, this particular provision of which had been the same since its original enactment in 1872.) The share of the community property which the wife took under this provision went to her as an heir of her husband. (Estate of Moffitt, (1908) 153 Cal. 359, 95 P. 653, 1025, 20 L.R.A.,N.S., 207.)

Annexed to the will itself was a writing signed by the widow declaring that "I hereby promise and agree that I will take under the terms of this will, which are satisfactory to me, and will not elect to take or claim any part of the estate of Alfred Easter as my share of the community property." In addition to this she signed and filed in the estate proceeding, before distribution, a paper stating that she "has elected, and does hereby elect, to take and accept the share of the property of said estate to which she would be entitled under the terms of the last will and testament of said deceased and the codicils thereto * * * and hereby waives any claim which she might make or assert in or to any of the property of said estate by reason of any community interest or share that she may have or be entitled to therein."

[10, 11] For the purposes of this decision we assume that the terms of the will and the condition of the testator's property were such as to put the widow to an election whether to take under the will or to assert her community rights and that by these papers she did make such an election. We do this without inquiry into the validity of either assumption because of our conclusion that neither of these waivers is applicable to the disposition of the corpus of the trust property after the termination of the trust. When a widow, in such cases, is put to an election, it is merely an election whether to take the provision made for her in her husband's will or to take her statutory share of the community property. If she takes under the will, her election so to do is to be strictly construed and no rights should be held to have been surrendered by it except by clear and explicit language. (Estate of Whitney, (1916) 171 Cal. 750, 756, 154 P. 855.) The papers signed by the widow here constituted a clear and explicit declaration of her intention to take the provision made for her by the will but they did not clearly, explicitly or at all waive any claim she might have as to the proper construction of the will. On this matter no election was required of her. What she waived was the right to defeat the will by claiming adversely to it the share of the community property which would go to her by law and which the husband could not dispose of otherwise by will without her consent. What her estate now claims is a right to take under the will the share of the community property pointed out by the will, that is, the share which the succession statutes of 1920 would give her as an heir. The waiver and the present claim are not inconsistent.

The portions of the order appealed from are reversed and the trial court is directed to retry and determine the issues as to what parts of the trust property remaining in the hands of the trustee were community property of Alfred Easter and his wife, Catherine Easter, and thereupon to enter an order in accordance with the conclusions stated in the opinion of this court filed herein.

SHINN, Acting P. J., concurs.

PARKER WOOD, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent. In my opinion the order of the trial court should be affirmed.

One of the appellants is the administrator of the estate of Catherine Easter, who was the widow of the testator Alfred Easter and was the one whose life determined the duration of the trust herein. Catherine was not the mother of the testator's children, and it does not appear that she had issue. Ephraim Easter, a son of the testator, and one of the beneficiaries of the trust, died without issue prior to the time his (Ephraim's) wife died. His wife died prior to the time Catherine died. The other appellant is the administrator of the estate of Ephraim. In other words, the appeals are in behalf of the heirs of the widow of the testator, and in behalf of those who would succeed to the estate of Ephraim, who apparently are the heirs of his widow. The respondents are the children and grandchildren of the testator.

The decree of 1923, made "in pursuance of and according to the provisions of the last will of said decedent," stated: "Upon the death of the said Catherine Easter, the trust hereinbefore referred to shall terminate and all of the property then in the hands of the trustee or in its possession or control, shall go to and vest in the heirs at law of the said Alfred Easter, deceased, in accordance with the statute of succession of the State of California in force in the month of March, 1920, and the trustee is directed to convey, deliver and pay over all the corpus of said trust funds then in its possession or under its control unto such heirs in accordance with the statute of succession of the State of California in force in the month of March, 1920." (Italics added.)

The will stated: "This trust shall terminate upon the death of my said wife Catherine," and, "Upon the termination of this trust my said Trustee shall convey, deliver and pay over all the corpus of said trust fund then in its possession or under its control unto my heirs at law in accordance with the present statute of succession of the State of California."

The decree of 1923 used practically the same language, in regard to the heirs, as was used in the will. The words of the will, "heirs at law," were repeated in the decree, and although an ambiguity existed by reason of the intervening life estate as to the meaning of those words, the only part of the decree which indicated an attempt to interpret those words, or to designate in clear language whether those words meant persons who were living at the time of the death of the testator or those who were living at the time of the death of the life tenant (Catherine, his wife), were the words, "* * * the property then * * * shall go to and vest in," preceding the words, "heirs at law."

The will did not include the words, "shall go to and vest in," preceding the words, "heirs at law," or at all. The addition of those words in the decree, thereby making the statement that "the property then * * * shall go to and vest in the heirs at law," indicates that the judge who signed the 1923 decree had in mind that the passing of title to the property was to occur in the future and that title had not passed at the time of the death of the testator. It is argued by appellants, however, that the statement, "then * * * the property shall go to and vest in the heirs at law," did not mean that the property would go to and vest in the heirs in the future, but it did mean that the property had already gone to and had vested in the heirs; and that the word "property" did not mean property, but meant "enjoyment of property."

That provision of the decree, relative to the property then vesting in the heirs, was stated in common, ordinary words which are generally understood to mean precisely what was stated; namely, that the property would at a future time pass to and become the property of the heirs. If it be considered that the words, "heirs at law," in the 1923 decree, although merely repeated from the will, were used in a technical sense, owing to the fact that they were used by a judge, it is to be noted that the technical meaning of those words, under circumstances involving a precedent life estate, was favorable to the children according to the case law of this state at the time they were used. In re Winter's Estate (1896) 114 Cal. 186, 45 P. 1063; Estate of Wilson (1920) 184 Cal. 63, 193 P. 581. The matter of the Estate of Newman, 68 Cal.App. 420, 229 P. 898, decided in August, 1924, upon which appellants rely, had not been decided at the time the 1923 decree was made. It is assumed that the judge had the case law in mind at the time he made the decree, and intended that the words used by him should be interpreted in accordance with the existing case law. The 1923 decree became final, of course, without an appeal by the children of Alfred Easter, but there was nothing in the decree or the case law to indicate that the children were aggrieved by the decree and entitled to appeal therefrom, and nothing appeared otherwise to indicate that the children were aggrieved by the 1923 decree until the complex interpretation of the decree was made by the strangers in blood after the expiration of 19 years. If, however, that provision, "then * * * the property shall go to and vest in the heirs at law," was susceptible also of such an interpretation as that placed upon it by appellants through an intricate process of legal reasoning, then the decree was ambiguous and vague, and reference should be made to the will upon which the decree was based to ascertain the meaning of the decree. It was stated in the Estate of Goldberg (1938) 10 Cal.2d 709, 713, 76 P.2d 508, 510: "* * * should the language of such a decree appear to be 'uncertain, vague or ambiguous,' it is subject to judicial explanation or interpretation, and in such circumstances, the will itself may be used to establish the true meaning and intent of the decree." At the time the judge signed the 1923 decree it was not an established rule in this state that the use of the word "heirs" under similar conditions, involving an intervening life estate, meant exclusively those who were living at the time of the testator's death (and it is not such rule now), and in other jurisdictions the interpretations of that word under such circumstances were not (and are not) in harmony. At that time in some jurisdictions the rule was that words as to survivorship under such circumstances referred to the time of the testator's death only when there was no other time to which such words could refer. For these reasons, also, the decree, which did not state expressly who were intended by the use of the word "heirs," was ambiguous and vague, and it was proper to consider the will to determine the meaning of the decree.

"The paramount rule of construction is, of course, that effect must be given, if possible, to the intent of the testatrix [testator], if that intent can be ascertained." Estate of Hartson (1933) 218 Cal. 536, 539, 24 P.2d 171, 173. Alfred Easter provided in his will that his wife should have an income of $300 each month during her life, and a place in which to live without payment of rent; that if the trustee purchased a place to be used as her residence, the title thereto should not pass to her, but should be in the trust estate; that certain proportions of the income above the $300 were to be paid to his children during the life of his wife, or to the children of any deceased child by representation; that in the event of the death of his son Ephraim before Catherine's death, a proportion of the income should be paid to Ephraim's wife during Catherine's life. He also created the trust above mentioned. He provided further that no beneficiary should have the right to anticipate any of the income, or to sell, pledge or otherwise alienate the income, and that the income was donated by him for support and maintenance only. He stated also that his wife had agreed with him that the provisions in his will were for her best interests, but he stated further that if she elected to take a share of the community property then the provisions in his will for her benefit should lapse. The wife, Catherine, signed a statement at the end of the will that she promised and agreed to take under the terms of the will, which were satisfactory with her, and she would not take any part of the estate as her share of the community property.

The provision of the will that the wife should not have title to a house purchased for her indicates an intention to exclude her from the ownership of any part of the trust. The provision for payment of income to Ephraim's widow during Catherine's lifetime indicates an intention to limit the interest of his daughter-in-law to support while Catherine lived. The references in the spendthrift provisions to income only and not to the corpus, indicate that the testator did not consider any remainder should vest in the beneficiaries during the period of the trust. The references to the issue of deceased children indicate the desire of the testator as to the class who should take in the event of the death of any of his children.

Catherine was not the mother of the testator's children. She and Alfred had been married since 1896. It does not appear that she had issue or that she had any known relatives. She had agreed with Alfred, for some reason that does not appear in the record, that it was for her best interests not to claim a share of the community property but to take a substantial income and a rent-free place of abode for life. It does not seem reasonable that the testator intended, after making ample provision for her comfort during her life, to also give her, as appellants contend, a vested interest in the trust property at the time of his death and to suspend the "enjoyment" of that interest by her until after she died. Such a construction would mean that it was his intention to provide generously for her heirs by not referring to them generally or at all as her heirs, but including them as beneficiaries on the unexpressed theory that his widow, the life tenant, would be entitled to a vested interest in the trust fund at the time of his death.

The statement in the will that, "Trustee shall convey * * * the corpus of said trust fund then in its possession * * * unto my heirs at law in accordance with the present statute of succession of the State of California," was for the purpose of providing a method for determining who should receive the property, and in what proportions, upon the termination of the trust. Whether the word "heirs" in the will was used in its technical sense is to be determined from the context of the will. Appellants state that the will appears to have been drafted by an attorney and the word "heirs" was used presumably in its technical sense. Although the will in the Estate of Wilson (1920) 184 Cal. 63, 193 P. 581, was prepared by an attorney "of recognized standing and ability," the court said, at page 71 of 184 Cal., at page 584 of 193 P.: "The case is one where 'the context clearly indicates' (section 1327, Civ. Code) that the word 'heirs' was not used in the strict technical sense * * *."

As above stated, it was not an established rule in this state, when the decree was signed, that the use of the word "heirs" under similar conditions, involving an intervening life estate, meant exclusively those who were living at the time of the testator's death.

In the matter of In re Winter's Estate (1896) 114 Cal.186, page 187, 45 P. 1063, the will provided: "* * * which [referring to a ranch] I will and bequeath to my wife, Annie Winter, for the remainder of her life. Then it is to be sold, and the proceeds to be divided between my surviving brothers and sisters." Four brothers and one sister survived the testator; but two of the brothers died during the life of Annie Winter. After the death of Annie the ranch was sold and application was made for distribution of the proceeds. The heirs of the deceased brothers contended that two-fifths of the proceeds should be distributed to them. Distribution was made to the brothers and sister who survived Annie, and did not include the heirs of the two deceased brothers. On appeal the court said, on page 188 of 114 Cal., on page 1064 of 45 P., in affirming the judgment: "The solution of the question depends upon whether the survivorship mentioned in the will relates to the time of the death of the testator, or to the time when the ranch was to be sold, after the death of the widow, Annie Winter. * * *" It was said further therein, on page 189 of 114 Cal., on page 1064 of 45 P.: "The meaning of that clause of the will now under consideration seems to be plain. The widow took a life estate; at her death the ranch to be sold, and the proceeds to be divided among the surviving brothers and sisters, i.e., to the brothers and sisters then surviving. The exact wording of the clause is: 'To my wife, Annie Winter, for the remainder of her life. Then it is to be sold and the proceeds to be divided between my surviving brothers and sisters.' I do not think that can be construed to mean the brothers and sisters surviving at the time of the testator's death."

It is to be noted that the provision in the decree under consideration in this present matter, "* * * all of the property then * * * shall go to and vest in the heirs at law * * * and the trustee is directed to convey, deliver and pay over all the corpus * * * then in its possession * * *," is similar to the clause under consideration in that matter, "then it is to be sold and the proceeds to be divided between my surviving brothers and sisters," which the court interpreted to mean, as above shown, "brothers and sisters then surviving." Following that interpretation, the words in the present case, "then * * * shall go to and vest in the heirs at law," should be interpreted to mean, "then * * * shall go to and vest in the then heirs at law."

In the Estate of Wilson, supra, 184 Cal. 63, 193 P. 581, the will provided: "All the real property * * * I give and devise unto my said son, to have and to hold the same for and during the term of his life; * * * it being my intention to devise unto him a life estate * * * with remainder over at his death, to his then living children; and if he leave no issue, then upon his death, all such real property shall be distributed among my heirs, as provided by the laws of the state of California, the same as if I had died intestate." She had only one son. He died without living issue. His sole heir was his widow, who claimed all of the Wilson estate on the theory that her husband, the son of Mrs. Wilson, had succeeded to it under his mother's will. Other claimants were various nieces and nephews who survived the son. The court said, at page 67 of 184 Cal., at page 582 of 193 P.: "Statutory rules of interpretation are to be followed in so far as they aid in determining the intention of the testator, but they are all subject to the fundamental rule that the intention as shown by the will must prevail." The court held that the son's widow was not entitled to the distribution, and said on page 71 of 184 Cal., on page 584 of 193 P.: "* * * we think it clear that the intention was that they [the heirs] should be determined as of the date of the termination of the life estate."

In the Estate of Hartson (1933) 218 Cal. 536, 538, 24 P.2d 171, 172, the decree of distribution, made in conformance with the provisions of the will, provided that the income from a trust should be paid monthly in certain proportions to the children and a granddaughter of testatrix, and provided further that upon the death of any one of his children then the amount which should have been paid to said deceased child "shall be paid by the said trustees to the legal heirs of her said deceased child." (Italics added.) One of the children died leaving his wife and a daughter. The income which would have been paid to the deceased child was then paid to his wife and his daughter. Later the widow of the deceased child died leaving two sisters as her heirs. The two sisters claimed that they were entitled to the income formerly paid to the widow, upon the theory that upon the death of the deceased child of the testatrix his interest vested under the will in his "legal heirs," which included his widow, and since the two sisters were her heirs they should receive the income. The daughter claimed the income on the theory that she was the sole surviving heir of her father, and the interest of her father (the deceased child) did not vest in his heirs upon his death but was contingent upon his heirs being alive at the time the monthly dividends were to be made. The court held that the widow's heirs were not entitled to the income, that the daughter of the deceased child was so entitled, and said at page 540 of 218 Cal., at page 173 of 24 P.2d: "* * * we must interpret the will to mean that the income is to be paid to the heirs of a deceased child living at the time of the distribution of the income. This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that under this interpretation the income is paid to those who are of the blood of the testatrix, and will not go to strangers." (Italics added.) The court said further, on page 541 of 218 Cal., on page 173 of 24 P.2d: "To hold that the interest of the heirs of Burnell [the deceased child] vested upon his death, as contended for by appellants, would be to do violence to the obvious intent of the testatrix * * *." (Italics added.)

As above stated, in some jurisdictions the rule, when the decree was signed, was that words as to survivorship under similar circumstances, involving an intervening life estate, referred to the time of the testator's death only when there was no other time to which such words could refer.

In Horner's Probate Practice and Estates (1940) Vol. 3, page 445, sec. 2118, it was said, in referring to "Jarman on Wills": "Jarman says of the recent cases that the rule referring the words [as to survivorship] to the testator's death applies only where there is no other period to which the words can be referred; and that where such gift is preceded by a life estate or other prior interest, it takes effect in favor of those who survive the period of distribution, and those only. The Illinois [Supreme] Court quotes this rule from Jarman as reasonable * * *."

In Burlet v. Burlet (1910) 246 Ill. 563, at page 566, 92 N.E. 965, 966, it was said: "The decisions in regard to determining when, in cases such as this, the survivorship is referred to the time of the death of the testator, and when to the death of the person to whom has been given an intervening interest, are not in entire harmony. The rule now prevailing, and which we follow, is that, where a gift to survivors is preceded by a life or other prior interest it takes effect in favor of those who survive the period of distribution, and those only, unless a special contrary intent is found in the will. This is the rule now generally accepted, and which we have followed and approved in Ridgeway v. Underwood, 67 Ill. 419 * * * [other cases]." The case of Burlet v. Burlet, supra, was cited with approval in Bushman v. Fraser (1926) 322 Ill. 579, at page 585, 153 N.E. 611.

In the case of the Estate of Washburn (1909) 11 Cal.App. 735, at page 741, 106 P. 415, at page 418, it was stated: "The law prefers to consider future estates as vested, but the law also seeks to effectuate the wishes of the testator, and when his desire is clearly expressed, as we think it is here, it should be carried out, regardless of the conventional distinctions made between vested and contingent remainders, for this is the paramount duty of the court. * * * In all cases it is the intention, expressed in the instrument creating the expectant estate, that is to govern, and, therefore, if the language employed shows an intention to postpone the vesting until the happening of a certain event it is contingent." (Italics added.)

The will in the Estate of Newman, supra, 68 Cal.App. 420, 422, 229 P. 898, 899, upon which appellant relies, stated that the trust should terminate upon the death of the survivor of his brother and 5 sisters, who were named as beneficiaries of the income of the trust, and the trustee, "shall * * * transfer to my heirs at law, wherever and whoever they may be, according to the laws of succession of the state of California, all of said trust estate." The will in that matter was executed one month prior to the testator's death. At the time of making the will he was 51 years of age and in excellent health. (He was killed accidentally.) The court said, at page 425 of 68 Cal.App., at page 900 of 229 P.: "Charles Newman was in the prime of a vigorous manhood when he made his will, and was not expecting an early and sudden passing. * * * The phrase used was a rational one, such as might be used by a person who had before him the reasonable expectancy of life that testator had when he made his will. The language of the will, it seems to us, indicates that testator * * * wished to keep the corpus of the property intact, and insure the payment of the income to the beneficiaries (naturally the objects of his bounty) during their lives; and that, while he may have wished to postpone the distribution of the corpus of his estate, 'beyond that,' as respondent concedes, he was not really concerned, and 'did not care who received the remainder, except that he wanted his legal heirs to receive the same.'" (Italics added.)

Of course, in the present case there is no basis for a statement that the testator did not care who received his estate. On the contrary, it is certain that the testator herein was concerned particularly as to the distribution after the death of his wife.

In the Estate of Newman, supra, the period designated for the duration of the trust had not elapsed, the trustee had not been appointed, and the question was whether the estate of the testator who had died one month after he made the will should be held in trust until all of the 6 beneficiaries who were to receive the income had died, presumably many years, and then distribute it to various unknown heirs or whether it should be concluded that the interests of the 6 income-beneficiaries vested when the testator died, inasmuch as the testator did not care particularly who received his estate after the death of the 6 beneficiaries.

In the present case the period designated for the duration of the trust had elapsed, after a period of approximately 18 years; the widow, whose life determined the period of the trust, had received the income ($300 each month for approximately 18 years) which she agreed to accept in lieu of community property; and it was a question whether the estate which had been held in trust for the period designated should be distributed to the persons who were the heirs of the testator at the termination of the life estate, not including the heirs of the daughter-in-law and the heirs of the widow, who were strangers; or to include them on the theory that the testator intended to vest interests in them at the time of his death.

It is to be noted that it was said in the Estate of Newman, supra, 68 Cal.App. at page 425, 229 P. at page 900, that, "Another reason assigned [as a reason for the rule the law favors the vesting of interests] is the bias of the courts in favor of heirs or next of kin, as against third persons." It therefore appears that the application in the present case of the rule that the law favors the vesting of interests would not favor the next of kin, in accordance with the reason for the rule as stated in the Estate of Newman, supra, but on the contrary would be in favor of strangers. "It is also well settled that, where the provisions of a will are capable of two interpretations, under one of which those of the blood of the testator will take, while under the other the property will go to strangers, the interpretation by which the property goes to those of the blood of the testator is preferred." Estate of Hartson, supra, 218 Cal. 536, 539, 24 P.2d 171, 173.

The trust which was to continue during the life of the widow of the testator, was created by the testator principally for the support of the widow during her lifetime. When the testator provided in his will that the property should be conveyed "to my heirs" after the death of the widow, whose life measured the duration of the trust, it is apparent that the words "my heirs" were not meant to include the widow or her heirs, or to vest in her a remainder at the time of the testator's death, and suspend the "enjoyment" of that remainder until after she had died. It is apparent also that the words "my heirs" were not intended to include the heirs of the widow of Ephraim.

The 1923 decree included practically the same words as were in the will and in addition thereto included, by way of interpretation, ordinary words of futurity. It would seem that the decree itself justified the order of the trial court. If the decree itself was not sufficiently clear to justify the order of the trial court, then far less was it sufficiently clear, in view of the case law when the decree was made (or the case law now), to include the appellants as distributees; therefore, under such circumstances, the decree would be vague and uncertain, and it would be proper to refer to the will to ascertain the intention of the testator. Such reference to the will under the circumstances would not violate the rule as to finality of judgments (the decree would be recognized as final, but vague), or violate the rule that the law favors the vesting of interests unless a contrary intention appears; and would give effect to the paramount rule that the obvious intention of the testator should prevail.

On Petition for Rehearing.

The respondents' petition for a rehearing is denied.

SHAW, Justice pro tem., and SHINN, Acting P. J., concur.

PARKER WOOD, J., votes for a rehearing.

SWALL v. ANDERSON et al.*

Civ. 12448.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 26, 1943.

Rehearing Granted Aug. 25, 1943.

1. Appeal and error 🔑839(1)

On appeal from a part of a judgment not so intimately connected with remainder that reversal of part appealed from requires consideration of whole case in court below, an appellant court can review only portion appealed from.

2. Appeal and error 🔑839(1)

Where plaintiff's notice of appeal specified that she appealed only from that part of judgment disallowing treble damages, costs and disbursements, question whether judgment was erroneous because it did not run against one of the defendants could not be considered.

3. Trespass 🔑61

Proof that defendant acted willfully or maliciously is necessary in order to recover treble damages under statutes permitting treble damages for wrongful injury to trees. Code Civ.Proc. § 733; Civ. Code, § 3346.

4. Statutes 🔑227

The word "may" in ordinary statutory and judicial acceptance is permissive and not mandatory.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "May".

5. Trespass 🔑61

The statute providing that any person who injures a tree of another is liable to owner for treble the amount of damages which "may" be assessed therefor is not a "mandatory statute". Code Civ.Proc. § 733.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mandatory Statute".

6. Appeal and error 🔑941

"Judicial discretion" means the power of trial court to decide what is just and proper under all the circumstances of the case before it.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Judicial Discretion".

7. Appeal and error 🔑946

An "abuse of judicial discretion" does not mean merely that reviewing court would have decided differently under the same circumstances.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Abuse of Judicial Discretion".

8. Appeal and error 🔑946

Where trial court has exercised its best judgment upon occasion that called for it, appellate court will demand more than a nisi prius argument on merits of controversy before it will reverse determination on ground that there has been an abuse of discretion.

9. Trespass 🔑61

Where plaintiff's trees extended into highway so as to obstruct and hinder movement of house along highway by defendants and defendants deliberately damaged trees and sawed off some of limbs, refusal to allow treble damages on ground of failure to show that defendants acted "willfully" and "maliciously" was not improper. Code Civ. Proc. § 733; Civ.Code, §§ 3346, 3479, 3495.

---

* For subsequent opinion see 141 P.2d 912.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Maliciously" and "Willfully".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; William F. James, Judge.

Action by Ellen G. Swall against Albert Anderson and others, individually, and as copartners, doing business under the firm name and style of Anderson Bros., for damages for destruction and injury to trees. From a portion of the judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Portion of judgment appealed from affirmed.

Earl C. Berger, of Los Altos, for appellant.

Kenneth R. Malovos and Herman J. Mager, both of San Jose, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

This was an action for damages for the destruction of and injuries to trees forming part of an orchard owned by the plaintiff. The damages were caused by the defendants when they moved a house along a road bordering the orchard. The complaint was framed in two counts; the first was for damages for the negligent injury to the trees and the second one sought treble damages and attorneys' fees for "deliberate" injury to the trees. The lower court gave judgment for actual damages only. This appeal is taken by plaintiff from "that part of the judgment which disallows treble damages, costs and disbursements."

Defendant Lawrence Anderson, who owns the house moving business conducted under the name of Anderson Brothers, was in Alaska at the date of the injuries to plaintiff's trees and at the date of the trial. His brother Albert Anderson, another defendant, was his employee and was directing the moving of the house at the date of the injuries complained of. Plaintiff's orchard is in Santa Clara County near the town of Mountain View. It is bordered on one side by Levin Avenue down which the defendants were moving a house. Before proceeding down Levin Avenue, Albert Anderson observed that to proceed it would be necessary to touch the bordering trees at least on one side. He chose to strike those of plaintiff which bordered the road rather than the trees on the other side which had power poles interspersed among the trees bordering the road. He stated that it was his judgment that "the house would brush by the limbs without any extensive damage to the trees." After striking the limb of the first tree and breaking it at its joinder with the trunk, he continued down the road, damaging thirty-nine trees. To facilitate the house's passage along the roadway with the least amount of damage to the trees he sawed off some limbs which he feared would break farther back and thus cause permanent damage to the trees.

With respect to the intent with which the damage was done the trial court found "That although the initial damage inflicted by defendants may have been accidental, the ensuing damage was not accidental, rather, it was incurred with the knowledge of the defendants that same would result if they continued to move the load further, which they did, and also when they used saws and other tools to remove limbs and branches, and in carrying same away from plaintiff's premises."

[1, 2] The principal question presented by the plaintiff's appeal is the scope and application of section 733 of the Code of Civil Procedure and section 3346 of the Civil Code. Although plaintiff asserts in her brief that the judgment erroneously does not run against Ellis Anderson, another defendant who was present during the house moving, and seeks to have this error corrected, "Upon an appeal from a part of a judgment or order not so intimately connected with the remainder that a reversal of the part appealed from requires a consideration of the whole case in the court below, an appellant court can review only the portion appealed from." 2 Cal.Jur. 807, Whalen v. Smith, 163 Cal. 360, 362, 125 P. 904, Ann.Cas.1913E, 1319. We can not see that there is any connection between the rights of plaintiff against Ellis Anderson and the rights of plaintiff to treble damages; therefore, we are limited in the questions to be presented on appeal by the plaintiff's notice of appeal which specified that she appealed only from that part of the judgment disallowing "treble damages, costs and disbursements."

Section 733 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads as follows: "Trespass for cutting or carrying away trees, etc., actions for: (Treble damages). Any person who cuts down or carries off any wood or underwood, tree, or timber, or girdles or otherwise injures any tree or timber on the land of another person, or on the street or highway in front of any person's house, village, or city lot, or cultivated grounds; or on the commons or public grounds of any city or town, or on the street or highway in front thereof, without lawful authority, is liable to the owner of such land, or to such city or town, for treble the amount of damages which may be assessed therefor, in a civil action, in any court having jurisdiction." Emphasis ours.

Section 3346 of the Civil Code reads as follows: "Injuries to trees, etc. For wrongful injuries to timber, trees, or underwood upon the land of another, or removal thereof, the measure of damages is three times such a sum as would compensate for the actual detriment, except where the trespass was casual and involuntary, or committed under the belief that the land belonged to the trespasser, or where the wood was taken by the authority of highway officers for the purposes of a highway; in which cases the damages are a sum equal to the actual detriment." Emphasis ours.

[3] The appellant contends that the awarding of treble damages is mandatory under these two sections of the codes. She argues that upon a showing of a wrongful injury to trees without more, it is incumbent upon the trial court to grant treble damages. Section 251 of the Practice Act, which is substantially the same as section 733 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was construed in Barnes v. Jones, 51 Cal. 303, 306. In that case it was determined that the statutory measure of damages could not be imposed in the absence of pleading and proof that the trespass causing the injury to the trees was "willful." The supreme court, in interpreting section 733, relied on Barnes v. Jones, supra, in Stewart v. Sefton, 108 Cal. 197, at page 206, 41 P. 293, at page 296, in which case the court said, "To entitle the plaintiff to treble damages, under section 733 of the Code of Civil Procedure, she must have proved her allegation that defendant willfully or maliciously removed the trees, knowing them to be the property of plaintiff." Again in Butler v. Zeiss, 63 Cal.App. 73, 218 P. 54, 55, an award of treble damages under section 733 in favor of plaintiff was affirmed on the ground that plaintiff had pleaded and proved that the defendant "wilfully and maliciously" cut down and destroyed the plaintiff's trees. From these authorities it seems clear that in this state it is necessary, in order to recover treble damages under these code sections, to prove that the defendant acted willfully or maliciously. Although the problem was not discussed, the court in Mosesian & Sons v. Danielian, 52 Cal.App.2d 387, 390, 126 P.2d 363, assumed that to entitle the plaintiff to recover treble damages under section 3346 of the Civil Code it was also necessary to prove that the defendant wrongfully and maliciously removed the trees.

The appellant next contends that, even if to recover treble damages under the code sections it is necessary to plead and prove "willfulness and maliciousness," such pleading and proof were offered in this case. She argues that the finding of the court that defendants knowingly inflicted the damage is tantamount to a finding that defendants did the acts "wilfully and maliciously" within the requirements which have been read into the statutes by the above-cited cases. She asserts that all that is required to come within those cases is a showing of malice in law, not malice in fact, and that on the facts before us it is clear that the defendants intentionally and knowingly disregarded the rights of others.

From the historical development in the above three cases, it seems clear that the words "willfully" and "maliciously" were used synonymously. Although no case has been cited, nor has our research disclosed one, that directly defines the words which have been read into the statute under consideration by the courts, we do find that the court has directly considered the problem in connection with section 3345 of the Civil Code, into which section the same requirement of willfulness has been read, and which section is comparable in purpose and scope to the section immediately before us. It should be noted that section 3345 of the Civil Code was mandatory by its use of the words "must pay * * * treble rent" and has been impliedly repealed by the amendment to section 1174 of the Code of Civil Procedure in 1907. Field v. Walton, 94 Cal.App. 596, 599, 271 P. 500. In Alden v. Mayfield, 33 Cal.App. 724, at page 727, 166 P. 382, at page 383, in reversing the trial court which refused to give the plaintiff treble rent, the court said: "Doubtless the word 'willful' is used in different statutes with various shades of meaning, but herein the conduct of defendant in refusing to surrender possession was deliberate, intentional, and obstinate, with knowledge that the tenancy was terminated, and that he was holding over against the will and consent of the landlord. We think nothing more is required to constitute willfulness on the part of the tenant."

For many illustrations of the use of the term, and of the different significations attached to it, we may refer to Words and Phrases, Perm.Ed., vol. 45, page 190. The following quotation therefrom is instructive: "The word 'willfully' has various meanings, and is used to denote the quality of an act, or the intent with which it is done. It is frequently used in the sense of intentionally, willingly, designedly, or with set purpose. When used in criminal statutes, it usually means with a malevolent purpose or motive, with a wicked or criminal intent, especially if the forbidden act is one that is wrong in itself or involves moral turpitude; but if the forbidden act is not wrong in itself, or does not involve moral turpitude, the word is then used in the sense of intentionally or purposely, so that when the act is so done it is done willfully. The word, however, should be given that meaning only which the context indicates was intended. United States v. Sioux City Stock Yards Co., C. C., 162 F. 556, 562."

It is conceded by both parties that no satisfactory interpretation of the code sections relating to treble damages for injuries to trees is to be found in our decisions. A strict construction of these sections would indicate that the right to sue for treble damages is given to the landowner where trees upon his land are cut or injured, and that the same right is given the city or town when trees are cut or injured which are on the street or highway in "front of any person's house, village, or city lot" or other public property. A liberal construction of the section would permit the landowner to sue if the damage was done to trees in front of his house or cultivated grounds. The Civil Code section limits the right to sue to recover for injuries to trees "upon the land" of another. At the time these sections were enacted, in 1872, section 2633 of the Political Code was enacted reading, in part: "Any owner or occupant of land adjoining a highway * * * may plant trees on the side contiguous to his land * * * not more than six feet from the boundary of the highway * * * Whoever injures any of them is liable to the owner * * * for the damage which is thereby sustained, and is guilty of a misdemeanor." At the same time section 2755 of the Political Code was enacted reading: "Whoever digs up, cuts down, or otherwise injures or destroys any shade or ornamental tree planted and standing on any highway forfeits twenty-five dollars for each such tree, and is guilty of a misdemeanor." In 1883 the latter section was repealed and reenacted in section 2742 omitting the permission to the landowner to plant within the boundaries of the highway and this section was, in turn, carried into section 1495 of the Streets and Highways Code in the codification of 1935, St.1935, p. 339. This section reads: "Any person who maliciously digs up, cuts down, injures or destroys any shade or ornamental tree on any county highway, unless such tree is considered an obstruction by the road commissioner and is removed under his direction, is liable to a penalty of one hundred dollars, recoverable as provided in section 1496, for each such tree." It will be noted that the original section 2755, taken with section 2756, gave the right of action to the public to recover the penalties for injuries to the trees and made the offending party guilty of a misdemeanor. The latter provision was eliminated when the section was re-numbered 2742 in 1883 (Stats.1883 p. 19); but at the same time the word "maliciously" was added, so that malicious or wilful injury was an element in an action to recover the penalties, as in the former section wilful intent would be necessary in a criminal charge of misdemeanor.

Reading these sections all together as they were enacted in 1872, as we are required to do to determine the legislative intent at that time, we find that the landowner was given special permission to plant ornamental and shade trees within the boundaries of the public highways, but that, for any injury to such trees, the public was given the right to sue the wrongdoer for penalties, and to prosecute for a misdemeanor. (The amended statutes were held applicable to fruit, as well as shade and ornamental trees, in County of Santa Barbara v. More, 175 Cal. 6, 12, 164 P. 895, L.R.A.1917E, 385.) Then, in the Civil Code section, the owner of the land was given the right to sue for treble damages for injuries to his trees "upon the land," and in section 733 of the Code of Civil Procedure the "owner of such land" was given the same right as to injuries to "any tree or timber on the land," and the city or town was given the same right when the tree injured is "on the street or highway in front of any person's house, village, or city lot." But it is clear that none of the sections covered a situation such as we have here, where the trees base wholly upon the private lands of the owner and their branches extend over the travelled portion of a county highway. It cannot be disputed that if trees planted in this manner are permitted to extend over and into the public highway they may create both a public and a private nuisance in so far as they obstruct the free public use of the highway. Section 3479 of the Civil Code defines a nuisance as "Anything which * * * unlawfully obstructs the free passage or use, * * * of any * * * public park, square, street, or highway * * *." Section 3495 provides that: "Any person may abate a public nuisance which is specially injurious to him by removing * * * the thing * * * without committing a breach of the peace."

Hence, when the defendants found themselves in the predicament where their forward progress was blocked by the overhanging branches and a retreat would block the traffic upon the main state highway, they were put to their election to determine whether the general laws relating to abatement of nuisances would prevail over the special laws relating to the rights of the landowner in the portion of his trees which extended over and obstructed the free use of the highway. Since this is a question which our courts have not determined, the layman should not be charged with malice if he determined that the general rules relating to nuisances prevailed. This is the purport of the opinion of the trial judge preceding the signing of the findings. In denying treble damages because of the failure to show malice or wilfullness the trial judge said:

"I am of opinion in that the facts of this case do not justify a trebling of damages. The first damage was accidental—a negligent accident, perhaps; but still unintended and without malice or expectation of wrongdoing.

"The damage next following was the result of an awkward attempt to repair part of the first damage. And finally the succeeding damage was caused by poor judgment in endeavoring to escape from the difficult situation which had then developed."

It should be noted that the complaint did not allege malice nor wilfullness, but alleged that the defendants "did deliberately damage the trees, limbs, branches, leaves and fruit of said plaintiff * * *." The proof was in accord with these allegations, and, if we may treat the code sections as penal in purpose and effect, there is a want of pleading and proof of "a malevolent purpose or motive, with a wicked or criminal intent." United States v. Sioux City Stock Yards Co., supra [162 F. 562].

[4, 5] But, assuming that the code sections should be given the liberal construction for which the appellant contends, we are still confronted with the question whether they are mandatory so that the court must award treble damages in every case of deliberate injury to trees. Section 733 of the Code of Civil Procedure appears in Chapter II, which is entitled "Actions for Nuisance, Waste, and Willful Trespass, in Certain Cases, on Real Property". Several sections of the chapter clearly make it discretionary with the trial court whether treble damages should be awarded. Section 732, relating to waste, and section 735, relating to forcible entry, were enacted at the same time as section 733, and no reason has been advanced calling for a different interpretation. The language of section 733 is that the offending party "is liable" for treble damages "which may be assessed." Section 3346 of the Civil Code appears in Article III, which is entitled: "Penal Damages." All the other sections of that Article contain the mandatory language "must pay." The word "may" in ordinary statutory and judicial acceptance is permissive and not mandatory. When we examine all these statutes of 1872 which have hereinabove been noted, particularly those enacted to the same purpose but calling for criminal prosecution for a misdemeanor, we can find no reason of policy or principal which would require us to hold that this particular section was intended to be mandatory.

[6-8] If we are correct in this conclusion the only question remaining is whether the trial court abused its discretion when it denied the imposition of treble damages. When we speak of judicial discretion we refer to the power of the trial court to decide what is just and proper under all the circumstances of the case before it. When we speak of an abuse of judicial discretion we do not mean merely that we would have decided differently under the same state of circumstances, but we give to the trial court the benefit of the presumption that official duty has been regularly performed—that the trial court has acted fairly and with sound judgment in the light of all the circumstances before it. Chief Justice Marshall said, in Osborn v. Bank of United States, 22 U.S. 738, 866, 9 Wheat. 738, 866, 6 L.Ed. 204: "Judicial power, as contradistinguished from the power of the laws, has no existence. Courts are the mere instruments of the law, and can will nothing. When they are said to exercise a discretion, it is a mere legal discretion, a discretion to be exercised in discerning the course prescribed by law; and, when that is discerned, it is the duty of the court to follow it." When a trial court has thus acted, exercising its best judgment upon the occasion that calls for it, the appellate court will demand more than a nisi prius argument on the merits of the controversy before it will say that such discretion has been abused.

[9] Here the undisputed evidence is that the branches of appellant's trees extended six feet or more into the highway proper, that, though they did not interfere with the ordinary traffic of passenger automobiles upon the center pavement, they were an obstruction and hindrance to the passage of large trucks and similar vehicles. These facts were pleaded as a defense and the evidence would have supported a finding favorable to respondents. Though we do not hold that, under these particular circumstances, they had the legal right to remove such obstructions, since none of our decisions have clearly determined the question, we do say that these circumstances add support to the conclusion of the trial court that respondents should not be penalized by the addition of treble damages because they may have incorrectly judged their legal rights and responsibilities under the circumstances.

This disposes of the appeal from that portion of the judgment denying appellant's recovery of attorney's fees.

The portions of the judgment appealed from are affirmed.

SPENCE, J., and DOOLING, J., pro tem., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 214

PEOPLE v. WEISKOPF.

Cr. 3711.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.
Aug. 11, 1943.

1. Criminal law 🔑1023(12)

An order denying motion in arrest of judgment on conviction of crime is not appealable. Pen.Code, § 1237.

2. Criminal law 🔑1134(8)

The sufficiency of information cannot be considered on appeal from order denying defendant's motion for new trial after conviction of crime charged.

3. Indictment and information 🔑110(15)

Information charging in terms of statute the making and uttering of forged affidavits of birth of two males 36 and 41 years of age with intent to defraud named corporations one of which was engaged in defense work was sufficient to charge a public offense, where affidavits were made at a time when and in county where such proof of United States citizenship was in great demand by applicants for employment in defense work.

4. Criminal law 🔑1178

Points, concisely stated without argument on less than one page at end of appellant's brief, as to insufficiency of evidence to support conviction of crime, need not be considered on appeal from order denying motion for new trial.

5. Criminal law 🔑1168(1)

In prosecution for forging and uttering birth affidavits, absence of evidence that purported corporation, referred to in evidence as employer of witness whose affidavit was forged, was in fact a corporation, was immaterial.

6. Forgery 🔑44, 44(3)

In prosecution for forging and uttering birth affidavits, no evidence showing how persons and corporations mentioned in information could be defrauded by such instruments was necessary, as they could be used as means of fraud.

7. Forgery 🔑44, 44(3)

In prosecution for forging and uttering birth affidavits, evidence that defendant uttered one affidavit with knowledge that it was not signed or authorized by named affiant, who was dead at time of signature, was sufficient to support conviction.

8. Forgery ⚷44(2)

In prosecution for forging and uttering birth affidavits, the jury, having before them a proven specimen of defendant's genuine handwriting, were authorized to make their own comparison thereof with that appearing on one of affidavits, though handwriting expert testified that he had no opinion as to whether defendant wrote signature and her own name as notary on affidavit. Code Civ.Proc. § 1944.

9. Criminal law ⚷1144(13)

In prosecution for forging and uttering birth affidavit, where exhibits are not brought up in record on appeal from order denying defendant's motion for new trial after conviction, appellate court must presume that comparison of signature of affiant's name with proven specimen of defendant's genuine handwriting before jury shows identity of handwriting on the two papers and thus support jury's finding of defendant's guilt. Code Civ.Proc. § 1944.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Crum, Judge.

Ethel Weiskopf, alias Ethel Parker, was convicted of forging and uttering two birth affidavits, and from orders denying her motions in arrest of judgment and for new trial she appeals.

Appeal from order denying motion in arrest of judgment dismissed, and order denying new trial affirmed.

Donald MacKay, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., Gilbert F. Nelson, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Fred N. Howser, Dist. Atty., and Jere J. Sullivan, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, Justice pro tem.

[1] The defendant was charged by the amended information herein in four counts with the forging and uttering of four affidavits of birth relating to certain named persons. Copies of these affidavits were set forth in the information. She was found guilty on two of these counts and acquitted on the other two. She then made a motion in arrest of judgment and a motion for new trial, both of which were denied. She was placed on probation without the rendition of any judgment against her. She appeals from the orders denying her motions above mentioned. The order denying her motion in arrest of judgment is not appealable (Pen.Code, sec. 1237), so the appeal therefrom must be dismissed.

[2, 3] On appeal she presents but two points: first, that the counts of the information on which she was convicted state no public offense because the affidavits set forth therein are not such writings as can be the subjects of forgery; and second, that the evidence is insufficient to support her conviction on either count.

The first point, as to the sufficiency of the information, cannot be considered on appeal from an order denying a new trial. (People v. Lovlee, (1939) 35 Cal.App.2d 554, 96 P.2d 177; People v. Duncan, (1942) 50 Cal.App.2d 184, 186, 122 P.2d 587; People v. Darcy, (1943) Cal.App., 139 P.2d 118.) Assuming that the question whether the affidavits are such instruments as will support a charge of forgery may be raised under defendant's second point, insufficiency of the evidence, we have already decided it adversely to her. After defendant's conviction a writ of habeas corpus was issued in her behalf by this court, on the hearing of which the question presented was the sufficiency of these identical counts of the information to state a public offense, it being contended in behalf of the petitioner there that the affidavits set forth in the information were not instruments, the fabrication of which would constitute forgery. We held the information sufficient under the rule which governs in habeas corpus proceedings, and also expressed the opinion, which was perhaps obiter dictum there, that it would also be sufficient under the somewhat more liberal rule as to the scrutiny of defects which prevails on appeal, (In re Parker, (1943) Cal.App., 134 P.2d 302.) The difference in name is due to the fact that defendant was first prosecuted under the name of Parker, but later stated her true name to be Weiskopf. That opinion we now adopt as expressing our views on this appeal. Since the nature of the papers forged and the reasons for our decision that they support the charge are fully set forth in that opinion, we do not repeat them here.

[4,5] On less than one page at the end of her brief, defendant states, very concisely and without argument, eight points of insufficiency of the evidence. These "points" might do for specifications of insufficiency of the evidence in a bill of exceptions but they are of no assistance to an appellate court looking for evidence bearing on these matters. We might very well pass them without consideration. (People v. Purcell, (1937) 22 Cal.App.2d 126, 129, 70 P.2d 706.) Most of them appear to be unimportant. The sufficiency of the evidence to show that defendant did falsely make and utter the instrument set forth in Count I of the information with intent to defraud is not attacked. It is complained that there is no evidence that California Shipbuilding Corporation, which was to be defrauded, according to the information, is in fact a corporation. However, it was referred to in the evidence as employer of the witness whose affidavit of birth was forged, and a variance as to its status as corporation or other form of organization would be immaterial.

[6] As to each affidavit it is objected that there was no evidence showing how the persons and corporations mentioned in the information could be defrauded by the instruments forged. These instruments could be used as a means of fraud and no further showing in that respect was necessary. (In re Parker, supra, Cal.App., 134 P.2d 302.)

[7-9] Count III alleges the forgery of the name of "Jose Riso" as affiant to an affidavit of birth, and defendant now says that there is no evidence that there was such a person or that defendant did not have authority to sign his name to the affidavit, or that she did sign it. The information indicates that the spelling "Riso" in this name is a typographical error for "Rios," for it shows this name is supposed to be that of the father of Edward B. Rios. The evidence confirms this, showing clearly that Edward B. Rios went to defendant to obtain an affidavit of his birth and told her that his father's name was "Jose Rios." Later he received this affidavit by mail. Obviously the intention of whoever prepared the affidavit which was alleged in Count III and produced in evidence was to use the name "Jose Rios." Edward B. Rios testified that the signature to it was not that of his father and that the latter had been dead six years. There is no direct evidence that defendant herself wrote the name, but if she did write it she could not have been authorized to do so by Jose Rios, who was dead, and if she did not write it she must have known that it was not signed or authorized by him. If she uttered the paper with this knowledge, the offense charged, which includes uttering, is sufficiently shown. While plaintiff's handwriting expert testified that he had no opinion whether defendant wrote this signature and her own name as notary appearing on the affidavit, the jury had before them a proven specimen of defendant's genuine handwriting, and were authorized to make their own comparison of this handwriting with that appearing on the affidavit. (Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1944; In re Estate of Johnson, (1927) 200 Cal. 299, 304, 252 P. 1049; People v. Storke, (1900) 128 Cal. 486, 60 P. 1090; Castor v. Bernstein, (1906) 2 Cal.App. 703, 84 P. 244.) The exhibits have not been brought up in the record, so we cannot say from inspection what the result of such a comparison might be; we must, therefore, presume that it shows identity of handwriting on the two papers and thus supports the jury's finding.

The appeal from the order denying the motion in arrest of judgment is dismissed. The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

SHINN, Acting P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

60 Cal.App.2d 207

TELANDER v. TELANDER et al.

Civ. 14108.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 11, 1943.

Hearing Denied Oct. 7, 1943.

1. Attorney and client ⚷75(1)

Under statute, in absence of any relation of attorney to subject matter of the action, aside from that arising out of his employment, the client possesses right to change attorneys at any stage of the action. Code Civ.Proc. § 284.

2. Attorney and client ⚷76(1)

The plenary power of a client to discharge his attorney does not exist where attorney has an interest in the subject matter of the litigation, aside from that arising out of his employment. Code Civ.Proc. § 284.

3. Appeal and error ⚷151(3)

Wife's attorney had no interest in subject-matter of separate maintenance action, or in a contingent fee for services performed therein, aside from that arising out of his employment, and hence attorney was not an "aggrieved party" entitled to appeal from orders denying attorney's motion for an order determining his compensation, and granting wife's motion for a substitution of attorneys. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 284, 938; Civ.Code, § 137.5.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Aggrieved Party".

* * *

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William S. Baird, Judge.

Action by Mary M. Telander against Tell Munson Telander for separate maintenance. From an order denying his motion for an order determining compensation to be paid him for professional services which he as an attorney allegedly rendered to plaintiff in the action, and from a further order granting plaintiff's motion for a substitution of attorneys, William Ellis Lady appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles M. Johnson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

This is a motion by respondent Tell Munson Telander to dismiss an appeal taken by appellant William Ellis Lady from an order of the superior court of Los Angeles County made December 21, 1942, denying his motion for an order fixing and determining compensation to be paid him for professional services which he as an attorney allegedly rendered to plaintiff in this action, and from the further order of the court granting the motion of plaintiff Mary M. Telander for a substitution of attorneys.

As grounds for his motion respondent urges: (1) That the orders appealed from herein are not appealable orders as contemplated by subdivisions 1 or 2 of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. (2) That the appellant is not an aggrieved party as contemplated by section 938 of the Code of Civil Procedure. (3) That the appellant has no interest in the subject matter of this action or in a contingent fee as contemplated by section 284 of the Code of Civil Procedure or otherwise. (4) That no "final judgment" has been rendered in this action requiring any affirmative act on the part of appellant or otherwise entitling him to bring this appeal. (5) That appellant and respondents stipulated in open court below that the balance of attorneys' fees, if any (over and above an allowance made by order of court on August 6, 1942), should be fixed and determined at the time of the trial of the above entitled action. (6) That no trial of said action has been had.

Briefly, the factual background here present may be thus epitomized: Prior to July 27, 1942, plaintiff Mary M. Telander employed appellant William Ellis Lady, who is an attorney at law, to institute an action against her husband, defendant herein, for separate maintenance. We think it may fairly be stated that the record shows that attorney Lady's agreement with his client was that he was to obtain his compensation from the defendant husband through appropriate orders to be made by the court in the separate maintenance action. In any event, after the action was commenced, and upon hearing following issuance of an order to show cause re alimony pendente lite and attorney's fees, the court made its order directing defendant husband to pay plaintiff's counsel, appellant herein, the sum of $250 attorney's fees and $50 costs. The order further provided "by stipulation the balance, if any, to be fixed at the time of trial". Pursuant to the terms of such order, the amounts named therein were paid by defendant husband to appellant. Subsequently the latter's client effected a reconciliation with her husband and they entered into an agreement settling and determining their respective property rights. Following such reconciliation plaintiff wife requested appellant, as her attorney, to dismiss the separate maintenance action. This appellant refused to do, contending that he was entitled to additional fees for further services allegedly rendered by him in the separate maintenance action as well as in the preparation of the property settlement agreement. Plaintiff wife then engaged the services of another attorney and served upon appellant a notice of motion to substitute such other attorney in place of appellant, pursuant to the provisions of subdivision 2, section 284 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Appellant thereupon served upon both plaintiff wife and and defendant husband a notice that he would move the court for an order directing defendant husband to pay him further compensation in addition to the $250 received pursuant to the former court order. Both of the last mentioned motions came on for hearing, following which the court made its order denying appellant Lady's motion for additional fees and granting the motion to substitute appellant out of the case as attorney for plaintiff therein.

Because of our belief that it is determinative of this appeal, we shall first give consideration to respondent's claim that appellant has no interest in the subject matter of the separate maintenance action, or in a contingent fee as contemplated by section 284 of the Code of Civil Procedure; is therefore, not an aggrieved party within the purview of section 938 of the Code of Civil Procedure and consequently is not entitled to appeal from the orders made in the action.

[1] Regardless of what the rule may be in other jurisdictions, it is the settled rule in this state that under the provisions of section 284 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in the absence of any relation of the attorney to the subject matter of the action, aside from that arising out of his employment the client possesses the right to change attorneys at any stage in the action. The client's interest in the successful and satisfactory prosecution or defense of his cause is paramount to that of the attorney. The former is within his rights in seeking to dissolve the relationship of attorney and client whenever his confidence in either the integrity or the judgment of the attorney ceases. Gage v. Atwater, 136 Cal. 170, 172, 68 P. 581. In the case of Woodbury v. Nevada Ry. Co., 121 Cal. 165, 53 P. 450, 451, it was said: "The right of a party to change his attorney of record is conferred by section 284, Code Civ.Proc., and it is only necessary for him to prefer his request for such change in order to justify the court in making an order therefor". See, also, Echlin v. Superior Court, 13 Cal.2d 368, 372, 90 P.2d 63, 124 A.L.R. 719, in which it was held that the right of a client to change attorneys with or without cause has been characterized as "universal".

[2, 3] Appellant, however, relies upon the well recognized exception to the foregoing rule which provides that the plenary power of a client to discharge his attorney does not exist where the attorney has an interest in the subject matter of the litigation (O'Connell v. Superior Court, 2 Cal. 2d 418, 421, 41 P.2d 334, 97 A.L.R. 918), but the exception does not apply when the relation of the attorney to the subject matter arises from his employment. We think it must be held in the instant case that whatever relation appellant had to the subject matter of the litigation arose solely and alone from and out of his employment. Appellant contends that by the adoption in 1937 of section 137.5 of the Civil Code the attorney was invested with an interest in the subject matter of the litigation when it was provided in said section that in actions of the character here involved the court was empowered to make the attorney's fees allowed payable direct to the attorney. However, we are impressed that whatever "interest" in the subject matter of the litigation was conferred upon the attorney by section 137.5 of the Civil Code, such interest was one that "arises from his employment" and consequently does not impair the rule long recognized in this state that a client may at any time change his attorney in an action. O'Connell v. Superior Court, supra.

The case of McManus v. Montgomery, 12 Cal.2d 397, 84 P.2d 787, relied upon by appellant, does not aid him because in that case the attorneys were not wrongfully discharged but withdrew from the case after preparing findings but before the filing of such findings and judgment, and with full knowledge that their client was without funds with which to pay their fees; and the court upon application of the attorneys provided for their fees up to the time of entry of judgment. The case of Neblett v. Getty, 20 Cal.App.2d 65, 66 P.2d 473, because of the similarity of facts with the case at bar, is controlling herein.

By reason of the foregoing it follows that the appeal herein should be dismissed. It is so ordered.

YORK, P.J., and DORAN, J., concur.

Hearing denied; CARTER and SCHAUER, JJ., dissenting.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 169

COLLIER et al. v. LOS ANGELES RY. CO. et al.

Civ. 14010.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 9, 1943.

1. Trial 🔑139(1)

Before evidence can be disregarded as inherently improbable, there must exist a physical impossibility of evidence being true or its falsity must be apparent without any resort to inference or deduction.

2. Trial 🔑139(1)

In action for death of motorist, injured in collision with street car, physical facts did not render inherently improbable testimony of motorman and corroborating witnesses regarding manner in which accident occurred.

3. Street railroads 🔑114(21)

In action for death of motorist fatally injured in collision with street car, evidence that motorist did not stop at stop sign, but entered intersection at excessive speed and struck street car with such force as to cause derailment, warranted jury's finding that proximate cause of accident was motorist's negligence.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1001(1)

Appellate court cannot disturb finding of jury supported by substantial evidence

5. Street railroads 🔑101

In action for death of motorist fatally injured in collision with street car, finding, sustained by substantial evidence, that motorist was contributorily negligent, supported verdict for carrier and operator of street car even if motorman violated city ordinance regulating speed of street cars.

6. Trial 🔑296(7)

In action for death of motorist fatally injured in collision with street car, even if giving of instruction on presumption of due care insofar as it applied to motorman was error, the error was not prejudicial where jury was told in plain and unequivocal language that presumption would only support finding in absence of evidence to contrary. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subds. 1, 4.

7. Street railroads 🔑98(8)

A railway track is a sign of danger, and it is duty of one about to cross it to use his faculties of sight and hearing to apprise himself as to whether cars are approaching.

8. Street railroads 🔑118(13)

In action for death of motorist fatally injured in collision with street car, it was proper for court to instruct jury regarding obligation resting on motorist to look and listen as he approached street car tracks.

9. Appeal and error 🔑999(3)

Where verdict could have been based on lack of negligence on part of defendant as well as on contributory negligence of deceased, appellate court would not look behind verdict in an attempt to ascertain theory adopted by jury.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ingall W. Bull, Judge.

Action by Nancy M. Collier and Sally E. Collier, by their guardian ad litem, Elizabeth Collier, and Elizabeth Collier, individually and as executrix of Leon Collier, deceased, against Los Angeles Railway Company and others for death of Leon Collier. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

A. J. O'Connor, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, of Los Angeles (E. H. Chapman, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

WHITE, Justice.

This action was instituted by the surviving spouse and two minor children of Leon Collier to recover damages for the claimed wrongful death of the latter which it was alleged resulted from negligence upon the part of defendants. By their answer defendants denied any negligence and by way of a further and separate defense charged that decedent himself was guilty of contributory negligence. Trial was had before a jury resulting in a verdict for the defendants. From the judgment entered thereon plaintiffs prosecute this appeal.

The accident out of which this litigation arose occurred about midnight on December 13, 1940, and involved a collision between a street car of defendant railway company and an automobile driven by the decedent husband and father of plaintiffs. The accident happened at the intersection of First and Anderson Streets in the city of Los Angeles.

While conceding that the evidence was in sharp conflict as to the issue of decedent's contributory negligence, appellants contend that the physical facts shown in evidence are consistent only with the conclusion that the sole, proximate cause of the fatal accident was the speed at which the street car was operated by defendant motorman. In epitomizing the factual background of this litigation, we shall therefore state not only the facts which tend to support the verdict rendered but shall also set forth the facts relied upon by appellants. Narrated in that form, we feel it may fairly be stated that the record discloses that First Street, in the area here involved and particularly at the intersection of Anderson Street, is protected by boulevard stop signs which require vehicles entering First Street from either the north or south on Anderson Street to come to a stop before making such entry. The street car here involved was of the modern type commonly known as the "streamliner P.C.C.", equipped with four 55-horsepower motors and weighing 36,000 pounds and equipped with three sets of brakes, viz., air, mechanical and electric. The street car was 46 feet in length. According to the testimony of the motorman, as he approached Anderson Street he had attained a speed of approximately 20 miles an hour, the bell was ringing and the headlight and the night lights were burning. At a point some 30 to 40 feet west of Anderson Street, the motorman first observed the lights of the deceased's automobile, which was then more than a half a block away, approaching from the south. When the street car reached the curb line of Anderson Street, the motorman observed the automobile was about 100 feet south of First Street, and according to his estimate, was traveling at approximately 65 miles an hour.

He immediately applied his brakes in full emergency; i.e., the air, mechanical and electric brakes, but the automobile without diminishing its speed and without making the boulevard stop, continued north and violently collided with the right front portion of the street car, causing the latter to be immediately derailed. According to the motorman's testimony, from the time he was first able to estimate the position and speed of the automobile, he had but 20 feet within which to stop. The testimony of the motorman was corroborated by two witnesses who were passengers on the street car. One of them testified that he first saw the automobile as the street car was entering the intersection, at which time the former was 20 to 30 feet south of the boulevard stop line and that the automobile did not make the boulevard stop. He corroborated the motorman's testimony that the bell on the street car was sounded as it approached the intersection; that the right front doors of the street car were damaged in the collision so that they could not be opened after the impact, and also as to the application of the brakes on the street car prior to the collision. The other witness testified that the automobile was past the boulevard stop sign when he first observed it, at which time it was traveling at a rate of speed which he estimated to be between 25 and 30 miles per hour. This witness also testified that the bell was rung as the street car approached the intersection and that the brakes were applied before the impact. There was also testimony given by the chemist for the coroner's office of Los Angeles County and by Dr. Louis J. Gogal, autopsy surgeon in the Los Angeles County Coroner's office, that on the day following the death of decedent an examination of his blood showed that the same contained .09 or 1/100ths of 1% ethanol, or grain alcohol, and that at the time of the accident such content amounted to "perhaps about .10, or slightly over that", and that the percentage of this ethanol, or grain alcohol, "indicated that the man was under the influence of alcohol; that is, there was present so much alcohol in his blood, while he would not have reached the point we consider as acute intoxication. If you take a large amount in the average man, which has been stated to be .15 percent, he would be under the influence of alcohol". It should be noted that on cross-examination the doctor testified "I don't think that the average person is actually intoxicated at .09" and when asked:

"Q. And Doctor, as a scientific medical man, before you passed an opinion on whether or not an individual was under the influence, with a finding of .09, you would want to know something else about the person, wouldn't you? A. Well, not necessarily; if we go by practice and tests that have been made and cases reported, .09 or .10 is sufficient alcohol in the blood to indicate that there are certain re-action changes in the average person that would take place. It is true that there are differences in people's re-action to alcohol; that would depend somewhat upon the aspect of tolerance, but in certain situations and with certain tests, the average person, with a presence of .09 or .10, would be definitely impaired in his reactions in a certain sense and would be considered as under the influence of alcohol to a certain degree".

The only testimony contrary to the foregoing was that given by a witness produced by the plaintiffs who testified that deceased did observe and make the boulevard stop; that "The street car hit the left side of the automobile about amidship". Appellants in their brief contend that this witness testified that the street car was going about 55 miles per hour at the time of the collision while the automobile was traveling about 8 or 10 miles per hour. However, an examination of the record indicates that for good and sufficient reasons the testimony given as to the speed of the street car was stricken out by the trial court.

[1-5] Appellants contend that certain physical facts such as photographic evidence that the street car ran into the left side of the automobile, coupled with the fact that it was shown that the street car traveled 135 feet from the point of impact, brushed a telephone pole, hurdled the north curb and side walk on the north side of First Street and came to rest leaning against a telephone pole; that the front of the street car was facing in a northeasterly direction while the automobile was facing southwesterly, parallel with the street car, all indicate that the street car ran into the left side of the automobile. In connection with appellants' implied claim that certain physical facts tend to render inherently improbable the testimony of the motorman and witnesses corroborating him as to the contributory negligence of the decedent and the manner in which the accident occurred, we are not greatly impressed with these arguments for as was said in Nagamatsu v. Roher, 10 Cal.App.2d 752, 755, 756, 53 P.2d 174, 175: "As has been frequently pointed out in cases of this nature, such arguments are unreliable because they fail to take into account the human element. * * * 'perhaps there is nothing more certain about an automobile accident than the fact that the visible results afterward are not an infallible guide in determining what occurred'." In any event before evidence can be disregarded as inherently improbable there must exist a physical impossibility of the evidence being true, or its falsity must be apparent without any resort to inferences or deductions. Arundel v. Turk, 16 Cal.App.2d 293, 295, 296, 297, 60 P.2d 486. No such showing appears in the case at bar. Since the record discloses substantial testimony to warrant the jury in finding that the proximate cause of the accident was the undoubted negligence of the decedent, we are not authorized to disturb such finding, and manifestly such a finding, sustained as it is by the evidence as to the contributory negligence of the decedent, supports the verdict in favor of the defendants even though it be conceded that the motorman was guilty of a violation of a city ordinance regulating the speed of street cars.

Appellants, however, contend that in the giving of certain instructions and the refusal to give other proffered by them, the court fell into error which militated prejudicially against their substantial rights. In this connection it is asserted that appellants were entitled to have the jury instructed that at the time here in question decedent obeyed the law and exercised due care for his own safety. Subdivisions 1 and 4, section 1963, Code of Civil Procedure. While it is true that the court declined to give the instruction offered by appellants upon this subject, nevertheless of its own motion the court instructed the jury as follows: "At the outset of this trial, each party was entitled to the presumptions of law that every person takes ordinary care of his own concerns and that he obeys the law. These presumptions are a form of prima facie evidence and will support findings in accordance therewith, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. When there is evidence that conflicts with such a presumption, it is the jury's duty to weigh that evidence against the presumption and any evidence that may support the presumption, to determine which, if either, preponderates. Such deliberations, of course, shall be related to, and in accordance with, my instructions on the burden of proof".

[6] Appellants, however, contend that the instruction given by the court was erroneous because by it the presumption of due care was made applicable not only to the decedent but as well to the motorman operating the street car. This claim is grounded on appellants' contention that "negligence and proximate causation were clearly established against defendants * * * the motorman had admitted his negligence before the jury * * *"; that proof of such negligence being wholly irreconcilable with the presumption in question, the latter was dispelled and disappeared from the case. Mar Shee v. Maryland Assur. Corp. 190 Cal. 1, 9, 210 P. 269. Conceding that the giving of the instruction, insofar as it applied to defendant motorman, was error, we are not impressed that it was a prejudicial error. The jury was told in plain and unequivocal language that while the presumption was a form of prima facie evidence, it would only support findings in accordance therewith "in the absence of evidence to the contrary"; that it was the duty of the jury to weigh any such contrary evidence against the presumption as well as any evidence that might support it, and "to determine which, if either, preponderates". The jury heard the evidence produced by each party for or against the guilt or innocence of each party mentioned in the instruction, according to the respective contentions of each, and we must assume from the language of the instruction that each juror understood the limitations placed upon the application of the presumption and that its force was dissipated by satisfactory "evidence to the contrary". If we adopt appellants' claim with reference to what the evidence showed as to negligence on the part of the motorman, it can only be said that the effect of giving the instruction was merely to instruct on a subject that was not present in the trial of this action. It could not have been prejudicial. Medeiros v. Soares, 17 Cal. App.2d 176, 178, 61 P.2d 501; Sitkei v. Ralphs Grocery Co., 25 Cal.App.2d 294, 295, 297, 77 P.2d 530. Two additional instructions dealing with the aforesaid presumption, and the limitations applicable thereto, one requested by appellants and the other by respondents, were also given by the court.

Finally, appellants charge error upon the part of the trial court in giving the following instruction to the jury: "General human experience supports the inference that when one looks in the direction of an object clearly visible, he sees it, and that when he listens, he hears that which is clearly audible. When there is evidence to the effect that one did look, but did not see that which was in plain sight, or that he listened, but did not hear that which he could have heard in the exercise of ordinary care, it follows that either there is an irreconcilable conflict in such evidence, or the person was negligently inattentive."

[7, 8] In their attack upon this instruction appellants urge that there was no evidence, direct or indirect, that the decedent looked and failed to see the street car or listened and did not hear it. It will, of course, never be known whether the deceased actually did look or listen, but it must be conceded that it was his duty to do so, for to say nothing of the boulevard stop which decedent was required by law to make, and of the fact that he failed to make it, there is creditable evidence, a railway track is in and of itself a sign of danger, and it is the duty of one about to cross it to utilize his faculties of sight and hearing in order to apprise himself as to whether cars are approaching. Badostain v. Pacific E. R. Co., 83 Cal.App. 290, 295, 256 P. 576. It was therefore proper for the court to instruct the jury as to the obligation resting upon decedent to look and listen as he approached the tracks because if he did look he undoubtedly saw the street car for, undeniably, it was approaching the intersection, and if he did look, saw the car and attempted to cross immediately in front of it in violation of the dictates of ordinary prudence and care, he was negligent. And if he looked and listened but failed to see or hear the oncoming street car, he was equally guilty of negligence. There was substantial evidence in the instant case to justify a conclusion on the part of the jury that the deceased either did not look and did not listen (or he must have seen or heard the approaching street car), or that, if he did look and did listen, he looked with unseeing eyes and listened with unhearing ears. Manifestly, under no reasonable construction of the evidence could appellants have been prejudiced by the challenged instruction.

[9] Furthermore, from a reading of the transcript of the evidence herein, we are impressed with the fact that the verdict of the jury could as well have been based upon an entire lack of negligence upon the part of the defendants as upon the contributory negligence of the deceased. When such a situation is presented, an appellate tribunal will not look behind the verdict in an attempt to ascertain the theory adopted by the jury. Schultheiss v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 11 Cal.App.2d 525, 528, 54 P.2d 49.

From the foregoing it follows that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

59 Cal.App.2d 730

KAUFFMAN v. MEYBERG et al.

SAME v. LEON, Inc., et al.

Civ. 14023, 14024.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.
July 22, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 10, 1943.
Hearing Denied Sept. 15, 1943.

1. Appeal and error 🔑801(4)

Where determination of motion to dismiss appeal required such familiarity with merits of entire cause that court could readily determine merits of appeal, motion to dismiss was denied.

2. Corporations 🔑171

Evidence sustained finding that brother owned half of entire issue of capital stock of corporation.

3. Corporations 🔑171

Where challenge to plaintiff's right to vote half of shares of family corporation was based on alleged invalidity of certificate issued to plaintiff for 50 shares, issuance of certificate and its freedom from attack for over nine years created presumption of validity. Civ. Code, § 374.

4. Corporations 🔑171

Where validity of plaintiff's certificate of stock depended on cancellation of prior certificate, defendant's access to stock book, his change of position from a statement that former certificate had been canceled to a denial of its cancellation, and his loss of memory with reference thereto after expert testified that cancellation was in hand of defendant but had been erased, warranted inference that defendant caused cancellation to be erased.

5. Corporations 🔑197

Where defendants admitted that plaintiff owned half of shares in family corporation, contention that plaintiff was not entitled to vote all his shares because valid certificates had not been issued for that amount could not be sustained.

6. Corporations 🔑94

Actual owner of shares may exercise his rights without a certificate therefor.

7. Corporations 🔑180

Technical rules commonly applied to corporations will not be applied to a close family corporation of two shareholders of equal ownership where such application would serve to defeat equality of ownership, impede justice and perpetuate fraud.

8. Corporations 🔑201

Where father who organized family corporation bequeathed shares in corporation to son and daughter in equal shares and daughter's husband who was company attorney knew of such intent, in action by son to enforce his right to vote half of shares equity would not entertain defense that son did not have all his shares of record.

9. Equity 🔑56

In dealing with family corporations, equity looks through form to substance and on beholding substance will require corporation to reform its transactions to meet ends of justice.

10. Corporations ⚷180

Mere irregularities in transactions of a family corporation do not affect their validity.

11. Corporations ⚷180

Where brother and sister each own shares of family corporation, their mutual rights will be upheld so far as they are ascertainable and neither can be deprived of his or her right by the wanton trespass of the other.

12. Corporations ⚷195

Where a quorum was not present at shareholders' meeting only legal action of meeting was to adjourn; hence inspector of elections appointed at such meeting usurped such office.

13. Corporations ⚷196

When a ballot is questioned at a shareholders' meeting, shareholder presenting ballot is entitled to be heard and inspector of elections has no right to make a challenge in secret and weigh his own challenge.

14. Corporations ⚷283(2)

Where shareholder is not challenged at threshold of shareholders' meeting called to elect directors, only remaining duty of those conducting election is to count ballots and return number of votes received by nominees.

15. Corporations ⚷171

Where defendants did not claim shares given plaintiff by plaintiff's father or question such gift and evidence disclosed that 50 shares in dispute constituted a valid gift to plaintiff from his father, court properly found that plaintiff owned such shares.

16. Courts ⚷200½

Where agreement between plaintiff and defendants to treat certificate to plaintiff's mother and certificate to plaintiff as representing same 50 shares of stock was result of misrepresentation by one defendant that first certificate was valid and uncanceled so that first certificate was treated as an asset of estate of plaintiff's mother, such fact did not give probate court power to declare ownership of such shares.

17. Courts ⚷200½

The probate court has no power to declare a decedent to be owner of property contrary to fact but may only determine succession to such title as decedent had at time of his decease.

18. Executors and administrators ⚷315(6)

Where agreement between plaintiff and defendants to treat certificate to plaintiff's mother and certificate to plaintiff as representing same 50 shares of stock was result of misrepresentation of one defendant that first certificate was valid and uncanceled, order of probate court distributing stock represented by first certificate between plaintiff and his sister did not affect plaintiff's ownership of shares represented by second certificate so as to preclude plaintiff from voting such shares at shareholders' meeting.

19. Corporations ⚷190

Action by one stockholder domiciled in California against only other stockholder, similarly domiciled, did not aim at obtaining a personal judgment against corporation but involved personal rights in property of individuals domiciled in California and was properly brought in California notwithstanding that corporation was a Delaware corporation. Civ. Code, § 315.

20. Corporations ⚷283(3)

When a complaint in action to contest election of directors presents a cause of threatened irreparable injury, equity will exercise jurisdiction.

21. Corporations ⚷669

In action to contest election of directors of foreign corporation, where corporation, after its motion to quash service had failed, made a general appearance, complaint could not thereafter be made that there was no jurisdiction over corporation.

22. Corporations ⚷665(1)

Where foreign corporation entered state for purpose of maintaining office and transacting part of its business in state, it impliedly agreed to submit itself to jurisdiction of state courts.

23. Trial ⚷2

Consolidation for trial of suit to enjoin interference with plaintiff's right to vote his shares at shareholders' meeting with suit to annul election of directors held in contravention of a preliminary injunction issued in first case rested in sound discretion of trial court. Code Civ.Proc. § 1048.

24. Equity ⚷65(2)

In suit to enjoin interference with plaintiff's right to vote his stock and to annul election of directors, evidence failed to sustain defense that plaintiff was without clean hands.

25. Equity ⚷65(2)

To deny a litigant a hearing because of inequitable conduct, the acts complained of must have affected cause of action and must relate to transaction concerning which complaint is made.

26. Equity ⚷65(2, 3)

The maxim "he who comes into equity must come with clean hands" does not apply to general morals of plaintiff or to his conduct in other relations.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Clean Hands".

27. Evidence ⚷511

In action involving validity of certificates of stock where defendant denied he had canceled particular certificate or could not remember doing so, testimony of expert witness was properly admitted to show that defendant had canceled certificate with his own hand which cancellation was subsequently erased.

28. Evidence ⚷215(5)

Where sister and her husband, who, with brother, were sole owners of stock in corporation, questioned brother's right to vote 50 shares represented by particular certificate, federal tax return verified by sister and her husband containing statement that sister's father had given brother and sister each 250 shares and that 50 of brother's shares were evidenced by such certificate was properly admitted in action to enforce brother's voting rights.

29. Witnesses ⚷379(1)

Past declaration of witness is admissible to impeach subsequent declaration or testimony.

30. Appeal and error ⚷1170(1)

Where it was clear from record, in view of conduct of defendants, that they suffered no prejudice by reason of judgments for plaintiff notwithstanding any errors, judgments were affirmed. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank M. Smith, Judge.

Action by Lazare M. Kauffman against Lorraine K. Meyberg and another to enjoin defendants from interfering with plaintiff's right to vote one-half of capital stock of Leon, Inc., and action by same plaintiff against Leon, Inc., and others to nullify election of directors effected at a meeting of stockholders at which plaintiff's right to vote half of the capital stock of defendant corporation was obstructed. Judgments for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

O'Melveny & Myers, Pierce Works, and W. B. Carman, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for plaintiff and respondent.

Mitchel S. Meyberg, Paul M. Joseph, and Leonard J. Meyberg, all of Los Angeles, for defendants and appellants.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Two appeals are consolidated for the purpose of decision. The first action is to enjoin the defendants from interfering with plaintiff's right to vote 2500 shares, or one-half of the capital stock of defendant corporation at an election of directors. The second action was to nullify the election of directors effected at the meeting of the stockholders to which plaintiff's right to vote 2500 shares was obstructed by defendants in spite of the restraining order issued at the inception of the first action. The two causes were tried together. Only one record was made. The court made findings and decision in each case and adjudged in the first suit that plaintiff was entitled to be protected in his right to vote one half of the corporate shares at any meeting of stockholders and permanently enjoined defendants from obstructing plaintiff in the exercise of such rights. In the second action it was determined that the election of directors was in violation of plaintiff's right to vote one half of the corporate shares and the election was nullified.

[1] Plaintiff is hereinafter referred to as Lazare. He is the brother of defendant Lorraine K. Meyberg, hereinafter referred to as Lorraine. Defendant Leonard J. Meyberg is her husband and will be herein referred to as Meyberg. The parents of Lazare and Lorraine were Leon E. Kauffman and Clemence Kauffman, who, for brevity's sake, are hereinafter referred to respectively as Leon and Clemence. Clemence departed life November 18, 1932; Leon deceased December 4, 1935. They left a successful corporation, to wit, Leon, Inc., to their children in equal ownership. Lazare became its president, Lorraine, its secretary. An annual meeting was convened by defendants, Meyberg and Lorraine, for the avowed purpose of electing directors. Prior to the meeting Lazare learned of the plan of defendants to defeat his right to vote his stock at the annual meeting on January 27, 1941. He anticipated the overt act by procuring an injunction to prevent the threatened obstruction. But the election was held, and, ignoring the court's order, the defendants scorned plaintiff's rights as a holder of one half of the authorized and paid for stock and declared themselves and plaintiff elected directors for the year 1941. Subsequently, defendants were punished for violating the restraining order (affirmed, Meyberg v. Superior Court, 19 Cal.2d 336, 121 P.2d 685), but they never took any steps to correct the injustice and, instead they maintained upon the trial their contention that no one can vote a share at a corporate election unless the share stands of record in his name, and they now persevere in upholding their reprehensible behavior as just and legal. A motion to dismiss their appeal was presented contemporaneously with the submission hereof. It will be denied for the reason that a determination of such motion required familiarity with the merits of the entire cause whereby we may readily determine the merits of the appeal.

In March, 1942, defendants having failed to restore the status quo ante the meeting of January 27, 1941, plaintiff filed his second action under section 315, Civil Code to annul the declared results. Upon the trial of both cases together the court decided for plaintiff and held that the corporation is subject to the jurisdiction of the superior court.

Appellants have set forth in voluminous briefs some fourteen points which they urge on appeal. They may be reduced to the following: (1) The evidence does not support the findings; (2) The court was without jurisdiction to interfere with the internal affairs of a foreign corporation; (3) Errors of law in admitting testimony; (4) Error in trying two causes together; (5) Miscellaneous alleged errors.

[2,3] (1) In their attempt to demonstrate that the evidence does not support the findings that plaintiff owned and was entitled to vote 2500 shares and that he has equality of voting rights with defendants, the latter contend that at the time of the election of directors, there were only 1950 shares standing in the name of plaintiff, and that he in fact owned only 2475 shares while defendants had of record 2525 shares. They maintain that because they had in the aggregate a majority of the shares of record they were entitled to determine the election. But the evidence is overwhelming that plaintiff owns 2500 of the 5000 authorized shares and that Leon intended to leave his estate and particularly the shares in his last corporate venture in equal ownership to both of his children. Upon this finding the evidence is convincing. Inasmuch as the finding of plaintiff's equal ownership was derived from a determination that certificate 8 was a valid issue of 50 shares to him, this discussion will be confined so far as possible to a presentation of the origin and treatment of that certificate. Its issuance alone and its freedom from attack for over nine years cloak it with the presumption of validity. Sec. 374, Civil Code. Its rightful place on the corporate records as evidencing 50 shares was never questioned by Meyberg although he had served Leon as attorney for years and was the master hand in guiding the corporation from the date of its birth to the date of the ill-starred election. Never once from the day she became owner of 250 shares in January, 1933, did Lorraine express a doubt as to its validity or as to Lazare's ownership of one half of the corporate shares. Meyberg testified that he had never raised a question about Lazare's right to certificate 8. In the minutes of the two meetings held in June and November, 1933, Meyberg entered after the name of Lazare "250 shares." This number was possible only by counting the 50 shares in 8. On several occasions he wrote Mr. Hawke, a corporation employee in Boston, that the two children share "equally in Leon Inc."; that neither owns more than the other. When two dividends were declared on the stock, $75,000 in December, 1939, and $50,000 in December, 1940, equal division was made between the two shareholders at a time when Lazare had only 250 shares in his name and Lorraine had none. (She had transferred her 250 shares to Meyberg.) Notwithstanding Meyberg was thus encompassed by a cloud of witnesses that he and his wife had long acquiesced in Lazare's equality with them in the ownership of the corporation and of certificate 8 in particular, defendants never ceased from their scheming to remove Lazare from the presidency. Inasmuch as their perfidy gleams most brightly in the light of their dealing with the stock of Leon, Inc., these events can best be understood only by tracing the origin and course of those certificates used by defendants as the instruments of their chicanery.

While operating the L. Kauffman Company doing a wool and leather business at Vernon, suburb of Los Angeles, Leon incorporated Leon, Inc., as an addition to his marketing facilities on the Atlantic seaboard. He organized it in 1932 under the laws of Delaware and established its principal place of business at Boston, Massachusetts. It was strictly a one-man corporation, a veritable instrumentality of its founder. He subscribed and paid for the entire authorized 5000 shares, and caused them to be issued in the names of his nominees. The first certificates issued were to Boswell, 2500 shares; Brandt, 1000 shares; Andrews, 50 shares, in certificates 2 and 3. August 15, 1932, he caused 25 shares to be transferred to Lazare and 25 to Lorraine. At the same time he had the 50 shares in certificates 2 and 3 transferred to Clemence and evidenced by certificate 6. He did not make delivery of certificate 6. It remained in the book until after the decease of Clemence on November 18, 1932. Having concluded to make further gifts to his children and being sole devisee of Clemence, Leon caused 6 to be cancelled and certificate 8 thereupon to be issued to Lazare for 50 shares, December 12, 1932. The following month he carried out his plan to make the gifts by having 225 shares issued to Lorraine and an additional 175 shares to Lazare. Thus the records stood until the grim reaper had removed both parents from the earthly plane.

[4] In the spring of 1937 the estates of both Clemence and Leon were approaching a readiness for distribution. The actual status of the stock then was as follows: Lazare and Lorraine each owned 250 shares, 50 of Lazare's being evidenced by certificate 8. The estates of Leon and Clemence each owned one half of the remaining 4500 shares, although 1000 of them remained "unissued." Factually and legally the 4500 shares should have, in due course, been distributed to Lazare and Lorraine, share and share alike. But the divinity that shapes our ends was not to prevail without a dramatic contest with Meyberg. While Lazare was administrator with will annexed of the estate of Clemence and coexecutor with his sister of the estate of Leon, Meyberg counseled both. In February he advised Lazare that certificate 6 had never been delivered; that it had been cancelled. In this he spoke the truth, for at Leon's direction, Meyberg had with his own hand cancelled that certificate in December 1932. However, scarcely two months had passed when he "about faced" and stated to Lazare that after further investigation he was convinced that certificate 6 had been paid for; that it had been issued and never formally cancelled and should therefore be listed as an asset in the estate of Clemence. These facts are not disputed. To fortify such advice, Meyberg caused the words "cancelled, never delivered" to be erased from the stub of certificate 6, which fact was concealed from Lazare until it was brought to light by the use of infra-red photography by the expert witness, Clark Sellers, who testified that it was the hand of Meyberg who had cancelled certificate 6. His change of position, his denial of the cancellation, the failure of his memory with reference to it after Sellers had testified and his access to the stock book warranted the inference that he had caused the cancellation words on the stub of certificate 6 to be erased.

By his statements and concealments he induced Lazare to inventory the 50 shares of certificate 6 in the estate of Clemence, and thereby cleared the way for challenging the validity of certificate 8. Because of this alteration of the records it was necessary to reduce the number of shares not yet issued to the extent of 50 shares to avoid an over issue. Whereupon on April 2, 1937, Lazare, relying upon the truth of Meyberg's counsel, agreed as follows: To inventory in the estate of Clemence one half of the community holdings of 4450 shares and the 50 shares in certificate 6; that the unissued shares should be 950 instead of 1000 shares; that Lazare and Lorraine each owned 250 shares and that Lazare's included the 50 shares in certificate 8; that upon final distribution of both estates the brother and sister should become equals in the ownership of Leon, Inc., each to have 2500 shares. The net result of such agreement did not alter the respective positions of the brother and sister which would have followed a distribution of the estates according to the actual facts. Pursuant to the agreement the probate court distributed from the estate of Clemence to the estate of Leon 2275 shares.

From the estate of Leon the entire 4500 shares were on November 28, 1939, distributed share and share alike to Lorraine and Lazare. Added to the 250 shares each at first had received from Leon, both became owners of 5000 shares in equal ownership which was thereafter mutually recognized and acknowledged by both of them until the fateful day in January, 1941.

Following the agreement of April 2, 1937, friction between the brother on the one side and his sister and her husband on the other constantly increased. Defendants appear to have been ever alert to find some basis for complaint at Lazare's conduct of the corporation by which they might justify their act in removing him from office and to an inferior position in the division of power. In such quest defendants in 1940 resolved upon the scheme that certificate 8 was void, being an ostensible duplicate transfer of certificates 2 and 3. Upon arriving at that decision, and by means thereof in spite of the agreed basis upon which the two estates had been handled and the hitherto uniform recognition of certificate 8 as a valid certificate, defendants laid plans for utilizing their bold and piratical pretense to remove Lazare from the presidency.

Accordingly, from Boston, Meyberg and Lorraine directed their agents and attorneys, James Meyberg and M. S. Meyberg, to give notice of the annual stockholder's meeting for January 15, 1941, at 403 Lane Mortgage Building in Los Angeles. They armed ir two agents with proxies to represent them at the stockholder's meeting. The meeting was convened at the time appointed but because there was not a quorum present the meeting was adjourned to January 27, 1941, at the same place. But before adjourning James Meyberg appointed himself as chairman of the annual stockholder's meeting and M. S. Meyberg as "inspector of elections."

On the 24th day of January plaintiff having learned of the intention of defendants and their agents to allow him to vote only 2475 shares as against 2500 owned by defendants, he applied to the superior court and obtained an order, restraining the defendants from interfering with or in any way obstructing plaintiff from voting in person or by proxy 2500 shares at any meeting of the stockholders of Leon, Inc., pending any increase of the authorized capital and Lazare's ownership of his shares. Process was served with the restraining order and the order to show cause on the day of its issuance, but despite such measures defendants and their agents resolved upon their course to elect themselves as directors willy, nilly. Plaintiff and the proxies of defendants assembled on the 27th pursuant to adjournment of the 15th. While defendants sat in nearby seclusion, they pretended to comply with the letter of the restraining order by instructing their proxies to permit plaintiff to vote his 2500 shares. So they did. But after the votes had been cast, the "inspector of elections" advised those present that certificate 8 representing 50 shares of plaintiff was void as being a duplicate issue of certificate 6. Upon this startling disclosure the chairman announced that the board elected for the ensuing year consisted of Lorraine and Leonard Meyberg and Lazare Kauffman, each having received 1250 votes and that Pokross, Lazare's nominee, had received only 1225 votes and was therefore defeated. Thus as a result of such fraudulent acts of defendants and their agents and attorneys, plaintiff was deprived of his equal voting rights for the protection of which he had procured the restraining order.

For their disobedience of the court's order defendants were punished. The judgment of contempt was affirmed in a unanimous opinion of the Supreme Court which reviewed the facts and held that the conceded ownership of 2500 shares would not cease at the moment of election of directors.

[5-11] The proposition that Lazare was not entitled to vote his 2500 shares because valid certificates had not been issued for that amount is preposterous in view of his conceded ownership of one half interest in the informal, family corporation which was destined from its inception to pass from Leon to his children. The actual owner of shares may exercise his rights without a certificate therefor. Jean v. Jean, 207 Cal. 115, 121, 277 P. 313. Moreover, to permit the technical rules as commonly applied to corporations in the case of a close family corporation of two shareholders of equal ownership, would serve to defeat such equality of ownership, impede justice and perpetuate fraud.

Hollywood Cleaning & Pressing Co. v. Hollywood Laundry Service, 217 Cal. 124, 17 P.2d 709. Leon, sole devisee of Clemence, had emphatically bequeathed his property to his two children in equal shares. Meyberg testified that he knew such to have been the intention of Leon. Under such circumstances one could not with reason expect equity to hearken to the miserable defense that plaintiff did not have 2500 shares of record. Equity looks through form to substance and on beholding the substance will require the corporation to reform its transactions to meet the ends of justice. Mere irregularities in the transactions of a family corporation do not affect their validity. Wise Realty Co. v. Stewart, 169 Cal. 176, 185, 146 P. 534; Sargent v. Palace Café Co., 175 Cal. 737, 167 P. 146; Hunt v. Davis, 135 Cal. 31, 66 P. 957; Conover v. Smith, 83 Cal.App. 227, 256 P. 835. In the light of these authorities it is a dismal wail to chant the technique of corporate practice where the evidence overwhelmingly justifies the finding that Lorraine and Lazare have been the owners in equal shares of Leon, Inc. since the passing of their father in 1935. Seized of such property right neither may be deprived thereof by the wanton trespass of the other so long as the arm of equity may reach the offender. Their mutual rights must be upheld so far as they are ascertainable. Conover v. Smith, supra.

[12-14] Aside from the fact that equity may disregard the legalistic veil which appellants have draped about the alleged "election," a glance at the proceedings of that event reveals some aspects that reflect no honor upon the participants. The "inspector of elections" was self-constituted and for an especial purpose. The day his appointment was announced only the Meyberg faction was present and that was not a quorum . Its only possible legal action was to adjourn. Hexter v. Columbia Baking Co., 16 Del. Ch. 263, 145 A. 115. Hence whoever took an office at that meeting usurped it. But the inspector was not satisfied with an office whereby he might prevent an illegal vote. He asserted the privilege of making his challenge in secret and of weighing his own challenge in solitude. When a ballot is questioned at such an election the shareholder presenting the ballot is entitled to be heard. If he be not challenged at the threshold the only remaining duty of those conducting the election is to count the ballots and return the number of votes received by the nominees. After that they have no duty to perform. 14a Corpus Juris 57; 19 C. J. S., Corporations, § 720; Hartt v. Harvey, 32 Barb., N.Y., 55, 19 How. Prac., N.Y., 245, 246, 250. It would be sheer folly to conduct an election by ballot, if the inspector of elections, after ascertaining the victors in the contest, could determine that some of the ballots cast for the successful candidates were illegal and thereby cause the triumph of a minority. People ex rel. Harrt v. White, 11 Abb. Prac., N.Y., 168, 179.

[15] (2) Appellants challenge the jurisdiction of the court to enjoin the defendants on the ground that such action is an attempt to determine the ownership of the stock in question. Such jurisdiction they contend was vested solely in the superior court sitting in probate; and inasmuch as the 50 shares in certificate 6 had been awarded by the probate court to the estate of Leon and thereafter from the estate of Leon to Lazare and Lorraine the question of the ownership of those 50 shares was adjudicated by that order. This is specious reasoning. The major premise is a misstatement of the law. Appellants declare that they make no claim to the shares given plaintiff by his father. Since they make no question of plaintiff's gift from Leon that should dispose of their criticism of the finding that plaintiff owned the 2500 shares. They raise no question of the title of plaintiff to any of his shares except the 50 represented by certificate 8 which the evidence shows and the court found, was a legal gift from Leon. Therefore, no injury could result to appellants from the court's decision.

[16, 17] The jurisdiction of the probate court is not involved. The agreement of plaintiff and defendants to treat both certificates 6 and 8 as representing the same 50 shares, was the result of Meyberg's misrepresentation that 6 was valid. By the order distributing all of the shares in equal division to the two heirs the probate court performed its sole function. Although the treatment of the 50 shares as an asset of the estate of Clemence effected the same result exactly as though those shares had never been inventoried in her estate such treatment did not confer upon the probate court jurisdiction to declare Clemence owner of the stock. The probate court has not the power to declare a decedent to be owner of property contrary to fact. The limit of its power is to determine the succession to such title as the decedent had at the time of his decease. It is not its function to determine that he had any title at all. Rockey v. Vieux, 179 Cal. 681, 178 P. 712. But the claim of jurisdiction of the probate court is far fetched. It did not make any distribution of the 50 shares represented by certificate No. 8, nor did the parties agree that it should do so. Its decree merely distributed the shares of which Leon and Clemence were possessed on the dates respectively of their demises. Since all of the stock of Leon, Inc., was of the same class and concededly had equal voting rights the ownership of one half of it invested plaintiff with power to vote those shares at any election of directors.

[18] But the question of probate jurisdiction was effectually disposed of by the supreme court in the case of Meyberg v. Superior Court, supra, affirming the judgment of the superior court punishing the defendants for disobedience of the restraining order. It was there held that the test of a stockholder's right to vote his shares at a corporate meeting is his ownership of the stock. Such was impliedly a determination that the order distributing the 50 shares in certificate 6 did not affect Lazare's ownership of the 50 shares in 8.

[19-22] The second challenge to the court's jurisdiction is that the superior court had no power summarily to interfere with the internal affairs of a foreign corporation in doing business in this state. At the opening of the trial defendants moved to quash the service upon the corporation because of its foreign origin. An action to contest an election of directors under section 315 Civil Code, does not aim at obtaining a personal judgment against the corporation. Had it been so the doctrine of Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 565, would now prevail. Elberta Oil Co. v. Superior Court, 74 Cal. App. 114, 119, 239 P. 415. This contest involves the personal rights in property of individuals domiciled in California. The action by plaintiff was to prevent the deprivation of his property rights. Courts of equity never hesitate to exercise such jurisdiction when a complainant presents a cause of threatened irreparable injury. Moreover, after its motion to quash the service had failed the corporations affirmatively invoked the jurisdiction of the court by making a general appearance. Remsberg v. Hackney Mfg. Co., 174 Cal. 799, 164 P. 792. Also, the corporation having entered into this state for the purpose of maintaining an office and of transacting part of its business here it thereby impliedly agreed to submit itself to the jurisdiction of our courts according to law. 14A Corpus Juris 1405; 20 C. J. S., Corporations, § 1938. The motion to quash was properly denied.

[23] (3) The contention that the court erred in granting the motion to consolidate the two cases for trial is contrary to statutory provision which commits such a motion to the sound discretion of the trial court. Section 1048, Code of Civil Procedure. The factual recitals of this discussion serve to show that such discretion was not abused.

[24-26] (4) The claim that plaintiff was without clean hands has likewise been disposed of by the history of the corporation and the conduct of the parties. It is not shown in any discussion in defendants' voluminous briefs that plaintiff was without equity in any respect with reference to the matters presented by either of the actions. The claim that he had taken moneys of the corporation to which he was not entitled is a thing wholly apart from his right to vote his stock at a stockholders' meeting. In order to deny a litigant a hearing because of inequitable conduct the acts complained of must have infected the cause of action and must relate to the transaction concerning which complaint is made. City of Los Angeles v. Watterson, 8 Cal.App.2d 331, 340, 48 P.2d 87. The maxim does not apply to the general morals of plaintiff or to his conduct in other relations. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Commercial Pac. Co., 177 Cal. 577, 171 P. 317. However, the record contains such evidence as would support the finding that the greater part of the expenditures by Lazare out of corporate funds was in conformity with his policy immediately following the decease of his father and with uses of the same nature as those to which his decedent had applied moneys of the corporation, to wit, the payment of miscellaneous expenses of Lorraine and other members of the family.

[27-29] (5) The rulings upon the admissibility of evidence were without error. The testimony of the witness Sellers was to expose the iniquity of Meyberg who had "cancelled" certificate 6 with his own hand and subsequently denied his act or could not remember it. Schedule G of the federal tax return was admitted over objection and properly so. Both defendants had verified it on April 2, 1937. It contained the statement that Leon, inter vivos, had given his two children each 250 shares of Leon Inc. and that 50 of Lazare's shares were evidenced by certificate 8. One's own past declaration may always be received to impeach his subsequent declaration or testimony. The corporate minutes prepared by Meyberg served the same purpose. The letters that passed between Meyberg and Lazare's counsel in 1937 were proper impeaching evidence. They were proof of the agreement finally reached to treat both certificates 6 and 8 as valid for the purpose of the probate proceedings.

[30] Regarding the bewildering contentions of appellants with the utmost generosity, it would be to scorn the constitution (Art. VI, section 4½) to reverse either case in view of the trail left by defendants in their outside maneuverings and at the one annual meeting of the corporation in the six years of Meyberg's struggle for supremacy.

It is ordered that the motion to dismiss the appeals be and it is denied. The judgments are affirmed.

McCOMB, J., concurring.

22 Cal.2d 614

HONEA et al. v. CITY DAIRY, Inc.

L. A. 18637.

Supreme Court of California.
Aug. 3, 1943.

1. Negligence 🔑121(2)

Doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" may be relied on to establish prima facie case of negligence, where instrumentality which causes injury is shown to have been under exclusive management or control of defendant or defendant's servants, and accident is such as in ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have management of instrumentality use proper care.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Ipsa Loquitur".

2. Negligence 🔑121(2)

Under doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur", where instrumentality which causes injury is shown to be under the exclusive management or control of defendant or defendant's servants and accident is such as in ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have management of instrumentality use proper care, inference arises that the accident resulted from want of proper care on defendant's part.

3. Negligence 🔑121(2)

Doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" does not apply unless basic requisites of exclusive control of instrumentality causing injury, and probability of negligence, are proved by plaintiff.

4. Appeal and error 🔑931(1)

In action against dairy company for injuries sustained when company's bottle containing milk broke in plaintiff's hand, Supreme Court, accepting as true plaintiffs' testimony that bottle "just broke" because of judgment in her favor would assume that bottle was in some manner defective at time of accident.

5. Negligence 🔑121(3)

Plaintiff could not recover under the "res ipsa loquitur" doctrine for injuries sustained when bottle containing chocolate milk which plaintiff purchased at defendant's establishment broke in plaintiff's hands, where at time of accident bottle was not under control of defendant.

6. Negligence 🔑121(3)

Mere breaking of dairy company's bottle containing milk in injured person's hand could not give rise to inference that company was negligent in failing to discover defect in bottle.

7. Negligence 🔑25

Dairy company was not responsible for defects in company's bottle containing milk, which defects could not be found by reasonable, practicable inspection of bottle.

8. Negligence 🔑121(3)

The breaking of a bottle in purchaser's hands containing chocolate milk was not alone sufficient under the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" to permit the additional inference of negligence by the dairy company either in causing the defective condition, or in failing to discover it by proper inspection, where there was no evidence that a feasible means of discovering defect was available to the company.

9. Evidence 🔑20(1)

Court could not take judicial notice of technical practices and information available to bottling industry for discovering defective bottles.

10. Evidence 🔑20(1)

Court could not take judicial notice that glass bottles are not ordinarily damaged or that defects will not ordinarily occur unless bottler is negligent, since subject is not matter of common knowledge.

11. Negligence 🔑121(3)

Inference of "negligence" cannot be drawn from the breaking of glass, alone.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Negligence".

12. Negligence 🔑121(3)

Doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" does not apply to breaking or exploding of glass vessels containing noncarbonated liquids.

13. Negligence 🔑121(3)

Doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" does not apply to breaking or exploding of container in which an ordinarily harmless commodity is sold.

14. Negligence 🔑134(1)

Recovery against dairy company for delivery of bottle of chocolate milk unwrapped, or without packaging, was not authorized, where no evidence was offered that due care required such wrapping or packaging or that it would have prevented the breaking of the bottle which caused injury to purchaser.

CARTER, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Pierson M. Hall, Judge.

Action by Eldora Honea, a minor, etc., and others against City Dairy, Inc., for injuries sustained when a milk bottle broke in plaintiff's hand. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Prior opinion, 131 P.2d 586.

Harry E. Sackett, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earle M. Daniels and Julius V. Patrosso, both of Los Angeles, amici curiae on behalf of appellant.

Logan Beamer, of Glendale, and C. V. Caldwell, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

Eldora Honea, the principal plaintiff herein, a fourteen-year-old pupil at a junior high school, was sent by her teacher to the defendant dairy to buy three quarts of chocolate milk. Defendant's attendant took three bottles of milk, bottled by defendant, from the icebox and placed them on the counter unwrapped. Plaintiff picked them up and carried them to the school, a distance of about one block. As she entered the building one of the bottles broke in her hand, injuring her. She brought this action for damages, alleging negligence by defendant in supplying a defective bottle and in failing to wrap the bottles.

At the trial, held by the court without a jury, plaintiff testified that she carried one bottle under her left arm and one in each hand, that the bottles were not touching at any time and that the bottle in her right hand "just broke." The school janitor, called as a witness for plaintiff, testified that when he spoke to plaintiff as she entered the building, she pulled her arms in toward her breast and "clinked" the bottles. He also said that he had cleaned up the pieces of glass and still had them but that he had not brought them to court because no one had ordered him to do so. Plaintiff offered no other evidence of negligence. Defendant produced a former employee who said he had operated the defendant's bottling machine and had inspected all bottles, including those delivered to plaintiff, for dirt, cracks, and chips, removing those that were chipped or cracked. In his opinion as an expert the pressure exerted by plaintiff while carrying the bottles was insufficient to break them, but the bottles might have been broken if struck together. The trial court found that defendant was negligent both in delivering a defective bottle and in failing to wrap the bottles. Defendant has appealed from the judgment for plaintiff, contending that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings.

[1-3] As plaintiff has made no attempt to prove specific facts tending to show either that the bottle was defective or that defendant was negligent in delivering it in a defective condition, she may not recover upon this theory unless, under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, inferences of both defective condition and negligence may be drawn from the mere breaking of the bottle. This doctrine, as we said in Hinds v. Wheadon, 19 Cal.2d 458, 461, 121 P.2d 724, 726, may be relied upon to establish a prima facie case of negligence "where a thing [which causes injury] is shown to be under the exclusive management or control of the defendant or his servants and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care. In such cases an inference arises that the accident resulted from a want of proper care on the part of the defendants." The doctrine does not apply unless the basic requisites of exclusive control and probability of negligence are proved by plaintiff. See Gerhart v. Southern Cal. Gas. Co., 56 Cal.App.2d 425, 431, 432, 132 P.2d 874; Langazo v. San Joaquin L. & P. Corp., 32 Cal.App.2d 678, 695, 90 P.2d 825; cf. Parker v. James Granger, Inc., 4 Cal.2d 668, 674, 675, 52 P.2d 226; George Foltis, Inc., v. City of New York, 287 N.Y. 108, 115, 38 N.E.2d 455, 459, 460.

[4, 5] Accepting as true plaintiff's testimony that the bottle "just broke," we must assume that it was in some manner defective at the time of the accident, for glass milk bottles, unless defective, do not ordinarily break in the absence of applied force or some external factor. Defendant contends, however, that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is unavailable to establish that the bottle was defective when delivered to plaintiff, as defendant had lost control over it before the time of the accident and it is urged that the bottle could have been injured or weakened in the intervening period. Numerous authorities have stated that the instrumentality must be under the defendant's control at the time of the injury. See, for example, 9 Wigmore on Evidence (3rd ed. 1940) 380-382, § 2509; Gerber v. Faber, 54 Cal.App.2d 674, 683, 129 P.2d 485; Doherty v. Arcade Hotel, Or. 1943, 134 P.2d 118; Naumann v. Wehle Brewing Co., 127 Conn. 44, 15 A.2d 181; Slack v. Premier-Pabst Corp., 1939, 1 Terry 97, 40 Del. 97, 5 A.2d 516; Wheeler v. Laurel Bottling Works, 111 Miss. 442, 71 So. 743, 745, L.R.A.1916E, 1074; cf. Brooks v. Hill-Shaw Co., 7 Cir., 1941, 117 F.2d 682; Texas Co. v. Jamison, Okl.Sup. 1942, 129 P.2d 85. Other courts have held that it is sufficient if defendant had control at the time of the alleged negligent act, provided plaintiff proves that the condition of the instrumentality causing injury had not been changed after it left the defendant's possession. See 3 Cooley on Torts (4th ed. 1932) 386, sec. 480; (1937) 6 Fordham L.Rev. 483; Hotel Dempsey Co. v. Teel, 5 Cir., 1942, 128 F.2d 673; Jump v. Ensign-Bickford Co., 117 Conn. 110, 167 A. 90, 93, 94; Goldman & Freiman Bottling Co. v. Sindell, 140 Md. 488, 117 A. 866; Ortego v. Nehi Bottling Works, 199 La. 599, 6 So.2d 677; MacPherson v. Canada Dry Ginger Ale Inc., 129 N.J.L. 365, 29 A.2d 868; Bradley v. Conway Springs Bottling Co., 154 Kan. 282, 118 P.2d 601; Payne v. Rome Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 10 Ga.App. 762, 73 S.E. 1087; Stolle v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 307 Mo. 520, 271 S.W. 497, 39 A.L.R. 1001; cf. Dryden v. Continental Baking Co., 11 Cal.2d 33, 77 P.2d 833. The reason for the general requirement that defendant have control of the instrumentality at the time of the injury is to exclude the possibility that the accident was caused by an intervening act of the plaintiff or a third party, and this purpose is satisfied if plaintiff shows that there was no intervening cause. Plaintiff has brought herself within the rule by her testimony that the bottles were not touching at any time when she had them. It would follow, therefore, that the broken bottle was in some manner defective when delivered by defendant.

It must next be determined whether the breaking of the bottle is alone sufficient, under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, to permit the additional and necessary inference of negligence by defendant, either in causing the defective condition or in failing to discover it by proper inspection. We, of course, do not know the nature of the defect. From the evidence it is clear that no examination was ever made of the broken bottle and we therefore do not know whether such examination would have revealed the flaw. The pieces of glass were picked up by the school janitor after the accident and retained by him. Although it does not affirmatively appear that either party knew that the janitor had possession of the broken pieces until he so testified, they were available to plaintiff at the time of the trial. The bottle was broken at the neck or just below and the neck was in one piece. An examination of the pieces might have revealed the flaw or served to eliminate possible causes of the accident. See Stewart v. Crystal Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 50 Ariz. 60, 68 P.2d 952, 955; Smith v. Peerless Glass Co., 259 N.Y. 292, 181 N.E. 576; cf. Burnham v. Lincoln, 225 Mass. 408, 114 N.E. 715; Gerber v. Faber, supra, 54 Cal.App.2d at pages 680, 682, 686, 129 P.2d at pages 488, 489, 491.

[6-8] The mere breaking of a bottle alone cannot give rise to an inference that defendant was negligent in failing to discover the defect. While the dairy may have had a duty to make an examination of all bottles, whether newly purchased or returned by prior customers, it is not responsible for defects that cannot be found by a reasonable, practicable inspection. Sheward v. Virtue, 20 Cal.2d 410, 414, 126 P.2d 345; O'Rourke v. Day & Night Water Heater Co., 31 Cal.App.2d 364, 369, 88 P.2d 191; Smith v. Peerless Glass Co., 259 N.Y. 292, 181 N.E. 576. In the present case there is no evidence that a feasible means of discovering the defect or flaw was available to this defendant. The language of the court in Loebig's Guardian v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 259 Ky. 124, 81 S.W.2d 910, is particularly appropriate. In holding that res ipsa loquitur was not applicable to the explosion of a coca-cola bottle, the court said (81 S.W.2d at pages 911, 912): "The defendant was not, under the circumstances, an insurer, and it was not shown that there was any more reasonably practicable method of inspection used in the industry than the method of inspection admittedly adopted by the defendant. Suppose the bottle was defective. A conclusion of negligence could not arise without some showing that the defect could have been discovered by the exercise of ordinary care. * * * In the instant case, we are still left to conjecture as to the cause of the defect in the bottle and its contents or whether it was such a defect as might have been discovered by a more thorough inspection. Unless we were prepared to hold defendant as an insurer, it is hard to see how else it could be held responsible without some showing that its opportunity to exercise care was in some measure proportionate to the duty imposed—without some showing that a more thorough inspection would have been effective. Plaintiff's experts suggest various methods of testing bottles which might be applied, but it is not shown that these tests are commercially practicable or that they would have disclosed the complained-of defect. * * * We must measure the duty by ordinary standards and by consequences reasonably to be anticipated. Subject to these criteria, it is clear that the proof falls short of raising any inference of negligence."

In Licari v. Markotos, 110 Misc. 334, 180 N.Y.S. 278, the court held a bottler not liable for injuries caused by breaking of a bottle of a non-explosive cleaning and dyeing preparation, saying (180 N.Y.S. at page 280): "Nor is there any force in respondent's contention, strenuously urged upon this appeal, that the defendant failed in his duty to inspect the bottles before filling them; this for the reason that there is no proof that any examination or inspecton would have found the existence of any defect. If such had been the case, it was the plaintiff's duty to give evidence thereof. Bruckel v. [J.] Milhau's Son, 116 App.Div. [832], 836, 102 N.Y.S. 395. In the absence of such evidence, the learned trial justice had no foundation upon which to predicate any finding of negligence on defendant's part, and a judgment for plaintiff could be based on none other than speculation and pure guesswork." In the Bruckel case, 102 N.Y.S. 398, the court said: "There is no proof that inspection or examination of the bottle would have made its defect known to the most careful vender or even to an expert in his employ. It does not appear that either one or the other could have ascertained the defect by any test short of those made by the expert witness of the plaintiff. If the fact were otherwise, it was the duty of the plaintiff to give evidence thereof; and in the absence of all evidence the jury cannot grope in speculation for a test or assume that there was one."

[9] In the Peerless Glass Co. case, supra, the court, in affirming a judgment against a manufacturer but reversing that against a bottler, relied upon expert testimony as to the existence of practicable and customary tests which the respective defendants could or should have employed in the exercise of due care. In a case such as this, where the court cannot take judicial notice of the technical practices and information available to the bottling industry for discovering defective bottles, there must be some evidence thereof, in the absence of which the trier of fact is not justified in concluding that all defects in bottles will ordinarily be found by a bottler if he exercises due care.

[10, 11] Nor can the court take judicial notice that glass bottles are not ordinarily damaged or that defects will not ordinarily occur unless the bottler is negligent, for the subject is not a matter of common knowledge. Many of the courts have received expert testimony to determine the possible or probable causes of bottle-breakage. See, for example, Gerber v. Faber, supra, 54 Cal.App.2d 680-683, 129 P.2d 488, 490; Smith v. Peerless Glass Co., supra; Burnham v. Lincoln, 225 Mass. 408, 114 N.E. 715; Loebig's Guardian v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 259 Ky. 124, 81 S.W.2d 910; Dunn v. Hoffman Beverage Co., 126 N.J.L. 556, 20 A.2d 352, 353. An analogy may be found in Judson v. Giant Powder Co., 107 Cal. 549, 561, 40 P. 1020, 20 L.R.A. 718, 48 Am.St.Rep. 146, where this court held relevant and material expert evidence that dynamite would not explode if the correct process of manufacturing and handling were carefully carried out. While it may often be a matter of common knowledge that certain articles or substances are not ordinarily rendered defective in the absence of negligence, we cannot say that this is true of glass containers. It has been held that because of the physical characteristics of glass an inference of negligence cannot be drawn from breaking alone. Slack v. Premier-Pabst Corp., 1939, 1 Terry 97, 40 Del. 97, 5 A.2d 516, 519; cf. Wheeler v. Laurel Bottling Works, 111 Miss. 442, 71 So. 743, L.R.A.1916E, 1074; Stewart v. Crystal Coca-Cola Bottling Co., supra. The reason for this conclusion is indicated in Piehl v. Albany Ry., 30 App.Div. 166, 51

N.Y.S. 755, affirmed 162 N.Y. 617, 57 N.E. 1122, where the court, holding that no inference of negligence arose from the bursting of a flywheel, said (51 N.Y.S. at pages 757, 758): "* * * such is the nature of steam and electricity, and of the engines by or upon which they operate, that, when such an explosion as this occurs, our experience, or even expert experience, is not sufficiently uniform to justify us in presuming that negligence is the cause. The explosion does not, in fact, speak for itself and tell us its cause." Cf. Brymer v. Southern Pac. Co., 90 Cal. 496, 27 P. 371—breaking of chain. In the absence of appropriate evidence, therefore, it cannot be held that defects in glass bottles are ordinarily caused by the negligence of the bottler. It should be noted that the probabilities of negligence on the part of the defendant in this case are greatly reduced by the fact that the defect in the bottle might well have been caused either by the manufacturer or by some third person.

[12] Other courts have held that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not applicable to the breaking of glass vessels containing non-carbonated liquids. Directly in point is Coralnick v. Abbotts Dairies, 337 Pa. 344, 11 A.2d 143, the court stating: "The plaintiff, a grocer, sold milk produced by defendant. Shortly before the accident defendant's driver delivered a case of bottled milk in a partitioned box. While plaintiff was removing a bottle from the container to place it in his refrigerator, the bottle broke cutting his hand. No proof was attempted to show what caused the bottle to break. The defendant did not manufacture the bottle nor warrant that it was free from defects. The limit of its duty was to provide against defects discernible upon reasonable inspection and to handle the bottles with reasonable care. There is not anything to show it failed of its duty in these respects. We cannot conjecture that it may have done so. The mere happening of the accident did not establish negligence, and that only was shown. The proof offered by plaintiff clearly failed to support the burden imposed upon him. As was said by the learned court below: 'Under the evidence the only reasonable inference that can be deduced is that the accident was due to a latent unsuspected defect. McSorley v. Katz, 53 Pa. Super. 243.' There being causes apparent, other than those within defendant's control, to which the accident might with equal fairness be attributed, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply. Norris v. Philadelphia Electric Co., 334 Pa. 161, 5 A.2d 114. The direction of a verdict for defendant was necessary."

[13] In Burnham v. Lincoln, supra, it was held that a supplier of spring water was not liable for injuries received by a bottle breaking in a customer's hand, the accident alone not giving rise to an inference of negligence. Cf. Simons v. Sun Ray Water Co., Sup.App.T., 162 N.Y.S. 968. Further, it has been stated broadly that the "decided weight of authority" is that res ipsa loquitur does not apply to the breaking or exploding of a container in which an ordinarily harmless commodity is sold. See 22 Am.Jur. 214-215; Grant v. Graham Chero-Cola Bottling Co., 176 N.C. 256, 97 S.E. 27, 4 A.L.R. 1094.

We need not determine at this time whether the rule applies to the explosion of a bottle of carbonated liquid, although a large number of courts have refused to permit an inference of negligence in such cases. Gerber v. Faber, supra; Stewart v. Crystal Coca-Cola Bottling Co., supra; Loebig's Guardian v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co., supra; Glaser v. Seitz, 35 Misc. 341, 71 N.Y.S. 942; cf. Berkens v. Denver Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 109 Colo. 140, 122 P.2d 884; Ruffin v. Coca Cola Bottling Co., 311 Mass. 514, 42 N.E.2d 259; Slack v. Premier-Pabst Corp., supra; Wheeler v. Laurel Bottling Works, supra. Some courts reject the inference in the absence of evidence of other instances of explosions. See Dail v. Taylor, 151 N.C. 284, 66 S.E. 135, 28 L.R.A.,N.S., 949; Ashkenazi v. Nehi Bottling Co., 217 N.C. 552, 8 S.E.2d 818; Coca-Cola Bottling Works v. Shelton, 214 Ky. 118, 282 S.W. 778. Other jurisdictions have permitted recovery under the doctrine where injuries have resulted from exploding bottles of carbonated beverages. Payne v. Rome Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 10 Ga.App. 762, 73 S.E. 1087; Bradley v. Conway Springs Bottling Co., 154 Kan. 282, 118 P.2d 601; Ortego v. Nehi Bottling Works, 199 La. 599, 6 So.2d 677; Stolle v. Anheuser-Busch, 307 Mo. 520, 271 S.W. 497, 39 A.L.R. 1001; MacPherson v. Canada Dry Ginger Ale, Inc., 129 N.J.L. 365, 29 A. 2d 868.

[14] Plaintiff contends, finally, that the defendant was negligent in delivering the bottles without packaging or wrapping them. No evidence was offered tending to show either that due care required wrapping or that failure to wrap caused the bottle to break or that wrapping would have prevented either the breaking of the bottle or the injury to plaintiff. It is not claimed that plaintiff was of such tender age that any special precautions were necessary. An analysis of the argument in support of this point indicates that plaintiff's contention is that defendant was negligent in delivering a defective bottle without wrapping it. This is answered by our conclusion that there is no basis for an inference that defendant knew or should have known that the bottle was defective.

The judgment is reversed.

SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, TRAYNOR, and SCHAUER, JJ., concurred.

CARTER, Justice (dissenting.)

I dissent. The facts in this case are clear. Plaintiff purchased milk from a dairy which bottled and sold it. The bottle broke in her hand without any act or omission on her part that could have been the cause of it. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is clearly applicable to such a case.

The majority opinion concedes the factors necessary for the application of that rule. First, that the control of the defendant must be present when the alleged negligent act occurs, but need not be present when the injury occurs. Second, that "glass milk bottles, unless defective, do not ordinarily break." Third, that the dairy was under a duty to inspect the bottles for defects. With those requirements satisfied there can be no doubt that the doctrine was properly invoked by the trial court. If bottles do not ordinarily break if they are not defective, the inference follows by virtue of the doctrine that they were defective. If they were defective, it was the duty of defendant bottler to inspect the bottles and discover the defect. The failure to do so or the doing of it in a negligent manner may be inferred from the fact that the bottle was defective. Hence, we have the inference that defendant was negligent in either wholly failing to inspect the bottles or in failing to make a reasonable and careful inspection. Defendants' evidence clearly shows that a defect would be discoverable by reasonable inspection. Its employee who had charge of the bottling testified:

"The Court: You never let one that could see was chipped or cracked; is that it? A. I never let any of them go through.

"Q. That you could see was chipped or cracked? A. Well, we could see them.

"Q. You could see them? A. Oh, sure."

Once it is established that bottles do not ordinarily break unless defective, a duty to inspect exists, and the bottle breaks, the inference arises that defendant bottler was negligent in failing to inspect or in making an improper inspection. The burden of going forward then shifts to the defendant to convince the trier of fact that he made a proper inspection. If he is successful he prevails in the action; if not, the inference of negligence stands unimpeached and cannot be disregarded by the trier of fact. See Druzanich v. Criley, 19 Cal.2d 439, 122 P.2d 53.

One of the primary policies underlying the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is that it is made available because the defendant is in a better position than plaintiff to explain how and why the event transpired and that he exercised due care. 19 Cal.Jur. 705, 706. In the instant case the defendant was in such a superior position. It knew whether or not it had made an inspection, and if so the character and extent thereof. It was the bottler of the milk and had control of the bottles and the bottling process. It had the burden of explaining how a defective bottle escaped its inspection, if any. The trier of fact may well have believed that defendant either failed to make any inspection, or was careless in doing so, resulting in a cracked or chipped bottle being delivered to plaintiff.

It is no answer to that reasoning to assert, as does the majority opinion, that plaintiff must show that reasonable inspection would have revealed the defect. The bottle would not have broken except for a defect. The inference follows that it was defective. The defendant being in the superior position as the bottler and handler of the bottles, was required to assume the burden of convincing the trier of fact that it had done all that was required of it to discover that defect, or that a reasonable inspection would not have revealed it. If plaintiff were compelled to make that proof she would deprive herself of the doctrine because she would be proving specific negligence, namely, the particular character of the defect and what must be done to discover it. If plaintiff relies upon specific acts of negligence he cannot avail himself of the doctrine. 19 Cal.Jur. 713. Res ipsa loquitur is based upon probabilities. This court may from common knowledge assume that the probabilities point to a chip or crack in the bottles as being the cause of the breaking rather than some other defect. It cannot be doubted that a reasonable inspection would reveal such a defect. Defendant bottler was obligated to proceed with its explanation such as that the bottle was not cracked or chipped, a careful inspection had been made, or the defect was latent and not discoverable by a reasonable inspection. It was a bottler and handler of the bottles and was in a superior position to produce evidence on those subjects.

This court may say as a matter of common knowledge that it is negligence for a bottler to use and distribute defective bottles. No opinion evidence on the part of plaintiff concerning the nature of defects in bottles and their discoverability is necessary. This is plain from the analogy of malpractice cases where ordinarily expert testimony is necessary to establish liability of the physician. But where the act is such as leaving a sponge in a patient following an operation, which clearly would not be done by a prudent person, res ipsa loquitur applies and expert testimony is unnecessary to establish negligent conduct. Ales v. Ryan, 8 Cal.2d 82, 64 P.2d 409.

It has been held that the doctrine applies to breaking of bottles containing pressure generating liquids. Bradley v. Conway Springs Bottling Co., 154 Kan. 282, 118 P.2d 601; Ortego v. Nehi Bottling Works, 199 La. 599, 6 So.2d 677; Lanza v. De Ridder Coca Cola Bottling Co., La.App., 3 So.2d 217; Auzene v. Gulf Public Service Co., La.App., 188 So. 512; Stolle v. Anheuser-Busch, 307 Mo. 520, 271 S.W. 497, 39 A.L.R. 1001; Benkendorfer v. Garrett, Tex.Civ.App., 143 S.W.2d 1020; Macon Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Crane, 55 Ga. App. 573, 190 S.E. 879; MacPherson v. Canada Dry Ginger Ale, Inc., 129 N.J.L. 365, 29 A.2d 868; Macres v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 290 Mich. 567, 287 N.W. 922; Healey v. Trodd, 124 N.J.L. 64, 11 A.2d 88, affirming 122 N.J.L. 603, 7 A.2d 640; Middlesboro Coca-Cola Bottling Works v. Campbell, 179 Va. 693, 20 S.E.2d 479; Ashkenazi v. Nehi Bottling Co., 217 N.C. 552, 8 S.E.2d 818; Georgia-Alabama Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. White, 55 Ga.App. 706, 191 S.E. 265; Atlanta Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Danneman, 25 Ga.App. 43, 102 S.E. 542.

In Meyers v. Alexandria Coca-Cola Bottling Co., Ltd., La.App., 8 So.2d 737, the court, although not expressly discussing the necessity of evidence on the discoverability of defects in the bottle, in effect holds that the bottler was negligent in not perceiving the defects in the bottle. The court stated at page 739 of 8 So.2d:

"The manager stated that the bottles are inspected twice before they are filled and once after they are filled to determine any defect in the container, or bottle, or any foreign matter that might possibly have been in the bottle. If a bottle is found to be defective in either of the two first inspections and prior to its being filled, it is thrown aside and not used and at the end of the day such bottles are destroyed or broken. This indicates that defects are sometimes found in the bottles. It is reasonable to visualize how a defect in a bottle could escape the notice of the inspector. After the bottles are filled, they are again inspected for defects in the bottle, but principally to ascertain if there are any foreign substances in the contents.

"The defendant's bottler testified that the gas pressure is tested every hour or so to see that the volume of gas is not excessive; that if the volume of gas becomes too great then the regulator is adjusted and reset; that occasionally a bottle explodes while in the process of being filled or immediately thereafter. He did not testify or seek to explain the cause of these explosions. As a bottle will not explode unless there are defects in the bottle or unless it has been improperly filled and charged, it stands to reason that there was negligence in not perceiving the defects in the bottle or in the bottling process." (Emphasis added.) Although the majority opinion expressly states that it is not deciding the issue in cases with the above-mentioned factual background, nevertheless such cases holding the doctrine not applicable are cited in support of its conclusion. The opinion thus gives implied sanction to these authorities because the reasoning there employed would defeat recovery in the exploding bottle cases.

Great reliance is placed upon Licari v. Markotos, 110 Misc. 334, 180 N.Y.S. 278, and Bruckel v. J. Milhau's Son, 116 App. Div. 832, 836, 102 N.Y.S. 395. The applicability of res ipsa loquitur or the absence or presence of an inference of negligence as such was neither considered nor discussed by the court in those cases.

The duty of a bottler of milk in regard to containers is established by statute. Section 694, of the Agricultural Code, St.1933, p. 166, provides in part: "All containers of any kind in which milk * * * is kept, stored, transported or delivered shall be sound, smooth, free from rust or open seams * * *." (Emphasis added.) A mandatory duty is placed upon the bottler of milk to use sound containers. Certainly a defective bottle is not a sound one. It has been held that the mere failure of a brake on a train to properly function is sufficient to give rise to an inference of inefficiency in violation of a statute requiring efficient brakes, and hence recovery by the injured person. Newkirk v. Los Angeles Junction R. Co., 21 Cal.2d 308, 131 P.2d 535. In the instant case the breaking of the bottle without cause raises an inference that it was not sound. Recovery should therefore follow.

---

22 Cal.2d 627

SHEFFIELD v. STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA.

L. A. 18639.

Supreme Court of California.

Aug. 3, 1943.

1. Attorney and client 🔑54

Findings of fact and conclusions of law of state bar committee, forming basis of committee's recommendation that an attorney be suspended for three months, were not subject to objection that the findings and conclusions were not based upon the charges against attorney as stated in the notice to show cause. Rules of Professional Conduct of the State Bar of California, Rule 5; St.1939, pp. 354, 355, 357, §§ 6067, 6068, 6103, 6106.

2. Attorney and client 🔑21

Professional conduct rule suggests that the subsequent representation of another against a former client is forbidden not merely when the attorney will be called upon to use confidential information obtained in the course of the former employment, but in every case when, by reason of such subsequent employment, he may be called upon to use such confidential information. St.1939, pp. 354, 355, 357, §§ 6067, 6068, 6103, 6106.

3. Attorney and client 🔑21

Under Professional Conduct Rule an attorney may not do anything which will injuriously affect his former client in any matter in which he formerly represented him, nor may the attorney at any time use against his former client knowledge or information acquired by virtue of the previous relationship. St.1939, pp. 354, 355, 357, §§ 6067, 6068, 6103, 6106.

4. Attorney and client 🔑21

Attorney's conduct in appearing as counsel in action for breach of contract, and for injunction, against former client, was a violation of professional conduct rule, where second action could not have been filed without obtaining from former client information concerning the contract sued upon and the facts relating to the conduct of the parties in connection with the subject matter. St.1939, pp. 354, 355, 357, §§ 6067, 6068, 6103, 6106.

5. Attorney and client 🔑21, 46

That an employee of the state bar gave an attorney permission to appear as counsel in action against attorney's former client would not give attorney permission to violate the Business or Professions Code or the Rules of Professional Conduct, nor would the opinion of a fellow attorney be a defense to a charge of unprofessional conduct. St.1939, pp. 354, 355, 357, §§ 6067, 6068, 6103, 6106.

6. Attorney and client 🔑44(1), 58

Attorney's conduct in appearing as counsel, in action for breach of contract and for injunction, against former client, sustained finding of professional misconduct warranting three months' suspension. St.1939, pp. 354, 355, 357, §§ 6067, 6068, 6103, 6106.

CARTER, J., dissenting.

◆

In Bank.

Proceeding by John Foster Sheffield against the State Bar of California to review an order of the board of governors of the state bar recommending that petitioner be suspended from the practice of law for a period of three months.

Petitioner suspended for three months.

William Roy Ives, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Paul J. Fritz and Jerold E. Weil, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

By a notice to show cause, the State Bar charged John Foster Sheffield with: "Violating your oath and duties as an attorney and counselor at law within the meaning of Section 6103 of Article 6 of the Business and Professions Code of the State of California, St.1939, p. 357 as the same are prescribed by Sections 6067 and 6068 of Article 4 of the Business and Professions Code of the State of California; and violating Rule 5 and 7 of the Rules of Professional Conduct of the State Bar of California; and the commission of acts involving moral turpitude and dishonesty within the meaning of Section 6106 of Article 6 of the Business and Professions Code of the State of California. * * *" Following a hearing upon these charges, the Board of Governors recommended that Sheffield be suspended from practice for a period of three months. In response to a writ of review issued by this court upon Sheffield's petition, the record of the proceeding has been presented for consideration.

It appears that in 1941, H. L. Blake retained the petitioner in connection with a dispute over premises which were the subject of a contract between him and Grace S. Cornwell. As attorney for Blake, who paid him $50, the petitioner filed in the Superior Court a complaint in which there was demanded from Mrs. Cornwell an accounting under the contract and damages for its breach; the plaintiff also asked the court for an injunction and declaratory relief. Sheffield later filed an amended complaint. Upon these complaints, a restraining order was issued.

Shortly afterward, Blake obtained other counsel who was substituted for the petitioner. The action was then prosecuted to a judgment by which Mrs. Cornwell was enjoined from taking possession of the premises in controversy and was ordered to account for money which had been received by her. The plaintiff was also awarded damages.

Five months later, the petitioner, as attorney for Mrs. Cornwell, filed a complaint against his former client in which she sought damages for a breach of the same contract which was the subject of the prior action. Soon after this complaint was filed, according to the findings of fact made by the Local Administrative Committee, the attorney for Blake demanded that Sheffield withdraw from the action upon the ground that he had represented Blake in the same matter. Sheffield refused to do so. Blake's counsel then moved the court to require Sheffield's withdrawal from the case. On the day of and shortly before the hearing of this motion, petitioner served on Blake's attorney a copy of a substitution of attorneys in which another attorney was substituted for him. The motion was nevertheless pressed, and the court ordered that Sheffield "be excluded * * * from taking any part in the trial of the * * * action as attorney of record for plaintiff, or as an attorney assisting or cooperating with any other attorney of record of said plaintiff, or at all."

Notwithstanding this order, at the time the action was set for trial Sheffield appeared on behalf of counsel of record for Mrs. Cornwell and requested a continuance. Following several continuances, Blake's counsel moved for a dismissal of the action upon the ground that Mrs. Cornwell's rights had been concluded by the judgment in the former litigation. This motion was granted.

Upon these facts the Committee determined that the petitioner had violated his oath and the duties of an attorney at law. In making this determination, the Committee stated that the members "are of the opinion that respondent has violated one of the most important and fundamental rules governing the relationship between attorney and client. * * * We can imagine certain instances where there might be a reasonable doubt as to the propriety of an attorney occupying a position adverse to a former client, but the present one certainly does not fall within such a zone of doubt. There would appear to be no question but that the subject matter of the two actions involved was exactly the same. The pleadings and judgment of dismissal in the second action would seem to be conclusive in this regard." The Committee recommended that Sheffield be suspended from the practice of law for a period of three months.

When the matter came before the Board of Governors, the petitioner appeared with his counsel who made a statement. By unanimous vote the findings of fact of the Committee were adopted. Two members of the Board voted against the Committee's recommendation of suspension for three months upon the ground that it is insufficient; all of the other members present adopted that recommendation.

[1] The first point urged by the petitioner is that the findings of fact and conclusions of law made by the Committee are not based upon the charges against him as stated in the notice to show cause. He asserts that he was charged with unethical conduct in representing conflicting interests and that the Committee found that he had not done so. But the findings follow exactly the wording of the notice to show cause except that they omit any mention of Rule 7 which the Committee found had not been violated.

Sheffield also asserts that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings and recommendations of the State Bar and that they are contrary to it. He calls attention to the fact that no complaining witness testified, and relies upon the testimony of Blake's attorney, who volunteered the opinion to the Committee that the petitioner "was guilty of no act that could be worthy of punishment by the State Bar." He also relies upon the fact that the transcript shows no evidence of any confidential information received by him from Blake.

[2, 3] The Rules of Professional Conduct adopted by the State Bar provide: "A member of the State Bar shall not accept employment adverse to a client or former client, relating to a matter in reference to which he has obtained confidential information by reason of or in the courts of his employment by such client or former client". Rule 5. A reasonable construction of it, said this court in Galbraith v. State Bar, 218 Cal. 329, 23 P.2d 291, 292, "suggests that the subsequent representation of another against a former client is forbidden not merely when the attorney will be called upon to use confidential information obtained in the course of the former employment, but in every case when, by reason of such subsequent employment, he may be called upon to use such confidential information." And the court also declared, adopting its statement in Wutchumna Water Co. v. Bailey, 216 Cal. 564, 15 P.2d 505, 509, that "an attorney is forbidden to do either of two things after severing his relationship with a former client. He may not do anything which will injuriously affect his former client in any matter in which he formerly represented him, nor may he at any time use against his former client knowledge or information acquired by virtue of the previous relationship."

[4] The evidence against the petitioner shows a disregard of this rule and also of the elementary principles of good faith and fair dealing upon which it rests. He could not have filed the complaint against Mrs. Cornwell without obtaining from Blake information concerning the contract sued upon and the facts relating to the conduct of the parties in connection with the premises since that time. Yet five months later he represented Mrs. Cornwell in an action brought by her to secure damages on account of her eviction from the premises which were the subject of the same contract and ignored the order of court which excluded him from further participation in the case.

Sheffield's defense, as set forth in his answer to the notice to show cause and as related in his testimony, is that when Mrs. Cornwell consulted him he informed her that he did not know whether, with propriety, he could represent her. He then telephoned to the Los Angeles office of the State Bar and asked for E. W. Hendrick, an assistant secretary. To the person who represented himself to be Hendrick, he stated the facts and inquired whether he could ethically act as attorney for Mrs. Cornwell. Petitioner was informed, he declared as a witness in his own behalf, that if he had not received any confidential information from Blake, which could be used against him in the second action, there was no reason why he could not represent Mrs. Cornwell. An employee of the State Bar testified, however, that at the time of this asserted telephone call Hendrick was no longer in its employ. This witness also stated that, after Hendrick left the employ of the State Bar, two or three persons acted in his place and a telephone call concerning a question of ethics was placed with another one of the secretaries. And although the petitioner testified that he had asked for and spoken with Hendrick, the conversation, he later stated, might have been had with someone else.

The petitioner also testified that before undertaking to represent Mrs. Cornwell, he discussed the proprieties of the matter with three attorneys with whom he had an office association. According to his testimony, they told him they knew of no reason why he might not do so. The statements of these attorneys was repeated to Blake's attorney, said Sheffield in his testimony, when the propriety of filing the action on behalf of Mrs. Cornwell was being discussed, and the petitioner offered to submit the question to the trial judge in chambers and abide by his ruling.

[5] But this testimony did not impress the Committee as being entitled to any great weight. If Sheffield discussed the matter with any employee of the State Bar qualified to give an opinion, the Committee concluded, it appears improbable that he disclosed all of the essential factors. It may also be observed that no employee of the State Bar can give an attorney permission to violate the Business and Professions Code or the Rules of Professional Conduct. An opinion of a fellow attorney is likewise no defense to wrongdoing, although the leniency of the Committee's recommendation indicates that it gave some consideration to this evidence.

[6] It is ordered that John Foster Sheffield be suspended from the practice of law for a period of three months, effective thirty days after the date of the filing of this opinion.

CARTER, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent. From my examination of the record of this case I am persuaded that the majority opinion does not contain a fair statement of the facts and resolves all intendments against petitioner contrary to the settled rule in cases of this character. Hildebrand v. State Bar, 18 Cal.2d 816, 117 P.2d 860; Golden v. State Bar, 213 Cal. 237, 2 P.2d 325; Aydelotte v. State Bar, 209 Cal. 737, 290 P. 41; Furman v. State Bar, 12 Cal.2d 212, 83 P.2d 12.

The majority opinion states that "Five months later, the petitioner, as attorney for Mrs. Cornwell, filed a complaint against his former client in which she sought damages for a breach of the same contract which was the subject of the prior action. Soon after this complaint was filed, according to the findings of fact made by the Local Administrative Committee, the attorney for Blake demanded that Sheffield withdraw from the action upon the ground that he had represented Blake in the same matter. Sheffield refused to do so." However, the record discloses that at the time Blake's attorney suggested that petitioner withdraw as attorney for Mrs. Cornwell, petitioner advised him that he had sought advice from a secretary of The State Bar and three attorneys who were associates in his office as to whether or not it would be a violation of legal ethics for him to represent Mrs. Cornwell in said action, and that he had been advised by each of them that such conduct would not be unethical. He further offered to submit the matter to the trial judge at chambers and abide by his decision as to whether or not he should continue to represent Mrs. Cornwell in said action. This the attorney for Blake refused to do, and thereafter gave notice of motion to have petitioner excluded as attorney for Mrs. Cornwell, but before said motion was heard, petitioner served and filed a substitution of attorneys pursuant to which another attorney was substituted in his place. Petitioner did not thereafter participate in the case except to appear and request a continuance of the trial of the action upon the ground that the attorney substituted in his place was ill.

The attorney for Blake objected to a continuance and moved for judgment in favor of the defendant which was granted by the trial court. At the hearing before the Local Administrative Committee in this proceeding, said attorney testified "It suddenly occurred to me I had what I might call a long shot and I could throw the case out of court by taking the position that Mr. Sheffield had no business in the case either physically or as attorney of record. * * * The plaintiff not being there in person or by an attorney, [the] judge thought it over a few minutes and finally ordered a default judgment, and that ended the case."

In explanation of filing the second action for Mrs. Cornwell against his former client Blake, petitioner testified herein that "I have always taken the position, it was a different matter and wasn't related in so far as one was a conflicting interest with the other. I took the position, and the other attorneys did likewise, that the injunction suit would lie regardless of whether there was a breach of contract. In other words, I believe the decisions are clear * * * that regardless of a contract of employment that you have with an employer that an employer in spite of that contract can enjoin you from coming on to his premises even during the life of that contract." It is worthy of note, too, that adversary counsel testified herein that after he had been substituted for petitioner as counsel for the plaintiff Blake in the first action, he there argued that any claim by Mrs. Cornwell against Blake for damages would have to be brought in a subsequent action.

Petitioner's testimony that he talked with some one at the State Bar office prior to filing the action for Mrs. Cornwell against his former client is confirmed by the adversary counsel in that action who, when called by the State Bar as a witness in this proceeding, testified, "I do believe in good faith he [petitioner] came here" to The State Bar and made inquiry as to the propriety of his filing the action "because he told me that right in the beginning." This witness further testified "I don't think his intention was injurious, in effect to hurt Mr. and Mrs. Blake by reason of the prior employment. * * * I don't think Mr. Sheffield at any time was guilty of any conduct that would be worthy of any punishment from The State Bar. I feel I know as much about the case as anyone here."

In challenging the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding that in filing the first action he had acquired confidential information from Blake concerning matters litigated in the second action, petitioner refers to his undisputed testimony that he had not acquired such information and that the factual basis for each action rested on matters of record, the first being a possessory action predicated on title to the property, and the second being based on the employment contract which also had been recorded. Neither Blake, petitioner's former client, nor Mrs. Cornwell, his client in the second action, was called by the State Bar. Adversary counsel was called and, as indicated above, he stated he did not believe petitioner had been guilty of any conduct warranting punishment.

The majority opinion quotes from the decision in Galbraith v. State Bar, 218 Cal. 329, 23 P.2d 291, as stating the applicable rule of law. It is there said, 218 Cal. at page 333, 23 P.2d at page 292, that "an attorney is forbidden to do either of two things after severing his relationship with a former client. He may not do anything which will injuriously affect his former client in any matter in which he formerly represented him, nor may he at any time use against his former client knowledge or information acquired by virtue of the previous relationship." Petitioner does not challenge this rule but contends that under all the facts disclosed by the record he should not be disciplined for representing Mrs. Cornwell against Blake, his former client. His representation of Blake in the first action extended no further than the filing of the complaint and other than the fact that both actions trace their origin to Blake's ownership of the property and Mrs. Cornwell's operation of a beauty parlor thereon under contract with him, the evidence herein fails to disclose that petitioner obtained any confidential information during his relations with Blake which he could have used or did use to Blake's disadvantage. In addition, according to petitioner's uncontradicted testimony, he filed the complaint in the second action for Mrs. Cornwell only after he had made inquiry at the State Bar office and of his office associates as to the propriety of his proceeding in the matter. When challenged by Blake's counsel prior to trial of the second action, petitioner immediately informed him that he had cleared the matter through the State Bar office and then offered to submit it to the trial judge in chambers before trial. The latter offer having been declined and a motion having been made by adversary counsel to exclude him from the case, petitioner substituted himself out.

In my opinion the record in this case fails to establish a violation of rule 5 of the Rules of Professional Conduct, and is therefore insufficient to sustain the findings and recommendation of the Local Administrative Committee and Board of Governors. A reasonable and common sense application of this rule would not bar an attorney from accepting employment adverse to a former client unless such employment related "to a matter in reference to which he had obtained confidential information by reason of or in the course of his employment by such * * * former client." The evidence is without conflict that no "confidential information" was obtained by petitioner from Blake. The latter did not testify in this proceeding, and his attorney testified positively that petitioner was not guilty of any misconduct whatsoever.

Obviously, rule 5 was adopted for the purpose of protecting a client against the use by his former attorney of confidential information obtained while the relationship of attorney and client existed between them. As so construed it has a highly salutary purpose. Those who have been engaged in the practice of law for a decade or more are cognizant of the fact that an attorney may accept employment against a former client in many matters without committing a violation of the above-mentioned rule.

In Golden v. State Bar, 213 Cal. 237, 247, 2 P.2d 325, 329, it is stated that charges against an attorney "must be sustained by convincing proof to a reasonable certainty, and any reasonable doubts should be resolved in favor of the accused." Aside from any question as to the soundness of petitioner's judgment in filing the second action against his former client, I find nothing in the record indicating that he intended thereby to take any advantage of such former client and the disciplinary proceeding should therefore be dismissed.

---

22 Cal.2d 677

PEOPLE v. GODLEWSKI et al.

Cr. 4480.

Supreme Court of California.

Aug. 3, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 26, 1943.

1. Criminal law 🔑178

Where new section 1381 of Penal Code providing that within ninety days after demand by prisoner in state prison, any pending charge against prisoner must be brought to trial or be dismissed was given number next preceding first section of chapter 8 of the Code dealing with dismissal of actions for failure to prosecute, and section 1382 dealt generally with dismissals for failure to prosecute section 1381 was controlled by section 1387 of chapter 8, providing that an order for dismissal of a felony charge as provided for in the chapter is not a bar to another prosecution for the same felony, and hence dismissal of a felony charge under section 1381, is not a bar to another prosecution for the same offense. Pen.Code, §§ 681a, 686, 1379, 1381, 1382, 1387.

2. Criminal law 🔑178

Under statutes providing that within ninety days after demand by a prisoner in state prison, any pending charge against prisoner must be brought to trial or be dismissed and that such an order for dismissal is not a bar to any other prosecution for same offense, if offense is a felony, dismissal of justice court complaint was not a bar to subsequent filing of superior court information charging prisoner in state prison with commission of a felony based upon same facts charged in complaint. Pen. Code, §§ 1381, 1387.

3. Constitutional law 🔑33

The constitutional provision that accused in criminal actions are entitled to "speedy trials" establishes a fundamental right and is self-executing. Const. art. 1, § 13.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Speedy Trial".

4. Criminal law 🔑576(1)

The enactments of the legislature with respect to a speedy trial and the time within which a trial must be had are supplementary to and a construction of constitutional provision that accused in criminal actions are entitled to a speedy trial and an inexcused delay beyond the time fixed by statute without accused's consent entitles him to dismissal of the prosecution. Pen. Code, § 1382; Const. art. 1, § 13.

5. Criminal law 🔑573, 575

What constitutes a "speedy trial" within constitutional provision that accused are entitled to speedy trials must be determined in the light of all the circumstances, and the point of beginning of the time for bringing accused to trial is the commencement of the prosecution against him. Const. art. 1, § 13.

6. Criminal law 🔑573

The basic policy underlying constitutional provision that accused are entitled to speedy trials is to protect accused from having criminal charges pending against them an undue length of time, and even though accused are not imprisoned on the charges, they are entitled to a speedy trial. Const. art. 1, § 13.

7. Criminal law 🔑573, 575

Under statute providing that within ninety days after demand by a prisoner in state prison, any pending charge against prisoner must be brought to trial or be dismissed, time commences when prisoner delivers his demand to district attorney, and when that charge has been dismissed against him because of failure to bring him to trial, the charge is no longer pending against him, and therefore another information may be filed against him without depriving him of a "speedy trial" and filing of a new information for the same offense commences a new period of time. Pen.Code, § 1381; Const. art. 1, § 13.

8. Criminal law ⚷573

Under statute providing that a prisoner in a state prison has right to have any prosecution pending against him brought to trial within ninety days after demand or to have such charges dismissed, where justice court felony complaint against prisoner in state prison was dismissed, subsequent superior court felony information for the same offense filed within the statutory time did not deprive accused of his constitutional right to a "speedy trial." Pen.Code, § 1381; Const. art. 1, § 13.

9. Criminal law ⚷576(8)

Where no warrant of arrest was served upon prisoner in state prison and he did not make demand upon the district attorney that he be brought to trial, prisoner did not comply with statute providing that within ninety days after demand by a prisoner in state prison any pending charge against prisoner must be brought to trial or be dismissed. Pen.Code, § 1381.

10. Criminal law ⚷575

A complaint filed in justice's court against prisoner in state prison was not an "indictment" or an "information" within statute requiring trials to be had within sixty days after the finding of an indictment or the filing of an information, and hence where an information was filed against prisoner within sixty days after he had been held to answer, statute was not applicable to prisoner. Pen.Code, § 1382 (1, 2).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Indictment" and "Information".

11. Criminal law ⚷576(8)

The requirement of a demand in statute providing that within ninety days after demand by a prisoner in state prison any pending charge against prisoner must be brought to trial or be dismissed is not unreasonable and does not abrogate constitutional guarantee of a "speedy trial", but is merely regulatory of the guarantee. Pen. Code, § 1381; Const. art. 1, § 13.

12. Burglary ⚷41(1)
Larceny ⚷65

Evidence that defendant possessed burglar tools shortly after commission of crime and failed to account therefor together with other circumstances sustained convictions of burglary and of grand theft.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

John S. Godlewski and another were convicted of burglary and of grand theft, and they appeal.

Affirmed.

Prior opinion, 132 P.2d 540.

Morris Lavine, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Bayard Rhone, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

Appellants, Godlewski and Taranski, appeal from a judgment of conviction of burglary and grand theft, felonies, committed in Los Angeles County.

On April 2, 1941, a complaint was filed in a justice's court in Los Angeles County charging appellants with the offenses involved upon this appeal. On the same day warrants for their arrest were issued. On April 17, 1941, both appellants were sentenced to a state prison for an offense, not here involved, and commenced to serve their terms. On August 15, 1941, a peace officer in Los Angeles County filed an order with the warden of the prison to "hold" appellant, Godlewski. On November 3, 1941, appellant Godlewski, in accordance with section 1381 of the Penal Code, demanded of the District Attorney of Los Angeles County a hearing and trial on the complaint filed against him on April 2, 1941. On February 16, 1942, more than ninety days after the demand, and no hearing having been had, appellant moved the justice of the peace under said section 1381 to dismiss the charges made against him in the last-mentioned complaint. The motion was granted on February 18, 1942. Thereafter, apparently, a new complaint was filed against both defendants containing the same charges as set forth in the first complaint. The transcript of the justice's court docket where the dismissal was granted contains no mention of a preliminary hearing or order holding the defendants to answer, but a preliminary hearing was had before another justice of the peace on the new complaint, and an order was made holding the defendants to answer. Thereafter, on April 21, 1942, the District Attorney of Los Angeles County filed in the superior court of that county, an information charging both defendants with the offenses set forth in the order holding them to answer, which were the same offenses as those set forth in the first complaint. A motion to dismiss the information was denied and the trial followed resulting in the above-mentioned convictions.

Appellant Godlewski urges that the dismissal by the justice of the peace of the first complaint barred the later prosecution for the same offense resulting in his conviction, and, if it did not, his constitutional right to a speedy trial was impaired because the time within which he is entitled to a trial may not be indefinitely extended by successive new prosecutions for the same offense where prior proceedings have been dismissed for failure to prosecute.

[1, 2] Section 1381 of the Penal Code provides that: "Whenever a defendant has been convicted, in any court of this State, of the commission of a felony or indictable misdemeanor and has been sentenced to and has entered upon a term of imprisonment in a State prison and at the time of the entry upon such term of imprisonment there is pending, in any court of this State, any other indictment, information, or complaint charging the defendant with the commission of any crime it is hereby made mandatory upon the district attorney of the county in which such charge is pending to bring the same to trial within ninety days after such defendant shall have delivered to said district attorney written notice of the place of his imprisonment and his desire to be brought to trial upon said charge unless a continuance beyond said ninety days is requested or consented to by the defendant, in open court, and such request or consent entered upon the minutes of the court in which event the ninety day period herein provided for shall commence to run anew from the date to which such consent or request continued the trial.

"In the event such action is not brought to trial within the ninety days as herein provided the court in which such charge is pending must, on motion or suggestion of the district attorney, or of the defendant or his counsel, or of the State Board of Prison Directors, or on its own motion, dismiss such charge.

"If a charge is filed against a person during the time such person is serving a sentence in any State prison of this State it is hereby made mandatory upon the district attorney of the county in which such charge is filed to bring the same to trial within ninety days after said person shall have delivered to said district attorney written notice of the place of his imprisonment and his desire to be brought to trial upon said charge, unless a continuance is requested or consented to by the defendant, in open court, and such request or consent entered upon the minutes of the court, in which event the ninety day period herein provided for shall commence to run anew from the date to which such request or consent continued the trial.

"In the event such action is not brought to trial within the ninety days as herein provided the court in which such action is pending must, on motion or suggestion of the district attorney, or of the defendant or his counsel, or of the State Board of Prison Directors, or on its own motion, dismiss the charge." The Constitution provides that in a criminal action defendant is entitled to a "speedy and public trial". Cal. Const. art. I, sec. 13.

To the same effect are sections 686 and 681a of the Penal Code. Section 1387 of the Penal Code provides that an order for a dismissal as provided for in this chapter is a bar to any other prosecution for the same offense if the offense is a misdemeanor, but is not a bar if the offense is a felony. That section was in the original Penal Code as adopted in 1872 in the same form as at present insofar as applicable to the instant case. It was amended in 1905, Stats.1905, p. 724. It has always been in chapter 8 of title 10, part 2 of the Penal Code. The heading of that chapter in the original code reads: "Dismissal of Action, Before or After Indictment, for Want of Prosecution or Otherwise." The first section in chapter 8 in the original code was 1382. The last section in the preceding chapter 7, which deals with compromising certain public offenses, is section 1379. Section 1381, supra, was added to the Penal Code in 1931, Stats. 1931, p. 1060, and amended in 1933. Stats. 1933, p. 1689. Although nothing was said by the Legislature in the act of 1931, adding section 1381 concerning its being a part of chapter 8, it is quite apparent that such was the Legislature's intention, inasmuch as that chapter deals with the dismissal of actions for failure to prosecute, the same subject embraced in section 1381, and the number given to it the one next preceding the first section in that chapter (section 1382), and not the next succeeding number following the last section in chapter 7 (section 1379). Furthermore, it is to be noted that section 1382 deals generally with dismissals for failure to prosecute. Section 1381 is concerned particularly with such dismissals where the defendant is confined in a state prison for another offense. We believe it is clear, therefore, that the Legislature intended that section 1381 was to be controlled by section 1387. Hence, a dismissal under section 1381, where the offense is a felony, as in the instant case, is not a bar to any other prosecution for the same offense. The filing and prosecution of the information against appellant Godlewski was not therefore barred by the prior dismissal of the complaint for the same offenses in the justice's court.

[3-8] Contrary to appellant Godlewski's contention, the foregoing effect given to section 1381 did not deprive him of his constitutional right to a speedy trial. Cal. Const. art. I, sec. 13. True, that constitutional provision establishes a fundamental right and is self-executing. In re Alpine, 203 Cal. 731, 265 P. 947, 58 A.L.R. 1500; Harris v. Municipal Court, 209 Cal. 55, 285 P. 699; In re Begerow, 133 Cal. 349, 65 P. 828, 85 Am.St.Rep. 178, 56 L.R.A. 513; People v. Molinari, 23 Cal.App.2d Supp. 761, 67 P.2d 767; People v. Romero, 13 Cal. App.2d 667, 57 P.2d 557. The enactments of the Legislature with respect to a speedy trial and the time within which a trial must be had are supplementary to and a construction of the Constitution, and an inexcused delay beyond the time fixed in section 1382 of the Penal Code without defendant's consent entitles the defendant to a dismissal. People v. Romero, supra; People v. Angelopoulos, 30 Cal.App.2d 538, 86 P.2d 873; People v. Molinari, supra; In re Alpine, supra; Harris v. Municipal Court, supra; In re Begerow, supra; In re Ford, 160 Cal. 334, 116 P. 757, 35 L.R.A.,N.S., 882, Ann.Cas. 1912D, 1267; Ford v. Superior Court, 17 Cal.App. 1, 118 P. 96; People v. Walker, 76 Cal.App. 192, 244 P. 94. What constitutes a speedy trial must be determined in the light of all the circumstances. People v. Brock, 87 Cal.App. 601, 262 P. 369, 263 P. 544; In re Alpine, supra; People v. Molinari, supra. The point of beginning of the time for bringing the accused to trial is the commencement of the prosecution against the accused. Harris v. Municipal Court, supra. The basic policy underlying the constitutional provision is to protect the accused from having criminal charges pending against him an undue length of time. Even though defendant is not imprisoned on the charge, he is still entitled to a speedy trial. Harris v. Municipal Court, supra; Rice v. Superior Court, 40 Cal.App.2d 391, 104 P.2d 874; Ford v. Superior Court, supra. Under section 1381, the time commences when the defendant delivers his demand to the district attorney. When that charge has been dismissed against him as was done in the instant case because of failure to bring him to trial, the charge is no longer pending against him. We see no reason therefore why another information may not be filed against him after such dismissal. He has had the first charge dismissed and thus his right to a speedy trial protected. The filing of a new information for the same offense commences a new period of time. From the time the complaint in the justice's court was dismissed on February 18, 1942, until another charge was made against him, no charge was pending against him. In Re Begerow, 136 Cal. 293, 68 P. 773, 56 L.R.A. 528, the defendant was tried five times for murder, each trial resulting in a disagreement of the jury. More than sixty days after the discharge of the last jury, the defendant was released on a writ of habeas corpus upon the ground that he was being held in violation of section 1382(2) of the Penal Code providing for a dismissal of the charge if no trial is had within sixty days after the filing of the information. In re Begerow, 133 Cal. 349, 65 P. 828, 56 L.R.A. 513, 85 Am.St.Rep. 178. A complaint was thereafter filed against him for the same charge. His application for discharge on habeas corpus on the ground that his constitutional right to a speedy trial had been invaded, was denied under section 1387 of the Penal Code. See also Ex parte Clarke, 54 Cal. 412; People v. Dawson, 210 Cal. 366, 371, 292 P. 267; People v. Palassou, 14 Cal.App. 123, 111 P. 109; People v. Grace, 88 Cal.App. 222, 263 P. 306; In re Begerow, 133 Cal. 349, 65 P. 828, 56 L.R.A. 522, 85 Am.St.Rep. 178; Ex parte Warrenburg, 63 Okl.Cr. 125, 73 P.2d 476.

There may be circumstances justifying relief from an abuse of criminal process by the commencement of successive prosecutions, but those circumstances are not present in the instant case.

[9-11] Apparently no warrant of arrest was served upon appellant Taranski although he was serving a prison term in the same prison as Godlewski. He did not make any demand upon the district attorney that he be brought to trial, hence did not comply with section 1381 of the Penal Code. Section 1382 of the Penal Code is not applicable to him inasmuch as his case does not fall within its terms. It requires that an information must be filed against the defendant within fifteen days after he has been held to answer. Penal Code, § 1382(1). As far as appears that was done. It also requires the trial must be had within sixty days after the finding of the indictment or filing of the information. Penal Code, sec. 1382(2). That section was not violated inasmuch as the complaint filed against him in the justice's court was neither an indictment nor an information. It may be that he is entitled to invoke the constitutional provision independently of any statute (see Harris v. Municipal Court, supra), but as we have seen, he falls squarely within the provisions of section 1382, relating to the trial of defendants confined in a state prison. He made no demand as there required. We find nothing unreasonable in the requirement for a demand. It does not abrogate the constitutional guarantee. It is merely regulatory of it. Persons already incarcerated in prison will not suffer imprisonment during delay.

Appellant Taranski contends the evidence is insufficient to sustain the judgment of conviction against him. On March 11, 1941, the State Department of Motor Vehicles had a safe in its office in Pasadena containing over $400 in cash and some checks. It was locked by an employee when she left work shortly after 5 p. m. on that day. A few minutes before midnight that night it was discovered that the rear door of the office had been broken open and the safe removed. There were marks on the office floor from dragging the safe. The safe was discovered about four miles from its original location with its door having been forceably removed. The checks it contained and its door were lying on the ground near the safe. The cash was not found. Some time later an automobile registered in appellant Godlewski's name was found in Nevada. The imprint of its tires was the same as marks found at the rear of the office which was burglarized. Godlewski was residing in an apartment in Los Angeles until a few days prior to March 11, 1941, the date of the burglary, and was frequently visited by appellant Taranski. The latter was seen in the office of the department several days prior to the time of the crime. Godlewski was seen walking along the street in the vicinity of the office the evening of the crime. The metal strip on the sill of the car door contained paint identified as the same as that on the safe. Godlewski and Taranski were together and were arrested in Fresno five days after the day of the crime. Taranski was carrying a suit case containing a pinch bar, a cold chisel, a hacksaw, a sledge hammer and flashlight. The chisel and pinch bar contained remnants of the fire clay used as insulation in the safe and marks on the safe indicated that they had been made by the chisel and pinch bar. Taranski first denied and later admitted to the officers he had lived in Los Angeles. When asked why he denied he had been there he replied: "Well, what would you do?" At the time of their arrest both appellants were carrying pistols. Neither of the appellants testified or produced any evidence.

[12] The evidence is sufficient to sustain the conviction of Taranski. Assuming, as argued by Taranski, that the possession by defendant of burglar tools shortly after the commission of the crime, like the possession of stolen property, standing alone is not sufficient to prove the defendant's guilt of the offense of burglary, when that factor is combined with other circumstances such as are present in the instant case, there is sufficient evidence. That is especially true where the defendant has failed to account for the possession upon a theory inconsistent with his guilt of the offense charged. See People v. Parkinson, 138 Cal.App. 599, 33 P.2d 18; People v. Russell, 120 Cal.App. 622, 8 P.2d 209; People v. Golembiewski, 25 Cal.App.2d 115, 76 P.2d 717; People v. Shaw, 46 Cal.App.2d 768, 117 P.2d 34; People v. Ellis, 33 Cal.App.2d 616, 92 P.2d 431.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, TRAYNOR, and SCHAUER, JJ., concur.

22 Cal.2d 540

STRONG v. STRONG.

S. F. 16249.

Supreme Court of California.
July 22, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 19, 1943.

1. Husband and wife 🔑247

The rights of husband and wife in realty conveyed to husband during marriage in 1925 and by them conveyed in 1932, were required to be measured by the statutes in effect when the property was acquired. Civ.Code, § 172a.

2. Husband and wife 🔑267(1)

Where property conveyed to husband was acquired before the adoption in 1927 of the Code section giving the wife a present and equal interest in community property, the wife adequately signified her consent to a transfer by the husband of the property in 1932 by signing the deed and it was not necessary that she be named therein as grantor. Civ.Code, §§ 161(a), 172.

3. Husband and wife 🔑267(1)

The purpose of code section providing that wife must join with the husband in executing instrument conveying community property was to give a wife a legal power over conveyances of community property disadvantageous to her, and since she can exercise this power effectively by refusing to sign the deed, there is no need for more elaborate procedure. Civ.Code, § 172a.

4. Limitation of actions 🔑41

Where deed was recorded several years before commencement of action to quiet title thereto, as against defendant wife who was one of the grantors, wife was barred from asserting plea of the one-year statute of limitations, notwithstanding she brought no action to avoid deed but invoked the statute as a defendant, since statutes of limitation apply also to causes of action raised by defendants. Civ.Code, § 172a; Code Civ.Proc. § 335 et seq.

5. Husband and wife 🔑267(1)

The Code section as it existed in 1925, that no action to avoid a conveyance of community real property in which wife has not joined, shall be commenced after the expiration of one year from the filing for record of such instrument, does not manifest a legislative intent that the section should be construed more strictly than the usual statute of limitations. Civ.Code, § 172a.

6. Limitation of actions 🔑182(2)

A party relying on defense of statute of limitations must plead it.

7. Adverse possession 🔑110(4)

Where plaintiff in suit to quiet title pleaded ownership, plea was sufficient to permit proof of title acquired as result of running of statute of limitations. Civ. Code, § 172a.

8. Deeds 🔑190

In action to quiet title to property against wife who joined in a conveyance thereof, judgment for wife could not be sustained on ground that she was induced to execute conveyance by her husband's false representations, where wife did not plead fraud.

9. Pleading 🔑8(15)

General rule that fraud must be specifically pleaded applies particularly in quiet title actions.

10. Quieting title 🔑43

In action to quiet title to property, against defendant wife who joined in conveyance thereof with her husband, judgment for defendant could not be sustained on ground that she had been induced to execute deed by her husband's false representations, since any such right she might have had to cancellation, or to declaration of a constructive trust were entirely equitable and could not be asserted in a quiet title action containing mere general allegations asserting defendant's ownership but denying that of plaintiff.

11. Trial 🔑397(1)

A judgment is not supported by proof of fraud if there is no finding of fraud. Code Civ.Proc. § 632.

12. Trial 🔑404(1)

Where findings are made substantially in the language of the pleadings, they do not include issues not raised by the pleadings.

13. Deeds 🔑188

In an action to quiet title to property against defendant wife who joined in conveyance thereof, where wife sought to avoid conveyance on ground of her husband's false representations in signing the deed, rules of pleading governing cases of conveyances in fraud of creditors were inapplicable. Civ.Code, §§ 3439.04, 3439.09, 3440.

14. Fraudulent conveyances ⊂⇒230
Sheriffs and constables ⊂⇒137(4)

Where a conveyance has been made in fraud of creditors, a creditor may levy execution upon the property as if there had been no conveyance, and the sheriff who is sued for conversion by virtue of such an execution may prove under a denial of the grantee's title that the conveyance was fraudulent. Civ.Code, § 3439.09.

15. Fraudulent conveyances ⊂⇒57(1), 64(1), 137(1)

A conveyance may be in fraud of creditors because it was a gift by an insolvent donor, or was designed to put the property beyond reach of creditors, or in the case of personal property because it was not followed by immediate delivery. Civ.Code, §§ 3439.04, 3440.

SHENK and CARTER, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Frank M. Ogden, Judge.

Action by Blanche Hadley Strong against Muriel F. Strong to quiet title to real property. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Kenneth J. Carey, of Oakland, and Henderson & Henderson, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Snook & Snook & Chase and Samuel J. Chase, all of Oakland, for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

This action was brought by plaintiff Blanche Hadley Strong against defendant Muriel F. Strong to quiet title to a house and lot in the city of Oakland. The property was conveyed on December 16, 1925, by June Wadey to Lester H. Strong, at that time the husband of defendant Muriel F. Strong, and the deed was recorded on January 6, 1926. The purchase was made at least in part with community funds. In 1932 a grant deed was executed and delivered to plaintiff Blanche Hadley Strong, mother of Lester H. Strong. Both Lester H. Strong and Muriel F. Strong signed and acknowledged the deed, but only Lester H. Strong was named therein as grantor. Muriel F. Strong was induced to sign the deed by her husband's representations that he was in financial difficulty, that the conveyance was made for the protection of their home, and that there would shortly be a reconveyance to them. The deed was recorded on April 14, 1932. On January 14, 1938, Muriel F. Strong was granted a divorce and was awarded the house and lot, formerly the home of the family and subsequently the home of her two children and herself. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment in favor of the defendant.

The divorce decree could pass no interest to defendant unless the deed could not be enforced against her, so inquiry must first be directed at the effectiveness of the conveyance to plaintiff in 1932. Defendant invokes section 172a of the Civil Code, providing that the wife must join with the husband in executing any instrument by which "community real property or any interest therein is leased for a longer period than one year, or is sold, conveyed, or encumbered. * * *" Defendant contends that in order to join in executing the deed, the wife must be named therein as grantor.

[1, 2] Two early cases, Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 564, and Dentzel v. Waldie, 30 Cal. 138, involved legislation providing that a conveyance of the wife's separate property must be signed by the husband, that such a conveyance must be by joint deed, and that it must be executed by husband and wife. Hittel General Laws of California, (1872) pp. 103, 105, 516. This court held that the husband complied with these statutes by signing the deed, on the ground that it would be unreasonable to expect a husband who had no interest to convey to be a formal grantor. It declared that the husband was required to join merely to give or withhold his assent to the transfer and that he gave his assent by signing the deed. The same reasoning applies to Civil Code, section 172a. When that section was adopted in 1917, a wife had no legal interest in the community property (Spreckels v. Spreckels, 172 Cal. 775, 158 P. 537; In re Estate of Dargie, 179 Cal. 418, 177 P. 165; Lahaney v. Lahaney, 208 Cal. 323, 281 P. 67; McKay v. Lauriston, 204 Cal. 557, 269 P. 519; Stewart v. Stewart, 199 Cal. 318, 249 P. 197), and since she could grant no interest, the Legislature could hardly have intended her to act as grantor. The rights of the husband and wife must be measured by the statutes in effect when the property was acquired (McKay v. Lauriston, supra; Lahaney v. Lahaney, supra), and as the property in this case was acquired before the adoption in 1927 of Civil Code, section 161(a) providing that the wife has a "present, existing and equal" interest in community property, the wife adequately signified her consent to the transfer by the husband by signing the deed. Riley v. Gordon, 137 Cal.App. 311, 30 P.2d 617; see 3 Cal.Jur. Ten Yr. Supp. 593. Since the provisions of section 172a were the same in 1927 as in 1917 with respect to a wife's joining in a conveyance of community property, it is unlikely that any alteration in this meaning was intended in 1927.

[3] Defendant relies on Cordano v. Wright, 159 Cal. 610, 115 P. 227, Ann.Cas. 1912C, 1044, Roberts v. Abbott, 48 Cal.App. 779, 192 P. 345, and Childs v. Newfield, 136 Cal.App. 217, 28 P.2d 924, holding that if several persons sign a deed, some of whom are not named therein as grantors, only those so named convey their interest in the property granted. In distinguishing Ingoldsby v. Juan, and Dentzel v. Waldie, however, the court in Cordano v. Wright made it clear that those cases were correctly decided, and that a person without any legal interest in the property granted could by signing a deed comply with a statute requiring that he join in its execution. The rule in Cordano v. Wright had its origin in the fact that at common law deeds were not signed but sealed, and identification of the grantor was therefore required in the body of the deed. Even after seals were replaced by signatures and the rule became unnecessary it was still applied mechanically. Elliot v. Sleeper, 2 N.H. 525. Several courts, however, have refused to adhere to the rule now that it has lost its reason for being. Sterling v. Park, 129 Ga. 309, 58 S.E. 828, 13 L.R.A.,N.S., 298, 12 Ann.Cas. 201, 121 Am.St.Rep. 224; Agar v. Streeter, 183 Mich. 600, 150 N.W. 160, L.R.A.1915D, 196, Ann.Cas.1916E, 518; Hrouska v. Janke, 66 Wis. 252, 28 N.W. 166; Elliot v. Sleeper, supra. See Blake v. Hedrick, 94 W.Va. 761, 120 S.E. 906; Runyan v. Snyder, 45 Colo. 156, 100 P. 420. Certainly it should not be applied where there is no occasion for even its mechanical application. The purpose of section 172a was to give a wife a veto power over conveyances of community property disadvantageous to her (Stewart v. Stewart, supra) and since she can exercise this power effectively by refusing to sign the deed, there is no need for more elaborate procedure.

[4] Defendant, moreover, asserts her rights under section 172a too late. At the time the property was acquired this section provided that no action to avoid a conveyance of community real property in which the wife had not joined "shall be commenced after the expiration of one year from the filing for record of such instrument in the recorder's office in the county in which the land is situate." St.1917, p. 829. The deed to plaintiff was recorded several years before the commencement of this action. It is immaterial that the wife has brought no action to avoid plaintiff's deed but invokes section 172a as defendant in a quiet title suit, for statutes of limitation, although commonly phrased in terms restricting only the commencement of actions (Cal.Code Civ.Proc. sec. 335 et seq.), apply to causes of action raised by the defendant. Hermosa Beach, etc., Co. v. Law Credit Co., 175 Cal. 493, 166 P. 22; Bradbury v. Higginson, 167 Cal. 553, 140 P. 254; Union Sugar Co. v. Hollister Estate Co., 3 Cal.2d 740, 47 P.2d 273; Bliss v. Sneath, 119 Cal. 526, 51 P. 848. "A title which will not sustain a declaration will not sustain a plea." Holmes, J., in Chapin v. Freeland, 142 Mass. 383, 8 N.E. 128, 129, 56 Am.Rep. 701. Defendant, despite her plea of ownership, seeks in fact to prevail on the basis of a cause of action to avoid plaintiff's deed, a cause of action on which the statute has run.

[5] Defendant's argument that the statute should not bar this cause necessitates the assumption that 172a should be construed more strictly than the usual statute of limitations. The reverse is true. The recipient of a deed executed by the husband alone obtains a voidable interest. The object of the one year limitation in section 172a is to make that interest absolute after that time just as statutes barring actions for the recovery of real property are usually construed to create a new title in the adverse possessor and to terminate the interest of the paper titleholder. See Ballantine, Title by Adverse Possession, 32 Harv. L.Rev. 135; Tiffany on Real Property, 3rd Ed., section 1133, et seq.; Restatement: Property, Introductory Note to chapter 15. It is not reasonable to suppose that the Legislature intended to make the grantee's right to the property dependent on the chance of the wife's appearing as plaintiff rather than defendant.

[6, 7] It is also contended that plaintiff waived the limitation under 172a on defendant's cause of action. It is true that a party relying on the defense of the statute of limitations must plead it. See Union

Sugar Co. v. Hollister Estate Co., 3 Cal.2d 740, 47 P.2d 273. Plaintiff, however, pleaded that she owned the property, and a plea of ownership is sufficient to permit proof of a title acquired as a result of the running of the statute of limitations. Jordan v. Beale, 172 Cal. 226, 155 P. 990; Garbarino v. Noce, 181 Cal. 125, 183 P. 532, 6 A.L.R. 1433; Myers v. Berven, 166 Cal. 484, 137 P. 260; Gray v. Walker, 157 Cal. 381, 108 P. 278; Montecito Valley Water Co. v. Santa Barbara, 144 Cal. 578, 77 P. 1113; Merrill v. Hooper, 125 Cal.App. 80, 13 P.2d 786; Rowe v. Wurster, 50 Cal.App. 196, 194 P. 725.

[8-10] Defendant contends that the judgment quieting title in her should be affirmed on the ground that she was induced by her husband's false representations to sign the deed. Defendant did not plead fraud, however, although the general rule that fraud must be specifically pleaded (see cases cited in 12 Cal.Jur. 800, et seq.) applies particularly to quiet title actions. Thompson v. Moore, 8 Cal.2d 367, 372, 65 P.2d 800, 109 A.L.R. 1027; Maison v. Puntenney, 212 Cal. 134, 137–139, 298 P. 33; Carpenter v. Smallpage, 220 Cal. 129, 133, 29 P.2d 841; Id., Cal.Sup., 30 P.2d 995; Burris v. Adams, 96 Cal. 664, 667, 668, 31 P. 565; Davies v. Symmes, 49 Cal.App.2d 433, 445, 446, 122 P.2d 102. Defendant, moreover, is not the legal owner, for title passed on execution of the deed. See cases cited in 12 Cal.Jur. 723. Any rights that she might have to the cancellation of the deed or to the declaration of a constructive trust are entirely equitable (Rocha v. Rocha, 197 Cal. 396, 240 P. 1010; Farrar v. Steenbergh, 173 Cal. 94, 159 P. 707; Freligh v. McGrew, 95 Cal.App. 251, 272 P. 791; Walsh, Equity, 492), and it is settled that such rights cannot be established in an action to quiet title when the pleadings contain merely general allegations asserting defendant's ownership and denying that of plaintiff. Aalwyn's Law Institute v. Martin, 173 Cal. 21, 26, 159 P. 158; Robinson v. Muir, 151 Cal. 118, 124, 90 P. 521; County of Los Angeles v. Hannon, 159 Cal. 37, 48, 112 P. 878, Ann.Cas.1912B, 1065; Reilly v. Wright, 117 Cal. 77, 80, 48 P. 970.

[11, 12] In the present case there was not only no pleading, but no finding of fraud, and a judgment is not supported by proof of fraud if there is no finding of fraud. Taylor v. Taylor, 192 Cal. 71, 218 P. 756, 51 A.L.R. 1074; Floyd v. Tierra Grande Dev. Co., 51 Cal.App. 654, 197 P. 684; Code Civ.Proc. § 632; see cases cited in 24 Cal.Jur. 935 et seq. Any issue of fraud in this lawsuit entered through the evidence admitted, not through the pleadings. The findings are made substantially in the language of the pleadings and do not include issues not raised by them. Taylor v. Taylor, 192 Cal. 71, 81, 218 P. 756, 51 A.L.R. 1074.

[13-15] The rules of pleading governing cases of conveyances in fraud of creditors have no bearing on the present case, which does not involve such a conveyance. Cf. Howe v. Johnson, 107 Cal. 67, 40 P. 42; Banning v. Marleau, 121 Cal. 240, 53 P. 692; Mason v. Vestal, 88 Cal. 396, 26 P. 213, 22 Am.St.Rep. 310; Grum v. Barney, 55 Cal. 254; Bird v. Murphy, 72 Cal.App. 39, 236 P. 154; Sellers v. Neil, 47 Cal.App.2d 128, 117 P.2d 390. Such conveyances are void as against creditors, under the express terms of Civil Code, section 3439, et seq. in effect when the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act was adopted in 1939, and of Civil Code, section 3439.09, in effect thereafter. A creditor may levy execution on the property as if there had been no conveyance (Grum v. Barney, supra; Mason v. Vestal, supra; see Bird v. Murphy, supra), and a sheriff who is sued for conversion by virtue of such an execution may prove, under a denial of the grantee's title, that the conveyance was fraudulent. Howe v. Johnson, supra; Banning v. Marleau, supra; Mason v. Vestal, supra; Grum v. Barney, supra. A conveyance may be in fraud of creditors because it was a gift by an insolvent donor, Civil Code, § 3439.04, or was designed to put the property beyond the reach of creditors, Civil Code § 3439.04, or, in the case of personal property, because it was not followed by immediate delivery. Civil Code, § 3440. The fraud that entitles a party to rescind a transfer, however, is altogether different, for it is based on false representations inducing reliance, and thus involves different considerations of policy and different legal consequences.

The judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS and SCHAUER, JJ., concurred.

CURTIS, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent. As a preliminary point of discussion it is necessary to advert briefly to the presentation and disposition of this litigation in the trial court. The pleadings are in the usual short form appropriate to quiet title actions. The complaint alleges the plaintiff's ownership of certain described real property and the defendant's assertion of an interest therein adverse to the plaintiff. The defendant in her answer denies all the averments of the complaint except as to her adverse claim, which she admits, but she denies that such claim is without right; in this connection defendant alleges that she is the owner and rightfully in possession of the property and prays that title be quieted in her. The case was tried by the court sitting without a jury. Following the general form of the allegations contained in the parties' respective pleadings, the trial court in its findings resolved the adverse claims of ownership in favor of the defendant and judgment was entered in accordance with that adjudication of the title to the property. Such determination rests upon the inefficacy of the deed of 1932 to sustain the plaintiff's cause of action.

The following review of the record will demonstrate the propriety of the trial court's decision: While the defendant admitted signing the deed in question, she consistently maintained that she had no intention of "passing the title" or giving away [her] home" or "passing any interest" to the plaintiff. It appears that the defendant knew the instrument was drafted in favor of her mother-in-law, but that because of her ill health the defendant did not read the document and relied solely on her husband's statement that the transaction was "merely for convenience" and a reconveyance by his mother would immediately follow. Illustrative of the defendant's understanding of the matter are these excerpts from her testimony: In answer to the question "What did your husband tell you" when the deed was executed, the defendant upon direct examination testified: "That he wanted me to sign this deed to his mother merely for a convenience; that very shortly it would be put back in my name, and the other paper I signed [at the same time] he told me that was the deed giving it back to us. I did not read either document due to my condition." On cross-examination when queried as to the identity of the two documents she claimed to have signed contemporaneously the defendant stated: "One he told me was giving the house to his mother and the other was his mother giving it back to me." When asked as to what reason her husband gave her for negotiating the transfer, the defendant answered: "He said he was in some business difficulty and he didn't want the home taken from his two children and his wife—he wanted to safeguard us." Confirmatory of the defendant's understanding of the affair is the fact that her possession and enjoyment of the property was in nowise disturbed as the result of this deed. At the trial the defendant's husband, Lester H. Strong, admitted that he told the defendant when she signed the deed that such transfer was necessary because of financial difficulties.

Also of some pertinency in this connection is the evidence relating to the matter of consideration in support of the disputed conveyance. At the trial the plaintiff attempted to correlate the transaction here involved with her action some eight weeks later in deeding two pieces of real estate to her son, Lester H. Strong. Although the latter was called to testify on behalf of the plaintiff, he was not asked to corroborate his mother's claim as to the issue of consideration. It appears that the defendant did not know of these later conveyances to her husband, and she, therefore, was unable to testify as to their purpose. However, she did state that at the time in question the plaintiff was financially interested in certain business ventures of Lester H. Strong and concerned with their successful outcome. On cross-examination the plaintiff admitted that she frequently gave her son money or property on which he might obtain loans to relieve pressing financial obligations. In view of the significant discrepancy between the respective dates of the mentioned deeds, the natural as well as business relationship between the plaintiff and Lester H. Strong, and the conflicting possibilities as to the object of the plaintiff's transfer of realty to her son, the trial court, having the advantage of observing the demeanor of the parties on the witness-stand, apparently elected to discredit the plaintiff's claim as to the existence of any connection between the successive conveyances and concluded that they were independent transactions, not intended as consideration one for the other. In accord with the settled rule that it is within the exclusive province of the trial court to pass upon the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of the evidence, the implied finding against the plaintiff on the issue of consideration would not be disturbed on appeal.

From this state of the record it can readily be inferred that the defendant was induced to sign the deed of 1932 solely by reason of the persuasion and misleading explanation of her husband as to the feigned nature of the transfer; that she never realized the full significance or import of the instrument, but that she had implicit trust in her husband's management of their business affairs and accepted what he said without question; and that the confidence she reposed in him was betrayed in an attempt to consummate a conveyance of their community real property to her detriment. Thus, there was an absence of actual consent to the transfer on the part of the defendant, and under the prevailing circumstances the plaintiff is not in a position to urge the binding force of the defendant's signature to the deed as an unchallengeable manifestation of assent to the conveyance. While it does not appear that the plaintiff took part in the procurement of the deed the equities of the case support the defendant's claim to relief upon the basis of her husband's breach of his fiduciary duty to protect her interests and the want of consideration in support of the transfer. From this aspect the present situation is akin in principle to those cases wherein a gift, grant or bequest obtained by undue influence of a third person is vitiated thereby, and it is held immaterial that in the procurement thereof the immediate beneficiary did not participate. Moore v. Moore, 81 Cal. 195, 22 P. 589, 874; see cases collected in 96 A.L.R. 613–615.

The majority opinion holds that these evidentiary matters would have no bearing upon the determination of this appeal because the defendant did not plead the fraudulent character of the deed nor did the trial court make a finding based thereon. However, such omissions in the record do not militate against the propriety of the judgment nullifying the operative effect of the conveyance to the plaintiff in 1932. In a quiet title suit, unlike other actions generally, a defendant under a general denial may raise the issue that the plaintiff acquired title in whole or in part through a fraudulent transfer affecting her claim of title thereto. 12 Cal.Jur. § 95, p. 1056; Howe v. Johnson, 107 Cal. 67, 40 P. 42; Banning v. Marleau, 121 Cal. 240, 53 P. 692; Bird v. Murphy, 72 Cal.App. 39, 236 P. 154; Sellers v. Neil, 47 Cal.App.2d 128, 117 P.2d 390. Nor after consideration of this point was the trial court required to make a special finding thereon. As previously stated, the complaint and answer are in the conventional style suitable to this type of litigation, and the findings are responsive to the general form of the pleadings. The issue as to the fraudulent nature of the conveyance arose merely in the evidence at the trial. Findings of fact are sufficient if they follow the language of the pleadings. Dam v. Zink, 112 Cal. 91, 44 P. 331; Vasey v. Campbell, 4 Cal.App. 451, 88 P. 509; Biurrun v. Elizalde, 75 Cal.App. 44, 242 P. 109; also, see cases collected in 24 Cal.Jur. § 213, p. 984. Ownership of the property by the defendant was the ultimate fact which was alleged in the answer and which was set forth in the findings. Hitchcock v. Rooney, 171 Cal. 285, 152 P. 913; Hannah v. Canty, 175 Cal. 763, 167 P. 373. In reviewing the sufficiency of the findings to support a judgment, regard will be had to the ultimate facts and not to mere probative facts. 2 Cal.Jur. 872, and cases cited in Ten Year Supp.

The majority opinion further holds that the defendant is not now in a position to question the validity of the deed to the plaintiff because the time limit of one year from the date of recordation of the instrument, the period specified in section 172a as available for the wife's exercise of her right to avoid an unauthorized conveyance, had expired several years before the commencement of this quiet title action. However, this statement of the law has no application when the validity of the deed is questioned on the ground of fraud rather than non-compliance with the terms of section 172a. A statute of limitations is a special defense which may be either relied on or waived at the election of a party entitled to avail herself of it, and, if not specially made, it will be deemed to have been waived. 16 Cal.Jur. § 232, p. 640; In re Estate of Garcelon, 104 Cal. 570, 38 P. 414, 32 L.R.A. 595, 43 Am.St.Rep. 134; Bliss v. Sneath, 119 Cal. 526, 51 P. 848. Conceding that the general form of the pleadings in this action did not permit the plaintiff's assertion of a time limitation by formal plea and that without such preliminary foundation she could have urged such bar in the trial court in avoidance of the defendant's claim to relief, it does not appear from the record that the plaintiff did in fact present the point there. Consequently such matter should not be considered for the first time on appeal. In re Estate of Garcelon, supra; Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 51 P.

630; Bliss v. Sneath, supra. The rule governing such situation, where the formal plea of the statute of limitations is unnecessary in order to introduce evidence thereon at the trial, is stated in the case of Union Sugar Co. v. Hollister Estate Co., 3 Cal.2d 740, 745, 47 P.2d 273, 276: "However, it has been held that unless the adverse party invokes the plea of the statute at the trial, and brings to the attention of the trial court his purpose to offer evidence in support of such plea, the court cannot assume that he desires to make any such defense, and he cannot invoke the plea for the first time on appeal. [Citing authorities.]"

Consistent with this review of the record herein, the defendant is entitled to relief from the operative effect of the disputed conveyance. In my opinion the judgment should be affirmed.

SHENK, J., and CARTER, J., concurred.

Rehearing denied; SHENK, CURTIS, and CARTER, JJ., dissenting.

22 Cal.2d 580

DENIO et al. v. CITY OF HUNTINGTON BEACH.

L. A. 18172.

Supreme Court of California.

Aug. 3, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 1, 1943.

1. Municipal corporations 🔑232

A contract made by municipal council, if apparently fair, just and reasonable and prompted by necessities of situation or advantageous to municipality at time of its execution, is neither void nor voidable merely because some of its executory features may extend beyond terms of council members, but is binding on municipality and may not be summarily canceled by successor council, in absence of some other ground of avoidance.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑80

A municipal corporation's council is continuing body and remains same council in legal contemplation, regardless of changes in its personnel.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑254

A city, as well as individual, must respond in damages for its failure to keep faith with those with whom it contracts.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑214(3)

A contract, made by city council's direction for employment of attorneys as special counsel for city in preparation of charter and all legal matters connected with city's efforts to obtain just returns from oil and gas in tide lands within city boundaries, held valid and binding on city, so as to entitle such attorneys to recover from city compensation specified in contract as damages for breach thereof by their wrongful discharge.

5. Municipal corporations 🔑220(8)

In action against city for attorneys' fees under written employment contract, plaintiffs' testimony held sufficient to show that they did not abandon contract, so that their discharge and cancellation of contract by city was improper.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1002

A jury's determination of fact issue on conflicting testimony is binding on Supreme Court on appeal.

7. Municipal corporations 🔑220(8)

In action against city to recover attorneys' fees under contract to act as special counsel for city in all legal matters connected with its efforts to obtain just returns from oil and gas in tide lands within city boundaries for stated percentages of moneys received by city as royalties or from sale of oil and gas, evidence held sufficient to show that payments made to city by oil and gas lessee were on account of oil produced only from lands specified in contract.

8. Contracts 🔑155

Any ambiguity in written contract, interpretation of which is otherwise uncertain, must be construed against parties who drew contract.

9. Municipal corporations 🔑220(4)

The word "royalties" in contract of employment of attorneys to act as special counsel for city in all suits and legal matters connected with its efforts to obtain just returns from oil and gas in tide lands within city boundaries, for certain percentages of moneys paid city as royalties or received by it from sale of oil and gas, if city recovered by either court decision or compromise of its claims, held not restricted in meaning, as matter of law, to shares or money equivalent of shares of oil and gas taken from such lands, but to include money recovered by city in compromise of its claims to such oil.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Royalty".

10. Landlord and tenant ⚿181
Mines and minerals ⚿70(1)

The words "royalty" and "rent" are used interchangeably as meaning compensation paid landlord by occupier of land for species of occupation allowed by contract between them.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Rent".

11. Municipal corporations ⚿220(8)

Whether compromise contract for corporation's payment to city of stated percentage of proceeds of sale of oil from city's tide lands, in which state had granted corporation an easement for taking of oil after city's execution of oil lease to corporation, was only for easement to drill for oil purchased by corporation from state, held for jury on conflicting evidence in action against city for attorneys' fees under contract providing for payment thereof from moneys recovered by city as oil royalties or proceeds of sale of oil under either court decision or compromise of city's claims.

12. Contracts ⚿169

In construing contract, jury has right to consider facts surrounding execution thereof.

13. Municipal corporations ⚿220(8)

In action against city for attorneys' fees payable under written contract from oil and gas royalties recovered by city under either court decision or compromise of its claims, evidence held sufficient to support jury's implied finding that all money paid city by corporation under agreement made between them within month after plaintiffs' discharge was by way of compromise of city's claims for oil and gas royalties out of lands specified in both contracts.

14. Municipal corporations ⚿220(4)

The fact that part of conditionally fixed amount, agreed to be paid city by corporation in compromise settlement of city's claims against corporation for royalties under oil and gas lease, was paid in one lump sum, did not preclude jury finding that it was paid as "royalty" within city's contract to pay attorneys stated percentages of moneys paid city as oil royalties for services in obtaining just returns to city from oil in its lands.

15. Municipal corporations ⚿220(8)

A city, deliberately causing or negligently permitting contract made by it for payment of specified sum to it by corporation to be so phrased as to confuse amount payable in compromise of oil royalty claims with other amounts payable thereunder, had burden of proving amount payable by way of royalties in action against city for attorneys' fees based on such royalties.

GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

* * *

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; George K. Scovel, Judge.

Action by E. C. Denio and others against the City of Huntington Beach for attorneys' fees under a written contract. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

For prior opinion, see Cal.App., 124 P.2d 649.

Drumm, Tucker & Drumm, of Santa Ana, and Ray Overacker, City Atty., of Huntington Beach, for appellant.

Forgy, Reinhaus & Forgy, of Santa Ana, for respondents.

SCHAUER, Justice.

Defendant City of Huntington Beach appeals from a judgment based on a jury verdict, awarding to plaintiffs $2,000 as attorneys' fees for services rendered to defendant under a written contract between the parties. After plaintiffs had partially performed the services called for by the contract, defendant city discharged them. The city now seeks to justify such discharge on the ground that the contract was ultra vires and void in its inception, and on the further ground that plaintiffs had abandoned the contract prior to such discharge. The city also asserts that plaintiffs have not shown that it has received the particular fund, or the precise amount thereof, from which plaintiffs were to be paid. We have concluded, however, that upon the record none of defendant's propositions is tenable and that the judgment must be affirmed.

The terms of the contract, set forth in a letter from plaintiffs to defendant, are in material part as follows:

"The firm of Denio, Hart, Taubman & Simpson will act as special counsel for the City of Huntington Beach in cooperation with your City Attorney in:

"(a) The preparation of a freeholders' charter for submission to the electors of the City of Huntington Beach for adoption or rejection as soon as reasonable possible.

"(b) In all suits and legal matters in connection with your proposed efforts to obtain the City's just control and returns from the oil, gas or other hydrocarbon substances claimed by it or to which it is entitled, in the tide or overflow lands within the City boundaries of the City of Huntington Beach.

"For the above services we are to receive the following compensation:

"1. A retainer of Twenty-five Hundred Dollars ($2500.00) in cash upon the execution hereof, which shall be, in case no recovery is had as hereinafter specified, in full for all legal services rendered or to be rendered in the above, exclusive of court costs, filing fees, printing, traveling and hotel expenses.

"2. If a recovery is had by the City of Huntington Beach, either by a Court decision or by a compromise or settlement of the City's claims, we are further to be paid out of all moneys paid to the City of Huntington Beach as royalties, or received by it out of the sale of its oil, gas or other hydrocarbon substances, if its royalties are paid to it in kind, the following:

"Ten Per Cent (10%) of the moneys so received by the City for the first two (2) years;

"Fifteen Per Cent (15%) of the moneys so received by the City for the next three (3) years;

"Twenty Per Cent (20%) of the moneys so received by the City for the next ten (10) years.

"The above payments to commence with the first returns paid to or received by the City of Huntington Beach on account of royalties, as above.

"In computing the above periods of percentage payments, the time during which the City does not receive royalty payments, directly or indirectly, either in money or in kind, shall be excluded.

"Payments to be made to this firm within ten (10) days after receipt by the City of its royalties.

"It is understood, of course, that your City Attorney will be in charge of all litigation, and that all compromises, if any, will be subject to his approval and to the approval of your Honorable body." (Italics added.)

The contract was executed on behalf of the city by its mayor and city clerk, by direction of its council, stated in its Resolution No. 769, adopted March 1, 1937, the $2500 retainer fee was paid to plaintiffs, and they entered upon the performance of their obligations under the contract.

The parties continued under their contractual relationship until August 29, 1938, when the defendant's city council adopted its Resolution No. 814, as follows:

"That that certain Resolution No. 769 entitled: 'Resolution of the City Council of the City of Huntington Beach, California, Employing Special Counsel', be and the same is repealed and the contract therein referred to is hereby cancelled and the said attorneys are hereby discharged."

By a letter to plaintiffs dated October 6, 1938, the city attorney of Huntington Beach notified plaintiffs of the adoption of the above resolution. Plaintiffs replied as follows, by a letter dated October 8, 1938:

"This day we received a letter from your City Attorney referring to the action taken August 29, 1938 by the City Council of the City of Long Beach by Resolution No. 814.

"This is to inform you that we remain, as at all times we have been, ready, able, and willing to proceed and perform all services under our contract of employment with the City of Huntington Beach, as special counsel for said city for the purposes, and upon the conditions and compensation set forth in our said contract of employment. We do not concede your right to terminate our right to the compensation set forth in said contract, and we do not consent to any purported termination of the contract or our rights thereunder. We will continue to hold ourselves ready to act as special counsel for the City of Huntington Beach in cooperation with your City Attorney in all suits and legal matters in connection with the matters and things referred to in said contract or relating thereto, and will expect to receive the compensation therein provided." (Italics added.)

At the time of the execution of the contract here involved (March 1, 1937), Huntington Beach was a city of the sixth class; shortly thereafter its citizens adopted a charter which became operative on May 15, 1937 (Stats.1937, p. 2975). The city's uplands lie northeasterly of, and adjacent to, the line of mean high tide of the Pacific Ocean. Its southwest boundary parallels that line and is distant three miles (out in the ocean) from it (corresponding with the southwest boundary line of the State of California). (Carr v. Kingsbury, (1931) 111 Cal.App. 165, 295 P. 586.) The charter declares that the boundaries shall continue to be the same as before the charter was adopted. (Art. II, Charter, Stats.1937, pp. 2975, 2977.) A controversy had arisen between the city and the State of California as to their respective rights to extract oil from the so-called "tide and overflow lands" within the city boundaries, and over royalties from wells which might be whipstocked into such lands from surface locations on the uplands bordering the ocean. (See Carr v. Kingsbury, supra; Joyner v. Kingsbury, (1929), 97 Cal.App. 17, 275 P. 255.)

Defendant city, as one of the claimants to the oil, in 1934 had entered into an oil lease with the Southwest Exploration Company, whereby it was attempted to give that company the right to drill for and remove oil from the tide and overflow lands mentioned hereinabove. Such lease reserved a one-sixth royalty to the city. The area described in the lease is bounded on the northeast by the line of mean high tide, on the northwest by the northwest boundary of the city which extends three miles into or over the ocean, on the southwest by the southwest boundary of the city (which parallels the shore line, three miles out in the ocean), and on the southeast by the southeast line of Twenty-third Street extended over the ocean. However, apparently because the company doubted the city's right to the oil under this area, no development work was done under that lease.

Ocean Avenue is a public street of the City of Huntington Beach, 100 feet wide, and parallels the shore line a few hundred feet distant from it. The city claims that it owns this street in fee (see Marshall v. Standard Oil Co., 1936, 17 Cal.App.2d 19, 61 P.2d 520), and that it therefore has the right to prevent the whipstocking of oil wells from the landward side of the street, under its surface and thus into the oil sands underlying the tidelands.

By a document entitled "Agreement for Easement No. 392," dated September 26, 1938, the State of California purported to grant to the Southwest Exploration Company the right to drill into the tidelands area hereinabove described, from surface locations on uplands in the city of Huntington Beach lying northeasterly of the described area; i. e., northeasterly of the mean high tide line.

Under date of November 3, 1938, the City of Huntington Beach and the Southwest Exploration Company entered into a contract entitled "Agreement and Easement for Right of Ways." This contract reads, in part, as follows:

"Whereas, * * * under date of the 26th day of September, 1938, the State of California * * * did by * * * 'Agreement for Easement No. 392 * * *' grant to Southwest an easement through, in and under certain lands * * * together with the right to * * * take * * * oil, gas, and other hydrocarbon substances through oil wells to be drilled * * * from the uplands, and

"Whereas, Southwest is now drilling certain oil wells into the lands described in said Agreement * * *, and

"Whereas, Huntington Beach has claimed and now claims to be entitled to the payment of certain monies from Southwest and to certain royalties by reason of any operations of Southwest under * * * said Agreement for Easement No. 392 * * *, which said claim is disputed and denied by Southwest, and,

"Whereas * * * under date of the 4th day of October, 1934, the parties hereto did enter into a certain agreement in writing entitled 'Oil and Gas Lease' * * *, the lands described in said Oil and Gas Lease being generally coextensive with the lands described in said above mentioned Agreement for Easement No. 392, and Southwest has questioned and now questions the right, power and authority of Huntington Beach to enter into said Oil and Gas Lease, and

"Whereas, the parties hereto have never operated under said Oil and Gas Lease, and do not now contemplate operations thereunder, except as hereinafter provided,

"Now Therefore, in order to settle and compromise the claims of Huntington Beach to the payment of monies and royalties to it by Southwest, and in full settlement and satisfaction thereof, it is understood and agreed as follows:

"1. Upon the due execution and delivery of this agreement, Southwest agrees to and has herewith paid to Huntington Beach the sum of Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00) lawful money of the United States, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged.

"2. Southwest further agrees to pay to Huntington Beach monthly a sum equal to two per cent (2%) of one hundred per cent (100%) of the gross amount received by Southwest from the sale of one hundred per cent (100%) of all the oil, gas and other hydrocarbons produced, saved and sold by Southwest during the preceding calendar month from the lands described in the above mentioned Agreement, said payments to be made on the 20th day of each month until, in addition to the monies provided for in paragraph 1 hereof, there has been paid to Huntington Beach the further sum of One Hundred Fifty Thousand Dollars ($150,000.00).

"3. After Southwest shall have paid to Huntington Beach the total sum of One Hundred Seventy-five Thousand ($175,000.00) Dollars, in the manner and at the times provided in paragraphs 1 and 2 hereof, Southwest shall pay to Huntington Beach monthly a sum equal to two per cent (2%) of the total royalties paid to the State of California by Southwest pursuant to the provisions of the above mentioned Agreement for Easement No. 392 * * *.

"4. * * * Notwithstanding anything to the contrary herein contained, it is expressly understood and agreed that payments of monies provided for in paragraphs 2 and 3 hereof shall apply only to wells, the producing intervals of which are located in whole or in part in lands within the confines of the city limits of Huntington Beach, extended vertically downward, regardless of the location of the derrick or other surface structures.

"5. In so far as Huntington Beach has any interest in or to that certain * * * parcel of land * * * which lands are generally known as Ocean Avenue * * * Huntington Beach does hereby grant to Southwest any and all easements and right of ways into, under and through said lands necessary or convenient or deemed by Southwest to be necessary or convenient to its operations under the provisions of the above mentioned Agreement for Easement No. 392.

"6. It is specifically understood and agreed that the payment of monies made by Southwest to Huntington Beach pursuant to paragraphs 1, 2, 3 and 4 hereunder shall not be considered or regarded as being made pursuant to any obligations imposed upon Southwest by the provisions, terms, covenants and conditions of the above mentioned Oil and Gas Lease dated the 4th day of October, 1934, between the parties hereto, or any other agreements heretofore made with said City, * * *.

"7. In the event that either by the final decision of a court of competent jurisdiction or by the terms of a compromise agreement it shall be determined that Huntington Beach is the owner of the oil, gas and other hydrocarbon substances within and underlying the tide and submerged lands lying within the city limits of the City of Huntington Beach, including the above mentioned lands, then the Oil and Gas Lease dated October 4, 1934, shall become effective and the parties hereto shall thereafter operate thereunder and in accordance with the provisions thereof, and Southwest shall pay to Huntington Beach the royalties therein contained, provided further that any monies paid to Huntington Beach by Southwest hereunder shall be applied in partial or total payment and satisfaction of the monies provided for in paragraph 11 of said Oil and Gas Lease. * * *" (Italics added.)

Upon the execution of the above agreement of November 3, 1938, Southwest Exploration Company paid to defendant city the sum of $25,000. Production was obtained from wells drilled under such agreement and prior to the commencement of this action defendant had received from the company the additional sum of $2,794.09, representing the two per cent payment provided for in paragraph numbered

2 of the agreement. Plaintiffs claim in this action that under the terms of their contract of employment with the city they are entitled to ten per cent of all the moneys received by the city under its contract with the Southwest Exploration Company. Defendants, however, contend:

1. That the contract between plaintiffs and defendant city is "ultra vires, is contrary to public policy, and is void."

2. That the evidence shows that plaintiffs abandoned the contract, and that therefore "the city was within its legal rights in cancelling said contract."

3. That there is no evidence showing that any of the oil produced by Southwest Exploration Company came from beneath the tide and overflow lands within the boundaries of the City of Huntington Beach, as contemplated by paragraph (b) of the contract between plaintiffs and defendant city.

4. That plaintiffs failed to show what portion, if any, of the money received by the city from Southwest Exploration Company constituted royalties as distinguished from payments for "easements and matters compromised."

5. That in any event the initial $25,000 payment to the city constituted a bonus rather than a royalty, and therefore plaintiffs are not entitled to a share thereof.

In support of its first contention defendant argues that the contract between plaintiffs and defendant "extends beyond the term of office of the members of the City Council which created it and attempts to bind their successors," and that therefore such contract cannot be upheld. The right of a municipality to employ special counsel is conceded.

The terms of the contract, above quoted, do not themselves directly specify the period of time over which plaintiffs were to render services to defendant. However, Mr. Denio, one of the plaintiffs, testified that it was "understood" that plaintiffs would "attend to all * * * matters, under the City Attorney, of course" which might arise "during the time of * * * employment," including "Anything arising protecting Huntington Beach and its oil rights, what they conceived to be their rights." He further testified that during the fifteen-year period designated in paragraph numbered 2 of the employment contract plaintiffs were "whenever called upon," to protect whatever rights the city had, "Or assist in protecting them because we were under orders always of the City Attorney." It thus appears that the plaintiffs' services were to be available to defendant city for the full term during which they were to receive compensation.

[1-4] It is our opinion, however, that the law is settled in California that a contract made by the council or other governing body of a municipality, which contract appears to have been fair, just, and reasonable at the time of its execution, and prompted by the necessities of the situation or in its nature advantageous to the municipality at the time it was entered into, is neither void nor voidable merely because some of its executory features may extend beyond the terms of office of the members of such body. In the absence of some other ground of avoidance, such a contract is binding upon the municipality and may not be summarily canceled by a successor council. See McBean v. City of Fresno, (1896), 112 Cal. 159, 169, 44 P. 358, 31 L.R.A. 794, 53 Am.St.Rep. 191; Higgins v. San Diego Water Co., (1897), 118 Cal. 524, 554, 45 P. 824, 50 P. 670; Marin Water, etc., Co. v. Town of Sausalito, (1914), 168 Cal. 587, 143 P. 767; Williams v. City of Stockton, (1925), 195 Cal. 743, 235 P. 986; Cope v. County of Sutter, (1929), 206 Cal. 445, 454, 274 P. 750; Skidmore v. County of Alameda, (1939), 13 Cal.2d 534, 537, 90 P.2d 577; San Francisco v. Boyd, (1941), 17 Cal.2d 606, 110 P.2d 1036; Pacific Finance Corp. v. City of Lynwood, (1941), 114 Cal.App. 509, 300 P. 50, 1 P.2d 520; King City Union H. S. Dist. v. Waibel, (1934), 2 Cal.App.2d 65, 37 P.2d 861; Skidmore v. Dambacher, (1935), 6 Cal.App.2d 83, 87, 43 P.2d 1110. The council of a municipal corporation is a continuing body and in legal contemplation remains the same council regardless of changes in its personnel (see Cope v. County of Sutter, supra; King City Union H. S. Dist. v. Waibel, supra, 2 Cal.App.2d at page 68, 37 P.2d 861). As was stated by the District Court of Appeal in Pacific Finance Corp. v. City of Lynwood, supra, at pages 518, 519 of 114 Cal.App., 1 P.2d at page 521: "* * * we know of no reason why a city, as well as an individual, should not be expected to keep faith with those with whom it contracts, or else respond in damages for its failure." We conclude that the contract of employment here involved is valid, and binding upon defendant city, and that for the breach of that contract by defendant, i. e., the discharge of plaintiffs if such discharge was wrongful, plaintiffs are, under the long-established rule in California, entitled to recover the compensation specified by the terms of such contract of employment. See Baldwin v. Bennett, (1854), 4 Cal. 392; Cole v. Superior Court, (1883), 63 Cal. 86, 88, 49 Am.Rep. 78; Webb v. Trescony, (1888), 76 Cal. 621, 623, 18 P. 796; Bartlett v. Odd Fellows Savings Bank, (1889) 79 Cal. 218, 222, 21 P. 743, 12 Am.St.Rep. 139; Carter v. Baldwin, (1892), 95 Cal. 475, 30 P. 595; Kirk v. Culley, (1927), 202 Cal. 501, 506, 261 P. 994; Elconin v. Yalen, (1929), 208 Cal. 546, 549, 282 P. 791; Zurich G. A. & L. Ins. Co., Ltd. v. Kinsler, (1938), 12 Cal.2d 98, 100, 101, 81 P.2d 913; Echlin v. Superior Court, (1939), 13 Cal.2d 368, 375, 90 P.2d 63, 124 A.L.R. 719; Countryman v. California Trona Co., (1917), 35 Cal.App. 728, 736, 170 P. 1069; McCully v. Gano, (1931), 116 Cal.App. 695, 698, 699, 3 P.2d 348; Green v. Sherritt, (1936), 17 Cal.App.2d 732, 736, 737, 62 P.2d 769.

[5, 6] Defendant contends, however, in effect (as its second ground for reversal), that the evidence requires a finding that plaintiffs had abandoned the contract and hence that its action declaring the plaintiffs discharged and their contract canceled was proper. A survey of the record discloses that defendant's position on this point is not tenable.

It is undisputed that plaintiffs performed a large volume of work for defendant after the execution of the contract of employment. They drafted the charter which was adopted, conferred numerous times with officers of the city, carried out extensive legal research on the problems presented, and prepared a suggested new zoning ordinance for the city with a view to preventing the drilling of oil wells on certain uplands that would tap the oil sands under the ocean. Certain members of plaintiffs' firm made two trips to the State Capitol during a legislative session to attempt to secure legislation giving defendant city title to the oil in controversy. It appears that the bulk of these services was performed during 1937, and that plaintiffs' activity lessened somewhat during the first half of 1938. Mr. Simpson, one of plaintiffs, testified, however, that he continued research for defendant city "to a more or less extent right up to the time when they [the city] attempted to terminate our employment." He also testified as follows concerning a conversation he had with the City Attorney of Huntington Beach in January, 1938: "We discussed generally the fact of the pending—of the condition of the legislation then pending concerning the Huntington Beach oil. In other words, we talked back and forth to the effect that the Legislature before its adjournment in 1937 had passed several bills affecting the Huntington Beach tideland oil matters. Two of these had been signed by the Governor. Both of those bills that had been signed by the Governor had been held up by referendum, and as I recall, I think there was also litigation filed trying to invalidate the referendum on the two. * * *

"* * * we discussed the fact that everything was held in abeyance at this time because no one knew what the law would be, the statute would be that might be passed concerning the Huntington Beach tidelands proposition as a matter of legislation.

"Yes, I told [the city attorney] * * * that we should not do anything on any of the other propositions we had pending, other programs, except we should go ahead with our zoning set-up. I told him that I had checked over as carefully as I could all of the zoning ordinances, restrictive ordinances of the City of Huntington Beach * * * and I had done considerable research into the legal angles involved and that I had come to the conclusion that their zoning ordinances were invalid and void."

Mr. Taubman, another of plaintiffs, gave the following testimony concerning a conversation he had with the Mayor of Huntington Beach in the late summer or early fall of 1938: "I don't know how the subject matter came up. The substance of it was that [the mayor] * * * told me—I rather imagine I made inquiry of him as to the status, and he stated that the Southwest Exploration Company, he thought, was in a position to negotiate concerning the matter of the City securing some of the proceeds from the oil production, that the time had arrived when they were ripe, so to speak, for such negotiations. * * *

"Q. I will ask you, Mr. Taubman, whether or not you ever refused to furnish any advice or to do anything which was requested of you by the City of Huntington Beach, or any of its officers, in connection with procuring returns from oil on behalf of the City? Witness: A. I did not. In fact, I think on one of these occasions, I offered, when [the mayor] * * * told me he was negotiating with these gentlemen, one of whom I told him I had known for many years, I offered to aid if I could and discuss the matter with him and he said no, he had the thing well in hand and he was going to get what the City was entitled to, either that, or no one else would get it." (Italics added.)

This testimony of plaintiffs Simpson and Taubman was apparently accepted by the jury as true and is sufficient to support plaintiffs' assertion that they did not abandon the contract. A conflict created by certain testimony of the city attorney and mayor simply presented an issue of fact which the jury resolved in favor of plaintiffs. Such determination is binding on us.

[7] Defendant's third contention—that the oil produced by Southwest Exploration Company is not shown to have been drawn from lands included in plaintiffs' contract; i. e., from "the tide[1] or overflow lands within the City boundaries"—is answered by the terms of the pertinent documents and by the inferences reasonably deducible from them and from the circumstances shown. Such documents are the lease of October 4, 1934, and the contract of November 3, 1938, between the City of Huntington Beach and the Southwest Exploration Company. The lease described the land from which oil was proposed to be extracted as lying within the boundaries of the city and between the line of mean high tide and the southwest boundary of the city. The compromise contract of November 3, under which the city has received the moneys here involved, referred to the lease and provided for its revivor upon the happening of certain contingencies. The same contract also referred to the "Agreement for Easement No. 392," between the State of California and the Southwest Exploration Company, under which the company proposed to extract oil from certain described lands within the defendant city lying along and seaward from the line of mean high tide, and recited the fact that such lands were "generally coextensive with the lands" described in the lease of October 4, 1934. It is specifically provided in paragraphs 2 and 3 of the contract of November 3 that the payments by Southwest Exploration Company to the city shall be measured by income from oil taken from beneath the lands described in the "Agreement for Easement No. 392." Therefore, it appears to be amply established that the payments made to the city by the company were on account of oil produced, or contemplated to be produced, only from the tide or overflow lands within the city limits hereinabove specified.

Defendant's remaining points—that the evidence fails to show what portion, if any, of the money received by the city from the operating company constituted royalties as distinguished from payments for "easements and matters compromised," and that in any event the initial $25,000 payment to the city was a bonus rather than a royalty—are also disposed of by a consideration of the documents involved, which include the lease of October 4, 1934, the plaintiffs' contract for legal services, and the subsequent contract of November 3, 1938, between the city and the Southwest Exploration Company. Defendant argues that at least a portion of the payments made to the city by the operating company constituted rentals for the use of the easement under Ocean Avenue rather than royalties on the oil produced.

[8, 9] It is to be noted that the contract between plaintiffs and the defendant city was drawn by plaintiffs and hence any ambiguity therein, the interpretation of which is otherwise uncertain, must be construed against plaintiffs. But the same situation does not exist as to the contract of November 3, 1938, insofar as it purports to determine the character of the compensation paid by the Southwest Exploration Company to the city. The plaintiffs are not parties to that contract and did not draft it. The question on this point, which was before the trial court and jury for original determination, was as to the meaning which the plaintiffs and defendant ascribed to the word "royalties" in their use of it in the contract for attorneys' fees. Defendant seeks to have us rule that as a matter of law the word must be construed in a narrow and limited sense as meaning a share, or the money equivalent of a share, of the "oil, gas or other hydrocarbon substances taken from the tide or overflow lands" within the city boundaries. But we find nothing in the contract which requires us, or which required the trial court or jury, to limit the word to such a restricted meaning.

---

[1] The word "tidelands" is used in the lease of October 4, 1934, to denote the area extending from the mean high tide line seaward for a distance of three miles, to the city's southwest boundary.

The contractual provision for the percentage payment which is in controversy is conditioned upon this statement: "If a recovery is had by the City of Huntington Beach, either by a Court decision or by a compromise or settlement of the City's claims. * * *" This condition clearly has been met. The agreement then continues "we are further to be paid out of all moneys paid to the City of Huntington Beach as royalties, or received by it out of the sale of its oil, gas or other hydrocarbon substances, if its royalties are paid to it in kind, the following * * *" (italics added) and then sets forth certain percentages ranging from ten to twenty per cent over a period of fifteen years. The primary purpose of this provision is to specify the fund in relation to which the amounts to accrue to plaintiffs shall be determined. While the contractual provision is that plaintiffs are "to be paid out of all moneys" so received by the city, it is obvious from other provisions that the parties do not intend to imply that money shall not be treated in its fungible sense or that the payments to plaintiffs must be made out of the same coins or currency which defendant may receive. Rather, it appears to be the intention to identify the fund as an account which is to constitute the basis for determination of the amount of plaintiffs' compensation. Thus it seems to be a fair conclusion that the plaintiffs in writing their letter to the city, which letter by acceptance of the city became the contract of employment, used language in its general or loose sense, rather than in its strictly limited or technical sense, and that such usage was understood by the city. The very fact, self-evident from the contract, that the parties contemplated that the city's recovery of royalties might be accomplished by compromise of its claims, suggests that they understood and used that word (royalties) in its general or loose sense and not in its strictly limited sense. Manifestly, money received in compromise of a claim for royalties would not be directly a "share of the oil" or its proceeds; yet obviously it was not unreasonable for the jury to conclude that the parties understood the word "royalties," as they used it, to include money which the city might recover by way of compromise or settlement of its claim to the oil in the so-called tidelands. It is entirely within reason that the parties may even have contemplated that the city's recovery might consist of a single payment. If one single cash payment in compromise and full settlement of the city's claim for royalties had been made, that fact alone would not support a claim that in the contemplation of plaintiffs' contract no royalty had been received by defendant and therefore no percentage thereof was due plaintiffs.

[10] The words "royalty" and "rent," it has been held, "are used interchangeably to convey the same meaning"; i. e., "the compensation which the occupier pays the landlord for that species of occupation which the contract between them allows" (Nelson v. Republic Iron & Steel Co., 8 Cir., (1917), 240 F. 285, 291, 293, 153 C.C.A. 211; Elsinore Oil Co. v. Signal Oil etc. Co., (1935), 3 Cal.App.2d 570, 573, 40 P.2d 523.) Defendant, in a statement in its brief hereinafter quoted, seems to imply that "royalty" is, or includes, the price paid by the operator to the landowner for the oil. It is obvious, from a consideration of the terms of the documents described above, and from other evidence in the record, that there was a conflict between the claims of defendant city and those of the State of California as to the ownership of the oil in the described lands. It is also obvious that the Southwest Exploration Company was desirous of exploiting those lands for oil and gas production and that it was willing to pay compensation to both the defendant city and to the state for the use of those lands to the end stated. It is a fair conclusion that all of the money it paid to the defendant city was paid for the purpose of enabling it to so exploit such lands. Apparently it had no other usage for such lands and contemplated no income from them except that to be derived from the production of oil, gas, and other hydrocarbon substances, and had no occasion to seek any easement over or through any of defendant's property except for the purpose of using that easement in the extraction of oil from the disputed property.

[11] Continuing on this phase of its attack on the judgment, defendant makes the assertion that "the contract between Southwest Exploration Company and the City shows on its face that it is for easements and other privileges and that Southwest Exploration Company expressly denies that the City of Huntington Beach has any rights to the oil or gas under the tidelands. The facts surrounding the execution of this agreement between the City and Southwest Exploration Company show clearly that Southwest Exploration Company had bought the oil under the tidelands from the State of California and that what it was buying from the City of Huntington Beach was a right to drill from the uplands into that oil." (Italics added.) The foregoing argument is one which properly should have been addressed to the jury. Indubitably it was not based upon unconflicting evidence. The contract referred to by defendant, itself tends to refute the conclusion of fact for which defendant argues. It recites the fact as to the execution of the lease of 1934 by and between the Southwest Exploration Company and the city, the fact that such company had not operated under that lease, that it had procured the agreement of September 26, 1938, from the State of California, that it had proceeded thereunder to drill for oil in the same lands as were described in the lease, and that "Huntington Beach has claimed and now claims to be entitled to the payment of certain monies from Southwest and to certain royalties by reason of any operations of Southwest under and pursuant to said Agreement for Easement No. 392, and it is understood that Huntington Beach claims for itself the oil, gas and other hydrocarbon substances underlying said lands, which said claim is disputed and denied by Southwest * * *.

"Now Therefore, in order to settle and compromise the claims of Huntington Beach to the payment of monies and royalties to it by Southwest, * * * it is * * * agreed," etc. (Italics added.)

[12, 13] Coupled with the above-quoted declaration of the claim of the city to the oil and gas in the disputed lands, the jury (as asserted by defendant in its argument above quoted) had a right to consider the "facts surrounding the execution of this agreement." Among the surrounding circumstances which the jury may have considered significant is the fact that the compromise agreement with the Southwest Exploration Company was entered into by defendant city at a date less than one month after plaintiffs had been notified of their discharge and only two months and five days after adoption by the city council of the resolution (No. 814) by which it was sought to cancel plaintiffs' contract. In the light of all the evidence, and viewing it in aspects most favorable to sustaining the verdict, we cannot hold that as a matter of law it fails to support an implied finding that all of the money paid by the Southwest Exploration Company to the defendant was by way of compromise of defendant city's claims for oil and gas royalties out of the disputed lands. This was a compromise agreement. It purports to be based on the city's claims to the oil. We cannot sever such compromise agreement into parts and hold that any portion of the consideration was not grounded on the city's claim to the oil and royalties therefrom.

[14] The fact that $25,000 of the $175,000-conditionally-fixed amount was paid in one payment does not preclude the finding that it was paid as royalty. In Work v. United States ex rel. Mosier, (1923), 261 U.S. 352, 357, 43 S.Ct. 389, 391, 67 L.Ed. 693, 696, the United States Supreme Court said: "The bonus which was the result of bidding for desirable and profitable oil and gas leases secured for the members of the Osage Tribe the just value of the use of their property which the fixing of royalties in advance by the President was not adapted to give them. It was in effect a supplement to the royalties already determined. It was really part of the royalty or rental in a lump sum or down payment. We do not see how it can be classified as anything else. It was income from the use of the mineral resources of the land." (Italics added.) The fact that the verdict rendered awards plaintiffs less than they might be entitled to recover does not prejudice defendant.

[15] It is to be observed that the defendant is in a poor position to urge that the evidence does not show what portion of the money paid it by the Southwest Exploration Company is by way of royalty and what portion is by way of compromise of some other claim. The city made the contract with the company. It was in the power of the city, when that contract was made, to specify therein exactly what amount was to be paid in compromise of the royalty claims and what amounts, if any, were to be paid for other considerations. It knew at that time that plaintiffs claimed the right to compensation on the percentage basis fixed in their contract and that the amounts to be paid plaintiffs depended on the royalties to be recovered by compromise or otherwise, by the city. If the defendant city, knowing such facts, deliberately caused or negligently permitted the contract with the Southwest Exploration Company to be so phrased as to confuse the amount to be paid it for compromise of royalty claims with other amounts, the city, unless it is chargeable on the whole amount received, should bear the burden of proving segregation. This would follow upon principles akin to those attendant upon willful or negligent confusion of goods. See 11 Am.Jur., pp. 529-530, §§ 3, 4; pp. 535-536, § 11; and pp. 537-538, § 13; see, also, 5 Cal.Jur. 488-489, § 4; 15 C.J.S., Confusion of Goods, pages 961-964, §§ 4-6.

We conclude that the evidence is not insufficient to support any essential implied finding, and that no prejudicial error has been shown.

The judgment is affirmed.

SHENK, CURTIS, and CARTER, JJ., concurred.

EDMONDS, Justice (dissenting).

The conclusion of my associates that the contract sued upon in this case "is binding upon the municipality and may not be summarily canceled by a successor council" is rested upon decisions which, in my opinion, are not determinative of the question. Generally speaking, in the exercise of its business or proprietary power, the power of a board to make a contract binding over a term of years depends upon the subject matter, and the courts and text writers recognize, as being in a special category, those relating to personal services, particularly those of a confidential nature. No case has been cited in the majority opinion, or by counsel, upholding a contract with an attorney for a period of time beyond the terms of office of the members of the employing board, and the only decision in this state, except one in which the authority of a school board to employ a superintendent was challenged, concerned the right of an engineer to recover from a county upon a contract to extend a bridge. (Cope v. County of Sutter, 206 Cal. 445, 274 P. 750.)

In most jurisdictions, the rule has been adopted that where a contract of employment, by its terms extends beyond the term of the appointing municipal body, and the services to be rendered are subject to the supervision of that body, the contract is invalid. The courts of a few states follow the so-called minority rule, holding that, in legal contemplation, the new board is the one that entered into the contract. Under these decisions, unless the agreement is unreasonable it cannot be rescinded except for cause. (See cases collected in 70 A.L.R. 794, 802.) But the courts which follow the minority rule do not apply it to contracts providing for the employment of an attorney. They recognize the confidential relationship of attorney and client and hold that a municipal board should be free to select its counsel.

There are many reasons of public policy why an attorney's contract for professional services to be rendered beyond the term of the board which selected him should not be enforced against a successor body which is dissatisfied with his efforts. Subsequently elected public officers are directly responsible to the people for the conduct of the municipal affairs, and in performing their duties, it is of the utmost importance that they should have the right to select the lawyer who is to carry out their plans and purposes. The very reason for a change in personnel of a city council may be the electors' dissatisfaction with the manner in which the person employed to perform such special services has conducted the municipal business. To hold that the new council is required to retain that person because of the action of its predecessor in entering into a contract with him, may seriously interfere with the exercise of a discretion which the members of the governing body should be permitted to employ in its conduct of the city's affairs. Moreover, if the attorney was engaged on a contingent basis, the subsequently elected officials may decide to allow him to continue representation of the city's interests, regardless of their lack of confidence in him, rather than risk criticism by incurring an obligation to pay fees for services not completed.

It should also be kept in mind that, under circumstances such as are shown in the present case, although the city council is the immediate employer, the client for whom the legal services are to be rendered is the city. The members of the council are in a sense, trustees of the public welfare, and they may well insist upon the benefit of advice from counsel in whose capacity and judgment they have the fullest confidence. The assertion of public rights which are not entirely clear usually requires the expenditure of large sums of money as well as the determination of particular policies, and the decision as to action in a particular way should not be affected by either friction or distrust in the relations of attorney and client.

Recognizing these principles as controlling, although the Supreme Court of Indiana, following the minority rule, has held that contract extending beyond the terms of office of the members of a governing body are valid if made in good faith, it places in a different category one providing for the employment of an attorney beyond the time when a change will occur in the membership of the employing board. (Board, etc., v. Shields, 130 Ind. 6, 29 N.E. 385). Such a contract, said the court, is contrary to public policy and void, because it "deprives the board, as reorganized from year to year, of the right to employ its attorney for the next following year. If such contracts are binding, then, no [matter] how distasteful an attorney may be to the members of the board, or how little confidence they may have in his ability, legal learning, or honesty, so long as he performs the conditions of the contract on his part they are bound to recognize him, accept his services, and assume the responsibility; and if the contract in question, extending, as it does, over a period of three years, is valid, why may not a like contract, covering a period of six, nine, or a dozen years, be upheld?" Jay County v. Taylor, 123 Ind. 148, 23 N.E. 752, 753, 7 L.R.A. 160.

More recently, the Appellate Court of Indiana held that "a board, in order to dispense with the services of an attorney, employed while organized in part at least with a different membership, and thereby be free to select one of its own choosing, [should not] be compelled to prefer charges against an attorney so employed, or alleged and prove dishonesty or a lack of ability on his part, or that he was distasteful to its members, or that they had no confidence in him, as appellee's contention would imply." Jessup v. Hinchman, 77 Ind. App. 460, 133 N.E. 853, 855. And the Supreme Court of Alabama declared that a contract with an attorney to act as counsel for a board of revenue beyond the term of the board as it existed when the services were authorized was contrary to public policy. In effect, said the court, such a contract ties the hands of the succeeding board which "should at all times be free to select its own confidential legal advisor. Such has been the ruling in New York, Ohio, New Jersey, Indiana, Illinois, Kansas, Iowa, and Colorado." Willett & Willett v. Calhoun County, 217 Ala. 687, 117 So. 311. And see Ferkin v. Board of Education, 253 App.Div. 751, 300 N.Y.S. 885; Light v. Lebanon County, 292 Pa. 494, 141 A. 291; McCormick v. Hanover Township, 246 Pa. 169, 92 A. 195; Wilmington v. Bryan, 141 N.C. 666, 54 S.E. 543; and annotation, 70 A.L.R. 794, 799-802.

Considering the California decisions, although King City Union H. S. Dist. v. Waibel, 2 Cal.App.2d 65, 37 P.2d 861, approves the minority rule, the true basis for its holdings is the universally recognized authority of a school board to contract with a superintendent or teacher for a period extending beyond the terms of the members of the board. Also, a contrary conclusion would nullify sections 2.90 and 2.92 of the School Code, which authorize a school district to employ a district superintendent for a period of four years. But in New York, it was recently held that a contract made in July, 1933, by a school board, purporting to employ an attorney at law for a period of two years, was an attempt to impinge upon the functions of members of that body elected in 1934 and was void. Ferkin v. Board of Education, supra.

McBean v. City of Fresno, 112 Cal. 159, 44 P. 358, 31 L.R.A. 794, 53 Am.St.Rep. 191; upheld a contract for the maintenance of a sewer farm. In Higgins v. San Diego Water Co., 118 Cal. 524, 45 P. 824, 50 P. 670, the court considered the validity of a contract leasing a water plant for a term of 20 years. A contract to supply water for 10 years was before the court in Marin Water, etc., Co. v. Town of Sausalito, 168 Cal. 587, 143 P. 767. Williams v. City of Stockton, 195 Cal. 743, 235 P. 986, concerned a contract for building a city hall. A later-elected city council rejected the contractor's bid which had been accepted by its predecessor. This court held that the city was bound by its original action. In Skidmore v. County of Alameda, 13 Cal.2d 534, 90 P.2d 577, the question for decision was whether the plaintiffs' claim was an account or the statement of several causes of action, some of which were barred by lapse of time. And the contract ordered executed in San Francisco v. Boyd, 17 Cal.2d 606, 110 P.2d 1036, was one providing for a survey of traffic conditions to be completed in five years by the contractor and a staff of his own selection; the question now before the court was not presented or considered.

Nor does Pacific Finance Corp. v. City of Lynwood, 114 Cal.App. 509, 300 P. 50, 1 P.2d 520, have any bearing upon the present problem, for the recovery upheld in that case was upon a contract to prepare plans and other writings required to carry through a street improvement project, compensation to be paid on the basis of a stated percentage of the construction cost. Skidmore v. Dambacher, 6 Cal.App.2d 83, 43 P.2d 1110, held valid a contract to secure certain information during an unspecified period of time. The court decided that the services had been performed within a reasonable period.

It requires no departure from the principles stated and applied in any of these cases to classify the contract now before the court as a valid one, but subject to an implied in law agreement that it may be terminated by the successor body with the obligation to pay only the reasonable value of the services rendered to the date of cancellation. Very evidently, the jury's verdict for $2,000 was rendered in the belief that the sum awarded, plus the retainer paid by the city, is a reasonable amount of compensation for the services which the respondents performed. For the verdict was not responsive to any issue laid down by the pleadings, nor can it be justified under the theory of the conclusion reached by a majority of the court. As the city asserts, obviously if the contract is valid and not subject to cancellation, the respondents are entitled to $2,794, not $2,000. Under these circumstances, the applicable rule is stated in Gundry v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 104 Cal.App. 753, 286 P. 718, 722, as follows: "While the defendant cannot ordinarily complain that the verdict is for an amount less than it might have been, if there is any evidence at all to sustain the verdict, a verdict may not be sustained which attempts generally to somewhat equalize financial conditions." The Gundry and other cases which reach the same conclusion are controlling, this court has said, and require a reversal if the jury renders a verdict for a different amount than the only sum which the plaintiff could recover under the issues framed by the pleadings. (American States Pub. Service Co. v. Rath, 2 Cal. 2d 670, 42 P.2d 1010.)

For these reasons, I am of the opinion that the judgment should be reversed.

GIBSON, Chief Justice, and TRAYNOR, Justice (dissenting).

We dissent. While we agree with the conclusions reached in that portion of the majority opinion which holds that plaintiffs were wrongfully discharged from their employment, we cannot concur in the view that plaintiffs are entitled to recover the compensation specified in the contract of employment. When an attorney employed under a contingent fee contract is discharged without cause, he should be entitled to recover the reasonable value of the services performed by him prior to his discharge. See concurring opinion in Salopek v. Schoemann, 20 Cal.2d 150, 156, 124 P.2d 21; Cole v. Myers, 128 Conn. 223, 21 A.2d 396, 136 A.L.R. 226; Hubbard v. Goffinett, 253 Ky. 779, 70 S.W.2d 671; Pye v. Diebold, 204 Minn. 319, 283 N.W. 487; Martin v. Camp, 219 N.Y. 170, 14 N.E. 46, L.R.A. 1917F 402; Cavers v. Old Nat. Bank & Union Trust Co., 166 Wash. 449, 7 P.2d 23; see also cases in 136 A.L.R. 254. He should not be permitted to recover the fees fixed in the contract, however, for the reasons stated in the concurring opinion in Salopek v. Schoemann, 20 Cal.2d 150, 156, 124 P.2d 21. The present case was tried and submitted to the jury upon the theory that the proper measure of damages for breach of an employment contract of this nature is the compensation fixed by the terms of the contract. In our opinion, there should be a retrial of the issue of damages for that reason. While it is true that the verdict does not award plaintiffs a sum commensurate with that provided for in the contract, it is impossible to determine how the jury arrived at its verdict in view of the theory upon which the case was tried.

Rehearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

---

22 Cal.2d 604

GOODRICH et al. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

L. A. 18601.

Supreme Court of California.

Aug. 3, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 1, 1943.

1. Workmen's compensation 🔑723

Even though an employee may be going to or from his place of employment on a mission personal to himself, if he is also on a substantial mission of his employer which is the major factor in the movement, he is within the "course of employment".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Course of Employment".

2. Workmen's compensation 🔑723

Where drilling superintendent in his discretion conducted some of employer's business by telephone from his home and was on call 24 hours a day and his duties included use of automobile transportation, evidence authorized compensation for superintendent's accidental death when he was returning home in another's automobile to inform his wife that he was to work all night and to telephone with regard to delivery of a cutting tool, on ground that his death "arose out of and in course of employment".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Arose out of and in Course of Employment".

3. Workmen's compensation 🔑615

Any reasonable doubt as to whether an employee's act is contemplated by the employment should be resolved in his favor.

4. Workmen's compensation 🔑1803

In compensation proceedings, generally, if a party does not prevail on the original hearing and his petition for a rehearing is denied, he may not again petition for a rehearing but must seek relief in the courts. St. 1937, p. 304, § 5950.

5. Workmen's compensation 🔑1803

In compensation proceedings, if one party prevails in the original hearing and on rehearing the other party prevails, the first party may petition for rehearing of the order made on rehearing because he has for the first time become the "aggrieved party" within the statute. St. 1937, p. 302, § 5900.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Aggrieved Party".

6. Workmen's compensation 🔑1794

Application for rehearing may be made from an order denying relief under statute authorizing petitions to reopen compensation proceedings because it is a final order of the Industrial Commission in which the petitioner is aggrieved. St. 1937, p. 301, § 5803.

7. Workmen's compensation 🔑1803

Where compensation was awarded to claimants and insurance carrier's petition for rehearing was granted and award was made for employer and claimants' petition to reopen the case to produce new evidence was denied and claimants' petition for rehearing based on newly discovered evidence was granted and additional evidence was taken and further evidence was produced on claimants' petition for further hearing and such petition was denied, order denying claimants' petition to reopen was rescinded, and decision on rehearing for employer was amended, Industrial Commission had jurisdiction to entertain claimants' subsequent petition for rehearing. St. 1937, pp. 301, 302, 304, §§ 5803, 5900, 5950.

8. Workmen's compensation 🔑1795

In compensation proceedings, the purpose of a rehearing is to have a reconsideration of a matter which has been theretofore considered on only one occasion. St. 1937, pp. 302, 304, §§ 5900, 5950.

9. Workmen's compensation 🔑1803

Where losing party obtains rehearing of a compensation proceeding on ground of newly discovered evidence, which evidence is produced and results in the same conclusion, losing party is entitled to another rehearing but where no new evidence is produced, and the losing party's application for rehearing is denied, he cannot again petition for rehearing. St. 1937, pp. 302, 304, §§ 5900, 5950.

TRAYNOR and EDMONDS, JJ., dissenting.

◆

In Bank.

Proceeding by Ruby Idele Goodrich and others against the Industrial Accident Commission and others to review an award denying compensation for death of Claude E. Goodrich, employer.

Award annulled.

Harold A. McCabe, of Fullerton, for petitioners.

Everett A. Corten, J. Gould, and Fred G. Goldsworthy, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

Petitioners, dependents of Claude E. Goodrich, deceased, seek annulment of an award of the Industrial Accident Commission denying compensation for his death as the result of an injury which they assert arose out of and occurred in the course of his employment.

Goodrich was employed on a monthly basis by the H. L. Whiston Drilling Company, engaged in drilling oil wells, as drilling superintendent. The commission found that drilling operations of the employer were being conducted at a place six-tenths of a mile from the employer's office and one and seven-tenths miles in the same direction from Goodrich's home; that Goodrich had no regular hours of duty and was subject to call at all hours of the day and night; that Goodrich "carried on much of the business of the employer from said employee's home by means of the telephone there located," and he was authorized by the employer in the discretion of the employee to conduct the employer's business at "any place where the same could be conveniently conducted and was authorized to conduct the business of said employer from and at either the office of said employer or the home of said employee among other places"; that there was a telephone in the office; that at the time of the injury to Goodrich which resulted in his death he "was on his way from said oil well to his said home, having proceeded past said employer's office enroute. Said employee's sole purpose in said journey was to inform his wife of the probability that he would work at said oil well throughout the night and it was said employee's intention at said time and place after completing said errand to return to said oil well."

Goodrich left his home about 7 p.m. the day of the injury in the car furnished by his employer to go to the above-mentioned place of work on a "fishing" job, stating to his wife that he would possibly be gone all night and that she should not worry. The work in progress required the removal of a casing from the well being drilled. A cutting tool for that purpose had been ordered between 7 and 8 p.m., and was supposed to arrive at the well in one to one and one-half hours. Goodrich had remained at the office of Owens, the man from whom the tool was ordered, for about one and one-half hours waiting for it. When he left for the well it was understood that Owens would bring the tool there when it arrived. Shortly before 10 p.m. Goodrich and the workmen under him were waiting at the well for the tool to arrive. Mr. Gieck, who was observing the operations, testified that Goodrich said he wished to go home and inform his wife that he would be working all night; that he did not want to telephone her as it would frighten her and awaken his minor child who had had a tooth pulled. The night was cold and Gieck, having a heater in his car, offered to take Goodrich home. His offer was accepted and they proceeded directly toward Goodrich's home. About a half a block therefrom the accident occurred which resulted in the death of Goodrich.

The employer, who was at the well shortly before 10 p.m., testified that Goodrich said to him that he was going home for the above-mentioned purpose and expected to be back by the time the tool arrived. To the employer's suggestion that because of the cold weather Goodrich go to the office and wait for the cutting tool and telephone his wife from there, Goodrich made no reply. Several of the employees at the well in Goodrich's charge testified that when he left he said he was going to telephone to ascertain why the tool had not arrived.

Goodrich had no regular hours, came and went as he pleased and exercised considerable discretion in the performance of his duties. He transacted some of his employer's business from his home and used his telephone there for that purpose.

There are many acts of an employee for his personal convenience, comfort or welfare, the doing of which do not necessarily take him out of the course of his employment, even though done away from the premises of the employer. (California Cas. Ind. Exch. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 21 Cal.2d 751, 135 P.2d 158. Various instances of that character have been considered by the appellate courts: Drinking wine because of indisposition (Elliott v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 21 Cal.2d 281, 131 P.2d 521; smoking (Whiting-Mead Com. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 178 Cal. 505, 173 P. 1105, 5 A.L.R. 1518); going to obtain a slicker to wear in the performance of his duty (Western Pacific R. R. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 193 Cal. 413, 224 P. 754); going to obtain an overcoat (Leffert v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 219 Cal. 710, 28 P.2d 911); going into a hallway to obtain fresh air (F. W. Woolworth Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 17 Cal. 2d 634, 111 P.2d 313); going to obtain water for a fellow employee who had fainted (County of Los Angeles v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 89 Cal.App. 736, 265 P. 362); returning from purchasing a package of cigarettes for employee's own use (Western Pipe, etc., Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 49 Cal.App.2d 108, 121 P.2d 35); domestic servant sewing a hem on her dress (Employers', etc., Corp. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 37 Cal.App.2d 567, 99 P.2d 1089).

[1] It has been said that even though an employee may be going to or from his place of employment on a mission personal to himself if he is also on a substantial mission of his employer which is the major factor in the movement, he may still be said to be within the course of his employment. Western States Gas & Elec. Co. v. Bayside Lumber Co., 182 Cal. 140, 187 P. 735; Ocean A. & G. Corp. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 132 Cal.App. 207, 22 P.2d 538; Gagnebin v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 140 Cal.App. 80, 34 P.2d 1052; Fenton v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 44 Cal. App.2d 379, 112 P.2d 763.

[2, 3] If it be assumed that the instant case does not fall strictly within either one of the foregoing rules, when they are considered together in light of the facts established, it is clear that the death occurred in and arose out of the course of employment. Goodrich was on call twenty-four hours a day. He held a position where he exercised considerable discretion in the performance of his duties. He conducted some of the business of his employer from his home using the telephone there and was reimbursed for long distance calls. Working at night on the occasion in question, it was to be anticipated that he might return to his home which was only a short distance away to advise his wife that he was going to work all night, although he had previously advised her that he probably would be so engaged. Although his employer suggested he telephone his wife from the office, he did not forbid Goodrich to return home to speak to his wife. Several witnesses stated that Goodrich said he was going home to telephone with regard to the delivery of the cutting tool which was required before work could proceed. The making of such a call would be in the line of his duty, and the mere fact that he chose his home from which to call rather than the office was not an act in excess of his discretion in the matter. True, his employer and Gieck testified that Goodrich said he was returning home to advise his wife concerning the time he would be away, but that did not exclude the other purpose of telephoning in regard to the cutting tool. The trip had dual purposes. It cannot be doubted that if under the circumstances he had been returning home because operations were completed, the injury would have arisen out of and occurred in the course of employment. See State Compensation Ins. Fund v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 89 Cal.App. 197, 264 P. 514; California Casualty Idem. Exch. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 5 Cal.2d 185, 53 P.2d 758. It was anticipated that Goodrich would be traveling on the streets in an automobile inasmuch as he continuously did that in the course of his duties and the employer furnished him a car which he kept at his home. The fact that he was riding in Gieck's car at the time is immaterial inasmuch as his duties included the use of automobile transportation. We conclude therefore that the only reasonable inference flowing from the evidence is that Goodrich's death arose out of and occurred in the course of his employment. This conclusion must follow in light of the rule that any reasonable doubt as to whether the act of the employee is contemplated by the employment should be resolved in favor of the employee in view of the policy of liberal construction of the workmen's compensation laws. Employers', etc., Corp. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 37 Cal.App.2d 567, 99 P.2d 1089.

Goodrich's dependents filed their application for compensation on November 26, 1940. A hearing was thereafter had resulting on March 4, 1941, in an award to them. On March 20, 1941, the employer's insurance carrier petitioned for a rehearing which was granted on May 6, 1941. Apparently no other evidence was taken and a decision on rehearing was made on May 23, 1941, determining that the death did not occur in or arise out of the course of employment. On February 13, 1942, applicants filed a petition to reopen the case on the grounds that the death occurred in the course of employment and to produce new evidence that the decedent had stated that he was going home to telephone about the cutting tool. That petition was denied on March 17, 1942. On April 6, 1942, applicants filed a petition for a rehearing based upon the insufficiency of the evidence to support the award, and newly discovered evidence. On June 5, 1942, the commission granted that petition and the matter was set for further hearing. A further hearing was had at which additional evidence was taken. On July 22, 1942, applicants filed a petition for a further hearing to produce evidence requested by the referee. It was produced. On August 6, 1942, the commission made an order reciting that: "Rehearing having been granted herein, and all parties having appeared, and applicant having produced and offered new and additional evidence upon material issues herein, and newly-discovered evidence which could not with reasonable diligence have been produced and offered upon the original proceedings herein; and * * * It is ordered that the above-entitled matter be and the same hereby is reopened.

"Applicant having petitioned for further hearing herein, and having made an offer to prove at said further hearing the facts set forth in the signed statement of Charles M. Owens attached to said petition for further hearing as Exhibit 'A', and no good cause for said further hearing appearing, * * * It is ordered that said signed statement of Charles M. Owens be and the same is hereby admitted in evidence herein, and said petition for further hearing dated July 22, 1942, be and the same is hereby denied; and that the Order Denying Applicants' Petition to Reopen dated March 17, 1942, be and the same is hereby rescinded, and the Decision on Rehearing dated May 23, 1941, be and the same is hereby amended to read as follows." The amendment set forth the facts heretofore mentioned as found. On August 20, 1942, applicants petitioned for a rehearing which was denied on August 27, 1942. Petition for a review was filed on September 25, 1942.

Respondent commission contends that it was without jurisdiction to entertain or pass upon the petition for rehearing filed on August 20, 1942; that the final decision of the commission was made by its order of August 6, 1942, and petitioners were required to file their petition for review in the District Court of Appeal within 30 days thereafter, which they failed to do. They petitioned for a rehearing and filed their petition for a review within 30 days after its denial.

[4, 5] Generally, if a party does not prevail on the original hearing and his petition for a rehearing is denied, he may not again petition for a rehearing. He must seek relief in the courts. (See Labor Code, sec. 5950, St. 1937, p. 304; Crowe Glass Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 84 Cal.App. 287, 258 P. 130; Campbell, Workmen's Compensation, vol. II, p. 1324; Harlan v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 194 Cal. 352, 228 P. 654; Mustain v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 130 Cal.App. 447, 19 P.2d 1031. However, if one party prevails in the original hearing and on rehearing the other party prevails, the first party may petition for rehearing of the order made on rehearing because he has for the first time become the aggrieved party under section 5900 of the Labor Code, St. 1937, p. 302 (Dalsheim v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 215 Cal. 107, 8 P.2d 840, dictum; Brunau v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 135 Cal.App. 277, 26 P.2d 672), though it may be that such petition is not a condition precedent to court review. Dalsheim v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra.

[6] Under the foregoing rules petitioners could have petitioned for a rehearing within twenty days after the decision of May 23, 1941. However, rather than doing that, on March 17, 1942, they filed a petition to reopen under section 5803 of the Labor Code, St. 1937, p. 301, which provides:

"The commission has continuing jurisdiction over all its orders, decisions, and awards made and entered under the provisions of this division. At any time, upon notice and after an opportunity to be heard is given to the parties in interest, the commission may rescind, alter or amend any such order, decision, or award, good cause appearing therefor.

"Such power includes the right to review, grant or regrant, diminish, increase or terminate, within the limits prescribed by this division, any compensation awarded, upon the grounds that the disability of the person in whose favor such award was made has either recurred, increased, diminished, or terminated." Their petition was denied, whereupon petitioners petitioned for a rehearing and it may fairly be said that such petition was for a rehearing of the denial of the petition to reopen inasmuch as in its decision on August 6, 1942, it rescinded that order of denial. Application for rehearing may be made from an order denying relief under section 5803 because it is a final order of the commission in which the petitioner is aggrieved. See Ingram v. Department of Industrial Relations, 208 Cal. 633, 637, 284 P. 212.

After granting the petition of April 6, 1942, new evidence consisting chiefly of the testimony of the witnesses that Goodrich left with Gieck to telephone with regard to the cutting tool, was received. Thereafter, the order of August 6, 1942, was made amending the order of May 23, 1941, to make the more explicit findings heretofore set forth with respect to Goodrich's powers and duties, but denying compensation.

[7-9] It is true that that order of August 6, 1942, purported to affirm the order of May 23, 1941, but the commission could not in this manner deprive itself of jurisdiction to entertain a petition for a rehearing if it had such jurisdiction. The question is, therefore, whether the commission may entertain a petition for rehearing after making an order reopening a case and receiving and considering new evidence, which petition for rehearing is presented by the party upon whose petition the matter was reopened and further evidence taken, but comes to the same conclusion originally reached. It has power to entertain such a petition because it considered new and additional evidence, the decision therein is in effect a new decision on new facts, and the party although failing to prevail on the last occasion as he had on the first is entitled to a reconsideration by the commission of its opinion on the new evidence. The very purpose of a rehearing is to have a reconsideration of a matter which has been theretofore considered only on one occasion. The right to have a reconsideration of the case where new facts and evidence were produced on the rehearing was not considered in Crowe Glass Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra. That case proceeded upon the theory that there would be no end to the proceedings before the commission if successive rehearings could be entertained. Such situation does not exist where a losing party petitions for and obtains a rehearing on the ground of newly discovered evidence, which evidence is produced and considered by the commission but results in the same conclusion. If the losing party again petitions for a rehearing, that is, a reconsideration of the evidence before the commission, in a case where no new evidence is presented, and it is denied, he cannot again petition for a rehearing, because the commission in such a case is not requested to reconsider new and different evidence. In Harlan v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, the court, as pointed out in the dictum in Dalsheim v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, merely held that where on granting a petition for a rehearing the commission reverses itself, the losing party on rehearing need not petition for a rehearing before seeking relief in the courts, but nevertheless, the commission has jurisdiction to entertain a petition for a rehearing. Beronio v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 86 Cal.App. 588, 260 P. 1104, involved a second petition for a rehearing on the ground of newly discovered evidence which had not been mentioned in the first petition for a rehearing which was denied, and petitioner had sought relief in the courts before a ruling was made on his second petition for a rehearing, and hence the court had acquired jurisdiction. Mustain v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, did not concern a situation in which a petition for rehearing was filed after a second denial of compensation on rehearing where new evidence was considered.

The award is annulled.

SHENK, CURTIS, and SCHAUER, JJ., concurred.

TRAYNOR, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent. The decision of the commission on August 6, 1942, which in effect reaffirmed its decision of May 23, 1941, was on the rehearing granted petitioners on June 5, 1942. Section 5950 of the Labor Code provides. "Within thirty days after the petition for a rehearing is denied, or, if the petition is granted, within thirty days after the rendition of the decision on the rehearing, any person affected thereby may apply to the Supreme Court or to the district court of appeal of the appellate district in which he resides, for a writ of review, for the purpose of inquiring into and determining the lawfulness of the original order, decision, or award, or of the order, decision, or award on rehearing." (Italics added.) Under this provision the final decision of the commission was made on August 6, 1942. Ingram v. Dept. of Industrial Relations, 208 Cal. 633, 636, 284 P. 212; Harlan v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 194 Cal. 352, 365, 228 P. 654; Crowe Glass Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 84 Cal.App. 287, 293, 258 P. 130; Beronio v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 86 Cal.App. 588, 590, 260 P. 1104; Mustain v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 130 Cal.App. 447, 448, 19 P.2d 1031. The petition for writ of review was not filed within thirty days thereafter and for that reason should not be considered. Neal v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 36 Cal.App. 40, 171 P. 696; North Pacific Steamship Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 34 Cal. App. 488, 168 P. 30. Since the decision on rehearing made no change in the award there was no basis for further reconsideration by the commission. Cf. Dalsheim v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 215 Cal. 107, 8 P.2d 840; Brunau v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 135 Cal.App. 277, 26 P.2d 672.

EDMONDS, J., concurred.

Rehearing denied; EDMONDS and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

---

22 Cal.2d 636

TINGEY v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

L. A. 18655.

Supreme Court of California.

Aug. 3, 1943.

1. Workmen's compensation ⚷768

Where merchandiser's display manager, who had discretion to and was impliedly authorized to conduct merchandiser's business while having lunch, was injured while stepping from automobile bumper to sidewalk at entrance to merchandiser's store after crossing flooded street to return to the office from lunch, and display manager and merchandiser's branch store manager had discussed merchandiser's business through the lunch period, the injury "arose out of and in course of employment" and was compensable.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Arose Out of and in Course of Employment".

2. Workmen's compensation ⚷617

Where an employee holds a position which carries authority to exercise considerable discretion in the performance of his duties, the scope of his operations which may come within the compensation laws is enlarged.

3. Workmen's compensation ⚷768

Where display manager was acting with his employer's implied permission in eating lunch at the same time that he was performing his duties, compensation for injuries sustained as manager was returning from lunch to the office was not barred by the "going and coming" rule.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Going and Coming".

4. Workmen's compensation ⚷661

The mere fact that an employee is performing a personal act when injured does not per se determine that the injury did not "arise out of employment", and he may be acting within the "course of employment" when combining personal acts with his employer's business where the employment contemplates that he shall.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Arise Out of Employment" and "Course of Employment".

5. Workmen's compensation ⚷617

An injury is compensable if received while the employee is doing those reasonable things which his contract of employment expressly or impliedly authorizes him to do.

6. Workmen's compensation ⚷768

Where display manager was performing his duties while having lunch as contemplated by his employment and restaurant chosen for continuing his conference with his employer's branch store manager was close to their office, compensation for injuries sustained by display manager while returning to the office from lunch was not barred under the "special mission" rule and display manager's major purpose, and facts that he had not been expressly directed to transact business during lunch, and that branch manager had asked him to lunch and paid for it, were immaterial.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Special Mission".

7. Workmen's compensation ⚷615

Any reasonable doubt as to whether an employee's act is contemplated by the employment should be resolved in the employee's favor.

◆

In Bank.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Law by Clarence E. Tingey claimant against the Industrial Accident Commission and others to review an order denying compensation for personal injuries.

Award annulled.

Benjamin, Lieberman & Elmore, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Charles A. Son, of Los Angeles, amicus curiae for petitioner.

Everett A. Corten and Fred G. Goldsworthy, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

After making an award of compensation to petitioner Clarence E. Tingey, the Industrial Accident Commission granted a rehearing and then found that petitioner was employed by Eastern-Columbia, Inc., but that he did not receive any injury arising out of or occurring in the course of his employment.

The employer is in the merchandising business and has branch stores throughout southern California. Tingey had been its display manager for all of its stores for fifteen years. His immediate superior was J. M. Sieroty, the vice-president and general manager of the employer corporation. Sieroty testified that Tingey's duties were "complete charge of our window displays, interior displays, our cabinet shop, that is a shop for the manufacture and maintenance of fixtures and equipment, as well as designing improvements for the general store operation. In addition to that Mr. Tingey helped us with lay-out of offices and practically all material pertinent to construction. Mr. Tingey also worked very closely with our architect on various building projects, from the smallest project that we have undertaken to the Ninth and Broadway building." Tingey had no office hours and was authorized to establish his own.

During the early part of December, 1941, a Mr. Weinsten who was manager of one of the employer's branch stores discussed with Tingey plans for a new branch store to be opened by the employer of which Weinsten was to be the manager. Sieroty had discussed these plans with Tingey and Weinsten and had instructed Tingey "to lay out the store, allocate space for various departments according to Mr. Weinsten's program, and to develop the store windows."

On December 10, 1941, while carrying out that project Weinsten called at Tingey's office at 10 a. m. pursuant to an appointment he had made to discuss plans for the store. The office was located in the employer's building, on the lower floor of which it maintained its main store. The discussion continued until noon, the subject being about three-quarters covered, when the two men left the office to look at the show windows of the store in the building. At Weinsten's suggestion they proceeded across the street to a restaurant to have lunch where they continued the discussion for about one hour while they were having lunch. They left the restaurant to cross the street to Tingey's office. It was raining and the street next to the curb was flooded. They reached the center of the street by stepping on the bumper of a parked car. The other side of the street being flooded also, they were transported at their request to the curb on the bumper of a passing motorist. Tingey was injured while stepping from the bumper to the sidewalk at the entrance to the employer's store. Weinsten paid for the lunch.

The employer maintains a restaurant in the building in which Tingey had his office, but no privacy could be had there. Tingey commonly discussed business with fellow employees while at lunch. Sieroty testified that it did not make any difference to him whether the discussion between Weinsten and Tingey was at lunch, and if he had known they were going to do so he would have approved it, and that it was common practice for key employees like Tingey to discuss matters relating to the employer's business at lunch. Tingey's usual time for lunch was from 11 a. m. to 2 p. m. They left plans and papers which they had been discussing at Tingey's office when they went to lunch. Sieroty testified that Tingey was a "key" executive and "is regarded as such in the group, and also in regard to our time, we have none; he didn't punch a time clock and he was not regarded as an average employee. Q. Did it make any difference to you whether he discussed these plans or any business at his office or during lunch time? A. No, sir. Q. Did his discussion of these plans with Mr. Weinsten at lunch meet with your approval? A. Well, specifically I didn't know they were discussing anything, I didn't know they were even there. If I may answer the question this way: it is not unusual for any of our executives to go out or for us to go out sometimes enmasse to discuss our problems at lunch time; quite a common occurrence to carry your business to the lunch table. Q. That is, it is more of a common occurrence with key employees as you mention, as Mr. Tingey, than it is with others, is that correct? A. Certainly. Q. And that met with your approval, did it? A. Had I known it, it would have met with my approval."

[1,2] The only reasonable conclusion from the foregoing evidence, which is without substantial conflict, is, that the injury arose out of and occurred in the course of employment. Both Tingey and Weinsten held positions in which they were vested with a large amount of discretion as to their hours of work and the manner of performing it. The evidence unerringly points to the conclusion that that discretion extended to the performance by Tingey of his duties during his lunch hour. It was the practice of Tingey and other employees in the managerial classification to conduct the business of the employer at luncheon conferences. The only reasonable conclusion is that Tingey was impliedly authorized to conduct his employer's business while having lunch. Performing the duties in that manner would reasonably authorize the employee to be on the street. The place chosen for lunch was immediately across the street and near Tingey's office. When Tingey was injured he was returning from lunch to continue with his duties at his office. The means chosen for crossing the flooded street did not take them out of the course of their employment. The employer's business was discussed all through the lunch period; the only other discussion had to do with the weather. It is significant that Tingey's immediate superior testified that although he did not know that Weinsten and Tingey were conducting their employer's business during lunch, he would have approved such conduct had he known of it. That was in harmony with the practice of having conferences and discussing business at lunch periods common with employees holding positions similar to Tingey's. Where an employee holds a position which carries authority to exercise considerable discretion in the performance of his duties, the scope of his operations which may come within the workmen's compensation laws is enlarged. Campbell, Workmen's Compensation, sec. 142; Stumar v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 16 Cal.App.2d 429, 60 P.2d 557; Wiley v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 16 Cal.App.2d 756, 60 P.2d 558; Associated Indem. Corp. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 18 Cal.2d 40, 112 P.2d 615; Federal Mut. Liability Ins. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 94 Cal.App. 251, 270 P. 992. It may be said in this instance that rather than acting out of the course of his employment, Tingey was showing considerable diligence in furthering his employer's interests.

[3-5] Respondent asserts that the going and coming rule bars recovery by Tingey; that the test to be applied is, what was the controlling reason for the employee being in the place he was at the time of the injury; that if the controlling reason was a purpose of his own, then he may not recover although he was also incidentally performing a service for his master; that Tingey's conduct in going to lunch falls within the latter category. The fallacy of that contention is plain. Here Tingey was acting with the implied permission of his employer in eating his lunch at the same time that he was performing his duties. While so acting the injury clearly arose out of and occurred in the course of his employment. Under those circumstances the test urged by respondent is not applicable. It has been held that the eating of lunch may be done as a part of and while performing a duty for the employer and while so doing the employee is acting in the scope of his employment. Krause v. Swartwood, 174 Minn. 147, 218 N.W. 555, 57 A.L.R. 611, involved a physician's office assistant directed to eat lunch near the office to enable her to answer telephone calls. The mere fact that an employee is performing a personal act when injured does not per se determine that the injury did not arise out of the employment, and he may be acting within the course of his employment when combining personal acts with the business of his employer where the employment contemplates that he shall. See Leffert v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 219 Cal. 710, 28 P.2d 911; Employers', etc., Corp. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 37 Cal. App.2d 567, 99 P.2d 1089; Associated Oil Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 191 Cal. 557, 217 P. 744; Larson v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 193 Cal. 406, 224 P. 744; State Comp. Ins. Fund v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 194 Cal. 28, 227 P. 168. The test is stated in Employers', etc., Corp. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, 37 Cal.App.2d at page 573, 99 P.2d at page 1092:

> "The true rule to be derived from the cases is that the injury is compensable if received while the employee is doing those reasonable things which his contract of employment expressly or impliedly authorizes him to do."

In the instant case the only reasonable conclusion is that it was not only contemplated by the employment that Tingey would eat lunch while performing his duties, but he was impliedly authorized to do so.

[6] Respondent relies upon such cases as London Guarantee & Accident Co., Ltd. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 190 Cal. 587, 213 P. 977, involving a discussion of the so-called special mission rule as an exception to the going and coming rule. But here we do not have involved a special mission for the employer, nor the question of which was the major purpose of the employee at the time. Furthermore, in the last cited case, the employee was not performing services for his employer while eating his lunch. In the instant case the employee was performing his duties while having lunch as contemplated by the employment, and as a part of such act it was necessary for Tingey to go to and from the restaurant. The place chosen was close to Tingey's office. It is not important that Tingey was not expressly directed by his superior to transact business during lunch in view of his discretion in performing his duties, and the implied authorization of the employer. For the same reason it is not significant that Weinsten asked Tingey to have lunch and paid for it, or that it was not paid for by the employer.

[7] It must be remembered that any reasonable doubt as to whether the act of the employee is contemplated by the employment should be resolved in favor of the employee in view of the policy of liberal construction of the workmen's compensation laws. Goodrich v. Industrial Acc. Comm., Cal.Sup., 140 P.2d 405, this day filed; Employers', etc., Corp. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra.

The award is annulled.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, TRAYNOR, and SCHAUER, JJ., concurred.

---

22 Cal.2d 708

In re GEHRING.

S. F. 16896.

Supreme Court of California.

Aug. 13, 1943.

1. Attorney and client 🔑61

Disbarred attorney's failure, in compliance with rules of procedure of state bar, to disclose in petition for reinstatement that he had been twice arrested, disclosed either a deliberate attempt to conceal material facts or lack of that high quality of intellectual discernment and integrity which is required of attorneys at law, though charges were dismissed or not prosecuted, and justified denial of reinstatement. Pol.Code § 633a30; Insurance

Code § 1680, St.1935, p. 582; Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 39.

2. Attorney and client ⚷61

An applicant for readmission to practice law has absolute duty to make full disclosure of any charges preferred against him irrespective of outcome thereof, and advice of a person in high office or fact that charges or disbarment proceedings were dismissed will not excuse failure to perform such duty. Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 39.

In Bank.

Proceeding in the matter of the petition of Edward E. Gehring for reinstatement as an attorney at law.

Petition denied.

Gardiner Johnson, of San Francisco, and Arthur W. Carlson, of Oakland, for petitioner.

Benj. R. Aiken, Jr., of Oakland, and Jerold E. Weil, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

Petitioner seeks reinstatement as an attorney at law. He was disbarred by order of this court on November 1, 1932, made upon recommendation of the Board of Governors of The State Bar, approximately twenty-seven years after his admission to practice. No review of the board's decision was sought at that time. The grounds for the disbarment were that petitioner admittedly commingled certain estate funds with funds of his own and converted a portion of the estate funds to his own use. The disbarment record also discloses two companion proceedings in which suspension was recommended on the ground that petitioner received attorney's fees and costs in two separate divorce matters but failed to file suit or to return the money in either instance.

Petitioner, now approximately 68 years of age, practiced law in Alameda County, and has continued to reside there since he was disbarred. The State Bar Local Administrative Committee of that county, appointed by the Board of Governors to investigate, hear evidence, and make findings in connection with petitioner's application for readmission, reported that by reason of his failure to include in his petition certain information required by rule 39 of the Rules of Procedure of The State Bar, they felt that petitioner had not acted in good faith in submitting the petition. Consequently they recommended against reinstating him. A minority report, with favorable recommendation, was also presented. After a further hearing before the Board of Governors, that body voted nine to four against recommending that petitioner be readmitted. Petitioner now seeks a review by this court and an order of readmission notwithstanding the adverse recommendation. The record, however, impels us to the conclusion that the position of the examining committee and the Board of Governors is well taken and that the petition for reinstatement should be denied.

Rule 39 of the Rules of Procedure of The State Bar requires that a petition for reinstatement shall contain, among other things, "(3) * * * (i) a statement, for the period of rehabilitation, showing dates, general nature and ultimate disposition of every matter involving the arrest or prosecution of petitioner for any crime, whether felony or misdemeanor * * *; (j) a statement stating whether or not any applications were made during said period for a license requiring proof of good character for its procurement * * *, and the disposition thereof."

As first presented to The State Bar for filing, petitioner's petition contained no statement as to "whether or not" during the period following his disbarment he had applied for a license "requiring proof of good character for its procurement." He was informed that his petition could not be filed until this omission was supplied. Either on this occasion or at a preceding time, he was given a copy of the Rules of Procedure governing such applications, which rules contained a form calling for a "statement of any arrest" and a direct statement as to "whether or not" any application for a license of the type mentioned had been made. Petitioner added to the petition the statement that he had, in about May, 1941, applied for a license as a real estate broker in this state, but that by reason of his disbarment the application had been denied. The petition was then, on April 14, 1942, accepted for filing, but it contained no statement concerning any "matter involving the arrest or prosecution of petitioner for any crime," as required by subdivision (3) (i) of rule 39, quoted hereinabove, and as said to be suggested in the supplied form. In this respect the petition did not on its face appear to be defective, because the form in calling for a "statement of any arrest" did not require an express negation of arrest if in fact none had occurred.

On June 19, 1942, petitioner called at the office of the examiner appointed by The State Bar in this proceeding, and discussed the application with him. The examiner, who in the performance of his duty had written petitioner suggesting an interview, testified at the hearing before the Board of Governors that he informed petitioner that "it wasn't necessary for him to give me any information; that I was representing the State Bar and would use any information I could obtain in this matter. After discussing his petition with me, I asked Mr. Gehring the flat question, 'Have you even been arrested?' The answer was 'No.'" The examiner further testified that at the time of such interview he had no knowledge that petitioner had been arrested at any time following his disbarment.

At the hearing before the local administrative committee (on July 21, 1942), petitioner made no mention of the arrests in his direct testimony but on cross-examination testified as follows:

"Q. Mr. Gehring, have you ever been arrested? A. Once.

"Q. When was that? A. Quite a few years ago.

"The Chairman: Q. Approximately when? A. Five or six or seven years ago.

"Mr. Aiken [the Examiner]: Q. What was the nature of the arrest? A. I had written a policy of insurance. The company refused to accept it and I returned the premium, sent it back, either a money order or cashier's check and somehow he didn't get it and he had a warrant issued. The money was there long before the arrest was made, or anything of that kind. Then I told him where the money was.

"Q. What happened after that? A. That is all.

"Q. The case was dismissed? A. Yes. Q. Is that the only time you have been arrested? A. I was arrested in San Francisco. * * *"

It appears further that the first of the two arrests thus finally admitted by petitioner occurred on February 5, 1934, pursuant to an indictment for grand theft (a felony), returned by the Grand Jury of the City and County of San Francisco on December 8, 1933. On April 5, 1934, the case was dismissed by the superior court upon motion of the district attorney after hearing the evidence of the complaining witness. Petitioner, in a letter to the local administrative committee, dated September 5, 1942,—several weeks after the hearing of July 21—stated that he spent six days in the county jail in connection with that arrest. The second arrest was on November 30, 1934, on misdemeanor charges of petty theft and of a technical violation of section 633a30 of the Political Code (now sec. 1680 of the Insurance Code, St.1935, p. 582). Petitioner posted $50 bail and appeared in the justice's court on five different occasions during December, 1934, and January, 1935, on this matter, but upon his failure to appear on February 11, 1935, —the day finally set for trial—his bail was ordered forfeited and the cause was dropped from the trial calendar, to be reset on motion of the district attorney. Apparently no further proceedings have since been taken in the case.

Petitioner admits that he read and "followed" the rules of The State Bar in preparing his petition for reinstatement, but in attempted explanation of his failure to include in the petition a statement concerning these arrests he testified before the committee that:

"I figured that as long as the matters had been disposed of there was nothing at all. There was no record. I am willing to amend the petition.

"Q. You figured at the time that there was no need because we wouldn't be able to find them? A. No. Where the matter was dismissed and a man has had a complaint filed against him, he would be in the same position he was before the complaint was filed.

"Q. Don't these records indicate that you were arrested? A. I am not trying to argue about the proposition. That wasn't my idea. I had no fear because I had no fear of it. I figure what I did was nothing particularly wrong."

[1, 2] That explanation apparently depicts Mr. Gehring's estimate of his duty in the premises. His conduct, including such appraisal of his duty, appears to manifest one or the other or both of two things: 1. He sought, deliberately, to conceal material facts from the examiner and from the committee. 2. If he failed to recognize the materiality of such facts he disclosed thereby a lack of that high quality of intellectual discernment and integrity which is required of attorneys at law. We may appropriately repeat here what we said in Spears v. State Bar, 211 Cal. 183, 187, 294 P. 697, 698, 72 A.L.R. 923: "At the threshold of the discussion it should be stated as definitely settled in this state that, irrespective of the outcome of any charges preferred against an applicant for admission to practice law in this state, whether he be convicted, acquitted, or the charges dismissed, a duty rests upon said applicant to make a full disclosure of such charges to the committee charged with the duty and the responsibility of investigating his fitness to practice law in this state. We are aware that this requirement calls for a high degree of frankness and truthfulness on the part of the attorney making application for admission to practice law in this state, but no good reason presents itself why such a high standard of integrity should not be required. This duty to make a full disclosure is an absolute duty, and a justification for a failure to perform it is not to be found in the excuse that an applicant has been advised by some person, no matter how high in official position that person may stand, that such disclosure is not necessary, nor by the sophistic argument that the charges having been dismissed or the disbarment proceedings dropped, in effect no charges were preferred or proceedings instituted, and applicant is therefore justified in stating under oath that no charges were in fact preferred or proceedings for disbarment instituted." See, also, In re Kepler, 79 Cal.App. 639, 640, 250 P. 701. The above-quoted statement relative to an application for original admission applies with at least equal force to a motion for readmission. See Kepler v. State Bar, 216 Cal. 52, 55, 13 P.2d 509.

From what has been said it appears that the recommendation of the Board of Governors against the readmission of petitioner is supported by the evidence. Petitioner's showing on this application for review and readmission notwithstanding the adverse recommendation is not "a convincing showing" that "such adverse recommendation is not based upon sound premises and valid reasoning." See Spears v. State Bar, supra, 211 Cal. at pages 191, 192, 294 P. at page 700, 72 A.L.R. 923; see, also, Salot v. State Bar, 3 Cal.2d 615, 618, 45 P.2d 203.

The motion for readmission is denied.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 241

McLAUGHLIN v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES.

Civ. 13944.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Aug. 20, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 8, 1943.

Hearing Denied Oct. 18, 1943.

1. Municipal corporations 🔑759(5)

Under statute, a city is liable for injuries resulting from the dangerous and defective condition of a public street, whether it is improved or unimproved. Gen.Laws 1937, Act No. 5619.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑757(1)

A city is under no obligation to improve its streets but it is bound to keep them all in a reasonably safe condition, subject to statutory conditions. Gen.Laws 1937, Act No. 5619.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑821(23)

In action against city for injuries sustained by pedestrian in fall into hole in street, where pedestrian knew that street generally was in a dangerous condition but that there was a strip which could be walked on with safety, pedestrian was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in using street.

4. Negligence 🔑136(14)

Negligence is usually a "question of fact", not a "question of law".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Fact" and "Question of Law".

5. Municipal corporations 🔑821(26)

In action against city for injuries sustained by pedestrian in fall into hole in street, whether pedestrian walking on safe path adjacent to street in dangerous condition failed to exercise due care in stepping into street to pass around automobile blocking path instead of retracing steps, was for jury.

6. Highways 🔑168
Municipal corporations 🔑757(1)

A pedestrian is entitled to use every part of the street or highway subject to proper regulations, and the city's duty to repair is co-extensive with that right. Gen. Laws 1937, Act 5619.

7. Municipal corporations 🔑800(6)

In action against city for injuries sustained by fall into hole in street, presence of parked automobile barring pedestrian's safe path, and causing her to use dangerous section of street was not "proximate cause" of injury so as to relieve city of liability therefor, where city had duty to make whole street safe and had reason to anticipate such parking. Gen.Laws 1937, Act No. 5619.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Proximate Cause".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by Thomas H. McLaughlin against the City of Los Angeles, a municipal corporation, for injuries sustained in fall into hole in city street. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., and Leonard Husar, Deputy City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

William E. Empey, of North Hollywood, for respondent.

SHAW, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff, who was approximately 70 years old, was walking along Fair Avenue, an unimproved street in the San Fernando Valley section of the City of Los Angeles, slipped on the edge of a hole in the street and fell, receiving the injuries for which he brings this action against the city. The jury returned a verdict in his favor and from the ensuing judgment the defendant appeals.

[1, 2] Defendant states as its first proposition in support of its appeal: "As a matter of law, it is not unreasonable for the City of Los Angeles to maintain an unimproved dirt road without a sidewalk in an outlying undeveloped industrial district which is also devoted to some residential use." This proposition is irrelevant to the present case. Plaintiff does not complain of the absence of a sidewalk, but of the presence of a hole. His action is to be sustained, if at all, upon the Statute of 1923, Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937 Ed., Act 5619, providing that "municipalities * * * shall be liable for injuries to persons and property resulting from the dangerous or defective condition of public streets, highways, * * *" on conditions of notice, etc., which we do not quote because no contention is made here in regard to them. Under this statute a city is liable for injuries resulting from the dangerous or defective condition of a public street whether it is improved or unimproved. A city is under no obligation to improve its streets, but it is bound to keep them all in a reasonably safe condition, subject to the conditions stated in the statute. Of course the impact of this duty may vary with the nature and location of the street, the traffic upon it and the character of its improvements. No claim is made by defendant that Fair Avenue was not, at the time and place of plaintiff's accident, in a dangerous condition. It was an unimproved dirt road, on which there was a considerable amount of travel by loaded trucks, its surface was rutted and full of holes, many of which were a foot or more in depth, and after a rain these holes were full of water and so remained for some time. It had rained the day before plaintiff's accident and there was water in the hole in which he fell.

The only other contention made by defendant is that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. It appears without dispute that plaintiff had lived for several years on Fair Avenue about three blocks from the place where the accident occurred, that he had often passed this place during that time and was quite familiar with the conditions there. At the time of the accident he was on his way home from work and was carrying some groceries which he had bought at a market on the way. He could have gone from the market to his home by another route along improved streets on which there were sidewalks, but he says this other route was longer. His usual route home lay over Fair Avenue and he followed it at the time of the accident. Fair Avenue runs north and south and at the place where plaintiff fell it is bordered by a fence on the east side. Along this fence there is, according to plaintiff's testimony, a strip of ground which is higher than the rest of the street and along which he could walk without any trouble even in time of rain. The accident occurred about 8:30 p. m., there were no street lights in the vicinity, and it was dark, but clear. As plaintiff came by the fence he found an automobile parked where he could not pass between it and the fence and so could not stay no the high ground. Looking to the left of the automobile he saw what appeared to him to be a path wide enough for him to pass between the automobile and a hole on its left. He started to go around on this side, but his foot slipped on the edge of this hole, which was about 14 inches deep and filled with water, and he fell, breaking his left wrist and thus receiving the injuries for which he sues.

[3, 4] Defendant contends that the danger confronting plaintiff was obvious, that he knew the dangerous condition of the street, and that he was therefore guilty of negligence in using it at all, and particularly in using it in preference to another, safer route which was open to him. It may be that had the jury returned a verdict against plaintiff, we would have been required to sustain it on these grounds, but it does not necessarily follow that on the same grounds we must reverse a verdict in his favor. Negligence is usually a matter of fact, not of law, and we think this is true in the present case. As we said in Sommerfield v. Miratti, (1942) 49 Cal. App.2d 450, 455, 121 P.2d 746, in reference to a claim of contributory negligence of the plaintiff there in using a stairway known to be somewhat slippery, "* * * if to a man of ordinary prudence it would appear that in spite of the danger he can by taking available precautions safely use the passageway, he is not negligent in using it with those precautions." In the case at bar the plaintiff, while he knew that the street in general was in a dangerous condition, also knew that there was a strip of ground next to the fence on which he had been able to walk safely under similar conditions. Hence he was not necessarily negligent in undertaking to traverse this part of the street.

[5] When he found the automobile which prevented him from using this safe path, it appears to be defendant's contention that he should have stopped, retraced his steps to the improved streets and gone to his home by the alternate route above mentioned. But he says that he looked and saw what appeared to be a safe route around the automobile. Only a short detour would be necessary before he could return to the higher ground along the fence. The event, it is true, proved plaintiff's course around the automobile to be unsafe, but negligence is not to be judged exclusively by hindsight. The question whether plaintiff exercised due care in attempting to pass around the automobile instead of retracing his steps, was, under the circumstances, one of fact for the jury.

[6, 7] In an attempt to escape the effect of the conclusion last stated, defendant contends that the proximate cause of plaintiff's fall was not the dangerous condition of the street, but the presence of the parked automobile barring plaintiff's safe path, and that it should not have been expected to anticipate such presence and hence was not required to make the center portion of the street safe for pedestrians. But a pedestrian is entitled to use every part of the street or highway, subject to proper regulations (none of which appear to exist in this case), and defendant's duty to repair is co-extensive with that right. There were places of business abutting on the part of the street where the automobile was parked, and no reason appears why defendant should not have anticipated such parking, if that were necessary to impose on it a duty to make the street as a whole safe for pedestrians. The jury could properly find that plaintiff's injury was proximately caused by the condition of the street.

The judgment is affirmed.

DESMOND, P. J., and SHINN, J., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 133

PEOPLE v. LYNCH.

Cr. 3716.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 5, 1943.

1. Criminal law 🔑1159(5)

Where circumstances surrounding accused's entry into house and his statements to police justified conclusion that accused intended to steal, persuasive evidence that accused was too intoxicated to form such intent did not warrant reversal of burglary conviction.

2. Criminal law 🔑738

The question of felonious intent is for the jury and may be inferred from all of the circumstances present in the case.

3. Criminal law 🔑1159(5)

Court of appeal could not substitute its conclusion as to the existence of a felonious intent for that of jury where jury's conclusion did not do violence to reason.

4. Criminal law ⚷795(3), 823(17)

Trial court's statement after defining degrees of burglary that if jury found accused guilty, it must be of burglary or attempted burglary of the first degree amounted to a misstatement of a legal principle that jury was bound to follow and not a justifiable "comment on evidence" or credibility of witnesses, and such error was not cured by subsequent instructions that jury was sole judge of facts and credibility of witnesses and was not bound by any comment of court thereon. Const. art. 6, § 19, amended in 1934.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Comment on Evidence".

5. Criminal law ⚷571

Where there was a possibility of a reasonable doubt as to whether accused was guilty of first or second degree burglary, he could only be convicted of the lesser offense. Pen.Code § 1097.

6. Criminal law ⚷1172(1), 1184

If accused was lawfully convicted of burglary, trial court's error in instructing that if found guilty it must be of first degree burglary resulted in a "miscarriage of justice" only as to improper fixing of the degree of crime and imposition of penalty therefor which may be righted by Court of Appeal without a new trial. Pen.Code, §§ 1097, 1181, subd. 6.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Miscarriage of Justice".

7. Criminal law ⚷772(3)

Where trial court unequivocally informed jury that accused was charged in two counts with two distinct offenses, that he might be convicted upon either or both counts, and that each offense of which accused was convicted must be stated in the verdict, failure to charge specifically that fact that information contained two counts could not in itself add to weight of evidence against accused on either count and that each count should be considered as though separately tried was not error.

8. Criminal law ⚷723(1), 1037(1)

Prosecutor's cross-examination of accused concerning his previous appearances in court and as to why he chose to defend himself instead of availing himself of services of public defender insinuating that accused sought thus to enlist jury's sympathy constituted "misconduct" prejudicial to accused though not objected to during trial.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Misconduct".

9. Criminal law ⚷656(5), 1166½(12)

Trial court's statement during cross-examination of expert appointed to examine accused who had pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity that court considered witness competent to make examination and express an opinion and that his competency had never been challenged was improper and prejudicial effect was not eliminated by giving statutory instruction as to expert testimony. Pen.Code § 1127b.

10. Constitutional law ⚷268

It is court's duty to insist that accused be fairly convicted, and denial of that fair and impartial trial guaranteed by law amounts to a denial of "due process of law".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law".

11. Criminal law ⚷1186(4)

Constitutional provision for disregarding harmless error is of no concern to trial courts except in proceedings on motion for new trial and so far as its application goes is of interest only to courts of review. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Charles James Lynch was convicted of burglary, and from the final judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial, he appeals.

Judgment and order reversed.

Frederick H. Vercoe, Public Defender, and William B. Neeley, Deputy Public Defender, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Elizabeth Palmer, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

Through an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, defendant was accused in count 1 thereof with the crime of burglary, while count 2 charged the offense of attempted burglary, both crimes allegedly committed on the 26th of November, 1942. In connection with each count of the information, it was also alleged that prior to the date thereof, defendant had suffered four prior felony convictions and that for each of said prior felony convictions defendant served a term of imprisonment in the State prison.

To the aforesaid information defendant pleaded not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity. Trial before a jury resulted in the conviction of the defendant of the crime of burglary as charged in count 1 and his acquittal of the offense alleged in count 2. The issue raised by the plea of not guilty by reason of insanity was subsequently tried before the same jury which returned a verdict that the defendant was sane. A motion for a new trial was made by the defendant and denied by the trial court. In all of the proceedings up to and including the denial of his motion for a new trial, the defendant appeared in propria persona. After denial of the motion for a new trial, the court appointed the public defender of Los Angeles County to represent the defendant, and thereafter, with the consent of the court, the motion for a new trial was renewed and, following argument thereon by counsel, was again denied. This appeal is from the final judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

The factual background surrounding this prosecution, as reflected by the record, may be thus epitomized. Mrs. Myrtle Keeney testified that she left her home in the city of Pasadena about 8:15 on the morning of November 26, 1942, and did not return home until 7:30 o'clock that evening. As she approached her home she observed a light burning in the front bedroom thereof. Entering her residence through the front door, Mrs. Keeney proceeded through the dining room and into the bedroom where she observed a man seated on the bed with his head in his hands. She first thought the man was her brother and inquired of him as to whether he was sick. Upon being addressed, the man looked up but made no reply, but Mrs. Keeney saw he was not her brother. To Mrs. Keeney the man appeared to be "either drunk or sick". The witness noticed that either one or two of the bureau drawers, which had been closed in the morning, were open but nothing was missing. Mrs. Keeney then went back through the dining room and left the house to telephone the police. She observed the man follow her from the bedroom to the dining room from which point he watched her leave the house, after which he went out the front door. After a few minutes absence Mrs. Keeney returned to her home with the police officers.

Investigation disclosed that the hook holding the back screen door of Mrs. Keeney's residence had been pulled out in order to open the door and two panes of glass about 8″ x 10″ in the back door had been broken out and the shattered glass had fallen upon the floor. There was also blood on the floor and a small fragment of flesh caught in the glass. When the panes of glass had been knocked out, it was easy to reach in and turn the key which unlocked the rear door. There was some tobacco scattered around in the kitchen, approximately enough with which to roll a cigarette. Burned matches were found on the screen porch, in the kitchen, dining room and bedroom, but in no other parts of the house. An empty pint wine bottle was also found in the home. The investigating police officer arrived at the Keeney residence about 8 p.m. After making an examination of the house, the officer returned to the police car, parked in the front of the premises, at about 8:30 o'clock. As he was getting into the automobile the officer observed the defendant walking south on Raymond Street. It is apparent, from the officer's testimony given at the preliminary examination, that his attention was attracted to the defendant by reason of the latter's apparent intoxication. After some conversation at the police car with the defendant, the officer took him before Mrs. Keeney who identified him as the man she had found in her home when she returned that evening. The police officer testified that the defendant "was very intoxicated"; that when first taken to Mrs. Keeney's home the defendant "wanted to know what it was all about". Regarding his conversation with the defendant, the officer stated that the former's answers were "fairly coherent and understandable though not entirely clear" but "he was able to answer questions to a certain extent". In the course of his interrogation of the defendant, the officer asked him "What were you doing in the house" to which the defendant, according to the officer, replied in substance "Well, you know as well as I do. I was trying to steal something". Upon his arrival at the police station, defendant was given a blood test for alcoholism. This reflected 3.06 of alcohol. According to the police officer, he had given this test on numerous occasions during his career as a police officer, and when asked as to the degree of defendant's intoxication as reflected by such test, the officer replied "that he was very intoxicated". According to the jail records, the defendant was booked for "investigation as to the burglary charge and for intoxication". When searched at the police station, defendant had no cash, and among his personal effects was no property belonging to the complaining witness. Either a day or two days after his arrest, the defendant was interviewed by another officer, who testified that at that time the defendant "showed that you had been under the influence of liquor previous to that time and you were very nervous until they took you down to the hospital and gave you some sedatives, but at the time I questioned you I think you were not quite so nervous". At this conversation, defendant told the officer that insofar as the alleged burglary of Mrs. Keeney's residence was concerned he, the defendant, was "so darned drunk that he didn't remember much about it". To various other questions the defendant reiterated his claim that he had but a very hazy recollection of the events which transpired on the evening of his arrest. At the trial the defendant took the witness stand in his own behalf and testified that he had some recollection of talking to a woman in a room on the night in question but that he had no recollection as to when he entered the house nor as to what was his purpose in so doing.

[1-3] Appellant first assails the judgment finding him guilty of burglary as being without support in either the evidence or the law. This challenge is grounded on the claim that the evidence as a matter of law fails to establish that at the time of the entry, or at any other time here pertinent, the defendant had or was mentally capable of forming a specific intent to steal, by reason of his aggravated state of intoxication. It is pointed out that he did not take any property or belongings from Mrs. Keeney's home; that while in the house he permitted a light to burn in the front room; that he made no effort to escape upon the approach of the home owner; and finally returned to the vicinity of the Keeney residence some thirty minutes after he had left. All these factors, argues appellant, negative the existence in his mind of the necessary and essential intent. On the other hand the record discloses circumstances which to us furnish grounds upon which the jury could have concluded that the necessary intent was present. We refer to the method resorted to for the purpose of affecting an entrance to the house; the opened bureau drawers which were closed when Mrs. Keeney departed in the morning, coupled with the defendant's statement in answer to the arresting officer's query as to what he was doing in the house "Well, you know as well as I do. I was trying to steal something". Whatever effect the wine, consumed by the defendant after he entered the house or before, may have had upon his actions while in the house and after leaving it, nevertheless we cannot say that the circumstances surrounding defendant's entry into the house are such as to amount to no evidence at all upon which the jury could predicate a finding that the essential intent was present. The authorities are legion in holding that the question of felonious intent is for the jury to decide, and may be inferred from all of the circumstances present in the case. While the circumstances alluded to by appellant undoubtedly afforded opportunity for a persuasive argument to the jury against the existence of a felonious intent, we cannot say that the determination of the jury in the instant case, that such intent was present, does violence to reason. Therefore, we cannot substitute any conclusion at which we might be tempted to arrive for that reached by the constitutional as well as statutory arbiter thereof. People v. Gilbert, 26 Cal.App.2d 1, 21, 78 P.2d 770; People v. Perkins, 8 Cal.2d 502, 511, 66 P.2d 631; People v. King, 33 Cal.App.2d 538, 542, 92 P.2d 510.

Appellant next complains of the action of the trial judge in advising the jury that if they found the defendant guilty of burglary they must determine it to be burglary of the first degree. In this connection the record discloses that after giving the jury correct instructions defining the degrees of burglary the court said: "In this case evidence has been introduced that it was in the night time and that it was an inhabited dwelling, and therefore if you find the defendant guilty of burglary on count 1, it must be burglary of the first degree. Likewise, if you find him guilty on count 2 of the information, it must be burglary of the first degree". This was followed by the giving of an instruction on intent. Appellant contends that it is impossible to determine whether the court's statement was intended as an instruction to the jury that the burglary was, as a matter of law, one of the first degree or amounted only to a comment by the court as to his opinion respecting the degree. Notwithstanding the claim of the Attorney General that "It is quite apparent that the foregoing was intended as a comment" we are inclined to the view that it must be regarded as an instruction. Both the language used and the circumstances under which it was given endow the statement with the qualities of a direction or mandate of the court that under the evidence the offense charged "Must be burglary of the first degree".

[4-6] Furthermore, the instruction given cannot be deemed a justifiable comment by the judge "on the evidence and the credibility of a witness" as contemplated by the Constitutional Amendment, Section 19, Article VI, California State Constitution. The instruction did not purport to be such a comment. It amounted to a statement of the law, but in view of the evidence herein it was in reality a misstatement of the law. Nor do we think that the error in giving such an instruction was cured by the court in later admonishing the jury that "Now, it is your exclusive problem to determine the facts of the case, and to consider the evidence for that purpose. The Court cannot determine the facts for you but may aid you in two methods: By giving you the rules of law to be used by you in arriving at the truth; By commenting upon the evidence within proper limitations." Nor was it cured by reading to the jury Section 19, Article VI of the Constitution, and further instructing them "You will therefore, distinctly remember and ever bear in mind the fact that although during the trial I may have commented, and may in these instructions comment upon the witnesses or the evidence or both, nevertheless you at all times remain the sole and exclusive judges of the facts and the credibility of the witnesses. Any remarks I may have made or may make are intended solely to aid you in arriving at a verdict, but must not in any manner be construed as imposing my will upon you or as compelling you toward that verdict. In this connection I would caution you that it is your right and duty to exercise the same independence of judgment in weighing the judge's comments on the evidence as you are entitled to exercise in weighing the testimony of the witnesses and the arguments of counsel". Rather than being a comment upon the evidence or the credibility of witnesses, the declaration of the court amounted to a statement of a purely legal proposition which the jury was bound to follow, as to the degree of the burglary charged against the defendant. It invaded the province of the jury. Without here repeating the evidence in greater detail than as heretofore narrated, it is sufficient to say that under the proven facts and circumstances there at least was possibility of a reasonable doubt as to which of the two degrees of burglary the defendant was guilty. Such being the case, he could only be convicted of the lowest of such degrees. Penal Code section 1097. However, if it can be said that appellant was legally and lawfully convicted of the burglary, then no miscarriage of justice resulted from the statement of the court, except that as a matter of law the jury improperly fixed the degree of the crime, and the court imposed the greater penalty therefor. That injustice may now be righted by this court without subjecting the State and the defendant to the delay and expense of a new trial. People v. Kelley, 208 Cal. 387, 393, 281 P. 609; People v. Golembiewski, 25 Cal.App.2d 115, 76 P.2d 717; Section 1181, subdivision 6, Penal Code.

[7] It is next contended by appellant that the court committed error in neglecting to advise the jury as to the general principle and fundamental rule of law that although the information contained two counts, such fact in itself did not add to the weight of the evidence against the defendant on either count and that each count should be considered as though separately tried. The record, however, does not sustain appellant in this contention. The court advised the jury of the necessary and essential elements of the respective crimes with which he was charged and then in unequivocal language informed the jury that the defendant was charged in two counts, with two distinct offenses; that he might be convicted upon either or both counts, and that each offense of which the defendant was convicted must be stated in the verdict. In view of the instructions given, coupled with the absence of any request for a more specific admonition, we cannot assume error or hold that the jury failed to realize that the two counts in the information were to be considered by them as though separately tried.

We come now to a consideration of appellant's claim that he was prejudiced by the conduct of the deputy district attorney during the latter's cross-examination of appellant. In that connection the record discloses that the prosecutor commenced his cross-examination of appellant by inquiring:

"Q. Mr. Lynch, you have been in court before, haven't you? A. Yes sir, I have.

"Q. And a good many times, haven't you? A. Yes.

"Q. Do you consider that you are familiar with court procedure? Sufficient so that you can represent yourself in this matter? A. When I admit to having been in court quite a number of times before I don't mean to admit that I have been in court where a jury was before, or a session inasmuch as presenting my side of the case, and if I feel competent myself, so far as being adequately equipped to do so, I know that there are many other people who are much better equipped to do so.

"Q. Then why didn't you avail yourself of the services of the Public Defender in this matter, and have him represent you?" When to the last question the defendant proffered an answer with which the district attorney was not satisfied, he persisted by asking:

"Q. Well why didn't you use the assistance of the Public Defender, to represent you in this case? A. I believe that there would be several reasons, and one is that at the time that I came into court I was—I had the thought in mind that if I had someone just to apprise me about the matter in court at the time of my arraignment, and anyway there was a person, I don't know who he was, advised me to come into court and plead as I have, and for the reason, he said I should so that because in view of my record, regardless of what the principal offense is, that the law will be such that I will probably get a life sentence in the penitentiary; and the thought I had in mind is that I did not feel about this particular case about the offense that I am charged with, that I would prefer to come in to present it to the jury myself rather than have a Public Defender present it to the Court and the jury for me.

"Q. And so you don't feel adequately represented in representing yourself here today, do you, that is that your knowledge of the law is sufficient for that purpose? A. My knowledge of the law is insufficient, I recognize that.

"Q. Well, I take it that you don't have in mind here in representing yourself that you are appealing to the court for aid as you have done throughout this trial, that you wouldn't by that conduct gain the sympathy of the jury, you would have nothing like that in your purpose, would you? (Emphasis added.) A. No, I am not concerned with sympathy.

"Q. And that thought never entered your mind, did it? A. Why, I think so far as entering my mind, yes, but not in connection with appealing to the jury or appealing to the court for instructions, no, but if I am permitted to say so I would say that the reason I have asked the court for instruction is not to cause the jury to think anything on account of sympathy for me because I am here inadequately defending myself but it is simply that I don't feel that I did anything wrong here.

"Q. How many times have you been in court? A. Counting the Juvenile Court?

"Q. Well if you want to go back that far, yes. A. Eight or 10 times, I believe."

[8] It would be an impeachment of the legal learning of counsel for the People to intimate that he did not know the aforesaid questions were improper, wholly unjustifiable, and peculiarly calculated to prejudice the substantial rights of the defendant. By such conduct a defendant is precluded from having that fair and impartial trial to which, whether innocent or guilty, he is entitled. Furthermore, it may serve to defeat the punishment of crime by jeopardizing a conviction when a defendant is clearly guilty. That the interrogatories were injected into the case for the manifest purpose of prejudicing the jury against the defendant is obvious. That the asking of such questions constituted misconduct, and of the fact that such misconduct was prejudicial, there can be little doubt. It would ignore human experience and belie the dictates of common sense to entertain a contrary view. With commendable fairness the attorney general does not attempt to justify the conduct of the prosecutor, but simply suggests that no objection was made thereto by the appellant who appeared as his own counsel. However, we think the foregoing course of conduct was so improper and so offensive to the requirement that the question of guilt or innocence shall be determined by an orderly legal procedure in which the substantive rights belonging to a defendant shall be respected, that the trial judge should have stopped the asking of such questions when the first improper interrogatory was propounded without waiting for an objection. What was said by the Chief Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court in the case of Viereck v. United States, 318 U.S. 236, 63 S.Ct. 561, 566, 87 L.Ed. 734, reflects our views as to the duties and obligations of a prosecuting officer. We quote: "The United States Attorney is the representative not of an ordinary party to a controversy, but of a sovereignty whose obligation to govern impartially is as compelling as its obligation to govern at all; and whose interest, therefore, in a criminal prosecution is not that it shall win a case, but that justice shall be done. As such, he is in a peculiar and very definite sense the servant of the law, the two-fold aim of which is that guilt shall not escape or innocence suffer. He may prosecute with earnestness and vigor—indeed, he should do so. But, while he may strike hard blows, he is not at liberty to strike foul ones. It is as much his duty to refrain from improper methods calculated to produce a wrongful conviction as it is to use every legitimate means to bring about a just one".

[9] Appellant next complains of the conduct of the trial judge when, during the cross-examination of Dr. K. G. Bailey, appellant inquired as to whether the witness deemed himself qualified as a psychiatrist to express an opinion as to whether a person was sane or insane at a given time prior to the date of the medical examination of such person by the psychiatrist, when such examination was made "say a day after the thing in question is involved". In sustaining an objection interposed by the deputy district attorney, the court said: "The objection will be sustained. Doctor Bailey has given a full recitation of the facts on the basis of his opinion, and in the first place I consider him qualified to make this examination and express an opinion as an expert or specialist on the subject, and as I said before the law imposes upon me the necessity of appointing specialists as I have done here in this instance, to make an examination; and furthermore, I might state for your benefit, Mr. Lynch, as well as for the jury that I have had occasion to appoint Doctor Bailey on a large number of cases of this kind and there has never been any challenge to his competency." (Emphasis added.)

We regard these declarations of the court as transcending the bounds of legitimate comment upon the evidence or the credibility of a witness. It amounted to an attempt upon the part of the court to testify as to the competency of the witness as an expert in his chosen line of medical practice. And it is vain to attempt to do away with the prejudicial effect of such assertions upon the part of the court by giving the instruction provided for in section 1127b of the Penal Code.

[10, 11] It is true the jury had an opportunity to observe the demeanor and character of the witnesses and may have had reason to return the verdicts finding the defendant guilty of burglary and sane at the time of the commission of the offense, irrespective of the errors committed during the trial. As to this, of course, we can say nothing. But from the mere record, as we read it however, the errors may have turned the scale in favor of the prosecution. We do know, as heretofore noted, that the jury was led to convict the defendant of burglary of the first degree when as a matter of law he was entitled to a finding pursuant to section 1097 of the Penal Code that the offense was of the second degree. It is the bounden duty of courts to insist that a defendant be fairly convicted, because if he is not so convicted he should not be convicted at all; and to hold otherwise would be to provide ways and means for the conviction of the innocent. When a defendant is denied that fair and impartial trial guaranteed by law, such procedure amounts to a denial of due process of law. Powell v. Alabama, 287 U.S. 45, 53 S.Ct. 55, 77 L.Ed. 158, 84 A.L.R. 527. Criminal cases should not be conducted with an eye to the saving grace of section 4½, Article VI, of our State Constitution. Except in proceedings on a motion for a new trial, the constitutional section is of no concern to the trial courts, and so far as its application goes, it is of interest only to the courts of review. People v. Black, 73 Cal.App. 13, 43, 238 P. 374.

Other assignments of error need not be considered because it is not likely that they will occur upon a retrial.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are, and each is, reversed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

59 Cal.App.2d 809

CUDA v. GIOTTO et al.

Civ. 14016.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.
July 24, 1943.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing
Aug. 23, 1943.

1. Evidence ⚷584(3)

Court is not bound to decide cause in conformity with testimony of any number of witnesses, where such testimony has not produced conviction.

2. Appeal and error ⚷1008(1)

In action, tried by court, in nature of creditor's suit to enforce collection of judgment obtained in previous tort action, whether sum transferred by judgment debtor from bank account in judgment debtor's own name to bank account in name of judgment debtor's son, by judgment debtor as guardian, was son's property, or was judgment debtor's property and was so transferred with intent to delay or defraud judgment creditor, was question of fact for trial court.

3. Fraudulent conveyances ⚷299(13)

In action in nature of creditor's suit to enforce collection of judgment obtained in previous tort action, evidence justified judgment for creditor on ground that sum transferred by judgment debtor from bank account in judgment debtor's name to bank account in name of judgment debtor's son, by judgment debtor as guardian, was judgment debtor's property and was so transferred with intent to delay or defraud creditor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. D. Ballard, Judge.

Action in the nature of a creditor's suit by Sam Cuda against Catherine Giotto, also known as Catherine Duce, and others, to enforce the collection of a judgment obtained in a previous action. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

C. M. Castruccio, of Los Angeles (Horace W. Danforth, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants.

Hiram T. Kellogg, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

In this action, which is in the nature of a creditor's suit to enforce the collection of a judgment obtained in a previous action, the plaintiff prevailed and defendants appeal.

The record reveals that plaintiff herein filed an action in tort for damages on September 7, 1940, against defendants herein, Catherine Giotto, also known as Catherine Duce, et al., and recovered judgment in the sum of $1,250, no part of which has been paid except the sum of $28.78 which was recovered from a co-defendant. Said judgment was entered June 7, 1941, and is final. In the course of supplementary proceedings incident to plaintiff's effort to collect the judgment, it developed that defendant had transferred $4,300 from an account in the bank in her own name to an account in the name of her son John Duce, by Catherine Duce, guardian.

Plaintiff alleges the foregoing in substance and further alleges that the transfer of said fund from one bank account to the other was done for the purpose of hindering, delaying and defrauding plaintiff as a judgment creditor. The money was transferred September 7, 1940. There is no dispute as to the evidence; the dispute results from the inference and conclusion reached by the trial court from a consideration thereof.

No witnesses testified at the trial. It was agreed between counsel as to what the testimony of certain individuals would be if called as witnesses.

It appears from the record that defendant Catherine Giotto's husband, Gaetano Duce, died in the year 1933; that before his death he and his wife Catherine (defendant) had opened a joint bank account which at the time of Mr. Duce's death contained the $4,300 that now is the subject of this litigation; that according to the terms of the joint bank account upon the death of either the monies in said account became the property of the survivor. Shortly after her husband's death, Mrs. Duce opened an account in the same bank in her own name to which account the monies in the joint account were transferred. From that date until the transfer to her son's account, there were no withdrawals except as shown by certain checks for the funeral expenses and doctors bills incurred during Mr. Duce's last illness. No money was ever withdrawn for the use and benefit of Mrs. Duce (defendant).

Additional deposits covering the same period, i.e.: 1933 to 1940, aggregate about $530.

It also appears that shortly before Mr. Duce died he and his wife Catherine agreed that the money in the joint bank account should be preserved for the benefit of their son John. It further appears that when the action in tort, hereinbefore mentioned, was filed, Mrs. Duce consulted Mr. Castruccio, her attorney, and after informing him of the history of the $4,300 was advised by him that in fact and in law said money was the property of her son John and should be on deposit in his name by her as guardian; that defendant thereupon transferred the money to the account of her son. The son's account had been in existence since before his father's death and at no time had contained more than $175. It too was a savings account.

The court found as a fact that defendant was the owner of the money in question and that the son John Duce had no right, title or interest therein; that the transfer of the money by defendant from one account to the other "was made with intent to delay or defraud the plaintiff and for that reason is void * * *".

It is contended by appellants in substance and effect that the evidence fails to support the findings and in that connection, that the trial court was bound to find, in the light of the evidence, in favor of appellant. It is urged that the evidence offered in support of defendant's contention that the money in question was a trust fund, is practically conclusive.

[1-3] It is elementary that a court is not bound to decide in conformity with the testimony of any number of witnesses, which does not produce conviction. Obviously, the court was not convinced by the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses, but to the contrary was persuaded by the evidence of circumstances surrounding the transaction. For example, the fact that the $4,300 bank account was not transferred from the exclusive control of appellant until five days after commencement of the tort action in which respondent recovered a judgment against appellant, could have been such a circumstance. And the fact that during all of this time there existed a bank account in the son's name in which the $4,300 could have been deposited originally, also could have been such a circumstance. The disputed question was one of fact and hence addressed exclusively to the judgment of the trial court and in the light of the record, any interference with the trial court's findings and conclusions clearly would be unwarranted.

The judgment is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and WHITE, J., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 239

PEOPLE v. NG KING.

Cr. 2268.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 17, 1943.

Poisons ⚷9

Evidence sustained conviction of unlawful possession of a preparation of opium. St.1941, p. 2820, § 11160.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Lile T. Jacks, Judge.

Ng King was convicted of unlawful possession of a preparation of opium, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Sol A. Abrams, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Ralph W. Scott, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

After waiving a jury trial, defendant was tried by the court and was found guilty of the unlawful possession of a preparation of opium in violation of section 11160 of the Health and Safety Code, St.1941, p. 2820. He was sentenced to six months imprisonment in the county jail. He appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The sole contention made by defendant on this appeal is that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the conviction. We find no merit in this contention.

Defendant was arrested in the hallway of a rooming house located at 752 Pacific Avenue in San Francisco. He was wearing a vest but was not wearing either a coat or hat. His coat and hat were found hanging in room 46 of said rooming house. In that room the officers found a "laydown" or opium outfit and also a tin box, which tin box was located on a shelf directly above the place where defendant's coat and hat were hanging. A key which fitted this tin box was found in the vest pocket of the defendant. The tin box was opened and was found to contain two bindles of opium, a package of yen shee, and an opium bowl. When questioned as to the ownership of the tin box, defendant made no reply and upon the trial, he failed to testify.

It requires no citation of authority to support the conclusion that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the defendant's conviction. It is defendant's claim that the evidence was insufficient to show knowledge on his part of the contents of the tin box or to show that he was in "immediate and exclusive possession and dominion and control". Assuming without deciding that proof was required of such facts, we are satisfied that all of said facts may be reasonably inferred from the evidence adduced.

Defendant points to evidence showing that room 46 had been rented by the proprietor of the rooming house to Lew Kay, another Chinaman, and stresses the fact that it does not appear that defendant had a key to the room. He therefore states that there was a reasonable inference from the evidence that defendant "was there to smoke opium that was owned and possessed by Lew Kay" and he claims that the evidence was insufficient to sustain defendant's conviction because it failed to exclude every hypothesis other than that of the guilt of the defendant. It is a sufficient answer to this claim to point out that it is based upon the language employed in certain cases such as People v. Staples, 149 Cal. 405, 86 P. 886, the effect of which language has been often misunderstood. An exhaustive discussion of the language employed in said cases is found in People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 104 P.2d 778, which discussion shows that such language has no application on this appeal under the facts presented by the record before us. In the last mentioned case the court concluded on page 684 of 15 Cal.2d, 104 P.2d on page 781, as we may conclude here, that: "From the foregoing it follows that on appeal and in this case the defendant's contention that the circumstantial evidence which is incriminating is insufficient to establish his guilt because such evidence might also be deemed compatible with innocence, cannot be sustained."

The judgment of conviction and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and DOOLING, Justice pro tem., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 236

PYLE v. EXETER REFINING CO. et al.

Civ. 13451.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.
Aug. 13, 1943.

1. Brokers 🔑86(1)

In action by a broker for commissions allegedly due on an exchange of oil between defendant and another pursuant to oral contract, evidence sustained finding that contract to pay commissions was limited to first agreement for exchange of oil and did not cover second agreement.

2. Accord and satisfaction 🔑10(1)
Compromise and settlement 🔑5(2)

Where broker had made several requests for a settlement of his commissions, but had received no accounting and had once demanded an amount larger than that tendered him, and commented on the peculiarity of an even number of dollars offered but was told that the check was offered as payment in full and accepted it, and it was doubtful whether commission agreement was in force, transaction constituted an "accord and satisfaction".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Accord and Satisfaction".

3. Corporations ⚷306

In action by broker against corporation and its officer for commissions, nonsuit as to officer was proper where he was acting solely for defendant corporation.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by Edwin Pyle against the Exeter Refining Company and Carl Von Bibra, etc., for commissions allegedly due plaintiff as a broker on an exchange of oil between defendant corporation and another. From judgment of nonsuit, as to individual defendant and judgment on the merits for corporate defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Allard, Whyte & Brownsberger, of Pomona, for appellant.

Don S. Irwin, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment adverse to him, which was a nonsuit as to the individual defendant, Von Bibra, but a judgment on the merits as to the corporate defendant, Exeter Refining Company, hereinafter referred to as the defendant. Plaintiff, who was engaged in business as an oil broker, sues for a commission claimed to be due him on an exchange of oil between defendant and Comet Oil Company, Ltd., at the rate of one cent per barrel of fuel oil delivered by defendant. Plaintiff brought to the attention of defendant the fact that Comet Oil Company was in the market for fuel oil which defendant had for sale and perhaps a deal could be made between them. As a result of this information a contract was made between defendant and Comet by which defendant exchanged its fuel oil for Comet's cracked residuum. This contract was in writing and was in the form of a proposal by defendant dated October 3, 1939, and an acceptance by Comet dated October 13, 1939. This contract was to run for six months or until cancelled, each party reserving the right to cancel it on ninety days notice. Later these parties made a second contract, effective February 9, 1940, which cancelled the first contract, but provided for further exchange of the same commodities between them, on somewhat different terms.

[1] One of the questions raised on this appeal is whether plaintiff is entitled to a commission on all oil delivered by defendant to Comet on either of these contracts, or is limited to that delivered under the first contract only. The trial court adopted the latter alternative as expressing the intent of the agreement for commissions, and we think its decision in that respect must be affirmed. The commission agreement was oral. Three persons were present at its making; plaintiff, Von Bibra, who was president and manager of defendant corporation, and W. T. Chappe, who was in the employ of defendant corporation. Each of them admitted that his recollection of the conversation in which the agreement was made was hazy, but each gave some testimony regarding it. Von Bibra testified that "I remember saying to Mr. Pyle that we would pay him one cent per barrel for fuel oil delivered by us under this exchange. * * * that the one cent per barrel to be paid on fuel oil delivered by us in exchange to the Comet Oil Company. * * * Under the arrangement or stated under the agreement dated October 3, 1939." Other testimony gave somewhat different versions of this conversation, but the choice between them was a matter for the trial court. Plaintiff, while denying any recollection of the limitation put on the agreement by Von Bibra, testified: "Q. You did not understand they were agreeing to pay you one cent a barrel on any fuel oil they would send to Comet from then on out? A. No, I didn't. Q. It was the particular deal you had under discussion at that time? A. That's correct."

[2] The trial court found that there had been an accord and satisfaction by which defendant had paid and plaintiff had accepted $180 as full satisfaction of his claim for commission. Plaintiff now contends that this finding is not supported by the evidence. The evidence shows that on February 12, 1940, defendant delivered to plaintiff its check for $180 and plaintiff accepted, endorsed and cashed it. This amount was less than was due plaintiff for deliveries under the first contract. Upon the face of this check when it was delivered to plaintiff, there was written: "Payment in full for commission re-sale of fuel oil to Comet Oil Co. Ltd." This check was delivered to plaintiff by Chappe, who told him at the time that a new agreement had been made between defendant and Comet, that the check was payment in full under the deal that plaintiff had made with defendant, and that Chappe's only authority was to pay him that in full. Plaintiff testified that prior to the delivery of this check he had asked Chappe for an accounting of deliveries and his commissions. It does not appear that any such account was given him and he had no knowledge of the amount of commissions due when he took the check. No witness was able to say how the amount of the check was determined. Chappe testified further that plaintiff, when he received the check, said it was rather peculiar that it came out an even amount, that before the delivery of the check plaintiff had several times asked about his commissions, and that in one of these meetings plaintiff had asked for more money than the amount of the check. Plaintiff's point in this connection is that there is no evidence of a dispute between the parties in regard to the amount due. We think the evidence, while not strong, is sufficient to support the trial court's finding. The plaintiff had made several requests for a settlement of his commission, had received no accounting, had once demanded an amount larger than that tendered him, commented on the peculiarity of an even number of dollars offered, was told that the check was offered as payment in full, and accepted it. There was another agreement between the parties, under which it was claimed that plaintiff had failed to take delivery of distillate and oil as agreed. It was defendants' contention that in the discussion of this contract plaintiff voluntarily waived his right to commission on sales to Comet. There was evidence of such waiver and of a subsequent effort by plaintiff to reinstate the commission arrangement. It was open to doubt, at the time of the settlement, whether the commission agreement was in force. An inference of a dispute as to amount could reasonably be drawn from these facts.

[3] No complaint is made of the nonsuit in favor of Von Bibra, and it was obviously proper, since he was not acting in his own behalf, but solely for the defendant corporation, in his dealings with plaintiff.

The judgment is affirmed.

SHINN, Acting P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

COLUMBIA LABORATORIES, Inc., v. CALIFORNIA BEAUTY SUPPLY CO. et al.

Civ. 13849.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 27, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 18, 1943.

Hearing Granted Sept. 23, 1943.

1. Landlord and tenant ⚿150(1)

A landlord had no duty under common law, in absence of an express agreement, to make repairs to demised premises.

2. Landlord and tenant ⚿166(3)

An action by tenant to recover for damages to tenant's stock of goods as result of landlord's failure to repair portion of building which remained under his control after it had been damaged by fire could not be sustained either upon theory that action was one for breach of contract, or for breach of duty imposed by law. Civ.Code, §§ 1941, 1942.

3. Landlord and tenant ⚿166(6)

The rule that if an owner leases a portion of his building and retains control of remainder and if he does not exercise common care in management of that portion of building which belongs to his special supervision and damages are sustained by tenant on that account, owner becomes liable for his negligence, had no application, where there is no pleading or finding of negligence on landlord's part.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Caryl M. Sheldon, Judge.

Action by Columbia Laboratories, Inc., against California Beauty Supply Company and another for damages to plaintiff's stock of goods while located in defendants' building. From a judgment for plaintiff, the defendants appeal.

Judgment reversed with directions.

George Penney, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

I. Charles Rubin, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHINN, Acting Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff, tenant of a portion of a loft building owned by defendants, had judgment for damages to its stock of goods caused by rainfall after a fire which destroyed the roof that was above a part of the building not occupied by plaintiff, but did not destroy any portion of the premises occupied by plaintiff or the roof above the same. Defendants appeal.

The judgment rests upon the following finding, which followed substantially the allegation of the complaint: "That it is true that on or about the 4th day of January, 1941, defendants, and each of them, did suffer damage to said building due to a fire on a portion of said building occupied other than by the plaintiff herein, and that the said defendants, and each of them, thereafter failed and neglected to repair said damage to said building, and as a direct and proximate result of such negligence and failure upon the part of the defendants, and each of them, to make the necessary repairs to the damaged portion of said building, that on or about the 24th day of January, 1941, waters due to rain did seep through the walls and ceiling of said premises occupied by the plaintiff herein, causing damage to the plaintiff's merchandise not in the amount of Two Thousand Nine Hundred Thirty-four and 29/100ths ($2,934.29) Dollars, but did sustain damages in the amount of One Thousand Seven Hundred Fifty ($1,750.00) Dollars." The theory of the action as pleaded and as disclosed by this finding is that there inhered in the relationship of landlord and tenant an implied covenant upon defendants' part to repair the damage caused by the fire, that they did not repair it, and that by reason of their alleged breach of duty they became liable for the damage to plaintiff's merchandise. This theory appears to be untenable.

[1, 2] Plaintiff was a tenant from month to month; there was no written lease and no contract imposing on the landlord the duty to restore or repair the leased premises or any part of the remainder of the building; there was no agreement for the restoration or repair of any part of the building that might be destroyed or damaged by fire. A landlord had no duty under the common law, in the absence of an express agreement, to make repairs to the demised premises. Farber v. Greenberg, 1929, 98 Cal. App. 675, 680, 277 P. 534; Wall Estate Co. v. Standard Box Co., 1912, 20 Cal.App. 311, 128 P. 1020; see cases collected in 15 Cal.Jur. p. 690; 36 C.J. 125; and 32 Am.Jur. § 657. Sections 1941 and 1942 of the Civil Code, under which a tenant may make use of the equivalent of a month's rent after demand upon the landlord and his refusal to repair dilapidations rendering untenantable buildings intended for the occupation of human beings, have no application to the case, nor did plaintiff attempt to state a case under those sections. Wall Estate Co. v. Standard Box Co., supra; Callahan v. Loughran, 1894, 102 Cal. 476, 36 P. 835; Green v. Redding, 1891, 92 Cal. 548, 28 P. 599. Sections 1941 and 1942, being eliminated as inapplicable, there is no statutory law in this state imposing upon a landlord an obligation to his tenant to make repairs to the premises occupied by the tenant. Nor is there a duty imposed by statute or by implied contract which would require a landlord to restore or repair portions of his building which remain under his control after they have been damaged by fire. The judgment cannot be sustained upon the theory that the action is one for breach of contract, express or implied, or for the breach of a duty imposed by law.

[3] Plaintiff tried its case upon the theory that there was liability for breach of an implied contract, and upon the appeal insists that it is such a case. Nevertheless, plaintiff relies upon cases which state the rule that if an owner leases a portion of his building and retains control of the remainder and if he does not exercise common care and prudence in the management and oversight of that portion of the building which belongs to his especial supervision and care, and damages are sustained by the tenant on that account, the landlord becomes liable for his negligence. H. C. Capwell Co. v. Blake, 1908, 9 Cal.App. 101, 111, 98 P. 51; Rathbun Co. v. Simmons, 1928, 90 Cal.App. 692, 266 P. 369. The rule has no application here, as there was no pleading or finding of negligence.

The complaint, as we have seen, alleged that defendants failed and neglected to repair the fire damage, but the evidence showed that defendants did repair the damage. The roof had been destroyed over an area of 80 by 94 feet; this was inspected on the day of the fire, temporary roof bracings were installed and the area was covered with waterproof canvas, the work being completed on the afternoon of the following day. Permanent repairs were commenced about three weeks later and the work was soon completed. The canvas was securely fastened and the evidence was that this temporary method of protecting against weather was practical and customary. Rain came and in some manner entered plaintiff's premises, but this fact alone did not establish a case for damages. It was not alleged that the fire was started through any fault of defendants or that there was any unreasonable delay in making the repairs or any negligence in anything that was done or omitted in restoring the premises to their former condition. Upon the complaint and the findings the judgment would be sustainable only upon the theory that defendants were for some reason in the position of insurers of plaintiff against damage to his merchandise resulting from fire and rainfall, but there is no such basis of liability. If plaintiff had a cause of action at all, it was for negligence. Defendants took this position throughout the trial and produced evidence tending to prove that the repairs were promptly and properly made, but we cannot find that plaintiff conceded at the trial that negligence was an issue. Upon the appeal plaintiff does not contend that it attempted to prove or did prove negligence. Defendants' general demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained. The complaint states no cause of action for damages and the findings do not support the judgment.

The judgment is reversed with direction to sustain the demurrer to the complaint.

PARKER WOOD, J., and BISHOP, J. pro tem., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 158

TSCHUMY v. BROOK'S MARKET et al.

Civ. 13834.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Aug. 6, 1943.

1. Negligence 🔑32(3)

A "business invitation" includes an invitation to use such part of premises as visitor reasonably believes are held open to him as a means of access to or egress from place where business is to be transacted.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Business Invitation".

2. Negligence 🔑32(2)

An "invitation" to use premises may be manifested by the arrangement of the premises or by owner's conduct.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Invitation".

3. Negligence 🔑32(3)

Fact that customer walked to market, and that she did not go to parking lot operated by market owner for convenience of his customers in an automobile, did not make customer's status that of a "licensee" when she was on parking lot.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Licensee".

4. Appeal and error 🔑1066
Negligence 🔑138(3)

In action against market owner and ice company for injuries sustained by customer at market when she tripped over sign installed by ice company on market owner's parking lot adjoining market, where it was established that customer's status when she entered premises was that of an invitee, instructions relating to a licensee and duty to refrain from wilful and wanton injury to a licensee constituted prejudicial error.

5. Negligence 🔑32(3)

The invitation to enter a market included an invitation for customer's departure from such premises over such portions thereof as a reasonable person, situated as customer was, would reasonably believe were held open as a proper means of departing from the premises.

6. Trial 🔑142

Where there is no conflict in evidence upon which the determination of a question of law rests, decision is for trial court and not for jury.

7. Appeal and error 🔑1064(1)
Trial 🔑243

An instruction that a person who is upon premises of another for purpose of transacting business is a licensee as to those portions of premises rendered reasonably necessary for his use in transaction of such business, though word "licensee" might have been used inadvertently instead of "invitee", was conflicting with other instructions correctly defining words "invitee" and "licensee" and was prejudicially erroneous.

8. Negligence ⚷32(1)

If one invites another to use his premises and invitee is injured due to negligent manner in which premises are maintained, invitor is responsible for resulting injury to invitee.

9. Appeal and error ⚷1064(1)
Landlord and tenant ⚷169(10)

In action against market owner and ice company for injuries sustained by customer at market when she tripped over sign installed by ice company on market owner's parking lot adjoining market, where it appeared that at time of accident, irrespective of written lease to ice company, market owner had retained right of use of passage over the space, an instruction that market owner was not liable if he had leased premises was prejudicially erroneous.

10. Landlord and tenant ⚷167(8)

Where ice company had sign located on parking lot operated by market owner only by invitation or acquiescence of market owner, ice company as an invitee or licensee owed customer at market as an "invitee" the duty of exercising ordinary care.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Invitee".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank M. Smith, Judge.

Action by Amelia G. Tschumy against Brook's Market, Meyer Stark, Central Ice & Cold Storage Company, Central Ice Company, and Associated Ice Distributors, for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff as result of a fall by reason of defendants' alleged negligence in maintaining a sign. From a judgment for defendants, the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment reversed as to the defendant Meyer Stark, doing business as Brook's Market, and as to defendant Southern Counties Ice Company.

Lee J. Myers and Robert Rush, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Betts & Garrison, of Los Angeles, for respondent Meyer Stark, d. b. a. Brook's Market.

Reginald I. Bauder, of Los Angeles, for respondent Southern Counties Ice Co.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment for defendants, based upon verdicts, in an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by her as a result of stumbling and falling by reason of the alleged negligence of defendants in maintaining a sign. Her contention is that the court erred prejudicially in giving and in refusing to give, certain instructions.

The defendant Stark was the owner and operator of a general retail food market in Los Angeles, known as Brook's Market, which included several departments or concessions. The market building was on the north side of a street and faced south. He also owned a parking lot adjacent to the market building on the west side, which he maintained for the convenience of the patrons of the market. Inasmuch as the solution to a principal question involved herein depends partly upon the arrangement of the market for the arrival and departure of patrons, a detailed description of the entrances should be given. The front line of those two parcels of land, owned by Stark, upon which the market and the parking lot were maintained, was the north edge of the public sidewalk. The front line of the market building did not extend to the sidewalk, but was 7 feet north thereof. The space between the sidewalk and the front of the building was paved with cement. The entire front of the building was open, as an entrance. The parking lot did extend to the sidewalk. In width it extended to the west 55 feet, and in length from the sidewalk to a point beyond the rear or north end of the market building, and was paved with dark asphalt. The sidewalk, about 12 feet wide, was paved with cement. Those paved areas, that is, the sidewalk, the space between the building and the sidewalk, and the parking lot, adjoined each other and were on the same level. It is to be noted that the south 7 feet of the asphalt pavement on the parking lot adjoined the 7-foot-wide strip of cement pavement which was in front of the building (which building did not extend to the sidewalk). In other words, if the front line of the building were extended westerly across the parking lot, there would be an asphalt paved space 7 feet wide between that line and the sidewalk, and that space would adjoin the cement paved space 7 feet wide which was between the front of the building and the sidewalk. Therefore, the paved area in front of the market building, including the sidewalk, and in front of the front line of the building extended westerly across the parking lot, including the sidewalk, was about 19 feet wide.

The defendant Stark and Brook's Market will be referred to hereinafter as "Stark," and defendant Southern Counties Ice Company will be referred to as "Ice Company."

On August 25, 1939, Stark and the Ice Company entered into a written lease whereby the Ice Company was to erect and operate an ice vending machine on a space 8 feet square in the southwest corner of the parking lot, 4½ feet from the west line of the lot and 1½ feet from the south line, and was to pay a certain amount of money and a percentage of the amount of sales each month as rent beginning October 1, 1939. Stark gave the Ice Company "free possession" and permission, orally and apart from the written lease, to construct the ice vending machine on the leased space at any time after the lease was made.

Two or three days before September 1, 1939, the date of the accident, the Ice Company placed a sign on the parking lot, in or near the area leased, about three feet from the south edge of the sidewalk. A photograph of the sign, received in evidence, shows that it was a portable sign, about 4 feet in height, about 3 feet in width, and about ½ inch in thickness; that the statement on the sign was in substance that an automatic ice vendor would be installed soon on that location; that the part of the sign upon which the words appeared was held in a frame made of strips of iron about 1½ inches in width and about 1/4 inch in thickness; that the sign was supported at its base, so that it would stand, by 4 strips of dark iron of the same width and thickness as the strips in the frame of the sign; that one of the supporting strips of iron was attached to each side of each bottom end of the upright sign so that 2 of the strips extended outward from each side of each bottom end of the sign at right angles to the frame and practically flat on the pavement for a distance of approximately 2 feet; and that, at the point about 2 feet from the frame, each of the four supporting strips was curved upward, then backward toward the sign, and then downward until it formed a ring about 5 inches in diameter at the end of the supporting strip of iron. The asphalt pavement and the iron strips and rings were practically of the same dark color.

Plaintiff, who lived about 2½ blocks southwest of the market, walked from her home to the market on September 1, 1939, about 7 p. m. (The bill of exceptions does not show the date or time, but it is assumed, by reason of statements in the briefs, that the statement just made is correct.) She had patronized the market about 7 years. The entire front of the market building was open, and she entered the building at the west side of the front entrance, i. e., at the southwest corner. She purchased articles in the grocery department and then in the vegetable department which extended out and in front of the building about 4 feet.

Plaintiff left the market from the southwest corner thereof at the same place where she had entered. She was carrying a package of articles she had purchased. From the place where she left the vegetable department, she walked diagonally on Stark's premises, in the direction of her home, toward a point on the public sidewalk about 10 feet east from the southwest corner of the parking lot, a distance of about 45 feet from the southwest corner of the market. She had gone out of the market that same way many times over a period of 7 years. She saw a sign ahead of her and noticed that it stated something about packaged ice, but she did not see any of the iron strips that extended from the sign or any of the iron rings at the end of the strips. When she stepped onto the sidewalk with her left foot and was taking a step with her right foot, her right foot caught in one of the iron rings at the end of an iron strip and she fell upon the sidewalk, receiving a permanent injury to her knee. During a period of several years other customers used the same part of the premises in entering and leaving the market as plaintiff used in leaving at the time of the accident. It was customary, during the many years plaintiff was a patron of the market, for other patrons who were upon the premises in front of the market or upon the parking lot to approach the front entrance of the market from various directions, and to approach an entrance door on the west side, 20 feet from the front, from various directions. It was also customary for other patrons during that time to leave those entrances in various directions. Plaintiff testified that it was getting dark when she entered the market, and it was dark when she was leaving the premises. As to lighting conditions, there were reflector lights directed upon advertising on the outside west wall of the market building, two lights at the top of a street lighting standard which was on the sidewalk near the curb opposite the place where she fell, and some lights at a gasoline station about 75 feet west.

The gasoline station attendant, who went to the scene when the accident occurred, testified in reference to visibility at the place where the accident occurred that it was "always a darker spot," and that it was a "bad spot," for the reason it was between the brightness of the lights of the market and the brightness of the lights of the gasoline station.

Stark testified that he did not know the sign had been placed on the parking lot, and did not authorize the Ice Company or anyone to place the sign there; that he owned the whole market and the parking lot, and leased portions of the market to various tenants; that he operated the meat department; and that he went to the market about 3 times each week, but 3 of his employees were on the premises all of the time.

In its instructions, given at the request of Stark, the court defined the term "licensee," and instructed the jury to the effect that if it found plaintiff was a licensee, and her presence on the premises was unknown to defendants, they were under no duty to her except to refrain from intentional harm or wilful injury; that if plaintiff was not using the parking lot for any purpose intended to result in any benefit to the owner or occupant of the premises, she was a licensee and not entitled to recover unless the injury was the result of a wilful act on the part of the owner or occupant.

The court also gave, at the request of the Ice Company, an instruction in part as follows: "A person who is upon the premises of another for the purpose of transacting business is a licensee as to those portions of the premises rendered reasonably necessary for his use in the transaction of such business. As to the remaining portions of the premises, however, such a person, even though upon the premises for the purpose of transacting business, is a licensee, and assumes the risk incident to the condition of the premises and the activities there carried on." (Italics added.)

Another part of that instruction, just referred to, was to the effect that if plaintiff, in leaving the premises, for reasons of her own walked upon the parking lot, and her presence thereon was not made reasonably necessary to accomplish her purpose, and that in using said lot she abandoned a known safe means of egress, then she was a licensee and assumed the risks incident to the condition of the lot.

The evidence was undisputed that the kind of business operated by Stark was a large general retail food market to which the public was invited. Also the evidence as to the arrangement of the premises and as to the actions of plaintiff while she was on the premises was undisputed.

The whole area, including the sidewalk, in front of the building and in front of the front line of the building extended westerly across the parking lot to the alley, was paved, level, and to all intents and appearances was a sidewalk about 19 feet wide. The part of the parking lot upon which plaintiff walked was directly west of the cement space, 7 feet wide, in front of the building. As plaintiff left the building she proceeded diagonally across the parking lot toward the sidewalk in the direction of her home. If she had not gone diagonally (southwest) across the corner of the lot, it would have been necessary for her to go (south) about 6 feet to the sidewalk, then turn at a right angle before proceeding in the direction of her home. She started on the lot at a point about 4 feet from the sidewalk, gradually drew nearer thereto, and arrived at the sidewalk after she had gone about 45 feet. The entire distance traveled by plaintiff on the parking lot was very close to the sidewalk. She had gone that way for 7 years. It was the custom, according to her testimony and that of the manager of the grocery department, for patrons to approach the front entrance and the west side door, from various directions on the parking lot, and to leave those entrances in various directions across the lot. Plaintiff testified that persons "walked all over the place," and that "they would come from all directions." As above stated, the facts were undisputed. The arrangement of the premises and the established practice in leaving the premises were such that a reasonable person, situated as plaintiff was, would believe reasonably that the means of departure adopted by plaintiff was open to a patron of the market.

[1-3] "A business invitation includes an invitation to use such part of the premises as the visitor reasonably believes are held open to him as a means of access to or egress from the place where his business is to be transacted." Rest. Torts, sec. 343b, p. 942. An invitation may be manifested by the arrangement of the premises, or by the conduct of the owner. Stewart v. Lido Cafe, (1936) 13 Cal.App.2d 46, 50, 56 P.2d 553. The fact that plaintiff walked to the market, and did not go to the parking lot in an automobile, did not make her status that of a licensee when she was on the parking lot. In the case of Evans v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., (Mo.App.1937) 104 S.W.2d 1035, 1037, the plaintiff had walked to the defendant's store from her home, had crossed the parking lot at the rear of the store, made purchases, and was walking on the driveway of the parking lot on her way home when she slipped and fell by reason of ice on the automobile driveway on the parking lot. She had been a customer of the store about 5 years and had gone that way to the store about twice a week. There was testimony on behalf of plaintiff, by a person who lived near the parking lot, that "people from all over the neighborhood walked upon and used the driveway and that it was used for driving in and driving out of the parking lot." The only testimony on behalf of defendant related to the weather. The court said at page 1038 of 104 S.W.2d, "* * * the evidence is sufficient to show that plaintiff was an invitee upon the premises of defendant and not a mere licensee as contended by defendant." It was said further at page 1039 of 104 S.W.2d, "* * * the evidence is sufficient to show that the use of the driveway and the parking lot by pedestrians for the purpose of entering the rear entrance of the store had become a custom acquiesced in by defendant. Plaintiff, therefore, occupied the status of an invitee."

[4-6] The instructions above referred to relating to a licensee and the duty to refrain from wilful or wanton injury to a licensee were inapplicable to the case. The evidence did not justify any reference to a duty to refrain from wilful or wanton injury. It is agreed that plaintiff's status when she entered the premises was that of an invitee. The invitation to enter included an invitation for plaintiff's departure from such premises over such portions thereof as a reasonable person, situated as plaintiff was, would reasonably believe were held open as a proper means of departing from the premises. The entire front of the market, covering a distance of many feet, was open as an entrance. The pavement in front of the building and the pavement on the parking lot adjacent to the west side thereof, including the sidewalk, all of which was on the same level, constituted a proper means of approach to the front entrance by reason of the physical arrangement of the premises, acquiescence, dedication, and a long established custom. It is to be noted also that the whole parking lot had been used for many years as a means of approach and departure from the west side door of the market. If a patron who departs from the market from the west side door and crosses the parking lot is an invitee, it would seem there would be no basis for a contention that a patron who departs from the front entrance and crosses a corner of the parking lot is not an invitee. "* * * where there is no conflict in the evidence upon which the determination of a question of law rests the decision is for the court and it should not be submitted to the jury." Adrian v. Guyette, (1936) 14 Cal.App.2d 493, 504, 505, 58 P.2d 988, 993. The plaintiff was an invitee. The instructions above referred to, being inapplicable to the case, tended to confuse the issues.

[7] It is to be noted that one of the above instructions, given at the request of the Ice Company, was in part as follows: "A person who is upon the premises of another for the purpose of transacting business is a licensee as to those portions of the premises rendered reasonably necessary for his use in the transaction of such business." Of course, that was not a correct statement of the law. Apparently it was intended that the word "invitee" should be used in that sentence instead of the word "licensee." An examination of the original instruction in the files of the superior court shows that the word "licensee" is the word in the original instruction, and therefore the word "licensee" appearing in the bill of exceptions was not a typographical error. The giving of that instruction, requested by the Ice Company, although the word "licensee" might have been used inadvertently therein, was conflicting with other instructions correctly defining the words "invitee" and "licensee," and therefore increased the confusion caused by the other instructions, given at the request of Stark, relative to a "licensee." The above instructions were erroneous prejudicially.

[8, 9] The court also gave, at the request of Stark, an instruction in part as follows: "* * * if you believe from the evidence in this case that the ground upon which the defendant Ice Companies [sic] sign was placed was at that time leased to the Ice Company by the defendant Meyer Stark, the defendant Meyer Stark would not be liable for any injury sustained by the plaintiff as a result of the Ice Company having placed its sign upon such land and under these circumstances your verdict must be for the defendants Meyer Stark, Meyer Stark doing business as Brooks Market, and Brooks Market."

The written lease, covering a space of 8 feet square near the southwest corner of the parking lot, was made on August 25, 1939, for a term commencing October 1, 1939. Stark testified that the Ice Company was to have free possession as soon as the lease was signed in order to erect the ice machine before October 1st. There was no designation upon the surface of the lot, or upon the sign, and there was no designation at all, to indicate that a part of the lot had been leased. There was nothing to indicate to plaintiff or other patrons of the market that there was a change, if any, by an oral or written lease or at all in the custom that had prevailed for several years whereby the patrons of the market were permitted by Stark, the owner of the market and lot, to approach and depart from the market across the parking lot; nor was there anything to indicate to such patrons that a small portion of the lot, 8 feet square or any other size, at some undesignated place on the lot was to be excluded from the usual and customary places over which the customers were allowed by many years of acquiescence to go and come in patronizing the market. Since the term of the written lease did not commence until October 1st, it appears that the Ice Company itself was permitted to be upon the 8-foot-square portion before October 1st only by the invitation or acquiescence of Stark. In any event, the small portion of the lot, undesignated as to location insofar as the patrons were concerned, was in the customary passageways on the market premises to and from the market building. At the time of the accident, irrespective of the written lease, Stark had retained the rights of use and passage over the space which was at some later date to be occupied by a small building, but also had permitted the Ice Company to go upon that space. In the case of Brown v. Pepperdine, (1921) 53 Cal.App. 334, at page 336, 200 P. 36, at page 37, it was said: "* * * the defendants having retained the right to use the driveway in common with [their] tenant, they are liable for any injury sustained by persons rightfully visiting such tenant due to their ordinary negligence." In the case of Van Wye v. Robbins, (1941) 48 Cal.App.2d 660, 120 P.2d 507, the owner of a market and the operator of a service station which was adjacent to the market entered into an oral agreement whereby the customers of the market were allowed to park their cars on the service station premises. A patron of the market fell by reason of slipping on grease that was on the service station parking area. In rejecting the contention of the market owner that he was not liable for the negligence of the proprietor of the parking lot, the court said, at page 662 of 48 Cal.App.2d, at page 508 of 120 P.2d: "The latter's [market owner] liability rests on the rule that if one invites another to use his premises and the invitee is injured due to the negligent manner in which the premises are maintained, the invitor is responsible for the resulting injury to the invitee." The above instructions to the effect that Stark was not liable if he had leased the premises were erroneous prejudicially.

[10] It was stipulated between plaintiff and the Ice Company that the Ice Company placed the sign within the area leased, but Stark refused to join in that stipulation. It does not appear that the sign was within that area at the time of the accident. On the contrary, the location of the sign as marked by plaintiff on the map of the premises, received in evidence, shows that the sign was entirely outside of that area, and the nearest part of the sign was about 1/2 foot from the southeast corner of that area. If the sign was not in that area, of course, instructions relative to the Ice Company's duty to a licensee would not be proper. Even if it were to be assumed that the sign was on the said area, instructions regarding a licensee should not have been given. It appears, as above stated, that at the time of the accident the Ice Company itself was permitted to be upon that area only by the invitation or acquiescence of Stark. Also, as above indicated, plaintiff was an invitee of Stark. The Ice Company as an invitee or licensee owed plaintiff as an invitee the duty of exercising ordinary care. In the case of Pease v. San Diego Unified Sch. Dist., (1942) 54 Cal.App.2d 20, 128 P.2d 621, a public school leased its auditorium to the Salvation Army which placed some wire across a walk in order to install a public address system. The plaintiff, a student in the school, fell and was injured when she tripped on the wire. The court said at page 23 of 54 Cal.App.2d, at page 622 of 128 P.2d: "Both the appellant [Salvation Army] and the respondent [student] were invitees of the owner of the premises and as such each was under the duty of using ordinary care with respect to matters which affected the safety of the other."

It is not necessary to discuss the other instructions.

The judgment is reversed as to defendant Stark, doing business as Brook's Market, and as to defendant Southern Counties Ice Company.

SHINN, Acting P. J., and BISHOP, Justice pro tem., concur.

ASH v. MORTENSEN et al.

Civ. 14093.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 13, 1943.

Hearing Granted Oct. 11, 1943.

1. Damages 🔑34

Where one sustains injuries as result of negligence of tort-feasor and exercises ordinary care in selection of physician by whom injuries are aggravated, aggravation is considered as proximately flowing from original tort.

2. Damages 🔑34

Where one is injured by negligence of tort-feasor, intervening malpractice of physician will not remove resultant aggravation from flow of resultant damage unless party injured fails to exercise reasonable care in selection of physician of ordinary competence.

3. Judgment 🔑590(3)

Plaintiff's election to sue motorist for injuries sustained in automobile accident was election to recover all damages resulting from motorist's negligence, including aggravation to plaintiff's injuries as result of physician's neglect, and recovery against motorist was bar to recovery against physician.

4. Judgment 🔑590(3)

Where jury, in automobile accident case, under instruction to consider plaintiff's condition as it would exist in future as shown by evidence, made award for plaintiff, award included aggravation of injuries caused by neglect or errors in judgment of attending physician.

5. Judgment 🔑892

Satisfaction of judgment obtained by plaintiff in automobile accident case covering plaintiff's injuries and future condition therefrom released not only defendant therein, but also released attending physicians and any other possible wrongdoers.

6. Release 🔑38

A general release operates in rem as well as in personam.

7. Damages 🔑208(7)
Judgment 🔑631

Aggravation of an injury by physician should be submitted to jury as an element of recovery against original tort-feasor, and only one recovery may be had from same cause.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Benjamin J. Scheinman, Judge.

Action by Edith M. Ash against W. S. Mortensen and W. L. Mortensen for malpractice. Separate trials were had. Judgments for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Anne O'Keefe and Ralph C. Curren, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Chase, Barnes & Chase, of Los Angeles, for defendant and respondent W. S. Mortensen.

William M. Rains, of Los Angeles, for defendant and respondent W. L. Mortensen.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

The question for decision is whether, in an action for malpractice based upon the alleged negligence of the physicians in the treatment of injuries sustained by the plaintiff in an automobile accident, it is a complete defense that in a former suit brought by plaintiff against the negligent motorist for the injuries she sustained the latter was released when she satisfied her judgment of $15,000 for $5,753.22.

On August 18, 1940, plaintiff suffered comminuted fractures to the femur bones of both legs, with serious injuries flowing therefrom. On the following day the defendants were employed to and did render medical and surgical aid. One month thereafter plaintiff filed her action against the operator of the motor car (Ash v. Wubben, Superior Court) for damages resulting from her serious injuries received in the collision. On January 27, 1941, the case of Ash v. Wubben was tried. At the trial Dr. William L. Mortensen gave testimony concerning the medical treatment which the defendants had rendered to plaintiff. In his testimony Dr. Mortensen prognosticated that plaintiff would be disabled for some time; that there would be bowing, overlapping and shortening of her legs, and testified that corrective surgery would probably be necessary at a future time. He predicted that she would not be able to walk at all normally in less than a year from the time of the accident; that she may be left crippled; that there would be change in the position of the left femur which was not in the position that it should normally occupy; that there would be shortening of both legs, more in the left; that there would be a posterior bowing and possibility of further shortening when she put weight upon it; that if there should be no union "an open reduction would be necessary * * * a metal plate with screws into the bone * * * three months in bed." The facts so given by the witness at plaintiff's trial against Wubben referred to her condition subsequent to all of the alleged malpractices and the condition of plaintiff to be anticipated in the future.

In the instructions to the jury in the Wubben trial the jurors were admonished that in order to determine the amount of their award they should consider not only the condition of plaintiff as shown by the evidence at the time of the trial, but likewise her condition as it would exist in the future as shown by the evidence. The Wubben trial resulted in a judgment of $15,000 entered February 1, 1941. It was fully satisfied on February 5, 1941, by the payment to plaintiff by Wubben of $5,753.22.

Thereafter on the 21st day of August, 1941, plaintiff brought this action against the physicians who had treated her, alleging that the defendants in entering upon their employment on the 12th of August, 1940, failed to exercise that degree of skill and knowledge which is ordinarily exercised by physicains and surgeons in the locality where said injuries were treated; that they carelessly treated the fractured femur bones; that they negligently failed to secure said bones in position or to place them in a cast; and that on the 26th of August, 1940, an X-ray shadowgraph showed that the bones were no longer in the proper position or in the position to which they had been placed but that the position had so altered and changed that they overlapped and were no longer in alignment or joined in the manner required for the proper recovery; that they negligently allowed the bones to remain in such improper position and made no effort to reset them properly. Upon such allegations plaintiff demanded judgment for $50,000.

Following their general denials, each of the defendants pleaded affirmatively that in the Wubben case issue was joined as to all of the elements of damage and the proximate consequence thereof, the resulting judgment, and the satisfaction thereof executed by plaintiff in that case; that by reason of such satisfaction of the Wubben judgment both defendants pleaded that they were released and discharged of all responsibility for any damages sustained by plaintiff.

Following separate trials, the findings in each case embraced substantially the allegations of the affirmative defenses and the decision thereon was that by her satisfaction of the Wubben judgment she released Wubben and his heirs, sucessors, and assigns from all claims for injuries, losses and damages resulting from her injuries which were the basis of the judgment including the losses and damages not then known or anticipated by plaintiff but which might later be developed or discovered including all the effects and consequences thereof. Judgment was accordingly entered against plaintiff whereby she took nothing but was adjudged to pay the costs.

[1,2] Whether a physician accused of malpractice under such circumstances as those above related is liable has not been before the appellate courts of this state. However, it is the law that where a person sustains injuries as a result of the negligence of his tort feasor and thereupon exercises ordinary care in the selection of a physician by whom the injuries are aggravated, the aggravation is considered as an injury proximately flowing from the original tort and recovery may be had for such aggravation in the action against the original tort feasor. Dewhirst v. Leopold, 194 Cal. 424, 229 P. 30; Boa v. San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways, 182 Cal. 93, 187 P. 2. The intervening malpractice of a surgeon will not remove the resultant aggravation from the flow of resultant damage unless the party injured through the negligence of another fails to exercise reasonable care and diligence in the selection of a surgeon of ordinary competence and skill, that is, the skill exercised generally by surgeons of ordinary care and skill in the community or in similar communities. Dewhirst v. Leopold, supra.

[3-6] Plaintiff was at liberty to sue Wubben for the damages she suffered in the automobile collision. But when she elected to sue him, her election was her decision to recover all damages resulting from his negligence and this included the aggravation to her injuries as a result of the physician's neglect. Having proceeded against Wubben, her judgment against that gentleman is a bar to her recovery against the doctors whose negligence might have aggravated the injuries received from Wubben's automobile. Evidence of plaintiff's condition subsequent to the treatment by defendants and her condition as it was anticipated in the future must be deemed to have been a part of the basis of the jury's verdict. There is no formula by which we may now determine that the jury awarded its verdict wholly for the injury she sustained at the time of the accident and nothing on account of the aggravation suffered as a result of the malpractice if any of defendants. If the verdict was to any extent based upon the anticipated future condition and upon the condition which followed the treatment by defendants it must follow that the verdict was rendered in satisfaction of the aggravation and of the future injuries to flow therefrom, as well as of the pain, suffering and other damages proximately flowing from the accident itself. Such damages included the aggravation caused by the neglect, or errors in judgment, of the attending physician. That plaintiff did release Wubben and thereby discharged her whole cause of action is altogether clear. By her recovery and satisfaction of the judgment not only was Wubben released but also it necessarily followed that these defendants as well as any other possible wrongdoers were acquitted of liability. Her cause of action having passed away with her judgment against Wubben, no one can be held liable. Smith v. Mann, 1931, 184 Minn. 485, 239 N.W. 223; Wells v. Gould, 1932, 131 Me. 192, 160 A. 30; 112 A.L.R. 553; Texas Pac. R. Co. v. Hill, 237 U.S. 208, 35 S.Ct. 575, 59 L.Ed. 918. A general release operates in rem as well as in personam.

[7] In the Wells case a parallel situation is reported. In the note of 112 A.L.R. the general rule as screened from the majority of the cases has been followed by both the Minnesota and Maine courts. In the leading case there cited as holding to the contrary, the basis for such holding was that the negligence of the physician caused a distinctly "new, separate and unforeseen injury unrelated to the original injury." Piedmont Hospital v. Truitt, 48 Ga.App. 232, 172 S.E. 237. Whatever be the implications arising from decisions that tend to support the claims of plaintiff, they do not serve to outweigh the effect of the established doctrine that the aggravation of an injury by a surgeon should be submitted to the jury as an element of recovery against the original tort feasor and that only one recovery may be had for the same cause. Reliance upon Smith v. Coleman, 46 Cal.App.2d 507, 116 P.2d 133, and other decisions in industrial cases is not justified. They arise under the Workmen's Compensation Act and are therefore not subject to common law rules. In proceedings before the Industrial Accident Commission the workman may not recover for all elements of damage recoverable in actions at law. Ansbach v. Department of Industrial Relations, 99 Cal.App. 677, 279 P. 224. Under the Workman's Compensation Act, the injured workman is limited to a recovery of compensation according to a schedule prescribed. He may not recover damages for all consequential injuries proximately resulting from the accident. His recovery before the Commission is confined to specific items named in the schedule. Because of this he may follow the commission's award for an industrial injury with a legal action against a physician by whose negligence in treating such industrial injury deleterious consequences may have ensued. Whether a decision with reference to a release or to a discharge is pertinent to the issue under discussion can be determined only from a comparison of the facts adjudicated in the citation. While it is true that a release will not be allowed where there was no joint liability (Wallner v. Barry, 207 Cal. 465, 279 P. 148) such holding is a far cry from that in Wells v. Gould, supra, and in Dewhirst v. Leopold, supra, whose pronouncements spell finality for plaintiff's contentions.

The judgments are affirmed.

McCOMB, J., concurs.

59 Cal.App.2d 760

PEOPLE v. CLARK.

Cr. 2260.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.
July 23, 1943.

1. Criminal law 🔑1186(4)

Where evidence would have justified an acquittal, trial judge's signature on blank form for verdict of guilty, even though scratched out, was likely to influence jury's action and required reversal of conviction. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

2. Criminal law 🔑304(2)

It is a matter of common knowledge that juries are alert to take their cue from any intimation, real or fancied, of trial judge as to what verdict he believes they should return.

3. Criminal law 🔑1111(5)

Where transcript was certified as complete and correct, statement of trial judge made during argument of motion for new trial could not supplement or contradict certified record.

4. Criminal law 🔑338(1)

In prosecution for a narcotic offense, interjection into case by district attorney on cross-examination of defendant and in rebuttal of question as to race of another person present in hotel room of defendant at time of her arrest was error as irrelevant. St.1941, p. 2820, § 11160.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Lile T. Jacks, Judge.

Emma Clark was convicted of a narcotic offense, and she appeals.

Reversed.

Walter H. Duane, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and David K. Lener, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem.

The defendant was convicted of a violation of sec. 11160, Health and Safety Code, St.1941, p. 2820. Defendant appeals from the judgment and the order denying her motion for a new trial.

The evidence shows that on November 14, 1942, three narcotic agents went to a hotel room in San Francisco where defendant was found clad only in a nightgown. The agents searched her room and her clothes for narcotics and finding none they instructed her to dress herself, which she did in their presence. She was then taken in an automobile to a hospital where her body was searched by a physician for concealed narcotics. A nurse testified that while defendant was in the hospital she observed defendant putting her hand in her coat pocket and called one of the agents, and this agent testified that he took the coat into an adjoining room and out of the presence of the defendant found in the pocket of the coat a rubber finger stall containing thirteen grains of heroin wrapped in two paper covered packets. The agents testified that the pocket of this coat previously had been searched and nothing found therein. Defendant denied any knowledge of the heroin, and denied that she had at any time had it in her possession or placed it in the pocket of her coat.

This brief recital makes it clear that while the evidence was sufficient to support the judgment, it was of a character which might well create in the minds of the jurors a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt and thereby result in her acquittal.

[1, 2] The record shows that the blank form of verdict finding the defendant guilty, which was given to the jury for their use and was actually signed by the foreman and returned as the verdict of the jury, had the name of the trial judge signed to it, with a penstroke drawn through the signature. This unusual circumstance is relied upon by appellant as prejudicial error. Appellant freely concedes that this signature was not affixed by the judge with any intention to influence the verdict, but was a pure inadvertence which the judge attempted to rectify by afterwards drawing the penstroke through it. The question presented on appeal however is not affected by the admitted fact that the trial judge innocently affixed his signature to the verdict. It needs no citation of authority to support the truism, so well known and often repeated, that juries are alert to take their cue from any intimation, real or fancied, of the trial judge as to what verdict he believes they should return.

The situation is apparently unique in the trial of criminal cases and not apt to recur, and it is not surprising that precise authority has eluded the search of counsel and the court. The case most nearly in point which we have discovered is Wyatt v. State, 65 Okl.Cr. 188, 83 P.2d 886, 887. The form of verdict submitted to the jury in that case and the ruling of the Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma thereon fully appear from the following quotation:

"In this case the question presented is not a question or comment on the evidence but a question of the court's action in submitting to the jury a form of verdict containing a notation, 'Not over 10 years.' The form of the verdict complained of by the defendant on which the jury returned a verdict of guilty and fixing the punishment of the defendant at seven years in the state penitentiary clearly indicates that in fixing the punishment the jury must have been influenced by the notation on the verdict herein complained of, and that the defendant did not have a fair and impartial trial.

"No one can tell what influence the notation on the verdict had on the jury, and to what extent it influenced the jury in arriving at its verdict fixing a penalty of seven years. Jurors pay a great deal of attention to what the trial court says or does in the trial of a case, and any action or remarks by the court which indicates the feeling of the court is observed by the jurors and often the jury will go beyond the evidence and consider the action and remarks of the court.

"It was a prejudicial error for the court to furnish the jury with a form of verdict on which was written a notation, 'Not over 10 years,' as was done in this case.

"We hold that the notation on the form of the verdict submitted to the jury was prejudicial to the rights of the defendant and a violation of his constitutional rights and deprived him of a fair and impartial trial. The notation on the verdict was such that the jury in all probability reached a conclusion that the court wanted the defendant convicted and wanted the jury to have directly before it the maximum penalty provided by law."

We need only add that it seems likely that a form of verdict bearing the trial judge's signature might much more readily influence the jury's action.

The record shows that while appellant's motion for new trial was being presented the trial judge stated: "Well, I scratched it out and explained it to the jury."

[3] The judge's certificate, however, recites that the transcript "is a full, true, fair, complete and correct transcript of the proceedings had at the trial * * * and all rulings, decisions, acts or statements of the court", and although the instructions of the court are set out no reference to the judge's signature on the proposed form of verdict appears anywhere therein or elsewhere in the transcript. The bare statement of the trial judge during the argument of the motion for new trial cannot supplement or contradict the certified record of the proceedings before the jury. Estate of Kingsley, 93 Cal. 576, 28 P. 244.

[4] Another matter was interjected into the case by the district attorney on cross-examination of the defendant and in rebuttal as to the race of another person present in the hotel room of defendant at the time of her arrest. The race of this person had no connection with defendant's guilt of the crime charged, had no tendency to prove any issue in the case and on a retrial should be excluded. People v. Burness, 53 Cal. App.2d 214, 221, 127 P.2d 623; 8 Cal.Jur. 59; 22 C.J.S., Criminal Law, § 600, p. 922.

The attorney general appeals to Art. VI, sec. 4½, of the constitution, but we cannot hold on the evidence in this case that the errors were not prejudicial. It is better that justice be somewhat delayed if defendant is guilty than to have it utterly defeated if defendant is innocent.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concur.

60 Cal.App.2d 9

COLONIAL INS. CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

Civ. 14065.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 27, 1943.

Hearing Denied Sept. 23, 1943.

1. Workmen's compensation 🔑1295

Reimbursement of an employee for expense of medical treatment is payment of "compensation" and is effective to continue jurisdiction of Industrial Accident Commission so as to authorize an award for new and further disability, claim for which was filed within 245 weeks of original injury. St.1937, pp. 266, 281, 296, §§ 3207, 4600, 5410.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Compensation".

2. Workmen's compensation 🔑1303

Where employer and insurance carrier accepted and paid for chiropractic treatment as a substitute for medical treatment, neither could deny that employee was paid "compensation" so as to deny power of Industrial Accident Commission to make award for further injuries within 245 weeks of original injury. St.1937, pp. 266, 281, 296, §§ 3207, 4600, 5410.

3. Workmen's compensation 🔑1303

By payment of compensation employer and insurance carrier impliedly consent to extend time for filing of an application for compensation by claimant and are thereafter "estopped" to set up as a bar to claim of injured employee lapse of time within which he could file application for compensation with Industrial Accident Commission if no payment had been made. St. 1937, pp. 266, 281, 296, §§ 3207, 4600, 5410.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop".

Proceeding by Colonial Insurance Company, petitioner, against Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California and D. C. Milligan, respondents, on a writ of review to annul an award of the Commission to respondent Milligan.

Award affirmed.

Garratt B. Sargent, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Everett A. Corten, of San Francisco, and R. C. McKellips, of Auburn, for respondents.

SHINN, Acting Presiding Justice.

In this proceeding to revoke an award of the Industrial Accident Commission to an injured employee, the question for decision is correctly stated by counsel for respondent as follows: "Does a monetary payment by the employer (who was reimbursed by his insurance carrier) to an injured employee, to be used to pay for the services of a chiropractor who had treated, and temporarily relieved, the pain in the employee's sprained back, give the Industrial Accident Commission continuing jurisdiction so that an application for compensation for new and further disability may be filed by the employee at any time within 245 weeks after the date of the original injury?"

On the day of his injury the employee engaged the services of a chiropractor and received a treatment for an injury to his back. On the second day thereafter he reported the injury to his employer, who reported to the insurance carrier; the employee remained at home during the ensuing week, was visited by his employer, and continued to receive chiropractic treatments. The employer tendered no medical treatment and the employee received none at that time, although within a week after the accident he was examined by a physician at the suggestion of the insurance carrier and was advised that he was all right. The commission did not find that the employer neglected or refused to furnish medical treatment. The charges of the chiropractor, amounting to $9, were paid to the employee by the employer, who was reimbursed therefor by his insurance carrier upon presentation of the chiropractor's bill and after receiving a communication from the chiropractor. No application was filed for compensation for the original injury and no sum in excess of $9 was paid to or for the employee. The present application for compensation was based upon new and further disability which developed, and was filed within 245 weeks after the date of the original injury.

Petitioner's contention is that while the employer was required to furnish medical, surgical and hospital treatment, he was not obliged to furnish treatment by a chiropractor and that the reimbursement of the employee for the cost of such treatment cannot be considered as compensation in any form so as to extend the time for the filing of a claim. The commission found that there was new and further compensable disability, that the employer had furnished "treatment" for the original injury, and that because thereof the claim depending upon the new and further disability was not barred. These findings are supported by the evidence and they justify the award. The commission did not find that chiropractic treatment constitutes medical treatment and there is nothing in the findings to indicate that the award was made upon the theory that the employer was obliged to furnish chiropractic treatment or to reimburse the employee for the cost thereof. Undoubtedly the theory was that reimbursement of the employee constituted compensation within the meaning of section 3207 of the Labor Code, St.1937, p. 266, and the decisions which hold that the payment of compensation for the original injury gives the commission jurisdiction for 245 weeks after the date of the injury to entertain proceedings for compensation for new and further disability. § 5410, Labor Code; Cowell L. & C. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1930, 211 Cal. 154, 160, 294 P. 703, 72 A.L.R. 1118, and cases therein cited.

[1-3] "Compensation" as defined by section 3207 of the Labor Code includes "every benefit or payment conferred by Division IV upon an injured employee" and necessarily includes payment for medical treatment as provided in section 4600 of the code, St.1937, p. 281. Reimbursement of an employee for the expenses of medical treatment is payment of compensation and is just as effective to continue the jurisdiction of the commission as payment of wages would be. We may agree with petitioner, without deciding, that an employee is not entitled to receive chiropractic treatment at the expense of his employer and that reimbursement for such treatments would not be the payment of compensation in the strict sense. But it does not follow that payment of charges of a chiropractor by the employer and reimbursement of the latter by the insurance carrier with full knowledge of all of the facts would not be payment of compensation which would toll the statute of limitations. If the employer in the present case was not obliged and could have refused to furnish chiropractic treatment, he waived his right to limit his liability to the furnishing of medical treatment. The insurance carrier was not bound by the act of the employer and could have refused to reimburse him for an improper expenditure (Beverly v. Fairmont Hotel, 1927, 85 Cal.App. 567, 570, 259 P. 955), and if it had done so it would have been free to plead the bar of the statute. But having accepted and paid for chiropractic treatment as a substitute for medical treatment, neither the employer nor the insurance carrier can deny that the employee has been paid compensation for his injury. They made no claim then and make none now that the money was paid for any other purpose or with any different understanding. It is upon the doctrine of estoppel that payment operates to extend the time for the filing of an application for compensation (Union Iron Works v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1922, 190 Cal. 33, 46, 210 P. 410); and it is immaterial whether the payment be large or small or whether there be one payment or several. It is payment of money as compensation that extends the time. Morrison v. Industrial Acc. Com., 1938, 29 Cal.App.2d 528, 85 P.2d 186, and cases cited page 534. The commission therefore correctly held that the claim, as limited to the new and additional disability, was not barred.

The award is affirmed.

PARKER WOOD, J., and BISHOP, J. pro tem., concur.

59 Cal.App.2d 820

COOKE et al. v. ODELL et al.

Civ. 12304.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 26, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 25, 1943.

Hearing Denied Sept. 23, 1943.

1. Corporations ⚷320(11)

Where corporation director had made a large profit on sale of silver bullion held by him personally at about the time that he represented to corporation that purchases of silver bullion were good investments and the silver market remained fairly constant for about four months thereafter, a finding, in stockholders' representative suit against director, that at time the director made the representation it was false and was known by him to be false, was unsupported.

2. Limitation of actions ⚷104(2)

Failure of a foreign holding corporation to comply strictly with statute relating to information concerning subsidiary corporations, required to appear on balance sheet of holding corporation, was of no value in determining whether such failure amounted to fraudulent concealment which would toll statute of limitations on stockholders' representative suit against directors to recover for alleged misappropriation of corporation's funds, since statute does not specifically refer to foreign corporation. Civ.Code § 358.

3. Limitation of actions ⚷104(2)

In stockholders' representative suit to recover from directors of the holding company for loss resulting from speculation with money advanced by holding corporation to subsidiary corporation, no inference of fraudulent concealment which would toll statute of limitations could be drawn from form of balance sheet furnished by holding corporation, where accounts receivable showed a large and increasing indebtedness due from subsidiary corporation and statutes relating to the necessary corporate books and records did not apply to foreign holding corporations. Civ. Code, §§ 278, 342, 355, 356, 358, 359.

4. Limitation of actions ⚷104(2)

In stockholders' representative suit against directors of a holding corporation to recover for losses resulting from speculations with corporation's funds through a subsidiary corporation, where there was no evidence that a proper request to examine books of subsidiary corporation was refused, a finding of fraudulent concealment which would toll statute of limitations could not be predicated on an improper refusal to allow an examination of corporations' books. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 338, subd. 4, 339, subd. 1; Civ.Code, §§ 2229, 2234.

5. Limitation of actions ⚷197(2)

Evidence failed to establish that the purpose of organizing subsidiary corporation was to conceal from stockholders of holding corporation the business transactions carried on through subsidiary corporation, and a finding of fraudulent concealment which would toll statute of limitations on stockholders' representative suit against directors to recover for losses resulting from speculations with holding corporation's funds could not be predicated on such arrangement alone. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 338, subd. 4, 339, subd. 1, Civ.Code, §§ 2229, 2234.

6. Corporations ⚷314(1)

Directors' speculations with corporate funds could not be said to have been done for their own profit and that it was a breach of trust under statute, on ground directors' main holdings were of common stock and that only by speculation could the common stock have any value where accumulated dividends on preferred stock had to be paid prior to common stock dividends. Civ. Code, §§ 2229, 2234.

7. Corporations ⚷314(1)

Directors' speculation with corporate funds could not be said to have been done for their own profit and that it was a breach of trust under statute, on ground directors' main holdings were of common stock and that only by speculation could common stock have any value as accumulated dividends on preferred stock had to be paid first, where only one speculation was made and many profitable transactions would need to have taken place to give common stock any value. Civ.Code, §§ 2229, 2234.

8. Corporations ⚷317(3)

Where directors' alleged unauthorized use of corporate funds for speculation could only have resulted in benefit to stockholders, such speculation did not give rise to a "constructive fraud" under statute prohibiting trustee from using trust property for any purpose unconnected with the trust, since the phrase "purpose unconnected with the trust" refers to benefits to third parties. Civ.Code, §§ 2229, 2234, 2237, 2238.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Constructive Fraud" and "Purpose Unconnected with the Trust".

9. Limitation of actions ⚷28(1)

A stockholders' representative suit against directors to recover for loss resulting from alleged speculation with corporate funds was barred by the two year statute of limitations where no fraud was proved, either constructive or actual, which would toll the running of the statute. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 338, subd. 4, 339, subd. 1.

10. Corporations ⚷320(11)

In stockholders' representative suit against director to recover for alleged misappropriation of corporate funds, evidence failed to support finding that a trip to Europe made by director was an undertaking partially for the director's personal pleasure, and judgment against director for the expenses of the trip which were paid by the corporation could not stand.

On Petition for Rehearing.

11. Corporations ⚷641

The statute relating to information concerning subsidiary corporations, required to appear on balance sheets of holding corporations, does not apply to foreign corporations. Civ.Code, § 358.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Sylvain J. Lazarus, Judge.

Stockholders' representative suit by E. A. Cooke and others against Robert S. Odell and others to recover for alleged misappropriation of and speculation with funds of the State Guaranty Corporation while individual defendants were directors and officers of the corporation. From judgment in favor of the corporation against defendants Robert S. Odell, A. E. Falch and C. F. Adams, Jr., for $2,000 and against the defendants Robert S. Odell and R. L. Herrick for $130,793.78, such defendants appeal.

Reversed.

Sullivan, Roche & Johnson, of San Francisco, for appellants.

John A. Sinclair and Charles A. Christin, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

This is a stockholders' suit brought by plaintiffs in their representative capacity as stockholders of State Guaranty Corporation, which was made a defendant because it refused to bring the suit. The plaintiffs recovered judgment in the corporation's favor against defendants for alleged misappropriation of and speculations with the corporation's funds while they were directors and officers of State Guaranty Corporation and Pacific States Auxiliary Corporation, its wholly owned subsidiary. The defendants Odell, Falch and Adams have appealed from the judgment of $2,000 entered against them which concerned the alleged misappropriation of the funds of State Guaranty Corporation by Odell while on a trip to Europe upon the theory that the trip was only partially for the benefit of the corporation. Defendants Odell and Herrick appeal from a judgment of $130,793.78 entered against them which was the amount of loss on a purchase and sale as an investment of two lots of silver bullion by Pacific States Auxiliary Corporation. Pacific States Auxiliary Corporation, a California corporation, is the wholly owned subsidiary of State Guaranty Corporation, a Delaware corporation. It was organized to manage the foreclosed properties of Pacific States Savings and Loan, another wholly owned subsidiary of State Guaranty Corporation. As part of its business it made investments and carried the cash transactions of State Guaranty Corporation also. With respect to the corporate structure, the trial court found that both State Guaranty Corporation and Pacific States Auxiliary were dominated and controlled by Odell through his large holdings of common stock in State Guaranty Corporation and his position as an officer and director of State Guaranty Corporation and Pacific States Savings and Loan. This finding is supported by the evidence in the record and appellants' attack thereon is without merit. By virtue of his ownership of shares of common stock of the corporation together with his nomination by proxies of preferred shareholders, the defendant Odell controlled the election of the board of directors and dominated its actions. Odell, Falch, and Adams were directors and in addition Falch was President and Odell was Vice-president and Director of Finance of State Guaranty Corporation. During the period here involved Herrick was an employee of Pacific States Savings and Loan Company and was an officer and director of Pacific States Auxiliary Corporation.

The appellants further contend as to both judgments that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings on which they rest and that both causes of action, if any there were, are barred by the statute of limitations applicable to them. As both transactions were entirely separate the particular facts with respect to each are better stated separately.

The Silver Transactions.

Prior to August of 1935 defendant Odell had actively traded in the silver bullion market. At the commencement of that month he owned 1,310,000 Shanghai dollars —the value of which depended upon the intrinsic value of their silver content. On August 14, 1935, Odell sold 800,000 Shanghai dollars on the London market whereby he made a profit of $80,000. The dollars were then on deposit in the vaults of the Wells Fargo Bank and Union Trust Co. in San Francisco. On August 16, on Odell's representation that silver was a good investment, Pacific States Auxiliary Corporation purchased these same dollars at a cost of $390,400, which admittedly was their then market value. It is not contended that Odell realized any personal profit to the detriment of the corporation from these two transactions. The purchase by Pacific States Auxiliary was made from the Wells Fargo Bank on contracts. One hundred thousand dollars was advanced. This $100,000 was loaned to Pacific States Auxiliary by State Guaranty Corporation. Thereafter as the silver market declined additional advances were made. These Shanghai dollars (theretofore converted into bullion) were sold on February 18, 1936, at a loss of $116,696.65. In September of 1935, also at the suggestion of defendant Odell, Pacific States Auxiliary purchased 500,688 ounces of silver at a cost of $327,325.20. This purchase was also by contract, only $33,000 being advanced. This was sold on December 13th at a loss of $14,097.13.

The findings of fact on which the trial court based its judgment in favor of the corporation on this count are as follows:

"VIII. That during the years 1935 and 1936 the defendants Robert S. Odell and R. L. Herrick caused Pacific States Auxiliary Corporation to engage in speculation in the purchase and sale of silver bullion; that the said purchase of silver bullion was not connected with the business in which said corporation was then engaged, and was highly speculative. * * * That in causing said corporation to engage in said activities, said defendant directors violated the trust they owed to said corporation and to State Guaranty Corporation, and by reason thereof are indebted to said corporation in the sum of $130,793.78, together with interest thereon."

"XIII. The Court finds that the plaintiffs did not discover the facts constituting the frauds herein found until within three years of the time of the commencement of the action, nor could they have discovered said facts sooner by exercise of reasonable diligence. That the Board of Directors of State Guaranty Corporation, during the time covered by the transactions set forth in paragraphs VIII and IX, failed to render to the shareholders of State Guaranty Corporation the reports covering the affairs of Pacific States Auxiliary Corporation, as required by Section 358 of the Civil Code of the State of California, and never at any time during the period covered by said transactions submitted any financial statements or profit and loss statements of Pacific States Auxiliary Corporation to the shareholders of State Guaranty Corporation. That the plaintiffs were not permitted to examine the books of account of Pacific States Auxiliary Corporation until approximately September 2, 1939, notwithstanding that permission to make such examination had been requested by plaintiffs, or some of them, prior thereto."

"XVI. The action is not barred by Section 339, Subdivision 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of California."

It is conceded by respondents that unless section 338(4) of the Code of Civil Procedure is the statute of limitations applicable to this cause of action, it was brought too late, as the silver purchases were made in 1935, and this suit was not filed until May, 1940. They seek to support the judgment on three theories, actual fraud, constructive fraud and fraudulent concealment tolling the running of the statute. Appellants contend that the above facts show, at most, bad but honest judgment in making an investment in the ordinary course of the corporation's business. They further argue that the propriety of the investment is to be judged solely by the articles of incorporation which permitted an investment in any kind of personal property.

[1] To support a finding of actual fraud the respondents argue that Odell's representations that the purchases of silver dollars and bullion were good investments were false and were known by him to be false. The respondents rely upon the inference of fraud which might have been drawn from the fact that he did not apprise the other directors that he had just sold the silver dollars which they purchased for Pacific States Auxiliary Corporation. The trial court did not make any finding of actual fraud nor would such a finding have been supported by the evidence. We are faced with the facts that Odell made a profit on the sale of his Shanghai silver dollars of $80,000 and that the silver market remained fairly constant between August, 1935, and December, 1935, a few times rising above the price at which the silver dollars were purchased. On this showing a finding that at the time Odell made the representation it was false or that he believed it to be false would not have been supported by the evidence. Proof of fraud must be clear and convincing and there is no other evidence in the record upon which a finding of actual fraud could have been predicated.

[2, 3] Next respondents contend that by reason of the fraudulent concealment of a cause of action, the running of the statute of limitations thereon is tolled until the plaintiff discovers facts or should have discovered the facts. Assuming that this proposition of law is correct, there is no evidence in the record upon which a finding of fraudulent concealment by the defendants could be based. The fact that State Guaranty Corporation failed to comply strictly with the requirements of section 358 of the Civil Code relating to the information concerning subsidiary corporations required to appear on the balance sheets of holding corporations is of no value in determining fraudulent concealment because the obligations imposed by section 358 do not specifically refer to foreign corporations. Although foreign corporations are expressly mentioned in sections 355, 356, 359 of the Civil Code, all in the same chapter XII of the Civil Code relating to corporate books and records, their obligations and rights imposed by the chapter are limited to corporate books and records kept within the state. This emphasizes why foreign corporations were not intended to be included in section 358 in that the difficulties of enforcement would be insurmountable. Further it should be noted that section 359, relating to a stockholders' suit to compel the giving of a financial statement, was made applicable only to foreign corporations whose principal place of business was within this state. Section 278 of the Civil Code especially provides that the word "corporation" includes only domestic corporations. We can not agree with respondents that the legislature in section 278, where it explained what it meant by the use of the term holding corporation, meant to dispense with the use of the word "foreign" if it meant to include foreign holding corporations also. Further support for this view is also found in section 342 of the Civil Code where the legislature, in referring to the acquisition of shares of corporations by themselves or their subsidiaries, specifically refers to corporations domestic or foreign. Finally, the Delaware corporation laws contain no requirement that a holding corporation render statements concerning the financial position of its subsidiaries to the stockholders annually. Hence no inference of fraudulent concealment can be drawn from the form of State Guaranty Corporation's balance sheet, particularly where the accounts receivable showed a large and increasing indebtedness due from Pacific States Auxiliary Corporation from 1934 to 1939.

[4] Respondents next point to the fact that in the beginning of 1935, prior to the silver transactions here in question, defendants refused to allow one Andrews, who had been requested only to go over the books of State Guaranty Corporation for certain stockholders, to look over the books of Pacific States Auxiliary. It is conceded that the facts concerning the silver transactions were at all times on the corporate records of Pacific States Auxiliary. There is no evidence in the record that a proper request to examine the books of Pacific States Auxiliary was ever refused. Hence, no finding of fraudulent concealment could be predicated on the basis of an improper refusal to allow an examination of these books.

[5] Finally, in this connection, the respondents assert that the whole purpose of Pacific States Auxiliary Corporation was to conceal from the stockholders of State Guaranty Corporation the business transactions carried on through Pacific States Auxiliary. We can find no evidence to support this assertion nor did the trial court so find. It is well known that many holding companies are completely inactive and carry on their affairs through their subsidiaries. To hold that on such arrangements alone, a finding of fraudulent concealment could be predicated, would drastically change the burden of proof resting upon one charging fraud.

Respondents finally seek to support the judgment on the grounds that the defendants committed a constructive fraud on the corporation in investing the funds in the silver bullion. They assert that a constructive fraud arises upon the breach of the fiduciary duty of the director in either of two ways under section 2229 of the Civil Code. This section reads as follows: "A trustee may not use or deal with the trust property for his own profit, or for any other purpose unconnected with the trust, in any manner." Section 2234 of the Civil Code declares a breach of the preceding section to be a fraud against the beneficiary of the trust.

[6, 7] First the respondents contend that the defendants dealt with the corporate funds for their own profit when they invested in the silver bullion. They argue that defendants' main holdings were of common stock and that only by speculation could the common stock have any value as the preferred stock had accumulated dividends for five years which had to be paid prior to common stock dividends. This argument defeats itself. The directors' "own profit" in this case is the same as any other beneficiary of the trust and can not possibly be said to constitute a use of the corporate property for the benefit of the director as trustee. Alderman v. Alderman, 178 S.C. 9, 181 S.E. 897, 105 A.L.R. 102, 120; Spering's Appeal, 71 Pa. 11, 10 Am.Rep. 684, 689. The tenuous argument that common stockholders would be benefited over preferred stockholders is also defeated by the fact that in order to pay off the accumulated dividends on the preferred shares by such investments as these, many profitable transactions would need to have taken place, buying at the lowest market price for silver in 1935 and selling at the highest level for 1935. Here only one such transaction was entered into which could not possibly have given any value to the common stock, assuming for the purpose of argument that the common stock at the date of the purchases in question had no value.

[8] Secondly, respondents contend that the use of corporate funds for the silver purchases was a use for a "purpose unconnected with the trust, in any manner," and therefore constituted a constructive fraud on the corporation. The respondents argue that although the alleged speculations were not ultra vires "in the strict sense that the articles of incorporation did not permit the buying of silver. * * * The speculations were so foreign to the business of the corporation as to be beyond the powers of the officers." Therefore they argue that the speculations were for purposes unconnected with the trust and constituted a fraud on the corporation. In support of this proposition they cite City of Fort Bragg v. Brandon, 41 Cal.App. 227, 182 P. 454, in which the trustees of the town gave away an interest in town property. Although a search has revealed no other case involving the final clause of the section, we understand that the words "purpose unconnected with the trust, in any manner" refer to benefits to third parties, instanced in the case cited, and not unauthorized uses of trust funds which could result only in benefit to the beneficiaries of the trust and to no other parties. In this connection sections 2237 and 2238 of the Civil Code should be noted, where the code distinguished the measure of damages applicable to breaches of trust under section 2229 and where "a trustee * * * uses or disposes of the trust property in any manner not authorized by the trust, but in good faith, and with intent to serve the interests of the beneficiary."

This view is supported by Albers v. Villa Moret, Inc., 46 Cal.App.2d 54, 115 P.2d 238, although the code section is not cited. At page 56 of 46 Cal.App.2d, at page 239 of 115 P.2d the court said: "The corporation was organized * * * primarily to engage in the business of producing, developing and selling sheet music. Its articles of incorporation, however, bestowed broad general powers, including that to acquire real property, erect buildings, deal in stocks and bonds, borrow and loan money, etc. Accordingly, the purchase of building and loan certificates, the erection of buildings and the investment in the fruit distributing company may be dismissed without further consideration unless in connection therewith there is proof of gross abuse of authority or discretion sufficient at least to approach negligence or fraud. The evidence herein may not be so characterized. * * * While some of the acts of the directors resulted in unwise investment, particularly as viewed in retrospect, they do not necessarily—depending upon the facts—constitute gross abuse of discretion." The weight of these remarks is somewhat restricted for the reason that in that case the court was upholding the findings of the trial court. However, we find no other evidence in the record to support the lower court's finding of fraud than that defendant engaged in the "highly speculative" silver transactions, hence the case is persuasive authority.

In Southern Counties Thrift Co. v. C. W. Rairdon, 47 Cal.App.2d 770, 118 P.2d 828, 829, although the fraud issue was apparently not raised, the court held that a demurrer to a complaint was properly sustained, the causes of action being barred by subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure, where the complaint alleged "unauthorized and negligent acts * * * in that loans contrary to law were made" by the directors. At the most the transactions here in question were "unauthorized and negligent" hence by implication they do not come under section 338, sub. 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the causes of action, if there were any, are barred by the sections cited. Fox v. Hale & Norcross S. M. Co., 108 Cal. 369, 424, 41 P. 308.

No cases have been cited and none have been found on the question before us—whether engaging in a "highly speculative" investment without more constitutes a fraud on the corporation so as to suspend the running of a statute of limitations until discovery has been made. Those cases relied on mainly by respondents are clearly distinguishable. In Fagerberg v. Phœnix Flour Mills Co., 50 Ariz. 227, 71 P.2d 1022, 1028, the court emphasized the concealment of the speculations on the wheat market from the other directors of the corporation and the false entries made in the books of the corporation in order to conceal the losses. Here there is no contention that the directors as a board did not authorize the investment nor were the losses covered on the books of the corporation. In Felsenheld v. Bloch Bros. Tobacco Co., 119 W. Va. 167, 192 S.E. 545, 123 A.L.R. 334, although the statute of limitations point was involved, it should be noted that the court decided that cases cognizable in equity were governed by a different statute than those cognizable at law and held that any breach of trust by a director, whether by reason of fraud or negligence, would be governed by the equity statute. Broad language denominating the acts of directors fraud can be found in many cases not involving the question of the statute of limitations applicable to fraud actions as opposed to those for negligence and mismanagement. These cases must be carefully distinguished from the case at bar.

[9] We have assumed for the purposes of argument that these investments in silver were highly speculative as found by the trial court and that a cause of action for negligence on this basis might have lain against the directors here sued. We hold as a matter of law that no fraud was proved, either constructive or actual, upon the corporations which would make section 338, subdivision 4, applicable to the causes of action stated, if any. Whether a finding that such investments constituted actionable negligence on the part of the directors would be upheld, we need not decide.

The Automobile Trip.

There is no dispute as to the facts relating to this count. Appellants have summarized them in their opening brief and respondents concede this summary to be a fair statement. It is as follows:

"He (Odell) first proceeded to Yellowstone Park where he employed the manager of the Park Hotel and his crew for one of Pacific States' hotels; thence to Minneapolis to interview the Receiver for the Radison Hotel there, who later came to California to negotiate for purchase of some of Pacific States' properties. He next visited the Taylor hotels in Rochester and the manager of the Drake and Blackstone in Chicago—thence to Cincinnati to visit a hotel there and the Waco Airplane factory to look at airplanes. (Shortly after that a Waco plane was purchased and became the subject of plaintiffs' Count 'C' upon which judgment went for defendants.) He also stopped at Manchester, Iowa, where he called on the Holbrook Importing Company, importers of breeding stock, and priced their stallions.

"In New York Odell negotiated, with the Equitable Life Insurance Co., a $3,214,200.00 loan, which by reducing the interest rate from the 4½% being paid to 4%, and the appraisal fee from $16,000 to $5000, saved Pacific States $91,250.00. That saving covered the life of the loan.

"In London Odell induced Lloyds' Underwriters to reduce its 40% earthquake insurance rate to 24 cents and to include the Barbara Worth Hotel at El Centro in the blanket policy—a saving to Pacific States of $21,564.00.

"In Sweden and Norway he visited hotels; in Berlin he purchased glassware for the Pacific States hotels and visited various porcelain factories that supply the hotels with dishes.

"He also visited hotels in France. In France and Belgium he purchased breeding stock for the Nevada Ranch of Pacific States—the Nevada Ranch is a property approximately 250 miles long and a hundred miles wide, and comprises (including fee and leased lands, and lands occupied under grazing rights) almost 3,000,000 acres.

"In Belgium, for example, Odell bought two Percheron stallions, and two or three mares in France, and four Belgian stallions and about six mares in Belgium. To get 'a decent freight rate and pay for the caretaker and feed', he had to ship 20 horses, so he purchased 18 and added to the shipment 2 horses purchased by a man from Los Angeles, one Frank Powell. Odell had an arrangement with Melcher, Pacific States ranch manager, that when the horses arrived, Melcher would select what Pacific States needed and they would sell the balance. Five of the horses died en route, for which Pacific States was reimbursed through insurance. Melcher selected eight for the Pacific States Nevada ranch and Odell took the remaining five, paying therefor the actual cash outlay on them.

"Odell's wife accompanied him, and he paid all of her expenses. Pacific States paid Odell's expenses, including a flat allowance of $25.00 a day for meals, etc. Odell submitted this to the Building and Loan Commissioner and he approved $25.00 a day. Excluding the value of the use of the car and Odell's transportation expense, the expenses of the trip amounted to $1770.00. The trip consumed about 10,000 miles. Odell hired a chauffeur to drive the car in Europe, but furnished his own chauffeur at his own expense while in the United States. The cost of operating the car in the United States without the expense of a chauffeur was 5¢ per mile for 2800 miles; while the expense of operations for the balance of the 10,000 miles (the European travel) was 7¢ per mile including depreciation and the cost of the chauffeur, and everything.

"The trial Court found that part of the use of the automobile was devoted to the business of State Guaranty and its subsidiaries, and part to Odell's private business and pleasure, and that 'the sum of $2000.00 represented the pro-rata expenses so paid for the benefit of Robert S. Odell and the fair value of the use of said automobile during the time the same was used by Odell for his personal business and pleasure."

[10] From this statement we cannot find any basis for a reasonable inference that the trip was an undertaking partially for the personal pleasure of the defendant Odell. Moreover we are at a loss to find upon what basis the apportionment of the total expense was made. The respondents point to the profit realized by Odell on the purchase of five horses for his own use. If he profited at the expense of the corporation he would be liable therefore, but no such cause of action was pleaded, nor was the judgment based thereon.

We conclude that the cause of action pleaded relating to the silver transactions is barred by the statute of limitations, and that there is no substantial evidence in the record to support the findings of the trial court in relation to the cause of action concerning the trip to Europe; hence the judgment against Odell and Herrick, and Odell, Falch and Adams, respectively, cannot be sustained.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

SPENCE, J., concurs.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM.

[11] In their petition for a rehearing, respondents criticize our interpretation of section 358 of the Civil Code, and cite Gertridge v. State Capital Co., 129 Cal.App. 86, 18 P.2d 375, where it was held that the words "every corporation" used in section 355 applied to foreign corporations as well as to domestic. It should be noted that following that decision in 1933 the legislature amended section 355, St.1933, p. 1388, to make it applicable to "foreign corporations keeping any such records in this state," thereby expressly limiting the use of the term "every corporation." The words "such records" refer to corporate minutes, books of account, and share register, all of which are required to be kept by domestic corporations under sections 352, 353, and 354. That these three sections do not require foreign corporations to keep such records is evident from the 1933 amendment to section 355 which was made applicable only to such foreign corporations as should voluntarily keep such records in this state.

It should also be noted that sections 356, 357, 358 and 359 were also amended at the same time as section 355, in 1933; and in the same bill, or chapter. Sections 356, 357 and 359 all expressly refer to foreign corporations. Section 358 does not make such reference, and it would be simple judicial legislation to add those words to the section. We must assume that the Legislature had some reason for permitting shareholders to inspect books of foreign corporations which are kept within the state; and some reason for limiting to domestic corporations the specifications required for an annual report found in section 358.

The petition is denied.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

60 Cal.App.2d 224

BURTON E. GREEN INV. CO. v. McCOLGAN, Franchise Tax Commissioner.

Civ. 14073.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 13, 1943.

As Corrected Aug. 27, 1943.

Hearing Denied Oct. 11, 1943.

1. Taxation 🔑219, 376(1)

The term "net income" was used in the Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act to specify the sum constituting the basis for calculation of the franchise tax and is not a fund available for dividends or the "measure of the tax" which is all income, and to measure the tax, all allowable deductions are taken, and any dividends paid from net income derived thereby are, as having been paid out of "income included in the measure of the tax", exempt from franchise tax in the hands of the recipient corporation. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8488, §§ 4(3), 8(h).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Income Included in the Measure of the Tax", "Net Income" and "Measure of Tax".

2. Taxation 🔑47(4), 376(1)

The purpose of section of the Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act providing for deduction of dividends declared from income included in the measure of the tax imposed upon the declaring corporation is to avoid double taxation and thereby prevent destruction of capital assets, and if the same dividend is included in the measure of the tax paid by two taxpayers successively under the act, the result is prohibited multiple taxation. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8488, § 8(h).

3. Taxation 🔑376(1)

The section of the Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act providing that in computing net income no deduction shall be allowed for any amount otherwise allowable as a deduction which is allocable to income not included in the measure of the franchise tax, was designed to prevent corporations from deducting amounts properly allocable to income, but not subject to franchise taxation, and "income" was used as "gross income" not subject to the franchise tax, and not as "net income". Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8488, § 9(d).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Gross Income" and "Income".

4. Statutes 🔑209

Where word "income" was used as meaning "gross income" in section 9(d) of Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act providing that in computing net income no deduction shall be allowed for any amount otherwise allowable as a deduction which is allocable to income not included in the measure of the franchise tax, word had same significance in section 8(h) providing for deduction of dividends declared from income included in the measure of tax imposed upon the declaring corporation. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8488, §§ 8(h), 9(d).

5. Taxation 🔑376(1)

Where gross income and specified deductions were the factors included in arriving at net income taxable under the Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act "gross income" was "income included in the measure of the tax" within section 8(h) providing for deduction of dividends declared from income included in the measure of the tax imposed upon the declaring corporation. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8488, § 8(h).

6. Taxation ⚷376(1)

The purpose of computing deductible depletion under the Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act is to leave in taxpayer's hands that portion of his costs attributable to capital exhausted in earning the income on which the tax is to be paid. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8488, §§ 4(3), 7, 8(g); Revenue Act 1936, §§ 23(m), 113(b) (1) (B), 114 (a), (b) (1, 3), 26 U.S.C.A. Int.Rev.Acts, pages 829, 865, 866, 867.

7. Taxation ⚷376(1)

Under the Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act providing for deduction of dividends declared from income included in the measure of the tax imposed upon the declaring corporation, a recipient of dividends is authorized to deduct dividends which have passed through the tax mill before their distribution by the declaring corporation, to avoid hardship to the recipient. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8488, § 8(h).

8. Taxation ⚷376(1)

Where California corporation producing its oil only in the state reported all its revenues as gross income for franchise tax purposes and was allowed a deduction for percentage depletion in excess of its depletion computed on the basis of cost, the entire dividend paid by such corporation was declared from "income included in the measure of the tax" within section 8(h) of the Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act and was deductible by the recipient corporation in computing its franchise tax. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8488, §§ 4(3), 7, 8(g); Revenue Act 1936, §§ 23(m), 113(b) (1) (B), 114(a), (b) (1, 3), 26 U.S.C.A. Int.Rev.Acts, pages 829, 865, 866, 867.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Action by Burton E. Green Investment Company against Charles J. McColgan, as Franchise Tax Commissioner of the State of California, to recover an additional assessment of franchise tax paid under protest for the year 1938. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed with direction.

Claude I. Parker, of Los Angeles, Bayley Kohlmeier, of San Francisco, and Adele Walsh Moran, of Glendale, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., H. H. Linney, Asst. Atty. Gen., and Adrian A. Kragen, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

The question for decision is whether a dividend paid by a California corporation, producing its oil only in this state, which reported all of its revenues as gross income for franchise tax purposes and which was allowed a deduction for percentage depletion for franchise tax purposes in excess of its depletion computed on the basis of cost, is deductible by the recipient corporation.

This action involved the obligation of the plaintiff under the Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act (Deering's General Laws 1937, Act 8488), hereinafter referred to as "the Act." Plaintiff, as a California Corporation, duly filed its franchise tax return for the year 1938. As required, the return was based upon plaintiff's income for 1937, the gross thereof being reported at $598,673.56. Of this amount plaintiff listed $465,000 as a dividend paid to it in 1937 by Belridge Oil Company, hereinafter referred to as Belridge. Plaintiff deducted this Belridge dividend from its return to the franchise tax commissioner in 1938, because it was the dividend of a domestic corporation, earned, declared, and paid in California. § 4, subd. (3). The remainder of its 1937 income was excluded as not proper items to be reported for assessment for franchise tax purposes. They are not involved in this discussion. Since none of its income was reported as the basis for computing its franchise tax, plaintiff paid a tax of $25, on its 1938 return.

In due season defendant served notices on plaintiff of his intention to assess additional taxes on its franchise for 1938. The aggregate of the two additional sums to be assessed was $6,373.28 and the interest charged on the two items was $934.38.[1]

Plaintiff protested the proposed assessments but paid them with interest under protest in October, 1940, after which this action followed to recover the $7,307.66 so assessed, charged, and collected by defendant. Inasmuch as plaintiff's exclusion from its 1938 return of the Belridge dividend brought on the additional assessments by defendant, in order fairly to appraise the factors of the controversy, we now expose to view the franchise tax return filed by Belridge in 1938 which also reported its income of 1937 as the basis for computing its franchise tax for 1938.

---

[1] To be exact the assessments occurred in this manner: On July 25, 1939, the commissioner issued his first notice of an additional assessment for 1938 in the amount of $5,558.21 on the ground that plaintiff had overstated its deduction under Section 8, subd. (h) for dividends received. Plaintiff protested; paid the Belridge's gross income for 1937 was reported as $7,190,232.47 (all of which was from oil except $71,677.40) with deductions of $4,207.961.85 leaving a net income for franchise tax purposes of $2,982,270.62. Included among its deductions for 1937 was the sum of $1,760,242.27 for depletion claimed under Section 8 subd. g of the Act which authorizes a deduction for depletion at the rate of 27½ per cent of the gross income from oil and gas wells. Such percentage of depletion was allowed Belridge by defendant in computing its franchise tax for 1938. The depletion sustained by Belridge for the year computed on the basis of cost was only $74,901.03 which was $1,685,341.24 less than 27½ per cent of the gross income of Belridge for 1937. The Belridge return for 1938 for franchise tax purposes shows that this corporation deducted for depletion in 1937 the sum of $1,760,242.27, or 27½ per cent of its gross income for that year. Also it discloses that the franchise tax assessed to Belridge for the same year computed on the basis of a deduction of 27½ per cent of its gross income for depletion was paid by Belridge. This deduction by Belridge was apparently not an error but was computed as correct, for none of the numerous disbursements for federal income tax, federal excess profits tax, and franchise tax charges was taken as a deduction for franchise tax purposes. It declared and paid dividends that year in the amount of $2,400,000 out of which came the $465,000 dividend paid plaintiff.

It was stipulated that in computing the additional amount of franchise tax to be paid by plaintiff for 1938, defendant concluded that only 62.968 per cent of the Belridge dividend paid during 1937 had been included in the measure of the tax imposed by the Act on Belridge. In deriving this percentage the commissioner used two factors. Factor A resulted from deducting the Belridge franchise tax of 1937, to wit: $116,499.55 from its net income of the same year, namely, $2,982,270.62, leaving $2,865,771.07. Factor B resulted from adding to such net income for 1937 the portion of deduction for depletion ($1,685,341.24) allowable to Belridge for franchise tax purposes for 1937 by which the depletion allowed Belridge exceeds the depletion sustained computed on the cost basis. From the sum resulting from such addition, take the franchise tax expense of 1937, to wit: $116,499.55 leaving as factor B $4,551,112.31. By dividing factor A by factor B the commissioner obtained the percentage of dividends paid by Belridge, in 1937, which have been included in the measure of the tax imposed by the Act on Belridge. Such percentage was 62.968 which multiplied by $465,000 determined the portion of the Belridge dividend of 1937 included in the measure of the tax was $292,801.20. This product was determined by the commissioner to be deductible under Section 8(h). No attempt is made in the stipulation of facts to demonstrate the correctness of the calculation or of the percentage or of the formula.

Since plaintiff contends that the entire dividend was deductible for franchise tax purposes as having been declared by Belridge from income "included in the measure of the tax" imposed by the Act on Belridge it appears that the determination of plaintiff's liability for the additional taxes assessed and collected by defendant must be determined by a construction of the language of the Act.

Section 4a provides for a franchise tax to be fixed at a percentage of the total net income for the next preceding calendar year "according to or measured by such net income."

Section 4(3) requires that every corporation doing business within this state and not expressly exempted from taxation by the constitution shall annually pay, for the assessment, with $734.61 interest and filed claim for a refund. The claim having been disallowed, this action was filed. On November 18, 1941, a further notice of additional franchise taxes to be paid by plaintiff for 1938, in the sum of $815.07, and interest in the sum of $199.73, the same procedure having been exhausted, a supplemental complaint was filed for such sum with interest amounting in all to $1,014.84.

---

privilege of exercising its corporate franchise, "a tax according to or measured by its net income" to be computed at the rate of four per centum "upon the basis of its net income" for the next preceding year.

By section 7 "net income" is defined to be the gross income less deductions allowed. By Section 8 the allowable deductions are defined. Among the items listed as deductible is "depletion" which is treated in subdivision (g) as follows:

"Depletion. In the case of mines, oil and gas wells, other natural deposits and timber, a reasonable allowance for depletion and for depreciation of improvements according to the peculiar conditions in each instance, such reasonable allowance in all cases to be made under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner.

"Computation of depletion. In the case of leases the deduction shall be equitably apportioned between the lessor and the lessee.

"The basis upon which depletion is to be allowed in respect of any property and the amount of depletion allowable shall be as provided in sections 23(m), 113 and 114 of the said Revenue Act of 1936 [26 U.S.C.A. Int.Rev.Acts, pages 829, 859, 866], which are, for the purposes of this subdivision, hereby referred to and incorporated with the same force and effect as though fully set forth herein; provided, however, that the words 'with the approval of the secretary' in said sections shall be deemed omitted."

Section 114 of the Federal Revenue Act of 1936, incorporated into Section 8 subd. (g) is so far as applicable as follows:

"Section 114. Basis for Depreciation and Depletion.

"(a) Basis for depreciation. The basis upon which exhaustion, wear and tear, and obsolescence are to be allowed in respect of any property shall be the adjusted basis provided in section 113(b) for the purpose of determining the gain upon the sale or other disposition of such property.

"(b) Basis for depletion.

"(1) General rule. The basis upon which depletion is to be allowed in respect of any property shall be the adjusted basis provided in section 113(b) for the purpose of determining the gain upon the sale or other disposition of such property, except as provided in paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of this subsection.

* * * * *

"(3) Percentage depletion for oil and gas wells. In the case of oil and gas wells the allowance for depletion under section 23(m) shall be 27½ per centum of the gross income from the property during the taxable year, excluding from such gross income an amount equal to any rents or royalties paid or incurred by the taxpayer in respect of the property. Such allowance shall not exceed 50 per centum of the net income of the taxpayer (computed without allowance for depletion) from the property, except that in no case shall the depletion allowance under section 23 (m) be less than it would be if computed without reference to this paragraph."

* * * * *

Section 113(b) (1) (B) of Federal Revenue Act of 1936 is as follows:

"(B) In respect of any period since February 28, 1913, for exhaustion, wear and tear, obsolescence, amortization, and depletion, to the extent allowed (but not less than the amount allowable) under this Act or prior income tax laws. Where for any taxable year prior to the taxable year 1932 the depletion allowance was based on discovery value or a percentage of income, then the adjustment for depletion for such year shall be based on the depletion which would have been allowable for such year if computed without reference to discovery value or a percentage of income".

Article 113(b)-1 of Federal Regulations 94 is as follows: "The deduction by which the cost or other basis is to be decreased shall include deductions allowed under section 114(b) (2), (3), and (4) of the Revenue Act of 1932, the Revenue Act of 1934, and the Revenue Act of 1936, for the taxable year 1932 and subsequent taxable years, * * *."

Subdivision (h) of section 8 provides for the deduction of dividends received during the income year from a corporation doing business in this state "declared from income which has been included in the measure of the tax imposed by this act upon the bank or corporation declaring the dividends."

From these sections we are to determine whether the Belridge dividend of $465,000 received by plaintiff was declared from income which had "been included in the measure of the tax" imposed by the Act upon Belridge (§ 8 subd. (h). Defendant's position is that because the 27½ per cent of the gross income from the oil wells operated by Belridge exceeded the depletion deduction based upon actual cost, the excess of the deduction allowed over actual cost depletion is not a part of income which had been included in the measure of the tax imposed, within the meaning of section 8(h). Plaintiff maintains that it should deduct the entire dividend because it was declared from income which had been "included in the measure of the tax." Defendant refers us to no provision in the Act providing that if depletion based on cost is a lesser amount than depletion computed at 27½ per cent of gross income, the lesser figure must be used in the measure of the tax. If the declaring corporation properly deducted depletion at 27½ per cent of the gross then any dividends paid out of the net income after such deduction are declared from income which had been "included in the measure of the tax" and are properly deductible by the recipient corporation. If it were true that net income is the "measure of the tax," then never could a recipient corporation deduct its dividend from a domestic corporation earning its income from a California oil pool. Under such construction the question of deduction for depletion becomes immaterial.

[1] The word "income" is used in the Act in only two senses, to wit: gross income, and net income. Both phrases are used in the sections above quoted and in sections 6 and 7 where both are defined. In numerous sections of the Act one may find the phrase "a tax according to or measured by its net income." Section 4(3) provides that "every corporation * * * shall annually pay to the State * * * a tax according to or measured by its net income." The term "net income" (subdivisions 1 and 3 of section 4, Act 8488) was used to specify the sum which should constitute the basis for the calculation of the franchise tax. It does not constitute the "measure of the tax." The income included in the measure of the tax is all income. In order to measure the tax all deductions allowable under the Act including 27½ per cent of the gross income are taken. Following this rule then any dividend paid from net income derived thereby would be a dividend paid out of income included in the measure of the tax. As such it is exempt from franchise tax in the hands of the recipient corporation.

[2] If the total Belridge income for 1937 was included in its gross income for franchise tax purposes and if out of its earnings of 1937 that corporation paid the dividend in question to plaintiff out of profits earned in that year, it must follow that the entire dividend so paid to plaintiff was declared from income which had been included in the measure of the tax. If it was, then it was deductible in full. The very purpose of Section 8 subd. h is to avoid double taxation and thereby prevent the destruction of capital assets. While it aims to tax all income received as dividends (except those exempted by law) which have not been taxed while in the treasury of the dividend payor, at the same time it purposes to avoid the inclusion of the same income in the measure of the tax to be paid by two or more different taxpayers. If the same dividend is included in the measure of the tax paid by two taxpayers successively under the Franchise Tax Act, the result is multiple taxation. It was to avoid such injustice that the Tax Commission reported to the governor on March 5, 1929, the proposed constitutional amendment "to enable the legislature to extend special treatment to dividends received from a corporation which has already paid the tax with the object of avoiding double taxation." California State Printing Office Publication No. 63725, p. 278.

Section 8 subd. (h) was first enacted in 1929. It then provided for the deductibility of dividends received during the taxable year from income arising out of business done in this state. This was construed to mean that it did not require dividends to arise out of business done in this state by the corporation which paid the dividends. Corporation of America v. Johnson, 7 Cal. 2d 295, 60 P.2d 417. Such construction allowed a deduction where the corporation paying the dividend was not a California corporation and did no business in this state but merely owned stock in corporations operating in California from which it received income. The section was first amended in 1933 so that only those dividends were deductible which were received during the taxable year from a corporation actually doing business in California declared from income arising out of business done in this state. The effect of this amendment was to make the deduction not available to any corporation not doing business within California. It was designed to tax all dividend payments made out of income earned in California which had not been subjected to California taxation in the hands of the declaring corporation. Commenting upon the 1933 amendment Professor Traynor wrote that the 1933 amendment "permits the deduction of dividends from corporations taxable under the Act * * *. It prevents the deduction of dividends from corporations * * * not taxable under the state constitution, in keeping with the purpose of the amended Act to allow only deductions necessary to avoid double taxation. * * *" 23 Calif. Law Review, 65.

The aim of the legislature was not to change the meaning of the section but merely to emphasize its intention to avoid double taxation. The 1937 amendment of section 8 subd. (h) was not designed to restrict the dividend deduction solely to net income. Such intention would have been stated in language to express such purpose. Therefore the 1937 amendment, which controls in this case, was not intended to alter its meaning as it was expressed in 1933.

Further proof of the legislative intention is to be found in Section 9 subd. (d) which was also enacted in 1937 when the phrase "included in the measure of the tax" first appeared in section 8 subd. (h). Section 9 subd. (d) reads as follows:

"Section 9. In computing net income no deduction shall be allowed for: * * *

"(d) Any amount otherwise allowable as a deduction which is allocable to one or more classes of income not included in the measure of the tax imposed by this act. * * *"

[3, 4] The language there used refers to income which is excluded from the computation of the franchise tax. That section was designed to prevent corporations from deducting amounts properly allocable to income but not subject to taxation under the Act. The language of Section 9 subd. (d) leaves no doubt that "income" is used in the sense of gross income not subject to the franchise tax. "Net income" could not have been in the mind of the legislature in the phrase, "allocable to * * * income not included in the measure of the tax imposed * * *." Deductions are not allocable to net income. A deduction expires the moment it is subtracted from the gross income. Throughout the act we are constantly reminded that some deductions are allocable to certain gross incomes. In view of the use of the word income in Section 9 subd. (d) in the sense of gross income we are convinced that it has the same significance in Section 8 subd. (h). The legislature could not have intended to use a significant word in two different senses in the same statute. Ransome-Crummey Company v. Woodhams, 29 Cal. App. 356, 156 P. 62; Coleman v. Oakland, 110 Cal.App. 715, 295 P. 59.

[5] Since the gross income and specified deductions are the factors included in arriving at the net income, the conclusion is unavoidable that it is gross income that is included in the measure of the tax.

[6] It is a significant observation that the sovereignty does not by any method of taxation seek to tax the capital of any income-producing business. It is because of this principle of preserving capital intact that deductions are allowed for depletion and depreciation. The one is designed to avoid taxation upon the exhaustion of a natural resource; the other to avoid exhaustion of property used in business.

[7] Whatever method of computing depletion be followed, under any system, the purpose is to leave in the hands of the taxpayer unappropriated that portion of the cost attributable to the amount of capital exhausted in earning the income on which any variety of tax is to be paid for the particular taxable year. In view of the extreme difficulty of deriving a precise formula whereby mineral resources will be exhausted it was obviously determined that depletion based upon a percentage of the gross income from the mineral or oil deposit most closely approximates the actual physical exhaustion. Such was evidently in the mind of Congress in enacting section 114 of the Revenue Act of 1936 whereby it was provided that the exhaustion of capital should be allocated to those years in which it was actually sustained by the coordination of income received from the property within the taxable year. From the Federal Revenue Act and our own Franchise Tax Act it appears that percentage depletion is not a dole to mine and oil operators. It is found to be a valuable factor in computing the current income of the taxpayer and is deducted from the gross income and must be taken into account in order to determine the taxpayer's basis for gain or loss on a sale or exchange of the property and to compute future cost depletion. If it represents a positive exhaustion of the capital it should be deducted by the owner of the property as a method of avoiding the exhaustion of his capital. If it is properly deducted in computing the oil operator's income for dividend purposes it should not thereafter be charged to the recipient corporation in computing his income for franchise tax purposes. To avoid such a hardship the recipient is authorized to deduct the dividend which has passed through the tax mill before its distribution by the declaring corporation. Plaintiff was entitled to deduct the dividend because it had been paid by a domestic corporation out of income which had been included in the measure of the franchise tax assessed against such domestic corporation.

Defendant maintains that the Belridge dividend is not deductible in full by plaintiff because it represents Belridge income which had been computed on a basis which was in excess of depletion computed on the basis of cost. Not only does the Act make no provision for computing depletion on the basis of cost but by the very federal statute incorporated into the Act it is specifically provided that 27½ per centum of the gross income shall be allowed for depletion.

Finally, the defense is based upon the fallacious concepts (1) that a portion of the Belridge dividend was paid from an untaxed source and (2) that it was declared from franchise tax net income and from the excess of the statutory percentage depletion over cost depletion. That such are erroneous deductions must be clear to the impartial student after a study of the Act and a consideration of its design. The "net income" referred to in the Act serves no function except that of comprising a factor in the formula whereby to compute the amount of the franchise tax. If used in the sense of a fund for dividends, it is at once seen that it has no relation to the corporation's actual earnings. Inasmuch as the excess of the percentage depletion over cost depletion had no effect upon the declaration of dividends, the Belridge dividend of $465,000 was not declared out of such excess. Whether the amount of net income for the purpose of computing the franchise tax is increased or decreased by any adjustment which does not at the same time proportionately enlarge or diminish profits, it will not affect either the declaration of a dividend or the amount thereof. The "excess" of statutory depletion allowance does not augment the fund available for dividends. Such allowance is for the purpose of preventing a depletion of capital. If it should unwisely be distributed along with the net earnings in the form of dividends, the capital investment of the corporation would ultimately have all been paid out to the shareholders. But if it is kept intact as a reserve for depletion it performs its function as does any other reserve set aside for the purpose of perpetuating the capital assets. Since gross income is the original source of all dividends and since all of the Belridge income was reported as gross income, all of its dividends were from a fund which had been flailed by the tax master which fund was itself the measure of the tax.

[8] For these reasons we conclude that the dividend paid plaintiff by Belridge was a deductible item in computing plaintiff's franchise tax in 1938; that a percentage depletion deduction was proper rather than a depletion deduction based upon cost.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed that the judgment be and it is hereby reversed and the court below is directed to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff as prayed.

McCOMB, J., concurs.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 189

Ex parte WHITLATCH.

Cr. No. 1828.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 9, 1943.

1. Criminal law 🔑304(2)

Court takes judicial notice that it was dark and moon was not shining at a designated time and place on a specified date.

2. Automobiles 🔑344

Under 1941 amendment to section of Vehicle Code dealing with negligent homicide, something more than ordinary negligence is required to constitute the offense. Vehicle Code, § 500, St.1941, p. 1414.

3. Automobiles 🔑344

Language used in amendment to section of Vehicle Code dealing with negligent homicide should be interpreted in accordance with definitions given by courts to similar terms, if such definitions may reasonably be said to fit the particular words used. Vehicle Code, § 500, St.1941, p. 1414.

4. Automobiles ⚷181(1)

"Willful misconduct" within meaning of section of Vehicle Code dealing with civil liability of motorists for injuries to guest implies, at least, intentional doing of something either with knowledge that serious injury is probable result or intentional doing of an act with wanton and reckless disregard of its possible result. Vehicle Code, § 403, St.1935, p. 154.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Willful Misconduct".

5. Negligence ⚷11

Actor's conduct is in "reckless disregard of safety of another" if he intentionally does an act or fails to do an act which it is his duty to the other to do, knowing or having reason to know of facts which would lead a reasonable man to realize that such conduct not only creates unreasonable risk of bodily harm to the other, but also involves a high degree of probability that substantial harm will result to him.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Reckless Disregard of Safety of Others".

6. Criminal law ⚷238

Mere inferences that accused was driving automobile at night at excessive speed and must have seen automobile stalled partly on pavement in time to avoid collision in face of presumptions that accused took ordinary care of his own affairs, obeyed the law, and was innocent of crime, did not warrant conclusion that accused was operating his automobile with "reckless disregard" or "willful indifference to safety of others" so as to afford "probable cause" for holding him to answer to charge of negligent homicide. Vehicle Code § 500, St.1941, p. 1414; Code Civ. Proc. § 1963.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Probable Cause" and "Willful Indifference to Safety of Others".

7. Habeas corpus ⚷21

One committed on a criminal charge without reasonable or probable cause for holding him to answer thereto is entitled to discharge on habeas corpus.

Original proceeding in the matter of the application of Gerald Whitlatch for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain release from custody under a commitment holding him to answer on a charge of negligent homicide.

Petitioner discharged.

Wallace Shepherd, of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., T. G. Negrich, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Charles E. Johnson, Dist. Atty., of Yreka, for respondent.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

Petitioner was charged in the Justice's Court of Yreka Township, County of Siskiyou, with the crime of negligent homicide, in that he did "wilfully, unlawfully and feloniously drive a motor vehicle with reckless disregard and wilful indifference to the safety of others then and there injuring one Orville H. Sutter, who dies as a proximate result of said injuries." On hearing before the Justice of the Peace sitting as a committing magistrate, but three witnesses were called. Walter N. Wise testified that about 7:45 in the evening of December 9, 1942, he was proceeding north on Highway 97 near a place called Deer Mountain when he was "flagged down" by Sutter, whose car was standing on the west side of the highway, about half on and half off the pavement, headed south; that the highway was dry, though there was snow on the sides, and that it was light enough to see objects in the road. He at first said that the moon was shining, but on cross-examination could not recall whether this was true or not. He stopped his truck, a gasoline transport, on the opposite side of the highway, about 100 yards after he had passed Sutter's car, and stated that after he got out of his truck he could see the tail light burning on Sutter's car. He said that he went to Sutter's car, and while he and Sutter were standing in the road beside same, and he was examining the mechanism under the hood, he was struck and rendered temporarily unconscious; that he heard no car coming and that he could not recall that any car had passed on the highway during the time that he was there before the accident, a period of about ten minutes. When he recovered consciousness Whitlatch was assisting him to his feet, Sutter was lying in the highway, and Sutter's car was sitting crosswise, with the end off the highway.

The second witness called was a physician who testified to the injuries sustained by Wise and Sutter, and stated that the latter died of his injuries on December 10th.

The third witness was G. B. Daley, a captain of the California Highway Patrol, who was called to the scene of the accident. He testified that he found the Sutter car standing with the front half off the pavement, and the back half on; that defendant's car was near the right-of-way fence on the east or opposite side of the highway, with the front end badly damaged. It was approximately 100 feet east of the center line of the pavement, there were skid marks on the highway from the rear of Sutter's car, and from the point where they first appeared to the point where defendant's car came to rest was a distance of 168 feet; that the Sutter car had been struck in and to the left of the center of the rear, the body of same being driven forward and the frame bent. The defendant's car had the grilling on the radiator broken and bent, its headlights broken, its fenders torn loose and the front axle bent. This witness also testified that as he was proceeding to the scene of the accident he passed a car in which Whitlatch was riding and that the latter stated to him that he had had an accident and had hit a man and thought he was killed. It was admitted that no flares or warning signals were put out by either Sutter or Wise.

The Justice of the Peace, after hearing the foregoing testimony, made his order holding the said defendant to answer, his bail being fixed in the sum of $2,500.

Having been committed to the custody of the sheriff, Whitlatch petitioned this court for a writ of habeas corpus, contending that his imprisonment and detention by the sheriff were unlawful, that his commitment had been made without reasonable or probable cause, and that the evidence failed to show the commission of a criminal offense. The writ having issued, the sheriff answered denying the allegations of the petition, and attaching to his answer a transcript of the proceedings in the Justice's Court.

Section 500 of the Vehicle Code, as amended in 1941, St.1941, p. 1414, and in force at the time of the accident in this case, provides: "When the death of any person ensues within one year as the proximate result of injuries caused by the driving of any vehicle with reckless disregard of, or wilful indifference to, the safety of others, the person so operating such vehicle shall be guilty of negligent homicide, a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year or in the State prison for not more than three years."

The question in this case is, then, whether the evidence adduced before the committing magistrate is sufficient to show reasonable grounds for concluding that Sutter's death was the proximate result of the driving of a vehicle by defendant "with reckless disregard of, or wilful indifference to the safety of others."

[1] Respondent, in support of the action of the committing magistrate, says in his brief that a fair and reasonable inference to be drawn from the circumstantial evidence and the physical facts presented, is that the automobile driven by the defendant was traveling at an excessive high rate of speed when it collided with the rear end of the decedent's automobile that was stalled upon and partly obstructing the right lane of the roadway ahead of defendant's automobile; that the evidence shows that this obstruction was in plain view of a person traveling this highway at this point at least three hundred yards each way from the point of collision and that the tail light on the decedent's automobile, from the evidence adduced, was plainly visible at least three hundred feet, if not more, in the direction from which the defendant was proceeding with his automobile; and that seeing this obstruction in the roadway, as it must be inferred and presumed that he saw it, he must have known that this obstruction existed in ample time to slacken his speed and bring his automobile under control to avoid striking the obstruction, and that it must have been apparent to him that if he struck the obstruction, he would endanger the life of anyone in or near the automobile that was partly obstructing the highway. From the foregoing it is obvious that respondent contends that it was proper to hold defendant to answer on inferences alone, to wit, an inference that defendant was traveling at an excessive rate of speed, an inference that Sutter's car was visible at least three hundred yards from the point of collision, an inference that the tail light on Sutter's car was plainly visible at least three hundred feet away, an inference that defendant saw the obstruction in ample time to avoid it, and an inference that he wilfully disregarded or was wilfully indifferent to the safety of persons who might be in or near said car. However, it was not shown that Sutter's car was in plain view of a person traveling the highway at this point at least three hundred yards each way from the point of collision. Respondent apparently relies upon the following questions and answers during the examination of Wise:

"Q. You were traveling north? A. I was going north and he was going south.

"Q. What part of the mountain was this? A. Well, just as near as I can explain, it was just about what you could say was the summit.

"Q. On the top there? A. Yes.

"Q. On the top there, is there quite a long distance there? A. Yes, there is. I would say a person could see 300 yards either way."

This is not evidence as to the visibility the night of the accident, and there is no other evidence from which it could be deduced that there was a visibility in either direction of three hundred yards. Wise did testify that when he got out of his truck about 100 yards from Sutter's car, he could see the tail light of same; but he was walking toward it with Sutter after he had passed the Sutter car and been flagged down. The time was 7:45 p. m. and the date was December 9th. That it was after dark and that there was no moon are facts of which we take judicial notice. That there was little traffic appears from Wise's testimony; and that Sutter's car was partly on the highway in defendant's lane of travel, and Sutter and Wise were both beside it in the traffic lane is conceded. There was no testimony as to the rate of speed at which defendant was traveling, and that he was "traveling at an excessive rate of speed" is merely deduced from the location of his car after the collision and the condition of both cars.

[2-5] As to what constitutes driving a vehicle with reckless disregard of or wilful indifference to the safety of others, within the language of section 500 of the Vehicle Code, the Supreme Court said, in People v. Young, 20 Cal.2d 832, 129 P.2d 353, 356, that the amendment of the said section in 1941 shows that the legislature intended that something more than ordinary negligence is required to constitute the offense; that the language used in the amendment should be interpreted in accordance with the definitions given by the courts to similar terms; and that therefore the construction put upon like words used in cases dealing with the liability of a host for injury to his guest, under section 403 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 154, is applicable. It cited and quoted from Howard v. Howard, 132 Cal.App. 124, 129, 22 P.2d 279, to the effect that: "But willful misconduct as used in this statute means neither the sort of misconduct involved in any negligence nor the mere intent to do the act which constitutes negligence. Willful misconduct implies at least the intentional doing of something either with a knowledge that serious injury is a probable (as distinguished from a possible) result, or the intentional doing of an act with a wanton and reckless disregard of its possible result."

It also said (20 Cal.2d at page 837, 129 P.2d at page 356): "'The actor's conduct is in reckless disregard of the safety of another if he intentionally does an act or fails to do an act which it is his duty to the other to do, knowing or having reason to know of facts which would lead a reasonable man to realize that the actor's conduct not only creates an unreasonable risk of bodily harm to the other but also involves a high degree of probability that substantial harm will result to him.' Restatement, Torts, § 500. There may have been instances in which the phrase 'reckless disregard for the safety of others' has been considered as conduct less reprehensible than that described in the above quotation, but it must be remembered that we are here interpreting a criminal statute carrying a severe penalty, and thus it is reasonable to suppose that the Legislature was concerned with conduct which was at least quasi criminal in character."

It then went on to say that speed alone or inattention to the roadway alone does not constitute wilful misconduct (citing Stacey v. Hayes, 31 Cal.App.2d 422, 88 P.2d 165); that colliding with a car at an intersection while traveling sixty miles an hour is not wilful misconduct (citing McCann v. Hoffman, 9 Cal.2d 279, 70 P. 2d 909); and it was concluded that, where defendant was driving an automobile about twenty-five or thirty miles an hour behind a street car, and did not stop at the rear of same as it slowed down to stop, as required by section 571 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 189, but proceeded to pass the stopped car and struck decedent who had alighted from the front door of the street car, the evidence was insufficient to sustain a conviction under section 500 of the Vehicle Code; that the negligence of defendant did not constitute reckless disregard of or wilful indifference to the safety of others.

In People v. Montes, 56 Cal.App.2d 30, 131 P.2d 581, where defendant drove through a stop sign at about thirty-five miles per hour and collided with another car, killing the driver thereof, and where a witness saw the cars when they were 250 or 300 feet away from him, showing that the view of the intersection was unobstructed for that distance, the court said that the evidence showed that defendant was negligent but that the circumstances under which such negligence occurred were not such that they amounted to recklessly ignoring the safety of others by intentionally doing acts with wanton and reckless disregard of their possible result; and that the circumstances were not such that they amounted to an intentional lack of regard concerning the safety of others by intentionally doing something with knowledge that serious injury was a probable result.

In Stacey v. Hayes, 31 Cal.App.2d 422, 88 P.2d 165, cited in the Young case, defendant drove his car some 21 inches over the center line of the highway while crossing a curved portion of a bridge, and collided with an oncoming car, though he had been warned by his guest passenger that he was on the wrong side of the highway. The court, holding that wilful misconduct was not shown, said at page 426 of 31 Cal.App.2d, at page 167 of 88 P.2d: "In order to support the conclusion of wilful misconduct the quoted finding must affirmatively show that defendant intentionally did something in the operation of his motor vehicle which he should not have done, or intentionally failed to do something he should have done, under circumstances disclosing either an express knowledge on his part or a knowledge to be implied from the facts and imputed to him under the surrounding circumstances, that injury to his guest would be a probable (not a possible) result. Though there need be no actual conscious intent to injure the guest, the act done or the omission made must be intentional."

[6] The evidence here adduced does not affirmatively show that petitioner intentionally did something in the operation of his car which he should not have done, or intentionally failed to do something he should have done. Inferences alone are indulged in support of the finding of the committing magistrate that "the offense of negligent homicide has been committed and that there is sufficient cause to believe" the defendant guilty thereof. As opposed to such inferences are the presumptions that defendant took ordinary care of his own affairs, that he obeyed the law and that he is innocent of crime. Sec. 1963, C.C.P.

[7] We conclude that, petitioner having been committed on a criminal charge without reasonable or probable cause, he should be discharged; and it is so ordered.

PEEK and THOMPSON, JJ., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 196

PEOPLE v. MORALES.

Cr. No. 556.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.
Aug. 9, 1943.

1. Homicide 🔑250

Evidence supported conviction of manslaughter based on death of defendant's four year old granddaughter from a form of pneumonia which was directly caused by defendant's treatment of the little girl and a blow defendant had inflicted upon her.

2. Criminal law 🔑1174(6)

Where it did not appear that allowing jury to take three exhibits into jury room without having made any request for them in any way prejudiced the defendant, the error, if any, in permitting such occurrence did not justify a reversal.

3. Criminal law ⚷1186(4)

A mere technical violation of defendant's right to be present at all stages of trial is not necessarily ground for reversing a judgment of conviction. Pen.Code, §§ 1043, 1181; Const. art. 6, § 4½.

4. Criminal law ⚷1186(4)

In determining whether a violation of defendant's right to be present at all stages of his trial necessitates a reversal of a judgment of conviction, the determining question is whether any prejudice to defendant's substantial rights appears. Pen.Code, §§ 1043, 1181; Const. art. 6, § 4½.

5. Criminal law ⚷1166½(1)

The inadvertent re-reading of instructions to jury in absence of defendant did not entitle defendant to a new trial on ground that her right to be present at all stages of trial were violated, where evidence was unusually convincing. Pen.Code §§ 1043, 1181.

6. Criminal law ⚷660

Where defendant's counsel learned of re-reading of the instructions to jury in absence of defendant before a verdict was reached but did not inform trial court of the irregularity until thereafter, defendant "waived" the right to have been present at the re-reading of the instructions, in absence of a showing of prejudice. Pen. Code, §§ 1043, 1181.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; T. R. Thomson, Judge.

Christina Morales was convicted of manslaughter, and she appeals.

Affirmed.

Edmond A. Chevalier and Lester N. Gonser, both of Fresno, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Eugene M. Elson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

The defendant was charged with the crime of manslaughter in connection with the death of her four-year old granddaughter. A jury found her guilty and she appeals from the judgment and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

[1] It is first contended that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict. The story disclosed by the testimony in this case is a pathetic one and it would serve no useful purpose to set forth any of the details here. A very general reference to some of the facts brought out in the evidence will be sufficient. The little girl had been living with the appellant for some months, having been abandoned by her father and mother. Apparently, the appellant resented the presence of the child and certain extra work and attention required by the child, and it rather clearly appears that she developed a dislike for the little girl. The testimony of a number of witnesses shows a continued course of neglect, exposure and abuse over a period of more than three months preceding the death of the child. This included not only depriving the child of proper food and exposing her to the elements in very cold weather, but also repeated and frequent whippings or beatings administered in a ruthless and brutal manner. The autopsy surgeon testified that the body of the little girl appeared to be undernourished, that both of the eyes had been blacked, that there were a number of abrasions and contusions on the arms and legs, and that there was an injury to the forehead which he thought had been caused by a single blow. He further testified that the cause of death was lobar pneumonia, that previous exposure and treatment had probably contributed to this but that the head injury "is the thing that precipitated it." There is evidence which justifies the inference that this child had been beaten by the appellant during the night preceding her death. While there is some conflict the evidence, as a whole, clearly indicates that the death of this child resulted from a form of pneumonia which was directly caused by the appellant's treatment of the little girl and a blow she had inflicted upon her. A reading of the record compels the conclusion that the evidence is sufficient and ample to support the judgment.

[2] Some contention is made that prejudicial error appears in that the jury was allowed to take three exhibits into the jury room without having made any request for them. In its instructions the court told the jury that it was entitled to take the exhibits if it so desired. While no such request was made the clerk of the court handed to the jury three exhibits, being two photographs of the dead body of the little girl and a leather strap with which, according to the evidence, the appellant had sometimes whipped the girl. Before the jury brought in its verdict counsel for the appellant called the matter to the attention of the court and the court offered to have the only remaining exhibit, which was a blackboard used during the trial, sent in so that all of the exhibits would be before the jury. Counsel for the appellant replied that it was unnecessary to do this. It is now contended that although the jury was entitled to take these exhibits it was error to permit this to be done without a specific request therefor from the jury. Assuming, but not holding, that any error appears, no prejudice is shown and any possible error in this regard would not justify a reversal.

The main point raised is that the appellant is entitled to a new trial under sections 1043 and 1181 of the Penal Code because the instructions were re-read to the jury in her absence. Insofar as material here section 1043 provides that "The defendant must be personally present at the trial", and section 1181 provides that when a trial has been had in defendant's absence "the court may * * * grant a new trial." It appears from the record that the instructions were first read to the jury in the presence of the appellant and her counsel. When the jury went out the appellant was removed to the jail. During its deliberation the jury made a request that the court re-read to it some of the instructions. The jury was returned to the court room and all of the instructions were again read to it, word for word, as they had been read in the first instance. No one noticed or thought of the fact that the appellant was not present. After the jury had returned to the jury room, and before they had reached a verdict, counsel for the appellant discovered that she had been absent from the court room during the second reading of the instructions, but this fact was not called to the attention of the court until after the jury had returned its verdict and had been discharged. The matter was presented on the motion for a new trial.

In People v. Soto, 65 Cal. 621, 4 P. 664, 665, a similar thing occurred. However, in that case, the irregularity was discovered before the jury had reached a verdict and the instructions were again read to the jury in the presence of the defendant and the jury was further instructed to disregard what had taken place in the defendant's absence. In holding that any error had been cured the court there said: "It is manifest no injury could have been done defendant by reason of that which occurred while he was absent." In People v. Guareno, 22 Cal.App.2d 82, 70 P.2d 504, the defendant was seized with a coughing spell while the instructions were being read to the jury. He was permitted to go into the judge's chambers, which adjoined the court room, and thence into a lavatory. He returned to the court room within a few minutes and it was contended on appeal that his temporary absence required the granting of a new trial. The court referred to the fact that it did not affirmatively appear that the defendant was not within hearing at all times and then pointed out that it was unnecessary for the defendant to except to any of the instructions being given in order to protect his rights, and that the defendant might waive his statutory right to be present during the time in question. It was then held that no prejudice appeared and the judgment and order denying a new trial were affirmed. In People v. White, 20 Cal.App. 156, 128 P. 417, the jury was taken to view the premises while the defendant remained in the court room. This point was raised on appeal. It was there stated that in viewing the premises the jury was receiving evidence, that the defendant had a right to be present which, if demanded, could not be denied him without committing a serious irregularity, that this right is one which could be waived, and that if it could fairly be said that he had waived this right he would not be heard to complain that he had wrongfully been deprived of it. Since no objection had been made either by the defendant or by his counsel who knew of the situation, and since no prejudice appeared, it was held that the right had been waived and the judgment was affirmed. In People v. La Munion, 64 Mich. 709, 31 N.W. 593, 596, a part of the instructions were re-read to the jury in the absence of the defendant and of his counsel. The court there said: "We are unable to see in what manner the (defendant) could have been prejudiced by these proceedings." In Hopt v. People of Territory of Utah, 110 U.S. 574, 4 S.Ct. 202, 204, 28 L.Ed. 262, the requirement that a defendant "be personally present at the trial" is defined as requiring his presence "at every stage of the trial when his substantial rights may be affected by the proceedings against him."

[3, 4] While, unquestionably, such a defendant has a right to be present at all stages of his trial, the principle running through the cases just cited is that a mere technical violation of that right is not necessarily ground for reversing a judgment of conviction. In each case the determining question has been whether or not any prejudice to the substantial rights of the defendant appears. In two of the cases it was held that this right might be waived by the defendant under the circumstances and in one, People v. White, supra, it was held that the defendant's attorney could, and did, waive the right by failing to make any demand or objection when he knew that the defendant was not present.

These principles are especially applicable in view of the provision of section 4½ of article VI of our Constitution that a judgment shall not be set aside "for any error as to any matter of procedure", unless it appears that the error has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

[5, 6] Applying these rules here, we are unable to hold that there was any possible prejudice to this appellant and we are not of the opinion that any miscarriage of justice has resulted. Not only was the evidence of guilt unusually convincing in this case, but it is inconceivable that the presence of the appellant during the second reading of these instructions could have in any way or manner improved her position, or have had any practical effect upon her substantial rights or upon the verdict of the jury. It appears, without conflict, that this appellant did not understand a word of the English language and, so far as she is concerned, her presence could have contributed nothing other than a mere technical compliance with this rule of law. The instructions were re-read exactly as they had been read before and nothing occurred which had not already occurred in the presence of the appellant. The error was entirely inadvertent and no one, including appellant's counsel, thought of the fact that she was absent. Her counsel discovered this fact before a verdict was reached but preferred not to inform the court of the irregularity. In the absence of a showing of prejudice, at least, neither a defendant nor his counsel should be permitted to thus speculate on the action of a jury. The error could easily have been corrected had it been called to the court's attention after it was discovered and, by not disclosing it, counsel should be held to have waived it. In any event, no prejudice appears and the constitutional provision, to which we have referred, is applicable.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

MARKS and GRIFFIN, JJ., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 201

FONG BROS. v. GEIGER, Director of Health, et al.

Civ. No. 12374.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 11, 1943.

1. Mandamus ⟹164(1)

In mandamus, a party is not entitled as a matter of right to answer after demurrer to petition is overruled, but court has discretion to allow an answer. Code Civ.Proc. § 472.

2. Mandamus ⟹164(1)

Where respondents answered after their demurrer to petition for writ of mandamus was overruled, denial of petitioner's motion to strike answer was equivalent to the granting permission to respondents to file answer. Code Civ.Proc. § 472.

3. Mandamus ⟹187(2)

Order granting permission to answer over after demurrer to mandamus petition has been overruled is always subject to review. Code Civ.Proc. § 472.

4. Mandamus ⟹168(3)

In mandamus to compel issuance of city license for distribution of fluid milk, if application for license could legally have been denied upon grounds other than those stated when application was denied, evidence of such grounds should be introduced in addition to proof of particular one upon which license was formerly refused.

5. Mandamus ⚿168(3)

Where city ordinance relating to licensing of fluid milk distributors required as prerequisite to issuance of a license an investigation of statements made in application and of sanitary facilities, in mandamus to compel issuance of license, to negative allegation that refusal to license petitioner was arbitrary and capricious, it was proper for licensing authorities to show such investigation and result thereof.

6. Mandamus ⚿168(4)

Where Chinese petitioner in mandamus to compel issuance of city fluid milk distributor's license produced no evidence of any prejudice against petitioner because of race or that permits were granted to Caucasians who conducted a milk business in an unsanitary manner or under a false label, assertion that license was refused in violation of petitioner's constitutional rights based upon prejudice could not be sustained.

7. Municipal corporations ⚿592(1)

Under statute providing that licenses issued under terms of Agricultural Code for milk industry are in addition to licenses or ordinances of counties and municipalities, San Francisco department of health was not limited to granting of permits for fluid milk distribution to producers handling fluid milk and holding distributors' permits issued by agricultural department. St.1941, pp. 3008, 3019, §§ 735.3(f), 737.5.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Francisco County; George W. Schonfeld, Judge.

Mandamus by Fong Bros., a copartnership, against Dr. J. C. Geiger, as Director of Health, Department of Health, City and County of San Francisco, and others to compel respondents to issue a permit for the distribution of fluid milk and fluid cream. From a judgment dismissing its petition, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Robert L. Levy, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Henry Heidelberg, Deputy City Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondent.

WARD, Justice.

An appeal by petitioner, a copartnership, from an order and judgment of the superior court dismissing its petition for a writ of mandate to compel respondents to issue a permit for the distribution of fluid milk and fluid cream under the provisions of section 486, Part II, Ch. V, Art. 9 of the Municipal Code of the City and County of San Francisco. This section provides that a permit must be obtained from the director of public health before there may be offered for sale, exposed for sale, sold or delivered for distribution, sale, use or consumption within the City and County of San Francisco, any milk, etc. In order to procure a permit the applicant must file a written application containing specified information. If the statements made therein are true, and it appears that the applicant does not intend to dispose of unwholesome milk as food for human beings, and that the handling is to be under sanitary conditions and in conformity with certain regulations, the permit must be issued.

The petition herein alleged that an application was filed in the manner prescribed by law for a permit to engage in the distribution of fluid milk and fluid cream, and that the application was refused; "That said refusal is and was arbitrary, capricious and based upon prejudice and bias in that petitioners herein are of Oriental extraction"; that petitioner has not been accorded equal rights under the law with others engaged in the same line of business, which "is an abridgement of constitutional rights"; that it has been engaged in delivering milk exclusively in the Chinatown district, and that respondents have caused the arrest of one of the members of the copartnership and have harassed petitioner.

An order for an alternative writ was made on the date the petition was filed and the alternative writ thereafter issued. A demurrer filed to the petition was overruled, and subsequently after several continuances the matter was heard on the order to show cause. Some time after the hearing an answer was filed which admitted and denied certain allegations of the petition, and alleged that "William Fong, one of the members of said partnership, was arrested on two different occasions, and further alleges that said petitioner, and particularly William Fong was convicted of the offense charged." The answer "further alleges that under the law and ordinances in existence in the City and County of San Francisco, and the State of California, respondent is without authority or right to grant a peddler's license as requested by petitioner, and further alleges that petitioner comes into this court of equity with unclean hands in this, that said petitioner has delivered milk in a falsely labeled truck, and has filled cans of milk from quart bottles, all of which is against the Agricultural Code of the State of California." Petitioner moved to strike the answer from the file, which motion was denied. The court found in accordance with respondents' contentions and entered judgment.

[1-3] The question of the propriety of filing the answer may be disposed of immediately. Petitioner contends that in a mandamus proceeding a party is not entitled as a matter of right to answer after demurrer to the petition is overruled. Homestake Mining Company v. Superior Court (Private Investors v. Homestake Min. Co.), 11 Cal.App.2d 488, 54 P.2d 535. The question is clarified by the following extracts from that opinion (pages 492, 493 of 11 Cal.App.2d, page 537 of 54 P.2d): "The position assumed by the petitioners here is that 'as a matter of right' they were entitled to answer over after their demurrer was overruled, and therefore, 'as a matter of right' they are entitled to a supersedeas. Petitioners are wrong in both instances. There is no absolute right to answer over in any civil case. Section 472 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: 'A demurrer is not waived by filing an answer at the same time; and when the demurrer to a complaint is overruled and there is no answer filed, the court may, upon such terms as may be just, allow an answer to be filed.'" "Section 472 of the Code, and section 67 of the Practice Act which preceded it, have been uniformly held to confer upon the trial court discretion to grant or deny leave to answer after a demurrer is overruled." It is clear that the emphasis should be placed on the words "as a matter of right" but in the present case the denial of the motion to strike the answer is the equivalent to permission that the answer be filed. The order granting permission is always subject to review, to be decided according to the particular circumstances of the case. In the Homestake decision, supra, 11 Cal.App.2d page 494, 54 P.2d page 537, the court said: "* * * the courts will always presume that another court acting within its jurisdiction has acted with judicial discretion. If the claim is made that such discretion has been abused, some showing must be made to rebut that presumption." In the present case it does not appear that the trial court abused its discretion.

The reason assigned for the refusal of the permit was that petitioner was conducting his business of distributing and delivering milk in a business district zone, whereas under the zoning laws of the City and County of San Francisco such business may be conducted only in a light industrial zone. Petitioner did not introduce evidence to the contrary, and this appeal might well be determined at this point except that other issues were raised by the petition—prejudice, etc.—upon which respondents proved that the milk was being distributed by petitioner in a truck falsely labeled; that containers had been refilled contrary to the provisions of the Agricultural Code of the State of California; that the milk was not processed or pasteurized at the place of business; and that on at least one occasion petitioner had been found guilty of violating section 486, supra. Evidence was introduced also that there are no proper facilities at petitioner's place of business for the washing and sterilization of cans and bottles. In short, it appears that in the conduct of the business petitioner had indulged in various unsanitary practices.

[4] The practice of acquainting an applicant with only one of the grounds upon which his application is denied is not to be commended, for the reason that he is left in ignorance of how to meet expected requirements. If the application, however, could legally have been denied upon grounds other than those stated in the "refusal," evidence of such grounds should be introduced in addition to proof of the particular one upon which the refusal was formally based. The present case illustrates the point. The applicant was refused a permit on the ground that its business was conducted in a specified zone. Petitioner might have obviated this disqualification but still might have continued to conduct his business in an unsanitary manner in violation of the provisions of a statute or ordinance or board ruling. An unqualified applicant should not be given the right to conduct a business in an unauthorized manner merely because the administrative body has designated an illegal ground for its refusal to issue a permit. In the present case the petitioner's claim that it was not accorded equal rights under the law with others engaged in the same business furnishes an additional reason for the introduction of the character of evidence above referred to. The evidence tended to show other grounds sufficient to justify the refusal, including that of unsanitary conditions.

[5] Section 486 requires an investigation of the statements in an application and of the sanitary facilities connected with the business. The issuance of the permit depends upon both factors. By way of negativing an allegation in the petition that respondents acted arbitrarily or capriciously, it was proper to show that the latter had made investigation, and to present the result thereof.

[6] Petitioner claims that the action of respondents is an abridgement of its constitutional right. There is a fundamental distinction between the facts in Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, 6 S.Ct. 1064, 30 L.Ed. 220, where a license to conduct a laundry was refused a Chinese and under similar circumstances given Caucasians, and those herein. In both cases there appears a lack of consent or approval by a duly constituted legal body. In the Yick Wo case there was no evidence that petitioner had not complied with all legal regulations as had Caucasians to whom permits were granted, except in the matter of operating without a license. In the present case, there is no evidence that a permit was ever granted a Caucasian conducting a milk business in an unsanitary manner or under a false label. Petitioner did not introduce any evidence that there was any prejudice against it because its members were of Oriental extraction.

[7] The final contention of petitioner is that under the definition of "distributor" in California Agricultural Code, Div. 4, Ch. 10, Art. 1, sec. 735.3, subd. (f), St. 1941 p. 3008, the authority of respondents is limited to the granting of permits to any one who is a producer handling fluid milk, etc., and who holds a distributor's permit issued by the Agricultural Department of the State of California. The licenses issued under the terms of the Agricultural Code for the milk industry "are in addition to any and all licenses * * * or any law or ordinance of any county or municipality of this State." Section 737. 5, St.1941, p. 3019.

The findings of fact are supported by the evidence and they in turn support the judgment, which is hereby affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 177

TAKASHI KATAOKA et al. v. MAY DEPARTMENT STORES CO. et al.

Civ. 13822.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.
Aug. 9, 1943.

Hearing Denied Oct. 7, 1943.

1. Trial 🔑178

The trial court, in passing on motion for directed verdict, has no power to weigh evidence, but must view it in light most favorable to party against whom direction is asked and accept every legitimate inference and presumption therefrom in his favor, and motion can be granted only when result of such consideration of evidence is determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict for such party.

2. Carriers 🔑238
Negligence 🔑32(4)

A minor child, not using escalator in department store as means of transportation before or at time of his injury by catching hand in escalator while his mother, who took child with her when she went to store on business errand, was talking to department manager, was not a "passenger" within rule requiring carrier to exercise highest degree of care toward passengers, but "business invitee", to whom store owner owed duty to use ordinary care to keep premises reasonably safe.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Business Invitee" and "Passenger".

3. Negligence 🔑4

"Ordinary care" is relative, and standard by which it is measured varies with circumstances.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Ordinary Care".

4. Negligence 🔑10

Care exercised by party for another's safety must be in proportion to danger to be avoided and consequences that may reasonably be anticipated as result of negligent conduct.

5. Negligence 🔑7, 85(2)

A child of immature years is expected to exercise only such care as pertains to childhood, and all persons dealing with such children are chargeable with knowledge of such fact and bound to exercise greater amount of caution than in dealing with adults.

6. Negligence ⇨32(4)

The rule that persons dealing with children of immature years are chargeable with knowledge that such children are expected to exercise only such care as pertains to childhood and bound to exercise greater caution than in dealing with adults must be given full effect as between operator of business and children whom he invites to come on his premises for business reasons.

7. Negligence ⇨23(1), 32(4)

In action against store owner for injuries to minor child catching hand in escalator after being taken to store by his mother on business errand, rule applicable in determining defendant's duty is not "attractive nuisance doctrine", but that requiring ordinary care to make premises safe for invitees, as qualified by rule that special caution is necessary where invitees are children, but such rule exacts of one inviting children on his premises no less caution than landowner, who knows that trespassing children are in habit of playing around his attractive nuisance, must exercise.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Attractive Nuisance Doctrine".

8. Negligence ⇨32(4)

One inviting children on his premises must take precautions dictated by ordinary care to protect them from injury by any instrumentality on premises which is likely to attract them and subject them to dangers which reasonably prudent person would anticipate.

9. Negligence ⇨136(16, 19, 24)

In action against store owner for injuries to minor child catching his hand in escalator, whether escalator was object naturally attractive to children, whether defendant in exercise of ordinary care should have known of such fact and anticipated accidents such as that which happened, and whether ordinary care required stationing of guard at escalator or other precautions, held for jury.

10. Negligence ⇨54

A floor manager of store department, wherein minor child sustained injuries by catching his hand in escalator, regarding which such manager had no responsibility except to stop and start it in case of accident, was not liable for such injuries on grounds of negligence in failing to exercise ordinary care to make premises safe for invitees and to protect invited children from injuries by instrumentality likely to attract them and subject them to dangers which reasonably prudent person would anticipate.

11. Negligence ⇨8

A store owner's department manager held not liable for injuries to customer's minor child, catching his hand in escalator, on grounds that manager was negligent in trying to extract hand after stopping escalator and in reversing it instead of calling mechanic to remove comb plate, which would have required 15 or 20 minutes, even if such reversal aggravated child's injuries.

12. Negligence ⇨121(3)

In action against store owner and department manager for injuries to minor child catching hand in escalator, "res ipsa loquitur" doctrine held inapplicable.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Ipsa Loquitur".

13. Negligence ⇨121(2)

A fundamental element of "res ipsa loquitur" doctrine is that thing causing injury be under defendant's management and control.

14. Negligence ⇨121(2)

The reason for "res ipsa loquitur" doctrine is that ordinarily injured person is not in position to know more than that he was injured by some unusual movement of instrumentality, whereas one who operates such instrumentality should know and be able to explain precise cause of accident.

15. Negligence ⇨121(2)

Where evidence affirmatively shows that operator or manager of instrumentality, by means of which injuries were inflicted, has no superior knowledge of, or is unable by exercise of reasonable care to secure information regarding, cause of accident, or establishes that plaintiff possesses all such knowledge or information reasonably accessible to operator, "res ipsa loquitur" doctrine is inapplicable.

16. Negligence ⇨89(2)

A wife's negligence in caring for children of herself and her husband is imputable to husband and a defense to action by him in community's behalf to recover damages for children's injuries to which such negligence contributed.

17. Negligence ⚿136(30)

In action against store owner and department manager for injuries to minor child catching his hand in escalator, whether plaintiff's mother was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to keep proper watch over plaintiff and prevent him from getting hand caught held for jury.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by Takashi Kataoka, a minor, by his guardian ad litem, Toki Kataoka, and Tsutomu Kataoka, minor plaintiff's father, against the May Department Stores Company and Jerry Goddard for personal injuries to minor plaintiff and the cost of medical, hospital, and nursing treatment. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal.

Judgment for defendant Goddard affirmed, and judgment for defendant company reversed and cause remanded for new trial as to such defendant.

For prior opinion, see, Cal.App., 139 P.2d 25.

Albert E. Coger, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Schell & Delamer, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, Justice pro tem.

This action is brought to recover damages for personal injuries suffered by plaintiff, Takashi Kataoka, who was, when he was injured, a boy four years of age. The first three counts of the complaint set forth, in varying forms, his cause of action to recover damages for his own injuries. In a fourth count, plaintiff Tsutomu Kataoka, who is the father of the other plaintiff, seeks recovery for liabilities he has incurred for medical, hospital and nursing treatment for his son. In the following opinion the word "plaintiff" will be used to designate the plaintiff Takashi Kataoka, unless otherwise indicated. Both plaintiffs appeal from a judgment against them entered after a directed verdict in favor of defendants.

The defendant corporation conducts a large department store in the city of Los Angeles. At the time plaintiff was injured this store had, upon its third floor, a department selling infants' and children's wear, for babies and for children between the ages of two and six. Plaintiff's mother went to this department to exchange a suit bought for another of her children, taking plaintiff with her. While she waited for and talked to the manager of this department (defendant Goddard) the plaintiff was walking around at a distance of about fifteen feet from her. In the store were a series of escalators for carrying the public from floor to floor, and the place where plaintiff was walking around on the third floor was quite near to the lower end of the escalator coming down from the fourth floor to the third floor. When plaintiff's mother started to talk to defendant Goddard she called plaintiff to come to her. He was then two or three feet from the escalator and she saw him come two or three feet toward her. After that she stood diagonally facing plaintiff and talked to Goddard two or three minutes without observing plaintiff. At the end of that time she heard plaintiff cry and she and Goddard rushed to him and found his right hand caught in the escalator.

This escalator had at its lower end, fastened to the floor where the moving steps disappeared under the floor, a device designated as a "comb plate," the purpose of which was, if some passenger did not lift his feet up and step off the escalator, to slide them gradually up on the plate. This comb plate had forty or fifty teeth 3½ inches long and 9/16 inch apart. Between the comb plate and the steps as they passed under it there was a space about ¼ inch deep. There was no guard or attendant stationed at this or any of the escalators at the time of the accident, although on busy days it was the custom to have such an attendant.

Plaintiff's hand was caught in the space between the comb plate and the steps passing under it. Goddard stopped the escalator, took hold of plaintiff's wrist and tried to pull his hand out, but was unable to do so. Then he got a key which was kept near by and reversed the escalator. When it started going in the opposite direction plaintiff's hand at once came out. Two fingers were mangled, crushed and cut off, so that now only short stumps are left.

No witness saw plaintiff just before his hand was caught and hence there is no direct testimony disclosing how it happened. The theory of plaintiff's counsel is that plaintiff was attracted to the escalator by its bright appearance and moving steps, went to it and in childish curiosity reached out his hand to investigate the steps and thus got caught. Confirmatory of this theory, there is testimony by plaintiff's mother that "he was very active and he was very much interested in everything, like a boy. He was always breaking it up and trying to look into the inside, and things like that. * * * he was very anxious to know everything that was around him." There is also testimony that the sidewalls of the escalator were of steel or chrome and the steps of steel. It had been installed only ten months to a year before the accident, so the jury might infer that each of these metals was still bright. A moving device like an escalator would attract the attention of most children of plaintiff's age, but especially of one with such an active curiosity as that shown by his mother's description of plaintiff. Defendants suggest other possible causes for the plaintiff's mishap, and contend that the theory advanced in behalf of plaintiff is based on pure speculation and conjecture, but we think the jury would have been warranted by reasonably certain inferences from the evidence in accepting plaintiff's theory.

[1] The question here for decision is whether, on the foregoing facts, and a few others which we shall mention as they become pertinent to our discussion, the court should have directed a verdict for defendants. The power of the court in passing upon such a motion is strictly limited. It has no power to weigh the evidence, but must view it in the light most favorable to the party against whom the direction is asked and accept every inference and presumption in his favor that may legitimately be drawn therefrom, and the motion can be granted only when, on such a consideration of the evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of that party if one were given. (Gish v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., (1939) 13 Cal.2d 570, 573, 90 P.2d 792; Newson v. Hawley, (1928) 205 Cal. 188, 190, 270 P. 364; Wiswell v. Shinners, (1941) 47 Cal.App.2d 156, 159, 163, 117 P.2d 677; Barty v. Collins, (1930) 109 Cal.App. 94, 96, 292 P. 979.)

[2] In answering the question above put as to the propriety of the directed verdict, we deal with the defendants separately, reaching a different answer for each of them. We take up first the case of the defendant corporation. Plaintiff contends that it was required to exercise the highest degree of care toward him, likening the escalator to an elevator and citing cases where operators of elevators and escalators were held to the exercise of such care toward their passengers. But while the rule of care which plaintiff invokes may bind carriers of passengers, in proper cases, both before and after the actual carriage, it does not extend to cases where the relation of carrier and passenger does not exist. Plaintiff here was not using the escalator as a means of transportation when he was injured, he had not previously done so and there is nothing to indicate that he or his mother intended to use it thereafter. The business which his mother was then transacting, and the activities of plaintiff himself, bore no relation to the matter of transportation. Plaintiff cannot be regarded as a passenger. He was, at the time in question, simply a business invitee of defendant corporation, and to him it owed the duty which exists in all such cases, that is, to use ordinary care to keep the premises reasonably safe for those so invited to go upon them. (Koppelman v. Ambassador Hotel Co., (1939) 35 Cal.App. 2d 537, 540, 96 P.2d 196; Tuttle v. Crawford, (1936) 8 Cal.2d 126, 130, 63 P.2d 1128.)

[3, 4] "The term 'ordinary care' is a relative one, and the standard by which it is to be measured varies * * * with the circumstances attending each particular case." (19 Cal.Jur. 579; Lolli v. Market St. Ry. Co., (1941) 43 Cal.App.2d 166, 168, 110 P.2d 436.) "Care must be in proportion to the danger to be avoided and the consequences that may reasonably be anticipated as the result of conduct, and the circumstances may be such that far greater care is exacted from one party to an action than from the other." (19 Cal. Jur. 579, 580; see also Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., (1925) 197 Cal. 82, 98, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027.)

One of the factors affecting the care to be exercised may be the presence of children on the scene. In this case the accident happened in the infants' and children's wear department of a large store. While there is no evidence of the number of children visiting that department, it is clear that children under the age of six years were invited to go there and that the defendant storekeeper should have expected their presence. Children of such an age ordinarily could not appreciate the danger of putting their fingers in or around moving machinery, but would be attracted by it, especially if it were bright, and would be likely to investigate with their fingers anything to which they were attracted.

[5, 6] "A child of immature years is expected to exercise only such care as pertains to childhood, and all persons dealing with such a child are chargeable with such knowledge. As a result, one dealing with children is bound to exercise a greater amount of caution than he would were he dealing with an adult." (Hernandez v. Murphy, (1941) 46 Cal.App.2d 201, 208, 115 P.2d 565.) Substantially the same rule was declared in Shannon v. Central-Gaither U. School Dist., (1933) 133 Cal.App. 124, 129, 23 P.2d 769; Brizzolari v. Market St. Ry. Co., (1935) 7 Cal.App.2d 246, 248, 46 P.2d 783; and Harrison v. Gamatero, (1942) 52 Cal.App.2d 178, 183, 184, 125 P.2d 904. In the Shannon case the court quoted with approval from 45 C.J. 702 the following: "* * * the fact that children cannot and do not ordinarily exercise the same degree of prudence and care for their own safety as adults imposes upon those by whose acts or omissions a child may be injured an obligation of exercising more vigilance and caution than might be sufficient with respect to an adult, and conduct which might reach the standard of ordinary care with respect to an adult might, in the case of a child, amount to negligence or even gross negligence." In Brizzolari v. Market St. Ry. Co., supra, the court stated the rule by quoting this passage from 19 Cal.Jur. 623: "As has been seen, a child of immature years is expected to exercise only such care and self-restraint as pertains to childhood. A reasonable person is expected to know this and to govern his actions accordingly, so that when a child liable to be injured cannot be expected to exercise the usual quantum of care, a greater amount of caution is necessary on the part of the one whose act might cause injury." This rule was applied to a variety of circumstances in the cases just cited. It is a general rule applicable in any case where negligence toward children is involved and must be given full effect as between the operator of a business and children whom he invites to come upon his premises for business reasons. (45 C.J. 838.)

This matter has been considered in several cases from other jurisdictions, in which not only were escalators in stores involved, but the facts were that small children had gotten their fingers caught in them, and it has been held that the proprietors of the stores might be held liable for negligence in not anticipating and guarding against such accidents, and that the question whether their failure in that respect did constitute negligence was one of fact for the jury. (Hillerbrand v. May Mercantile Co., (1909) 141 Mo.App. 122, 121 S.W. 326, 328; Graves v. May Dept. Stores Co., (Mo.App.1941) 153 S.W.2d 778, 783; Jablonski v. May Dept. Stores Co., (Mo.App. 1941) 153 S.W.2d 786; Reynolds v. May Dept. Stores Co., (8 Cir., April 8, 1942) 127 F.2d 396; Burdine's, Inc., v. McConnell, (1941) 146 Fla. 512, 1 So.2d 462.) In Hillerbrand v. May Mercantile Co., supra, the court said: "Proprietors of premises who invite children on them must use care to keep them reasonably safe, not omitting precautions against injury from childish impulses. * * * This doctrine is but one phase of the wider doctrine that an owner must keep his premises reasonably safe for the use of people whom he invites to come on them—an application of the general doctrine with special reference to the nature of children, and in accordance with the principle that what constitutes due care in a given instance depends on the degree of danger to be apprehended. [Citing cases.] Because children are more heedless and have less discretion and capacity to avoid danger than adults, more care must be exercised by others for their safety." Part of this language was quoted with approval in Graves v. May Dept. Stores Co., supra, where the court further said: "We think the evidence in the case at bar was sufficient to warrant the jury in saying that the moving escalator was such an instrumentality as was likely to attract a small child's curiosity and likely to cause it to put its hand upon the moving step at the point where the opening was located and justified a finding that it presented a condition of such a dangerous nature to children of tender age that a reasonably prudent person, exercising ordinary care, would have anticipated such danger to a child and guarded against it." The evidence there was not substantially different from that here, except that the injured child there was only 2½ years old. It was also held, we think correctly, in Hillerbrand v. May Mercantile Co., supra, and Graves v. May Dept. Stores

Co., supra, that the fact that there was no evidence of previous similar accidents did not prevent the finding of negligence, the statement being made in the Hillerbrand case and repeated in the Graves case that "* * * the jury might say from their knowledge of the instincts of childhood that the construction and movement of the machinery was likely to excite a small child's curiosity, and allure it into thrusting its hand into the box * * *."

[7, 8] The defendants insist, especially in their argument on rehearing, that a decision against them on this point is an application of the rule of the so-called "attractive nuisance" cases, that some of the conditions necessary to the application of that rule were not shown, that plaintiff's counsel conceded in the trial court that this is not an "attractive nuisance" case, that the case was tried on the theory that it is not such a case, and that this theory cannot be abandoned on appeal and a recovery sought on some theory not presented to the trial court. It is true plaintiff's counsel did make the concession as claimed, but he has not at any time argued on appeal that this is an "attractive nuisance" case. We do not base our decision on the rule of those cases, for this is plainly not such a case. That rule has grown up as an exception to the rule that a landowner has no duty toward trespassers except to abstain from wilful or wanton injury. Here the plaintiff was not a trespasser, and there is no need to invoke a rule whose purpose is merely to relax some of the rigors of the ancient rule of non-liability to trespassers. The rule here applicable is that requiring ordinary care to make the premises safe for invitees, as qualified by the further rule that where the invitees are children special caution is necessary. But this rule exacts of the one who invites children upon his premises no less caution than must be exercised by the landowner who knows trespassing children are in the habit of playing around his "attractive nuisance." The former must be held to the necessity of taking whatever precautions ordinary care would dictate to protect the invited children from any instrumentality he maintains upon his premises which is likely to attract them and subject them to dangers which a reasonably prudent person would anticipate. The facts from which the defendant storekeeper here might be held liable on this view of the law were presented to the jury and we find nothing in the record to suggest that the case was tried on the theory that there was no such liability.

[9] We do not intend, by what we have just said, to declare that negligence of defendant corporation here was established as a matter of law, or that a verdict for it would have been without support in the evidence. But upon the evidence questions of fact arose for the jury, which should have been allowed to determine whether the escalator was of the class of objects naturally attractive to children, whether defendant corporation should in the exercise of ordinary care have known that it was of that class and anticipated accidents such as that which happened to plaintiff, and if so, whether ordinary care required the stationing of guards at the escalator or other precautions to prevent such accidents. Upon these issues findings in favor of plaintiff would have been supported and would have required judgment in his favor against the defendant corporation.

[10] The foregoing conclusions do not apply to defendant Goddard. He did not install or maintain the escalator and was not in charge of its operation. He was merely the floor manager in charge of the department of the store where plaintiff was injured. He had been instructed how to stop and start the escalator, in case accidents should happen, but is not shown to have had any other responsibility regarding it. He cannot be held liable to plaintiff on any of the grounds above suggested. Plaintiff contends, however, that other grounds of liability exist as to him, growing out of his conduct after the accident happened.

[11] This contention is based on the testimony of plaintiff's mother that plaintiff was kneeling down facing toward the escalator with his hand caught in it, that Goddard, when he came up, stopped the escalator, took hold of plaintiff's wrist and tried for "about two minutes * * * a little while" to extract the hand, that failing in this effort, Goddard reversed the escalator and "then Takashi's finger came out with the blood shooting out," that before the escalator was reversed there was no blood visible on plaintiff's hand, and the blood appeared "just when the escalator was reversed." From this plaintiff seeks to draw the conclusions that the reversal of the escalator was the cause of the loss of parts of his fingers and that Goddard was negligent in reversing the escalator instead of calling mechanics, who were somewhere about the building, to remove the comb plate, an operation which would take 15 or 20 minutes after the mechanics arrived. In addition to the facts thus relied on by plaintiff, the mother's testimony also shows that the back of plaintiff's hand was injured "quite a bit * * * torn and blistered like." These facts do not justify the inferences suggested by plaintiff. From the fact that the back of the hand received the injuries above stated—injuries which were impossible unless the back of the hand were drawn in between comb plate and step—it is clear that the fingers were not visible when plaintiff's mother looked at the hand before the escalator was reversed. Hence her failure to see blood affords no basis for an inference that the fingers were not then bleeding. It is easy to understand how the forward movement of the steps pulling on the fingers when the hand was caught in the escalator might inflict the injuries suffered by the fingers; but it is not so clear how the backward movement of the steps, freeing the fingers from detention, could have produced that result. We have no information regarding the internal construction of the escalator to aid us in reaching the conclusion that it did so. Any such conclusion must be based on pure conjecture, which is not a basis on which a verdict may be founded.

Moreover, Goddard knew that it would take 15 or 20 minutes to remove the comb plate and thus free plaintiff's hand, after the mechanics arrived, in addition to the time necessary to get them there. He had discovered that the hand could not be released by such efforts as he could make with the escalator stopped. Plaintiff was already crying with the pain of his injuries. Goddard's conclusion that a reversal of the escalator would at once free the hand was a reasonable one, under the circumstances, and was proved correct by the event. It is not shown that anything apparent to him should have caused him to know, or even to suspect, that reversal of the escalator would result in the cutting off of plaintiff's fingers or otherwise increase the injuries he had obviously suffered already. If Goddard decided, as apparently he did, that it was better to free plaintiff's hand at once than to keep him in a strained and necessarily painful position for a period of time which might considerably exceed 15 or 20 minutes, we see no reasonable ground on which a jury could have found that his action in that respect, done under the stress of a sudden emergency, was negligent, even if we assume that, in fact, the reversal of the escalator did aggravate plaintiff's injuries.

[12-15] Plaintiff also contends that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable here and that under it an inference of negligence on the part of both defendants may be supported without anything more than appears in the record. That doctrine is clearly not applicable in support of plaintiff's case against defendant Goddard. One of its fundamental elements is that the thing causing the injury be under the management and control of the defendant. (19 Cal. Jur. 704, 708.) No such condition existed as to Goddard. The doctrine is likewise not applicable to defendant corporation, but for other reasons. "The reason for the rule is that ordinarily the one injured is not in a position to know more than that, by some unusual movement of the instrumentality, he was injured, whereas the one who operates the instrumentality should know and be able to explain the precise cause of the accident." (19 Cal.Jur. 705–707; Alexander v. Wong Yick, (1938) 25 Cal.App.2d 265, 269, 77 P.2d 476.) "If the evidence affirmatively shows the operator or manager of the instrumentality by means of which the injuries are inflicted has no superior knowledge or by the exercise of reasonable care is unable to secure information regarding the cause of the accident, or the evidence establishes the fact that the complainant possesses all the knowledge or information thereof which is reasonably accessible to the operator of the machine, then the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur has no application." (Johnson v. Ostrom, (1932) 128 Cal.App. 38, 43, 16 P. 2d 794; Alexander v. Wong Yick, supra, and cases therein cited; Jorgensen v. East Bay Transit Co., (1941) 46 Cal.App.2d 189, 193, 115 P.2d 556.) "* * * when the cause is established by either party to the action the doctrine is not then applicable." (Manuel v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., (1933) 134 Cal.App. 512, 517, 25 P. 2d 509.) Here the evidence clearly establishes the immediate cause of the plaintiff's accident. It resulted from the facts that the escalator was in operation and that it was so constructed that there was an opening in which plaintiff's fingers could get caught. It did not result from anything about the operation of the escalator, such as the sudden jars or jolts which the operators of moving vehicles have been required, under this doctrine, to explain. Whether defendant corporation was to be held liable for the injuries thus caused depended on the consideration of matters which were as open to investigation by one party as by the other. Since we hold that an inference of the corporation's negligence was possible without the application of this rule, this point is perhaps not of importance to the present decision; but we determine it for the purpose of a new trial, to guide the trial court in its instructions to the jury, or its own consideration of the case if there is no jury.

[16, 17] Defendants contend that plaintiff's mother was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to keep proper watch over plaintiff and to prevent him from getting caught in the escalator. As defendants concede, such negligence would not bar plaintiff Takashi's action for his own injuries (Zarzana v. Neve Drug Co., (1919) 180 Cal. 32, 37, 179 P. 203, 15 A.L.R. 401), and it was not pleaded as a defense thereto; but defendants argue that any recovery by plaintiff Tsutomu would be community property of himself and his wife, the mother of the other plaintiff, and hence her contributory negligence would constitute a defense to Tsutomu's action. It is true that negligence of the wife, if any, in caring for the children of herself and her husband is imputable to the husband and is a defense to any action brought by him in behalf of the community to recover for injuries to the children, to which such negligence contributed. (Dull v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., (1938) 27 Cal.App.2d 473, 479, 81 P.2d 158.) But from the evidence it appears that the wife took some precautions by way of watching over and caring for the son, and we cannot say, as a matter of law, that they were not sufficient. The question was one for the jury. (See Healy v. Market St. Ry. Co., (1940) 41 Cal.App.2d 733, 738, 107 P.2d 488; Carrisosa v. Southern Service Co., (1932) 128 Cal.App. 160, 163–165, 16 P.2d 1032.)

The judgment in favor of defendant Goddard is affirmed. The judgment in favor of defendant May Department Stores Co. is reversed and the cause is remanded for a new trial as to that defendant.

SHINN, Acting P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

PIERCE v. SINNER et al.

Civ. 2896.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 20, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 8, 1943.

Hearing Denied Oct. 18, 1943.

1. Master and servant ⚷330(3)

Where contractor rented gunnite men and equipment for resurfacing building, paid the men, carried insurance on them and directed them how and when to work, although there was a question whether the contractor or owner of gunnite equipment had the right to discharge, a finding that crew members were contractor's "employees" was sustained, and justified recovery against contractor for injuries sustained by an employee of subcontractor through negligence of one of the gunnite men in constructing a temporary platform for subcontractor's men.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Employee".

2. Negligence ⚷134(11)

In action against contractor for injuries sustained by subcontractor's employee in falling from a scaffold constructed by contractor, where jury could have found that contractor's employees were negligent either in selection of material or in manner of construction and that plaintiff did not have equal knowledge with contractor's employees as to material used and manner of construction, a finding that negligence of contractor's employees was a "proximate cause" of the injury was justified.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Proximate Cause".

3. Negligence ⚷136(27)

In action against contractor for injuries sustained by a plasterer, employed by subcontractor, in falling from a scaffold constructed by contractor's employees, where plasterer was engaged in his work while the scaffold was being constructed and did not have equal opportunity with contractor's employees to observe manner of construction, question of contributory negligence was properly submitted to the jury.

4. Negligence ⚷124(1)

In action against contractor for injuries sustained by a plasterer, employed by subcontractor, in falling from a scaffold constructed by contractor's employees, admission in evidence of regulations of the Industrial Accident Commission regarding the construction of scaffolds was not error.

5. Appeal and error ⚷1060(1)

Record did not show prejudicial misconduct by plaintiff's counsel in his argument to the jury.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Edward J. Kelly, Judge.

Action by Claude Pierce against John B. Sinner and others, as partners doing business as Sinner Brothers, to recover for injuries sustained by plaintiff while engaged as an employee of a subcontractor on a construction job on which the defendants were general contractors. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Monroe & McInnis, of San Diego, for appellants.

J. K. Stickney, Jr., of San Diego, Frank H. Nottbusch, of Chula Vista, and Stickney & Stickney, of San Diego, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Defendants and appellants John B. Sinner and Oscar A. Sinner, are partners, doing business as Sinner Brothers, and were engaged in the contracting business. They were the general contractors employed to remodel a cathedral located in San Diego. As a part of the work to be done, the outside of the building was changed and resurfaced. There were numerous buttresses projecting from the outside walls of the building, between which appeared recesses. It was while he was working upon the surface of one of these recesses that plaintiff and respondent was injured.

Plaintiff was a plasterer employed by the plastering subcontractors, Larson Brothers. Lester A. Larson was one of the members of that firm. Sinner Brothers, under its general contract, was required to build, construct, maintain and make the necessary changes in the scaffolding which was used by the plasterers and others in doing the work required to be done. The resurfacing of the building was done by the "gunnite process", with a machine designed for the purpose, which forced heavy plastering material through a hose to a nozzle and the gunnite crew operated the nozzle so as to spray the material under pressure upon the outside of the building. This gunnite material dried quickly, but before it was set it was necessary to smooth out the rough places which were a usual and customary incident of the gunnite process. This smoothing was the work of the plasterers. They followed the gunnite crew and, working from the scaffold, reached the wall surface and put the final touches on the gunnite finish. In doing this work it was customary for the plasterer to use a tool known to the trade as a rod.

Defendant John B. Sinner testified concerning the details of the scaffold, as constructed by him. He identified the model which he had made to illustrate its construction. Witnesses on behalf of the plaintiff disputed his testimony in this regard, and although they admitted that this model correctly portrayed the scaffold as it was originally built, they contended that the scaffold had been changed and portions thereof removed shortly before the accident, as portrayed by a model made and identified by Lester A. Larson. All of plaintiff's witnesses agreed that Larson's model was correct. As originally constructed, and as illustrated by Mr. Sinner, the scaffold had an additional platform which extended into the recess between the two buttresses. The scaffold, as described by plaintiff's witnesses and illustrated by the model, did not have such extension, but the planks forming the platform extended outside of the buttresses. Originally, the scaffold was a regulation, pole-type scaffold. The "uprights" were 4"x4". The ledger boards were 1"x8". The planks for the flooring of the scaffold were 2"x10" and 16' long. At the time of the accident there were two planks constituting the lower floor or tier of the scaffold which were laid about six feet from the ground and about four feet from the recess walls. The scaffolding as originally constructed was too close to the building for the use of the gunnite men and the plasterers. The evidence would indicate that it was at Larson's suggestion that the defendants made the change in the plans of the original scaffold, and three tiers were rebuilt by them. Defendants maintain otherwise.

Just prior to the time of the accident here involved Mr. Larson and plaintiff had been smoothing the cement and marking it off in squares on the first floor or tier of the scaffold. Plaintiff found that it was necessary to have additional platform laid into the recess before he could reach in and finish the work in that corner. He notified Larson of his inability to reach into the recess from the scaffold as thus constructed. Larson then called down to the defendants' workmen: "Somebody get something in that angle so we can work it out". It had been defendants' previous instruction to Larson that if any planks were to be moved or rearranged for him, he should notify defendants and they would have their workmen do it. Thereafter, one of defendants' workmen (Homsma) who was on the ground, started to select from the lumber around the building, some boards with which to erect an additional platform for Larson and the plaintiff. One Smith, who had been working with the gunnite crew and who was then on the ground, heard the request of Larson. He testified that Homsma "started to get up on the scaffold"; that he was awfully slow; that the gunnite was drying; that he, Smith, climbed up there and told Homsma to hand "me the planks up", and that he handed him a 2x4 and a 2x10, each about 8 feet long; that he laid them on the scaffold as "near the corner as he could get them"; that he laid the 2x4 flat, rather than on its edge; that it ran "from the inner platform board * * * in about a 45 degree angle over to the ledger board"; that the 2x10 was laid "practically perpendicular to the building, the end of it about even with the outside of the scaffold, and the other end a little farther from the recess than the ledger board, and this 2x10 is practically across the center of the 2x4"; that after he laid the boards he then went on with his gunnite work; that he did not pay any particular attention to the 2x4 when it was handed up to him; that he "never really looked at it. They was in a hurry, so I just laid it up there." While he was thus placing the boards, Larson went around to the front of the building.

Plaintiff testified that while this operation was going on he continued with his plastering work; that he did not see the boards laid or who laid them; that Larson returned, asked for the rod, and indicated to plaintiff, who weighed about 200 pounds, to stand on the outward end of the 2x10; that he did so and Larson stepped across to the other end, finished the recess plastering, and just as he was about to turn, the 2x4, over which the 2x10 had been placed, broke; that Larson fell to the ground unhurt; that plaintiff fell over backwards and was severely and permanently injured. The accident happened on Sunday. Sinner Brothers were pressed for time and had requested the plasterers and the gunnite men to work on that day in order to meet a deadline. The gunnite men were paid by Sinner Brothers but the gunnite equipment was rented from one Woods. No carpenters were present on the outside of the building when the necessity for additional timbers became apparent. Oscar Sinner was a carpenter and was inside of the building directing the work there. John B. Sinner was on the outside of the building engaged in general supervision of the work. No broken 2x4 was found after the accident. John B. Sinner testified that he looked for one but did not see any around; that there were several 2x4's around the building; that he did not authorize Smith, the gunnite man, to rebuild or reconstruct the platform in the manner indicated; that he did not see nor inspect the lumber placed thereon for that purpose, and that he did not see plaintiff fall, although he was about 15 feet from him at the time; that he rented the gunnite men and equipment by the day and paid them and carried insurance on them; that he directed their work but did not have the right nor power to discharge them; that Woods gave no instructions to him regarding their work while they were employed on that job. Other witnesses testified that they saw the 2x4 break, but did not examine it for imperfections or defects. Apparently, as a result of the imperfection in the 2x4 or in the manner in which it was laid, plaintiff received severe injuries. Plaintiff recovered judgment against defendants in the sum of $10,000. Defendants appealed.

They now contend first, that the evidence is not sufficient to show that Smith was, at the time, an employee of defendants and acting within the scope of his employment. Second, that the evidence is not sufficient to show negligence on the part of defendants mainly because there is no evidence to show (a) that the 2x4 was in fact defective; or (b) that if it was defective, that such defect was known, or by the exercise of reasonable care should have been known to defendants; or (c) that the facts and conditions which brought about his injuries were not equally known to plaintiff. Third, that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Considering the evidence on the first point presented, the record shows, in addition to the facts already stated, that defendants rented Woods' equipment by the day. The employees, including Smith, who usually operated the gunnite machine for Woods, operated that equipment on this particular contract.

Sinner testified in this respect that "they were the same as his employees", except that he "couldn't perhaps have fired them if Mr. Woods hadn't wanted it and had said 'They are my men. They are my employees, and they are going to stay here'"; that he had the power to tell them "when to work * * * how to do it, and how to do their work"; that he exercised that power "during the entire period of this work"; that when these men worked on Sunday they were working at his direction. Larson testified that on previous occasions he had observed Smith "fixing up the scaffold"; that "as the work progressed around the building, anyone available, that is, from the gunnite crew and the labor crew, would change the scaffold and move planks, etc. from time to time. I would say hundreds of times."

Sinner testified that it was the job of the gunnite men and the plasterers to remove the planks "for the purpose of clearing away for the gunnite that doesn't attach itself to the wall".

A gunnite workman testified that he was the one who told Sinner that in order for him to "shoot this particular place" Sinner would have to remove "that scaffolding that was there and set it back away from the wall"; that he had never seen plaintiff place any scaffolding but that Sinner's men would do it for him; that the scaffolding throughout the whole job "was good outside of this one point where the accident happened"; that on another occasion a scaffold gave away and slipped off of the building; that another gunnite man "was up there moving plank or something".

In respect to the scaffolding, plaintiff testified that he did not have anything to do with the placing of any boards in the recesses; that that work was done by laborers working for Sinner; that part of the time one of the gunnite laborers would do it; that he had seen Smith do it on numerous occasions before the accident over a period of three months and while Sinner was around; that on occasions when there were no carpenters around he had asked Sinner to place planks or the scaffolding for him; that in response thereto Homsma, Smith and other gunnite men would do that work for him on "numerous occasions" and that that was their "usual and customary practice".

In this respect it is mainly argued that because Sinner did not have the right to "fire" Smith and because Smith was not then doing work which he was employed to do, Smith should not therefore be considered as authorized to bind Sinner for any negligent act of his in the selection of the proper materials and in the construction of the makeshift platform, citing such cases as Lowell v. Harris, 24 Cal.App.2d 70, 74 P.2d 551; and Billig v. Southern Pacific Co., 189 Cal. 477, 209 P. 241.

[1] The first cited case holds directly that the existence of the right of control over the employee is the critical test of liability for his acts, and that it is the right to exercise control rather than the mere fact of its exercise which is decisive. While the right of Sinner to discharge the gunnite employees in the instant case under the facts appearing may be subject to question, nevertheless, any presumption arising from that fact alone is sufficiently overcome by the remaining evidence and fully supports the jury's conclusion, which was reached after hearing proper instructions on the subject, that Smith, as well as Homsma, were employees of defendants at the time in question and that each was acting within the scope of his employment. Peters v. United Studios, Inc., 98 Cal.App. 373, 277 P. 156; Callahan v. Harm, 98 Cal. App. 568, 277 P. 529; Silberman v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 21 Cal.2d 609, 134 P. 2d 228.

[2] Considering the negligence of defendants, it must be conceded that plaintiff was severely injured and that such injury was the result of a negligently constructed, makeshift platform, or as the result of the negligent selection and use of defective material in its construction. The question then presented is this: By whose negligence was such injury brought about? The evidence justifies the inference that the jury might have concluded that the defendants' agents negligently placed the 2x4 with the flat side down rather than on edge and that if it had been laid on edge under the circumstances related, it would not have broken. There is evidence that had it been laid on edge rather than flat, "it would be at least three times as strong". There is other evidence that might indicate that one end of the 2x4 might have been negligently laid too close to the edge of the ledger board and the weight of the workmen caused it to slip rather than break. The evidence also shows that on the two tiers above, where the plasterers had "those bad reaches", a similar method was used by defendants' employees in constructing a similar makeshift platform on the tiers above. One witness testified in this respect that "It would be a very short job to stick it up there and tack it (the 2x4). It had been done before". The evidence would indicate that on this particular occasion the 2x4 was not nailed as compared to the practice of nailing it down on the tiers above. It might also well be argued that the 2x4 was in fact defective and that it did break. The jury might well have concluded that defendants' agents were negligent in failing to make a reasonable examination of the material to be used considering the weight it had to carry and the purpose for which it was to be used. Defendants' employees were in better position than plaintiff to know the character of the material used and were the ones who made the selection and placed the material there. This would factually differentiate the instant case from the case of Dingman v. A. F. Mattock Co., 15 Cal.2d 622, 104 P.2d 26, 29, relied on by defendants. There it was said: "If there were any evidence whatever in the case showing that the contractor or his foreman or other employee placed the board over the open space or in any other way had an opportunity other than that possessed by the respondent to observe said board and to note any defect therein, then the case might be different. * * *" The evidence supports the finding that the negligence of defendants was at least a proximate cause of the accident and injury. Whether negligence is a proximate cause of the injury is almost entirely a question of fact. Fennessey v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 20 Cal.2d 141, 145, 124 P.2d 51. Plaintiff testified that he had no part in the selection of the timbers or in laying them; that he was busily engaged in his work of plastering while they were being laid. Assuming the truth of this statement, it cannot therefore be said that he had equal knowledge with defendants' workmen, of the facts and conditions which brought about his injuries.

[3] It may likewise be said, as to the third point, that it cannot be held, as a matter of law, under the evidence, that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. The question of the contributory negligence of plaintiff was fully argued to the jury and was a fact for it to determine under proper instructions. We cannot now interfere with that determination on this appeal. Douglass v. Crabtree, 57 Cal.App.2d 568, 134 P.2d 912; Fischer v. Davis Standard Bread Co., 134 Cal.App. 1, 24 P.2d 538.

[4] During the trial there was offered and received in evidence the regulations of the Industrial Accident Commission regarding the construction of scaffolds. Defendants assigned the admission of these regulations as error. Sinner testified that he had read and was familiar with the contents of these orders and that he constructed his scaffolds in accordance with the standards therein specified. Even if we held that the court's ruling was erroneous, which we do not, it cannot be said that such ruling was prejudicial. Brumhall v. Sutherland, 110 Cal.App. 10, 14, 293 P. 672; McKeon v. Lissner, 193 Cal. 297, 223 P. 965; Hayden v. Paramount Productions, Inc., 33 Cal.App.2d 287, 91 P.2d 231; DeGraf v. Anglo California National Bank, 14 Cal.2d 87, 92 P.2d 899.

[5] Defendants charge that respondent's counsel was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in his argument to the jury. This accusation was fully presented to the trial court on a motion for new trial. That court properly held that the claim was without foundation. Mudrick v. Market St. R. Co., 11 Cal.2d 724, 738, 81 P.2d 950, 118 A.L.R. 533; Roddy v. American Smelting, etc., Co., 34 Cal.App.2d 457, 460, 93 P.2d 841.

Judgment affirmed.

BARNARD, J., concurs.

60 Cal.App.2d 245

PEOPLE v. JOLLET et al.

Cr. 3694.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Aug. 20, 1943.

Hearing Denied Sept. 15, 1943.

1. Criminal law ⟶562

A showing of mere opportunity for defendant to commit a crime, unless it excludes all reasonable opportunity for its commission by another is not, standing alone, sufficient to justify a conviction.

2. Burglary ⟶31
Larceny ⟶43

In prosecution of two defendants on two counts of grand theft and three counts of burglary of jewelry stores, wherein it appeared that same pattern of operation was used in each instance, acquittal on one burglary count did not prevent consideration of evidence regarding such count in connection with other counts so far as it was pertinent so as to authorize an inference that there was a concert of action between defendants involving a definite scheme for entry into stores.

3. Criminal law ⟶673(4)

In prosecution of two defendants, statements of one admitted against him only cannot be considered against other.

4. Burglary ⟶41(1)
Larceny ⟶65

Evidence sustained conviction of grand theft and burglary.

5. Burglary ⟶41(3)

In prosecution for burglary of jewelry stores in daytime, evidence was sufficient to establish the required intent to commit theft when defendants entered respective stores.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thomas L. Ambrose, Judge.

John L. Jollet and Robert Pinkerman were convicted of grand theft and burglary. From the judgments and orders denying each of them a new trial they appeal.

Affirmed.

John S. Cooper, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Elizabeth Palmer, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHAW, Justice pro tem.

The indictment against defendants contains 2 charges of grand theft and 3 of burglary. After a jury waiver and trial by the court, they were acquitted of the burglary charged in Count V and found guilty of all the other charges, and they appeal from the judgments and from the orders denying each of them a new trial. The only contention made on appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings of guilt. Facts set forth in the following statement are shown by evidence adduced by the prosecution, unless otherwise stated.

Counts I and II relate to a theft of two diamond rings from the Howes jewelry store, situated on the north side of Wilshire Boulevard in Los Angeles. The burglary charged in Count II is the entry into that store with intent to commit theft. These rings were in a showcase near the front of the store and were close to the back corner of the case. Defendant Jollet came into the store about noon, asking to see some watch bands, and after talking with a clerk, Miss White, for 5 or 10 minutes, was turned over to the assistant manager, Mr. King. Jollet asked King about attachments for ladies' watches, seemed much interested in what he saw, said his wife was across the street and he would talk to her and return. He then left the store, but never came back. About the time Jollet was turned over to King defendant Pinkerman came into the store, said to Miss White that he was waiting for his sister and sat down in a chair in front of the showcase containing the rings, close to the end at which the rings had been placed. He gradually moved the chair more to the end of the case, so that, from its final location, it was possible to reach the back of the case. Jollet went out about ten minutes after Pinkerman entered. The latter remained in the store for three-quarters of an hour to an hour after Jollet left, but no one came in to meet him and he departed at about 1:15 p.m. About 2 o'clock King noticed that the sliding door of the case containing the rings had been opened five or six inches at the end where the rings had been, and that the rings were gone.

The last time any of the employees had seen the rings in the showcase was about 11 a.m. None of them took the rings from the case, and no other visitors than Jollet and Pinkerman were in the store from a few minutes after the time Jollet entered until the loss of the rings was discovered. In this respect, the period of an hour before noon is not covered by the evidence. While King was waiting on Jollet he stood at a showcase farther back in the store than that at which Pinkerman was sitting. King faced Pinkerman and could see him but did not actually observe him all of the time because, as he said, he had to look at the man he was waiting on. Besides, Pinkerman was leaning on the end of the case and this obstructed King's view of the case. Miss White walked around some but mostly sat where she could see Pinkerman's head and shoulders but not his hands. She did not watch him all the time, for she did not see him go out. Another employee, Miss Flynn, came back from lunch before Pinkerman left and saw him, but seems to have paid little attention to him, for she, also, did not notice his departure.

The transaction above stated occurred on July 30, 1942. On August 12, 1942, the two defendants put on a similar act at the jewelry store of Carl E. Schultz on Wilshire Boulevard in Beverly Hills, and this is the subject of Counts III and IV which charge grand theft and burglary. Defendant Pinkerman came into the store about 12:50 p.m., said he was waiting for his sister, wandered around the store, looking in the show windows and then sat down in a chair right in front of the diamond window showcase, in which a diamond ring worth $1,235 had been placed that morning. After he had sat there about 15 minutes, defendant Jollet entered the store, told Schultz he was looking for some watch attachments, and after being shown some, asked for ladies' watch bands. He looked at those, said his wife was shopping near and he would bring her back, left the store and did not return. During the time Jollet was in the store, Schultz was about 20 feet from Pinkerman and could not see what Pinkerman was doing because Jollet kept between Schultz and Pinkerman. The two defendants were in the store altogether about 30 minutes and when Jollet left Pinkerman had already gone but Schultz did not see him leave.

When Schultz prepared to close his store, at 5:30 p.m. that day, he discovered that the ring above mentioned was gone from the window showcase near which Pinkerman had sat. The last time he had seen it there that day was about 11 a.m. This showcase was enclosed on the store side by a partition, of wood at the bottom and of glass at the top, which extended 6 feet above the floor. Above this partition was an open space of 4 feet. There was a hinged door in the partition, but it was kept locked and was not opened this day from the time the case was filled at the opening of the store until Schultz was preparing to close the store. The ring was at the back of the window, near this partition, and to reach it from the store with the door locked a person would have to stand on a chair and reach down over the partition. No one was seen to do this. While the two defendants were in the store with Schultz no one else was there, but during other parts of the day other persons were in it.

The evidence shows the two transactions above mentioned in much more detail than does the foregoing statement, but we have omitted no detail which seems to us of consequence. The defendants took the stand and denied both transactions, and denied that they had been in the stores at all, or in the Anstead store, hereinafter mentioned. No witness saw any ring removed from the showcase in which it had been placed by the storekeeper, or saw any overt act possibly constituting part of the process of removal, no fingerprints were shown to have been found on any of the showcases, and the articles stolen have never been found, as far as appears. The facts thus far stated, however, will support several inferences which the trial court may have drawn in support of its judgments. First: that defendant Pinkerman had an opportunity to commit each of the thefts charged. The opportunity was such as to require considerable agility, quickness and audacity on his part to take advantage of it, especially in the Schultz case, but yet it was an opportunity. Second: that the presence and activities of Jollet in each store helped to create this opportunity. Third: that neither of the defendants had any legitimate reason for entering either store. The reason assigned by each for entering appears to have been fictitious.

[1] The first of these inferences is insufficient of itself to support the convictions. A showing of mere opportunity for the defendant to commit a crime, unless it excludes all reasonable opportunity for its commission by another is not, standing alone, sufficient to justify a verdict or finding of guilty. People v. Viets (1926)

79 Cal.App. 576, 589, 250 P. 588; People v. Silva (1920) 48 Cal.App. 728, 737, 192 P. 330; People v. Tarbox (1896) 115 Cal. 57, 63, 46 P. 896; see also People v. Wong Ah You (1885) 67 Cal. 31, 7 P. 8; People v. Ong Git (1910) 14 Cal.App. 278, 111 P. 630.

[2] We need not decide whether the second and third inferences above mentioned add sufficient support to the findings to uphold them, for other facts were shown. The defendants admitted as witnesses, and Jollet admitted to the arresting officers also, that they were acquainted with each other. Testimony for the prosecution showed that on August 29, 1942, defendant Pinkerman entered the Amstead jewelry store on Wilshire Boulevard in Beverly Hills, was approached by a salesman and said he was waiting for his sister, and then went and stood by a showcase containing watches and looked into it. In a few minutes defendant Jollet came into this store and said he was waiting while his wife was telephoning. Pinkerman left while Jollet was there, although no sister had appeared, and Jollet stayed only a few minutes and left. While they were in the store, the owner of the store and four employees were in it. One of these employees, Todd, had talked to the police before this visit. He went out to the street and watched the defendants after they left, and testified that they entered an automobile together, with Jollet at the wheel and a woman in the back seat. This occurrence was the subject of Count V on which the defendants were acquitted. The acquittal does not, however, prevent the consideration of the evidence regarding this count in connection with other counts, so far as it is pertinent.

Adding these facts to those previously shown, the trier of facts could reasonably infer that there was a concert of action between the defendants, involving a definite plan or scheme by which they would enter jewelry stores with an excuse for Pinkerman's presence which would in itself avert attention from him, while Jollet averted it further by actively concentrating it on himself, thus enabling Pinkerman to steal any accessible article without detection. In the Anstead case no doubt they saw at once that their plan would not work because the store personnel was too numerous for all to be easily diverted, and so they departed with little delay and contrary at least to Pinkerman's excuse for being there.

[3] To the officers who had him in custody Pinkerman made incriminating statements. He stated, in reply to questions which referred to both the Howes and the Schultz cases, that he had given the ring taken from the Schultz store to a man who had taken it to Chicago and that "If I tell you all about these thefts, I haven't got a chance, I am sunk, but if I say nothing, why I have got one chance in one hundred of beating the rap, beating the case." These statements of Pinkerman were admitted against him only, so they cannot be considered against Jollet. Jollet, at the time of his arrest, which was ten days after that of Pinkerman, refused to say what he had been doing or where he had been living, and tacitly admitted that he had moved in a hurry the night Pinkerman was arrested, leaving some things behind.

[4] We think the evidence, taking it as a whole and accepting all the reasonable inferences from it most favorable to the findings of guilt, is sufficient to uphold them as to both defendants and on both counts. It is true, there is no such implied admission of guilt by Jollet as that made by Pinkerman in saying that if he told all about these thefts he was "sunk"; but Jollet was present with Pinkerman at all of the places where theft was committed. He denied such presence, as a witness, thus failing to give any explanation for it, and he gave the storekeepers explanations which were false. He moved in great haste after Pinkerman's arrest and refused to give any account of his movements or doings thereafter. He and Pinkerman were, as already stated, cooperating in a plan for obtaining jewelry from these stores.

[5] As a branch of their argument on insufficiency of the evidence defendants argue that there is no showing of their intent to commit theft when they entered the respective stores—an intent which must be shown to prove the burglaries charged. To our minds, such intent stands out so plainly from the evidence, accepting that which the trial court believed, that no further discussion of it appears necessary.

The judgments and orders appealed from are affirmed.

DESMOND, P. J., and SHINN, J., concur.

Hearing denied; TRAYNOR, J., dissenting.

60 Cal.App.2d 87

In re WITHINGTON'S ESTATE.

SWEITZER et al. v. WITHINGTON et al.

Civ. 2893.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 3, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 24, 1943.

Hearing Denied Sept. 30, 1943.

1. Executors and administrators 🔑506(3)

Evidence sustained finding that executor was not short $65,120.47 in accounting for cash received by him.

2. Executors and administrators 🔑507(2)

Where property had been sold by executor and had been reported in its converted form, the court was justified in finding that it had been fully accounted for.

3. Executors and administrators 🔑513(12)

Where property had been sold by executor and reported in its converted form, order approving executor's account did not preclude him from showing source from which he derived the funds and did not require that he be charged twice for the same amount.

4. Executors and administrators 🔑465

Where no part of Mexican bank account ever came into hands of California executor but it came into his hands as Mexican executor and under Mexican law he was required to account therefor to Mexican court, the California executor could not be charged with the Mexican bank account.

5. Executors and administrators 🔑465

A California executor must be charged with everything which came into his hands as such executor, and he may be charged with property which he should have taken into possession as such executor, or which in due course should be distributed to California estate.

6. Executors and administrators 🔑506(3)

Evidence sustained finding that Mexican bank account did not come into hands of California executor so as to require executor to account therefor.

7. Executors and administrators 🔑506(3)

Evidence sustained trial court's refusal to surcharge executor on theory that value of loan had been lost through acts of executor.

8. Executors and administrators 🔑506(3)

Evidence sustained trial court's refusal to surcharge executor with amount of two notes which he allegedly permitted to outlaw, where notes were secured by trust deed which had never outlawed.

9. Executors and administrators 🔑465

Where money was loaned in Mexico from funds on deposit in Mexican bank, the item was one for which executor was accountable to Mexican courts as part of estate being administered in that country and executor was not accountable therefor in California proceeding.

10. Executors and administrators 🔑506(3)

Evidence sustained trial court's refusal to charge executor with $800 withdrawn from estate funds on ground that money belonged to executor personally.

11. Executors and administrators 🔑510(11)

Where executor permitted devisee to collect part of rentals from property but executor had correctly accounted for estate's share of rentals collected by him, refusal to charge executor with entire amount of rentals would not be disturbed where interest of estate was not affected.

12. Executors and administrators 🔑111(1)

Executor was properly allowed credit for $5,000 paid to attorney who filed claim for legal services performed for decedent, where claim was timely filed, was approved by executor and by court.

13. Executors and administrators 🔑510(11)

Allowance of $5,000 on account of executor's fees and two payments of $5,000 and $850 for attorneys' fees was not shown to be an abuse of discretion and would not be disturbed. Code Civ.Proc. § 1616.

14. Executors and administrators 🔑308

Where all beneficiaries interested in testator's estate consented to compromise with testator's widow, the beneficiaries were "estopped" from insisting that executor be charged with amount paid to widow in accordance with the agreement.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop".

15. Executors and administrators 🔑308

Where all beneficiaries interested in testator's estate consented to compromise agreement with testator's widow under which executor made payment to widow, subsequent agreement in which beneficiaries stated that they had knowledge of and acquiesced in all acts of executor, constituted a "ratification" of payment to widow.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Ratification".

16. Executors and administrators ⚷301

Refusal to charge executor with advances made to certain beneficiaries without decrees authorizing partial distribution was not improper, where executor had been removed and the matter could easily be adjusted on final distribution.

17. Executors and administrators ⚷506(3)

Evidence sustained trial court's refusal to surcharge executor with amount which had been delivered to executor in testator's lifetime on ground that amount belonged to executor personally.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; L. N. Turrentine, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Carl Withington, deceased, wherein objections were filed to the account of Lysle Woodward Withington, executor and wherein American Surety Company of New York, intervened. From a decree settling the final account of the executor, Callie Belle Sweitzer, individually and as administratrix with will annexed of the estate of Carl Withington, deceased, and others appeal. Upon the removal of Callie Belle Sweitzer as administratrix of the estate of Carl Withington, the new administrator of the estate was substituted on the appeal.

Affirmed.

Frank Pomeranz, Charles C. Crouch, and Richard F. Kahle, all of San Diego, for appellants.

Frank A. Gazlay, of San Diego, Mathes & Sheppard and Wm. C. Mathes, all of Los Angeles, Charles Fox, Jr., of San Diego, and Gordon F. Hampton, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

Carl Withington died on October 23, 1925, while a resident of San Diego County. By his will he left nothing to his widow other than her community interest in his property and, after a few relatively small bequests, he left the residue of his estate in equal shares to his three sisters Harriet W. LeMay, Norma Withington, Callie Belle Sweitzer, and his brother Lysle Woodward Withington. His estate was finally appraised at $715,713.39. About 80% thereof was in personal property, consisting of cashier's checks, Liberty bonds and certain gambling interests and other property situated in Mexico. His estate also included undivided interests in real estate in Kern County which were valued at some $50,000. Prior to and shortly after his appointment as executor Lysle Withington sold the gambling interests in Mexico and succeeded in bringing into this state most of the property in Mexico which had been owned by the decedent.

The will was admitted to probate on November 13, 1925, and Lysle Withington was appointed executor. Although the will exempted him from giving bond, upon the request of the widow the court ordered a bond in the sum of $250,000 and such a bond was furnished by the American Surety Company, the intervener here. On March 6, 1926, the will was also admitted to probate in Baja California, Mexico. Lysle Withington was appointed executor there and proceedings for the administration of the estate in Mexico have since been and still are pending.

Upon her petition the widow was granted a family allowance of $1,000 a month. Thereafter, she filed a contest to the probate of the will, which was finally determined adversely to her in 1929. In re Estate of Withington, 99 Cal.App. 617, 279 P. 196, 280 P. 152. Negotiations between the widow and the brother and sisters for a settlement of the widow's community interest in the estate then followed, which resulted in an agreement by which the widow agreed to accept $225,000 in full settlement of all of her claims and that amount was ordered distributed to her and was paid to her in 1931. In July, 1933, the executor filed a petition asking that the bond theretofore issued be discharged. The three sisters of the executor signed and filed a request that this be done. On August 5, 1933, an order was entered discharging the bond. Theretofore, all claims of creditors and all specific legacies had been paid and partial distributions had been made to the residuary legatees. Thereafter, as disclosed by the record, the executor and his sisters proceeded to divide up the decedent's jewelry and, apparently, to deal with the money and property of the estate largely by mutual agreement. The sisters, as they had done before, took and used the income from the estate's portion of the Kern County real property and at times received other funds from the estate. The executor, on the other hand, seems to have drawn at will from the funds of the estate for his personal needs.

On August 25, 1939, on the request of Norma Withington, an order was entered requiring the executor to file an account. On December 16, 1939, an agreement was filed in the estate proceedings which was signed by the executor and all three of his sisters. This agreement provided that Lysle Withington thereby resigned as executor; that the citation of August 25, 1939, requiring him to render an account "is hereby dismissed with prejudice, and the clerk is hereby directed to enter a dismissal thereof"; that the three sisters and each of them waived any and all right to have the executor file or make an account of any kind; that each of them had had knowledge of and had acquiesced in all of his official acts as executor from the date of his appointment; that each of them released him "from any and all claims from any administration of said estate"; that he in turn waived any right to require any of his sisters to account to the estate or to him for anything they had done or failed to do in connection with the property or income of the estate; that each released the others from any claim for anything theretofore done in connection with this estate, whether as executor or otherwise; that each acknowledged that from time to time, by consent of all, partial distributions of the estate have been made; that a petition "for ratable distribution of certain real property" which had been filed should be granted by the court; and that Norma Withington, with the approval of the court, should be appointed as administratrix to complete the administration of the estate. On December 16, 1939, an order was entered appointing Norma Withington as administratrix with the will annexed. A petition for a ratable distribution was thereafter granted.

In the summer of 1940, it was discovered that the state inheritance taxes had been only partly paid. The sisters were then urged to give notice of rescission of the agreement of December 11, 1939, and to proceed to compel the executor to file an account. They refused to do this but, after strong pressure, finally reluctantly yielded. On July 3, 1940, they filed a notice of rescission of the agreement and on July 10, 1940, a citation was issued ordering the executor to file an account and suspending his powers as executor. Thereafter, he was fully removed as executor, Norma Withington acted as administratrix for a time, after which Callie Belle Sweitzer was appointed administratrix and later removed, and then another administratrix was appointed.

When the agreement of December 11, 1939, was filed and the order appointing Norma Withington as administratrix was entered, the executor turned over to her all papers and files in the estate which were in his possession and those which he was able to obtain from the office of his attorney, who was then dead. After the citation to account was issued the executor filed his account in two sections, and a lengthy hearing was had. Thereafter, upon direction of the court, he filed an amended report and account in order to conform to the proof. The three sisters filed objections to the account, many of which were sustained by the court. In its findings and decree the court charged the executor with approximately $90,000 over and above the property of the estate which he had turned over to his successor. Harriet LeMay and Norma Withington having died in the meantime, Callie Belle Sweitzer appealed from the decree settling the final account of the executor for herself and also as administratrix of the estate of Carl Withington, as the administratrix of the estate of Harriet LeMay, and as executrix of the estate of Norma Withington. Upon her removal as administratrix of the estate of Carl Withington, the new administrator of that estate was substituted on this appeal. The record consists of 15 volumes, besides innumerable exhibits.

Lysle Withington also took an appeal from the decree settling his final account but that appeal has been dismissed. For convenience, we will refer to him both as the executor and as the respondent. It may first be observed that in its decree the court specifically made its findings only as to an accounting between the executor and the administratrix with the will annexed, and reserved consideration of the rights of all other parties arising from the contract of December 11, 1939, which waived an accounting, for adjudication on a later petition for distribution. Why the court did not directly pass upon the effect of the contract of December 11, 1939, and the attempted rescission thereof, does not appear. We are pointed to no evidence which would have supported a finding of rescission of that contract and portions of the evidence indicate not only that restoration was not made but that the sisters were unable to restore what they received under that agreement.

[1] The first point raised by the appellants is that the respondent executor was short $65,120.47 in accounting for the cash received by him and that the court erred in not allowing this item as a charge against him. On September 20, 1926, the executor filed his inventory and appraisement, the first item of which was "money belonging to the said deceased which has come to the hands of the executor, $344,453.05." In his account he charged himself with $279,332.58 as received in cash, and the difference is the amount here in question.

The undisputed evidence is that shortly before his death Carl Withington divided all of his actual cash between his brother and his three sisters; that he left certain cashier's checks, bank drafts and bank accounts, all of which were deposited by the executor in the estate account; and that prior to the time the inventory was filed the executor sold certain gambling interests and other property left by the deceased and deposited the proceeds in the estate account. There is a clear inference from the evidence that this item of the inventory included not only the cashier's checks and bank drafts, which might be considered as money, but also money received from the sale of property after the death of the decedent and before the inventory was filed. Under this view all of this item was accounted for. This view is supported by considerable testimony, including that of two public accountants. One of them testified that the addition of the totals of the cashier's checks, bank drafts and similar items and the amounts deposited in the estate account up to the time the inventory was filed would give the amount thus listed in the inventory within $1.66. He gave a logical explanation for this difference in that the attorney, in preparing the inventory, could easily have omitted two items of .83¢ each which were a part of larger figures. The evidence sustains the court's findings in this regard and no evidence to the contrary was offered by the appellants.

[2] It is now argued, however, that the amount set forth in this item of the inventory was accepted as true and acted upon in a number of subsequent proceedings in the estate without being questioned by the executor, and that it is now too late, under the doctrine of laches, for him to correct any error if such there was. The cases cited in support of this contention have no application here. This is not a case of an executor charging himself with certain property belonging to an estate and many years later attempting to claim that the property belonged to himself rather than to the estate. Here, the property was merely reported in its converted form and the court was justified in finding that it was fully accounted for.

[3] In their reply brief the appellants state that the executor filed a first account on October 4, 1928, in which he charged himself with this same item and that this account was approved by a minute order dated January 4, 1929. It is then argued, for the first time, that this order approving the first account has become final and precludes him from disputing "the correctness of the amount of cash with which he charged himself in his original inventory." Cases are cited to the effect that items once settled in a previous account are conclusive and may not be reexamined upon the settlement of a final account. Assuming, but not holding, that this minute order was sufficient to settle the first account, we see nothing in this rule which would prevent this respondent from showing the source from which he derived the amount with which he charged himself and which was thus approved. There is nothing in this rule which would require the respondent to be charged twice for the same amount received, and the evidence supports the court's refusal so to do.

Taking them out of order the appellants, in six other points, contend that various other amounts received by the executor were not inventoried by him or accounted for, and that the court erred in not charging him therewith. These items were $2,500 received from the sale of an automobile, $1,498.12 received from the sale of a gambling interest, $35,000 received from the sale of an interest in the Foreign Club, $20,047.24 received from the sale of a gambling interest known as the "Atkin Book", $510 received from the "Holland note", and $165.94 received as interest on a certificate of deposit. The evidence is that these amounts were all deposited in the estate account and that they were included in the first item of the inventory, to which we have just referred. In their reply brief the appellants concede this and concede that our holding, with respect to these six items, should follow our holding with respect to the first point above discussed relating to the alleged shortage of about $65,000 in the amount of cash inventoried. In view of this concession nothing further need be said with respect to these six points. It is also contended that the court erred in failing to allow interest on three other amounts charged to the executor. As pointed out by the respondent, interest on these amounts was allowed by the court.

It is next urged that the court erred in failing to charge the executor with the loss of $25,207.88 from a deposit in a bank in Mexicali, Mexico. About $39,000 was on deposit in that bank in the deceased's account at the time of his death and was listed in the inventory filed on September 20, 1926. However, it was never brought to California and the evidence supports the finding that it never came into the possession of Lysle Withington, as executor of the California estate. There is evidence that he was advised by Mexican attorneys that this deposit could not be legally transferred to California and that the bank refused to permit this to be done. With the knowledge and consent of the sisters, probate proceedings were also started in Mexico and he was appointed executor there. On April 7, 1931, he, as executor of the Mexican estate, removed $25,207.88 from this account and redeposited it in a bank in Tiajuana, Mexico. He then authorized his Mexican attorneys to withdraw moneys from this account and the evidence indicates that they withdrew it all for their personal use.

The court found that this executor had been appointed executor of the estate of Carl Withington in the Republic of Mexico; that he is still so acting and, as such, is accountable to the courts of that country for all the Mexican assets of said estate; that under the law of Mexico in force at the death of the decedent a deposit in a Mexican bank is a portion of the Mexican estate for which the Mexican executor is accountable there; that this bank account was listed in the inventory there as a part of the Mexican estate; that under the applicable law of Mexico the probate proceedings in that country are in no sense ancillary to but are entirely independent of the probate proceedings in California; that under that law the Mexican executor is held accountable to the Mexican courts for any deposit in a Mexican bank; that under that law, upon the closing of the estate in Mexico, the Mexican executor will be required to account to the Mexican courts and to distribute all remaining property direct to the beneficiaries of the Mexican estate; and that under the Mexican law this executor is accountable to the courts of Mexico for the amount of this bank deposit and is not accountable therefor in this proceeding.

[4-6] The appellants rely upon In re Ortiz's Estate, 86 Cal. 306, 24 P. 1034, 21 Am.St.Rep. 44; In re Estate of Grivel, 199 Cal. 351, 249 P. 184; In re Estate of Grivel, 128 Cal.App. 186, 17 P.2d 172, and In re Estate of Barreiro, 125 Cal.App. 752, 14 P.2d 786. While some of the language used in those cases is favorable to the appellants' contentions here that language is largely based upon the relation between domiciliary administration and ancillary administration as the same exists as between various states in this country. Moreover, each case must depend upon its own particular facts. In the instant case, the evidence supports the court's findings as to the nature and effect of the pertinent laws of Mexico and it fully appears that no part of this bank account ever came into the hands of the California executor, that it did come into the hands of Withington as a Mexican executor, and that he must account therefor to the courts of that country. While it may be conceded that a California executor must be charged with everything which came into his hands as such executor, and further that he may be charged with property which he should have taken into possession as such executor or which, in due course, should be distributed to the California estate, it is quite another matter to hold that he must ignore the courts of another jurisdiction or to charge him with property which has not, and which cannot, come into his possession as California executor. As was said in Re Estate of May, 112 Cal.App. 673, 297 P. 955, 957, "Under the circumstances it would have been futile to make an order that would not be binding in Mexican jurisdiction." The matter was a question of fact for the trial court and the evidence, while conflicting, supports the finding made.

It is next contended that the court erred in not charging the executor with $72,605.33 as the loss on a so-called "stockholders' loan" to the Aztec Brewing Company. In the original inventory, filed in 1926, this loan was valued at the amount above stated. In 1941, these appellants petitioned for reappraisement of properties belonging to the estate, alleging that, through error, various properties had been excessively valued. Their petition was granted and a reappraisement was made and filed by a state inheritance tax appraiser in which he appraised this item as being of no value at the time the testator died.

From the evidence it appears that the Aztec Brewing Company, a Mexican corporation, was formed about 1923, Carl Withington having one-half of the stock for which he paid $25,000. Other stockholders contributed a like amount. They found they needed more money and Withington loaned the company the amount in question and the other stockholders loaned a similar amount. These were called stockholders' loans and there is evidence that it was understood and agreed that the loans were to be repaid when and if the enterprise made sufficient profit to make this possible. Business was bad for some years and in 1927, some two years after the death of Withington, the brewery was entirely destroyed by fire. It was rebuilt with money borrowed by the other incorporators, the Withington estate not participating. There is no evidence that it made any money and by 1932 the Mexican corporation owed large sums of money, including a very large claim of the Mexican Government. At that time another Aztec Brewing Company was incorporated in California, which established a brewery here and which is still operating. Some of the assets of the Mexican corporation were turned over to the California corporation and brought to this state. One half of the stock of the California corporation was issued to a trustee and is being held by that trustee for the benefit of the Carl Withington Estate, but there is evidence that it cannot be turned over to the estate until matters in connection with the claim of the Mexican Government, various debts and the contributions of the other stockholders after the fire are settled and adjusted. The president of the California corporation testified that this estate has some interest in that corporation but that he did not know the extent or amount of this interest.

[7] It is argued that the executor could have collected a part of this debt since a considerable amount of the assets of the Mexican corporation were turned over to the California corporation, and that the court should have charged the executor with the total loss of this debt because the estate's interest in the Aztec Brewing Company was reappraised at $35,000, and it follows that the corporation must have had assets of at least $70,000 in excess of all of its liabilities, including these stockholders' loans. There is ample evidence that this stockholders' loan was valueless at the time the testator died. The evidence would justify the inference that it has not increased in value since that time and that while the estate still has an interest in the reorganized company that interest probably does not exceed the original investment in stock in the Mexican company. The fact that the persons who formed the California corporation still recognize that the estate has some interest therein does not prove that the original Mexican corporation had assets sufficient to pay all of its debts, including these stockholders' loans. While a confused situation exists, whatever interest the estate had in the Aztec Brewing Company still exists and has been turned over by this executor to the new administrator of the estate, and the benefit of that interest, whatever it is, will accrue to the estate. Whatever else may be said about this stockholders' loan it cannot be held that the trial court was compelled to find that the value thereof was lost through any act of this executor. The evidence was insufficient to establish any loss occurring through his fault. Whatever the present situation, any possible asset still remains, and it neither appears that this debt could have been collected at any time nor that the obligation is now worth less than it was when the decedent died.

[8] It is next urged that the court should have charged the executor with the amount of two notes which it is said he permitted to outlaw. One of these notes was secured by a trust deed on real property in Kern County which, of course, has never outlawed. The trustor's interest in this property was purchased by one of the sisters, Mrs. LeMay. She later sold the property and kept the money, but she testified it was by mutual agreement. The other note was secured by a mortgage on certain lots in San Diego. The note was never worth more than the security. Mrs. LeMay also purchased the mortgagor's interest in these lots and testified that she was holding this as "family property". The evidence, although conflicting, supports the court's action in this regard.

[9] It is next contended that the executor should have been charged with a $5,000 loss on account of an unauthorized loan to one Rodney Clarke. It appears that in his lifetime the deceased had loaned Clarke $10,500 on notes secured by 500 head of cattle. The executor subsequently loaned Clarke $5,000 in an attempt to save his cattle business, to the end that the entire debt could be collected. While the attempt was unsuccessful the $5,000 was loaned in Mexico from funds in the Mexican bank, which advanced the funds and kept the papers. Aside from any other considerations, this item is one for which this executor is accountable to the Mexican courts as a part of the estate being administered in that country.

[10] It is next contended that a certain $800 was withdrawn from the estate funds by the executor and should have been charged to him. This grew out of a transaction between the executor and his sister Mrs. LeMay concerning rentals from Kern County property in which the executor had a personal interest. Again, the evidence is conflicting but portions thereof support the implied finding that this money belonged to the executor personally.

[11] It is next argued that the executor should have been charged with the entire amount of rentals collected by him from "the Associated oil property", a portion of the property in Kern County in which the executor, his three sisters and the estate were all interested. For many years Mrs. LeMay had collected these rentals, none of which were paid into this estate. For some sixteen months, beginning in December, 1937, this executor collected these rentals. It appears, without question, that the estate's share of the rentals thus collected by him have been correctly accounted for by him. It is contended, however, that he should have put into the estate funds the entire amounts collected, letting the estate distribute to the various owners their respective portions. Since the interest of the estate is in no way affected we see no reason for disturbing the court's finding and conclusion in this matter.

[12] It is next urged that the court improperly allowed the executor credit for $5,000 paid to an attorney who filed a claim for legal services performed for the decedent during the last three or four months of his lifetime. This claim was filed within the time for presenting claims, was approved by the executor and by the court, and was paid. It was again approved by the court in the settlement of this account. It is argued that the only service was drawing the decedent's will and that the evidence on this hearing was too "meager". There is some evidence of other services included in the claim and nothing more than a conflict in the evidence appears.

[13] It is next urged that a payment of $5,000 on account of executor's fees and two payments of $5,000 and $850 for attorney's fees were unauthorized, and that the court erred in refusing to charge these amounts to the executor. The two $5,000 items were paid pursuant to an order of the court dated February 18, 1927. The $850 item was for certain special services in connection with a ten-year lease and was paid pursuant to an order of court dated July 9, 1937. The only argument with respect to these items in the opening brief is that the orders of court authorizing their payment were invalid under former section 1616, Code Civ.Proc. because no notice was given of the applications for such allowance. In their reply brief the appellants further argue, with respect to the two $5,000 items, that at the time these allowances were made a relatively small part of the work had been performed. No facts are set forth but we are invited to examine the voluminous record in the hope of discovering an abuse of discretion. Assuming that the original orders were irregular it appears that the matters were again thoroughly presented to the court on the hearing of this account, and since there is no clear showing of an abuse of discretion on the part of the court his conclusions on these matters may not be disturbed on this appeal. In re Estate of Hardenberg, 18 Cal.App.2d 307, 63 P.2d 1200.

It is next contended that the payment of $225,000 to the widow as her alleged share of the community property was unauthorized and illegal, and that the court should have charged the executor with that amount.

After the termination of the will contest in 1929 negotiations for settlement of the widow's community interest in the estate were conducted which resulted, in the spring of 1931, in an agreement under which the widow was to be paid and was to accept $225,000 in full settlement of all her claims. The evidence justifies the inference that all three sisters consented and agreed to this although Mrs. LeMay testified that she did not know of the arrangement until after the amount was paid. The agreement was made subject to the approval of the court. On March 30, 1931, the executor filed a "Petition For Partial Distribution" in which it was alleged that the estate was but little indebted and that the amounts in question could be distributed without loss to the creditors of the estate. It was prayed that the executor should be authorized and directed to distribute to the widow $225,000, being the amount of her share of the community property and that he be further authorized and directed to distribute the sum of $10,000 each to himself and to his three sisters. On April 10, 1931, the court entered a decree of partial distribution directing that $10,000 each be paid to the executor and his three sisters, and also finding that the widow was entitled to one half of the community property; that the sum of $225,000 is not greater than her one half share of the community property and that she was entitled to not less than $225,000 upon the final distribution of the estate; that these respective amounts might be distributed as prayed for in the petition without injury to the estate and that it is for the best interest of the estate and all of the heirs that the said amounts be distributed as prayed for. It was then ordered that these respective amounts were thereby distributed to these persons, respectively, and that the executor "is hereby authorized and directed to pay out of the funds of the said estate the amounts above set forth." Pursuant to that order $225,000 was paid to the widow and $10,000 each to the executor and his three sisters. The widow signed a receipt in which she agreed to pay any inheritance tax if one should ever be assessed against her interest in the estate.

Thereafter, and on July 24, 1933, the executor filed a petition alleging that while the will provided that the executor should serve without bond one had been required on request of the widow; that since that time the widow had received her full amount of the estate and had receipted therefor; that it was a burden upon the estate to continue to pay the premium on the bond; and that the only persons entitled to participate in the further distribution of the estate were the executor and his three sisters. It was then prayed that the bond theretofore issued be discharged. With that petition was filed a statement signed by the three sisters to the effect that they were the only persons interested in the estate with the exception of the executor, and requesting that an order be entered cancelling the bond as prayed for by the executor. On August 5, 1933, the court entered an order discharging the bond.

The decree of April 10, 1931, under which these payments were made, has not been set aside and was never appealed from or in any way attacked until this proceeding, more than ten years later. The appellants now contend that under the statutes then in force the court had no authority to enter any such decree, that the widow was not entitled to receive her community interest until the estate was finally closed, and that in any event the court had no jurisdiction to make the order of distribution because the inheritance taxes had not then been paid. In making this attack the appellants have not offered to return the $30,000 which they received under this decree and no mention is made of the fact that the estate has benefited through the stopping of the family allowance to the widow, which ceased when the decree was entered.

[14] The respondent, in view of the statutes then in force and a number of cases, including Gladding v. Superior Court, 7 Cal.2d 408, 60 P.2d 857, argues that the decree of April 10, 1931, is a valid adjudication which is binding and conclusive upon the appellants. It is unnecessary, however, to pass upon this contention. Assuming that this procedure was unauthorized by any statute then in force and that the decree entered was beyond the jurisdiction of the court we think these appellants are estopped from now insisting that the executor be charged with the amount thus paid to the widow. There are no interested parties except the executor and these appellants. It is stated in the respondent's brief that the inheritance taxes are now paid. This is not denied in the appellants' briefs, and that such is the fact appears in another appeal in this estate which is being considered herewith. There are no outside parties or interests which are affected. It rather clearly appears that these appellants consented to this compromise with the widow, to the entering of this decree, and to the making of the payment in question. If there can be any question that Mrs. LeMay did not fully approve of it in advance she admits that she had knowledge of it when she joined in asking that the bond be discharged, and she thereby ratified what had been done. Moreover, there is no showing that these appellants have been in any way injured by this payment. Even after reappraisement, the inheritance tax appraiser's report filed on February 19, 1942, shows $254,371.44 as the "community exemption" of the widow. We are pointed to no evidence that the widow thus received more than she would receive had the matter been handled in a more regular manner.

[15] A further consideration in this connection is that these appellants in 1939, for a valuable consideration, entered into and signed an agreement in which they stated that they had had knowledge of and had acquiesced in all of the acts of this respondent as executor of this estate and that they released him from all claims which they might have arising from his said acts. This agreement has not been set aside and, so far as here appears, it presents a further ratification of the payment in question. In spite of any irregularity, since no third parties are involved, it would appear to be unjust in the extreme to permit these appellants to upset that decree, to which they consented, and to compel the executor to pay that amount into the estate while they themselves keep the $30,000 which they received through the decree which they are now attacking.

[16] It is next contended that the court should have charged the executor with six items totaling $9,750, representing advances made by the executor to Norma Withington and Mrs. LeMay on various occasions between 1934 and 1938. It is argued that these advances were made without decrees authorizing partial distribution and that such advances cannot be considered upon the hearing of an account but can only be allowed as a credit against the respective distributable shares upon final distribution. In re Estate of Ross, 179 Cal. 358, 182 P. 303, In re Estate of Willey, 140 Cal. 238, 73 P. 998, and In re Estate of Bennett, 13 Cal.2d 354, 90 P.2d 84, 126 A.L.R. 771, are cited. While it may be conceded that this is the general rule the situation is somewhat different here where it is not a mere matter of bookkeeping. The executor has been removed and if he is compelled to pay these amounts into the estate the assets of the estate would be increased that much and an ordinary final distribution would not protect his rights. On the other hand, these matters may easily be adjusted upon a final distribution. These payments were made to these appellants at their request and they still retain the advances of which they complain. Undoubtedly a creditor or a third party could object to the allowance of credit for such advances in an account where the matter could be better adjusted on final distribution, as indicated in the cases above cited. No rights of creditors or third parties are here involved, these appellants are in no way injured and, under the circumstances which here appear, they are estopped from contesting the allowance of these credits. As between these parties the respondent should not be charged with these amounts and compelled personally to again pay them to the estate. In re Estate of Kennedy, 120 Cal. 458, 52 P. 820; In re Estate of Guglielmi, 138 Cal.App. 80, 31 P.2d 1078.

[17] It is next contended that the respondent should have been charged with $35,000 represented by a cashier's check for that amount which was delivered to him in 1925 by the deceased in his lifetime. It is argued that this check was given "in a cover-up transaction by the deceased to avoid payment of federal income taxes," and that in reality it was property belonging to the deceased at the time of his death. While an attempt was made to establish such a fact it is readily apparent that the appellants were unable to produce the requisite proof. Assuming that there was a conflict in the evidence in this regard, the evidence amply supports the court's conclusion that this amount belonged to the executor personally.

Beyond question, this estate was handled in an irregular manner over a period of many years. While much of the fault lies with the respondent his sisters participated therein to a not inconsiderable extent. They had knowledge of and acquiesced in many of the things of which they or their representatives now complain. By common consent the estate was treated too much as a family affair and this seems to have been largely responsible for the confused situation which resulted. As finally presented to the trial court, things had been done which could not be undone and the court was faced with a difficult factual situation and with many practical problems. In our opinion, it did as well as could have been done under the existing circumstances and we find neither reversible error nor an abuse of that discretion which must rest in, and which here is peculiarly appropriate to, that court.

The decree appealed from is affirmed.

MARKS and GRIFFIN, JJ., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 105

In re WITHINGTON'S ESTATE.

SWEITZER et al. v. WITHINGTON et al.

Civ. 3090.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.
Aug. 3, 1943.

1. Executors and administrators 🔑35(15)

Where evidence was sufficient to show that estate of testator had real basis for claim against estate of legatee, and that same individual was administratrix of both estates, and that administratrix was taking position that she was not required to proceed against the legatee's estate on behalf of the testator's estate, evidence justified order removing administratrix of testator's estate. Probate Code, § 521.

2. Executors and administrators 🔑35(19)

Although evidence justified order removing administratrix, failure of court to make finding required reversal of order.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; L. N. Turrentine, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Carl Withington, deceased, wherein a petition was filed for the removal of Callie Belle Sweitzer as administratrix of the estate of Carl Withington, deceased. From an order of removal, Callie Belle Sweitzer, individually and as administratrix, and others appeal, opposed by Lysle Woodward Withington and others.

Order of removal reversed with directions.

Frank Pomeranz and Charles C. Crouch, both of San Diego, for appellants.

Frank A. Gazlay, of San Diego, Mathes & Sheppard and Wm. C. Mathes, all of Los Angeles, and Kay Parker, of Beverley Hills, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is another appeal in the estate of Carl Withington, in which a decision involving the final account of the executor was this day filed. In re Estate of Withington, Cal.App., 140 P.2d 482. This appeal is from an order removing Callie Belle Sweitzer as administratrix with the will annexed of said estate.

Harriet LeMay died on April 15, 1942, leaving all her property to Callie Belle Sweitzer, who was appointed administratrix of her estate. She was also appointed administratrix of the Carl Withington estate. In August, 1942, the wife of Lysle Withington, to whom he had assigned all his interest in the estate of Carl Withington, filed a petition asking that Callie Belle Sweitzer as the administratrix of the Withington estate be required to cite herself as administratrix of the estate of Mrs. LeMay to render a full account of all moneys, rentals or property received by Mrs. LeMay during her lifetime which belonged to the estate of Carl Withington. An objection to this petition was sustained on the ground that jurisdiction over the acts of Mrs. Sweitzer, as administratrix of the LeMay estate, is in the probate court of Kern County where that estate is pending.

Thereafter, another petition was filed seeking the removal of Mrs. Sweitzer as administratrix of Carl's estate. It was alleged, among other things, that Mrs. Sweitzer was represented by the same attorneys in her separate capacities as administratrix of Carl's estate, as one of the beneficiaries of that estate, as executrix of the will of Norma Withington who had also died, as sole beneficiary of that estate, as administratrix of the estate of Mrs. LeMay and as sole beneficiary of that estate; that Carl's estate has a claim for rents, issues and profits against the estate of Mrs. LeMay; that Mrs. Sweitzer, as administratrix of Carl's estate has failed in and has no intention of, proceeding with the enforcement of this claim against Mrs. LeMay's estate, which is alleged on information and belief to amount to more than $20,000, exclusive of interest; that this claim can be prosecuted and collected only by Mrs.

Sweitzer in her capacity as administratrix of Carl's estate acting against herself in her capacity as administratrix of Mrs. LeMay's estate; and that the various capacities of Mrs. Sweitzer are adverse and inconsistent.

At the hearing of this petition, on September 4, 1942, the court pointed out that Mrs. Sweitzer, as the representative of Mrs. LeMay, was in the position of a trustee with respect to the Carl Withington estate; that she occupied conflicting and adverse positions in her various capacities; that it was to her personal interest to keep all property in the LeMay estate rather than have it turned over to the estate of Carl Withington; that her own statement in her affidavit in resistance to this petition disclosed that there could be no true adversary feeling in any type of litigation between her and the LeMay estate; that four months had gone by and no contingent claim had been filed by her against the LeMay estate; and that the time limit for filing such a claim was drawing near. The court then pointed out to Mrs. Sweitzer that she did not have to file a liquidated claim and that she could file a contingent claim so as to keep the LeMay estate responsible, whereas if she let the six months go by the claim might be lost. An order was then entered continuing the hearing and ordering Mrs. Sweitzer, as administratrix of Carl's estate, to file, within ten days, a claim for any moneys which might be due or to become due to the estate of Carl Withington by reason of moneys or property belonging to that estate which had gone into the possession of Mrs. LeMay during her lifetime.

Such a claim was not filed but on September 16, 1942, Mrs. Sweitzer filed an affidavit stating that she was unable to verify such a claim and for that reason could not comply with the order of the court without committing perjury and, further, that she was advised and believes that under the law of this state there is no obligation on the part of the administratrix of the LeMay estate to account for anything to the Withington estate.

On September 25, 1942, a further hearing was had on the petition for removal. At the conclusion of the hearing the court pointed out that the position taken by Mrs. Sweitzer would stop at the threshold any inquiry into the matters in question, that Mrs. Sweitzer had conflicting interests while representing both estates, and that there might well be a natural inclination on her part to keep the property in the estate in which she had a larger interest. An order was then entered removing her as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Carl Withington. Mrs. Sweitzer, in her various capacities, has appealed from that order.

Insofar as the merits of this appeal are concerned, it is contended that the evidence received at the hearing was not sufficient to establish that the estate of Carl Withington had any lawful claim against the estate of Mrs. LeMay, and that it was an abuse of discretion to order the removal of the appellant "because she was unwilling to commit perjury." With respect to the latter contention it may be observed that all that was required of Mrs. Sweitzer was that she file a claim within the time allowed in order to protect the interests of the other estate and it was made very clear to her that only a contingent claim need be filed. All that was required was that she set forth the facts and no element of perjury was involved. Elizalde v. Murphy, 163 Cal. 681, 126 P. 978. With respect to the power of removal possessed by the court in such a case section 521 of the Probate Code provides for such removal whenever a judge has reason to believe that mismanagement of the estate has occurred. In Re Estate of Bell, 135 Cal. 194, 67 P. 123, it was held, in effect, that an executor may be removed for mismanagement and neglect where he has an adverse interest and has assumed conflicting duties.

[1] There can be no question here that the evidence was sufficient to show that the estate of Carl Withington had a real basis for a claim against the estate of Mrs. LeMay, and it clearly appeared from the evidence that Mrs. Sweitzer, as administratrix of both estates, had adverse interests as well as conflicting duties and obligations. Many of the facts were well known to the court as it had only recently completed a prolonged trial in the account proceedings in the Carl Withington estate, where much evidence was received which was pertinent and material here. A great deal of this evidence was pointed out and referred to at the hearing here involved and the parties hereto have stipulated that the record on the appeal in the account proceeding may be used as a part of the record on this appeal. It appears that Carl Withington at the time of his death owned an interest in certain real property in Kern County, as a tenant in common with his three sisters and his brother. The rentals from the common property averaged about $10,000 a year. For many years after Carl's death Mrs. LeMay collected these rentals and in large part either kept the proceeds or gave portions thereof to her two sisters. Only a small part of its share of these rentals seem to have been turned over to the Carl Withington estate. Mrs. LeMay testified in the accounting proceeding that she had collected these rentals, that she had kept no record because she was not required to do so by her brother and sisters, that she had never made an accounting for them, and that through the years she had kept this money except as she had given her sisters whatever they needed from time to time. She also testified that she had collected and kept three or four other amounts which would seem to have probably belonged to the estate of Carl Withington.

Assuming, but not holding, that certain affidavits and exhibits relied on by the appellant were sufficient to create a conflict in the evidence this is the most that can be said, and it clearly appears that the evidence is sufficient to sustain findings which would amply justify the removal of Mrs. Sweitzer as administratrix of the Carl Withington estate. A further consideration is that the record discloses that Mrs. Sweitzer was taking the position that she was not required to proceed in any manner against the estate of Mrs. LeMay on behalf of the estate of Carl Withington, that she had no intention of doing so if she could avoid it, and that she directly refused to carry out the order of the court in this regard. Without going into it more in detail it is sufficient to say, from a factual standpoint, that the evidence amply justified the order of removal. We are unable to see how the court could reasonably have reached any other conclusion.

[2] Unfortunately, however, the court failed to make any findings whatever. This was held prejudicially erroneous in Re Estate of Pendell, 216 Cal. 384, 14 P.2d 506. This requires a reversal of the order appealed from although the circumstances are such that no further hearing, as to the facts, is either necessary or desirable.

A special administrator of the estate of Carl Withington was appointed, upon the removal of Mrs. Sweitzer, and it is probable that many things have been done by him in that capacity. Should the court, after making findings, again desire to make an order removing Mrs. Sweitzer as administratrix of said estate, that order could well be entered nunc pro tunc as of the date of the order from which this appeal was taken, in order to preserve the status quo and to avoid further unnecessary proceedings.

The order of removal is reversed with directions to make and file findings, and to thereafter make and enter an appropriate order.

MARKS and GRIFFIN, JJ., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 110

WITHINGTON v. COLLINS et al.

Civ. 3093.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.
Aug. 3, 1943.

1. Partition 🔑65

Where disputes arise between parties to action for partition relating to their respective rights or interests, such disputes may be litigated and determined in that action. Code Civ.Proc. § 759.

2. Partition 🔑48

The statute regarding partition was intended to make judgment conclusive on all persons interested and not to permit the matter to be taken up piecemeal and therefore provision is made for bringing in persons having future rights or interests. Code Civ.Proc. § 759.

3. Partition 🔑62
Pleading 🔑362(1)

In partition action, action of court in striking from answer allegation that transfer of cotenant's interest in property to plaintiff was fraudulent as to other tenants in common, and in decreeing partition without passing on question whether plaintiff had any interest in property through transfer under which she claimed, was improper. Code Civ.Proc. § 759.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; W. L. Bradshaw, Judge.

Action for partition by Willa Hayes Withington against Patrick Collins, wherein Earl Raymond Prince filed a cross-complaint. From an interlocutory judgment, Callie Belle Sweitzer, individually and as executrix of the last will and testament of Norma Withington, and as administratrix of the estate of Harriet W. LeMay, and others, appeal.

Interlocutory judgment reversed and cause remanded with directions.

Charles C. Crouch, Frank Pomeranz, and Richard F. Kahle, all of San Diego, for appellants.

Borton, Petrini, Conron & Borton and Harry M. Conron, all of Bakersfield, H. R. Conklin and Frank A. Gazlay, both of San Diego, and Mathes & Sheppard, Wm. C. Mathes, and Paul M. Gregg, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is another appeal growing out of the affairs of the estate of Carl Withington. This action is one for partition, the plaintiff being the wife of Lysle Withington, the former executor of the Carl Withington estate.

So far as material here, the complaint alleged that the plaintiff is the owner of an undivided 11/60ths interest in certain real property in Kern County; that Norma Louise Withington, Harriet W. LeMay, Callie Belle Sweitzer and the estate of Carl Withington are the owners of the remaining interests in this property (subject to certain encumbrances about which there is no controversy); that Lysle Withington had been removed as executor of the Carl Withington estate; that on August 20, 1940, the plaintiff and her husband deeded their interest in the property to a title company in trust to secure their obligations of the defendants American Surety Company, the surety on the husband's bond as executor of the Carl Withington estate, and to Frank A. Gazlay who had rendered them certain services as an attorney; that they received back from the title company a declaration of trust providing that, after payment of these obligations, any remainder of the proceeds from the interest conveyed should be paid to the plaintiff; and that the property could not be partitioned without prejudice to the owners. It was prayed that the property should be sold, that the interests of the respective parties should be determined, and that the proceeds should be divided and distributed in accordance with the respective interests of the parties.

Harriet W. LeMay, Callie Belle Sweitzer, Norma Withington and Norma Withington as administratrix of the estate of Carl Withington filed an answer to the complaint in which, among other things, they denied that the plaintiff is the owner of an interest in this property alleging, in this connection, that Lysle Withington had been appointed executor of the estate of Carl Withington; that the American Surety Company had furnished a bond for him as such executor in the sum of $250,000; that on August 25, 1939, a citation was issued requiring Lysle Withington to render an account as executor of that estate; that on July 19, 1939, Lysle Withington had, without consideration, conveyed his interest in the property in question to the plaintiff; that this was done with full knowledge of both that Lysle Withington was short in his accounts with said estate and with the intention of avoiding any judgment that might be rendered against him on account of said shortage; that on July 10, 1940, Lysle Withington's powers as executor were suspended and he was later removed as such executor; that on August 20, 1940, the American Surety Company and Frank A. Gazlay, knowing that Lysle Withington was short in his accounts as executor of the Carl Withington estate, had caused and procured the plaintiff to convey her interest in this property to this trust company as security for their claims and for the purpose of encumbering the property so as to make it unavailable to pay any judgment that might be rendered against Lysle Withington for such shortage; that at the hearing in the probate court, on the account proceedings, Lysle Withington had admitted that he owed the Carl Withington estate about $40,000; and that judgment in the account proceedings in the Withington estate had not yet been entered.

The plaintiff moved to strike from this answer the allegations to which we have just referred and this motion was granted by the court. Thereafter, this action was tried. At the trial, very little testimony was taken, most of the evidence being documentary. Norma Withington and Mrs. LeMay having died in the meantime, their executrix and administratrix, respectively, had been substituted. The attorneys for the parties who filed the answer, to which we have referred, stipulated that referees might be appointed to partition the property and that the court might order the property sold, in the event that these referees reported to the court that a partition in kind was not practicable. These attorneys, however, reserved the right to attack on appeal any decree which might be entered on the ground that the court had erred in striking from their answer the matters which we have heretofore briefly summarized.

Although findings were waived the court entered an interlocutory judgment, which included findings. Among other things, the court found that the property in question belonged in fee to, and was owned by, the plaintiff, Callie Belle Sweitzer, the heirs and devisees of Mrs. LeMay, the heirs and devisees of Norma Withington and the heirs and devisees of Carl Withington, as tenants in common and in the respective proportions as set forth in the complaint. It was ordered that the referees who were therein appointed proceed with the partition of the real property in question and report to the court how it was divided between the parties, that if the referees should report to the court that the premises could not be partitioned the premises should be sold as required by law, and that after the payment of all costs, with the admitted encumbrances and attorney's fees to be later fixed, the proceeds should be distributed to the owners in accordance with their respective interests. It was then further ordered that the proceeds of the sale of the property, to the extent that the plaintiff would otherwise be entitled to receive the same, should be paid to the trust company above referred to for the purpose of carrying out the terms of the declaration of trust, whereby any such proceeds should be applied to any amounts that might be due to the American Surety Company and to Frank A. Gazlay and the remainder paid over to the plaintiff.

Callie Belle Sweitzer individually, as executrix of the last will of Norma Withington, and as administratrix of the estate of Harriet W. LeMay appealed from the interlocutory judgment. In their briefs, these appellants have been joined by the presently acting special administrator of the estate of Carl Withington.

It is contended that the court erred in striking from the answer of these appellants the allegations setting up the defense that the transfer of Lysle Withington's interest in this property to the plaintiff was fraudulent as to the other tenants in common, and in ordering the property partitioned without determining the question as to the plaintiff's interest in the property.

[1, 2] Section 759, Code Civ.Proc. provides, in part, that "The rights of the several parties, plaintiff as well as defendant, may be put in issue, tried, and determined in such action." In Morenhout v. Higuera, 32 Cal. 289, it was held that where disputes arise between parties to an action for partition relating to their respective rights or interests such disputes may be litigated and determined in that action and it was then said: "and no partition can be made until the respective interests of all the parties have been ascertained and settled by a trial." This rule was followed in Martin v. Walker, 58 Cal. 590; Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 529, 2 P. 418; Fonner v. Martens, 186 Cal. 623, 200 P. 405; Varni v. Devoto, 10 Cal.App. 304, 101 P. 934; Buhrmeister v. Buhrmeister, 10 Cal.App. 392, 102 P. 221; Kuns v. Dias, 32 Cal.App. 651, 163 P. 1052; Middlecoff v. Cornise, 155 Cal. 185, 100 P. 232, 17 Ann.Cas. 1159; and Lent v. H. C. Morris Co., 25 Cal. App.2d 305, 77 P.2d 301. In Ivancovich v. Weilenman, 144 Cal. 757, 78 P. 268, it was held that the statutory provisions relating to partition were intended to make the one judgment of partition final and conclusive on all persons interested and not to permit the matter to be taken up piecemeal and that, accordingly, provision is made for bringing in not only tenants in common but persons having future rights or interests. In Ritzman v. Ritzman, 190 Cal. 505, 213 P. 493, in speaking of the provision of section 758, Code Civ.Proc., that a defendant in a partition action must set forth his interest in the property, it was held that this requirement was intended to be mandatory.

[3] The respondents concede that this is the law but argue that the defense which was stricken from the answer, in effect, merely alleged that the plaintiff and her husband had conveyed to this title company all of their interest in this real property "to be held in trust as security for payment of the claims of certain creditors, and otherwise for the use and benefit of the plaintiff." It is then argued, citing section 3432 of the Civil Code and certain cases, that a debtor has the right to prefer one creditor over another, except where bankruptcy intervenes within four months of the conveyance, that the appellants here are criticising a conveyance operating as a preference of existing creditors on the ground that it may prejudice another possible creditor, and that since the plaintiff and her husband had the right to prefer certain of their creditors the allegations of the answer which were stricken presented no issue which required determination by the court.

Assuming that the respondents are correct in their contention that a valid preference was thus created in favor of the American Surety Company and Frank A. Gazlay, that the appellants may not now set the same aside, and that the allegations of the answer which were stricken constituted no defense insofar as the rights of the American Surety Company and Frank A. Gazlay as beneficiaries of the trust agreement are concerned, this does not cover the entire situation. The respondents overlook and ignore the fact that under the trust arrangement any balance remaining after these obligations are taken care of is to be paid to the plaintiff under the terms of the interlocutory judgment. So far as here appears, the plaintiff is given a part of the proceeds under the terms of the decree, although her right thereto has not yet been determined. While a judgment has now been entered in the account proceeding that judgment is not yet final and the amount or extent of the obligations to the American Surety Company and Frank A. Gazlay has not yet been determined and it cannot now be held that there will be no balance coming to the plaintiff or that she has no remaining interest in the property which is the subject of the partition action, insofar as the judgment appealed from is concerned. While she is thus given an interest in the property by that judgment her right to that interest was directly attacked by the allegations of the answer which were stricken therefrom, and the appellants were deprived of the opportunity of proving, if they could, their allegations to the effect that the transfer to the plaintiff from her husband of his interest in the property was fraudulent and void as against the rights and claims of the appellants. Her remaining interest, upon which the appellants might establish a claim, may be very substantial if the judgment against Lysle Withington in the account proceeding exceeds in amount the obligations to the American Surety Company and Frank A. Gazlay, as these are finally determined. It follows that the court erred in decreeing a partition and ordering any remaining balance to be paid over to the plaintiff without first passing upon and determining the question presented, as to whether or not the plaintiff had any interest in the property through the assignment under which she claims.

There was little or no controversy on the other issues which were tried, and the evidence on those issues can easily be resubmitted. The appellants should be permitted to amend their answer and to again allege the defense which was stricken from their former answer, and that issue should be tried with the rest of the cause and determined in connection with any decree of partition which is entered.

The interlocutory judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings consistent with the views herein expressed.

MARKS and GRIFFIN, JJ., concur.

22 Cal.2d 287

CALIFORNIA DRIVE-IN RESTAURANT ASS'N et al. v. CLARK et al.

L. A. 18093.

Supreme Court of California.
June 16, 1943.

Rehearing Denied July 15, 1943.

1. Officers 🔑103

Generally, rules for construction of statutes govern construction of administrative agencies' rules and regulations.

2. Statutes 🔑158, 159

The presumption is against repeals of statutes by implication, especially where prior act has been generally understood and acted upon, and to overcome such presumption, the two acts must be irreconcilable, clearly repugnant, and so inconsistent that they cannot operate concurrently.

3. Statutes 🔑184

The purpose and object sought to be accomplished by legislation is important factor in determining legislative intent.

4. Master and servant 🔑69

The statute requiring employers to post notices that gratuities given their employees by patrons go to employer and are not shared by employees or notices of extent to which such gratuities are shared between employers and employees did not impliedly annul Industrial Welfare Commission's order prohibiting restaurant operators from including tips or gratuities received by their female and minor employees as part of legal minimum wages fixed by such order, as such statute and order were not irreconcilable, but entirely harmonious. St. 1937, pp. 202, 203, §§ 350, 352, 356.

5. Statutes 🔑219

While construction of statute by administrative agency charged with its enforcement must be considered by courts in ascertaining meaning of statute, a clearly erroneous administrative interpretation of unambiguous statute cannot alter clear meaning thereof.

6. Appeal and error 🔑842(2)

A trial court's finding that Industrial Welfare Commission acted in excess of its jurisdiction in adopting order prohibiting restaurant operators from including their female and minor employees' tips or gratuities as part of their legal minimum wages was "conclusion of law" not binding on Supreme Court.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Conclusion of Law".

7. Constitutional law 🔑89(4), 276

In regulation of employees' wages and hours by legislative authority, constitutional guarantees of freedom of contract must give way to reasonable police regulations. Const.Cal. art. 1, §§ 1, 13; art. 20, § 18; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

8. Constitutional law 🔑89(4), 276

The legislative power under Constitution to restrict freedom of contract by reasonable police regulations may be exercised in public interest with respect to contracts between employers and employees. Const. Cal. art. 1, §§ 1, 13; art. 20, § 18; U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14.

9. Master and servant 🔑10

In dealing with relation of employer and employee, legislature has wide field of discretion in order that health and safety may be suitably protected and peace and good order promoted through regulations designed to insure wholesome conditions of work and freedom from oppression.

10. Constitutional law 🔑70(3)

Legislative response to deep-seated conviction as to evil of inadequate wages and means adapted to check it, as evidenced by many states' enactment of minimum wage laws, cannot be regarded as arbitrary or capricious, which is all that court may decide, though wisdom of legislative policy be regarded as debatable and its effects uncertain.

11. Constitutional law 🔑70(3)

Whether employees' tips, from viewpoint of social welfare, should be counted as part of their legal minimum wages fixed by statute, is not for judicial decision.

12. Constitutional law 🔑48

The presumption is that legislature had adequate and reasonable basis for its police regulations and that statute providing for such regulations is constitutional, and only question for court to decide is whether legislature acted arbitrarily or capriciously.

13. Constitutional law 🔑89(4), 276

The Industrial Welfare Commission's order, prohibiting employers from including employees' tips or gratuities as part of their legal minimum wages fixed by such order, has reasonable basis and hence is not invalid as unconstitutional interference with "freedom of contract" between employers and employees. St. 1937, p. 215, § 1182; Const.Cal. art. 1, §§ 1, 13; art. 20, § 18; U.S.C.A.Const.Amend. 14.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Freedom of Contract".

14. Constitutional law 🔑208(7), 238(2)

The Industrial Welfare Commission's order, prohibiting restaurant operators from including their female and minor employees' tips or gratuities as part of their legal minimum wages fixed by such order, is not unconstitutional as making improper "discrimination" between different employers and employees, as classification is reasonable. Const.Cal. art. 1, § 21; art. 4, § 25; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Discrimination".

15. Constitutional law 🔑208(7), 238(2)

Statutes applicable only to relation of employer and employee are not unconstitutional as "class legislation". Const.Cal. art. 1, § 21; art. 4, § 25; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Class Legislation".

16. Constitutional law 🔑238(2)

"Equal protection of the laws" is not denied by classification of occupations on reasonable basis, and classification may be based on matters personal to individuals acting as employees. Const.Cal. art. 1, § 21; art. 4, § 25; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Equal Protection of Law".

17. Constitutional law 🔑208(7), 238(2)

Classification of employees' occupations by statute may be based not only on employees' character, but on nature of employers' businesses. Const.Cal. art. 1, § 21; art. 4, § 25; U.S.C.A.Const.Amend. 14.

18. Constitutional law 🔑208(7), 238(2)

A statute dealing with employees in particular line of business does not create arbitrary "discrimination" merely because its operation is not extended to other lines of business having their own circumstances and conditions. Const.Cal. art. 1, § 21; art. 4, § 25; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

19. Appeal and error 🔑907(3)

On appeal on judgment roll alone, all of trial court's findings must be deemed supported by evidence, and respondents are bound by such findings.

20. Master and servant 🔑69

In action to enjoin enforcement of and declare invalid Industrial Welfare Commission's order prohibiting employers from including restaurant employees' tips as part of their legal minimum wages fixed by such order, where trial court found that every act required by statute to be done by commission in promulgation and adoption of order was done within time and in manner and form required by statute, fact that no finding by commission that wages fixed were adequate to meet costs of proper living, as specified in Minimum Wage Law, appeared on face of order, did not invalidate it. St.1921, p. 380, § 6(c).

21. Master and servant 🔑69

The Industrial Welfare Commission's adoption of order, prohibiting employers from including female and minor restaurant employees' tips as part of their legal minimum wages fixed by such order, was within power and authority delegated to commission by statute authorizing it to fix wages of women and minor employees adequate to meet necessary cost of proper living and sustain their health and welfare. St.1921, p. 379, § 6(a); Const. art. 20, § 17½.

22. Master and servant 🔑69

The Industrial Welfare Commission's power to provide safeguards to insure employees' receipt of their minimum wages and prevent evasion and subterfuge is "implied power" flowing from power delegated to commission by statute to fix minimum wages. St.1913, p. 632, § 6(a), St.1921, p. 379, § 6(a); Const. art. 20, § 17½.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Implied Power".

23. Officers 🔑103

While administrative agency, under guise of its rule making power, may not abridge or enlarge its authority or exceed powers given it by statute, an administrative board or officer has authority to adopt reasonable rules and regulations deemed necessary to due and efficient exercise of powers expressly granted.

◆

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles D. Ballard, Judge.

Action by the California Drive-in Restaurant Association and others against Margarete L. Clark, as Chief of the Division of Industrial Welfare of the Department of Industrial Relations, and others for an injunction against enforcement of a regulation of the Industrial Welfare Commission and a declaration of the invalidity thereof. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal.

Reversed.

Prior opinion, 129 P.2d 169.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., Earl Warren, former Atty. Gen., Burdette J. Daniels and Alberta Belford, Deputies Atty. Gen., and Leo L. Schaumer and E. A. Lackmann, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Thorpe & Bridges, Gerald Bridges, Frank R. Johnston, and E. R. Young, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CARTER, Justice.

Plaintiffs, operators of drive-in restaurants, successfully challenged in the superior court the validity of a regulation of the Industrial Welfare Commission, designated Order 12-A. Defendants, the Chief of the Division of Industrial Welfare of the Department of Industrial Relations and the members of the Industrial Welfare Commission of the Division of Industrial Welfare of the Department of Industrial Relations, appeal from the judgment entered for plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs are independent owners of establishments, serving food and beverages. Their patronage consists chiefly of motorists who are served while remaining in their vehicles, however, service may be obtained in the owner's restaurant buildings. Most of the employees are girls and women commonly referred to as "car hops." The employment arrangement contemplates that the tips received by the employees shall constitute their wages, except that the employers make up the difference if the tips received fall below the minimum wage for minors and adult females fixed by the Industrial Welfare Commission. Plaintiffs posted in their business establishments, the notices required by a statute of 1929, hereinafter set forth. In 1940, plaintiffs were advised by the Chief of the Division of Industrial Welfare that their employment arrangement violated Order 12-A, in that they could not consider the tips received by the minor and female adult employees in computing and paying the minimum wage, and that they would be required to comply with said order.

Order 12-A became effective on June 8, 1923. In section 1 it fixed a minimum wage of $16 per week to be paid to all female adult or minor employees in restaurants or other places where food and drinks were sold. Section 2 fixed the maximum amount the employer could deduct from the minimum wage for meals and lodging furnished the employee. Section 3, here in question, reads: "No employer may include tips or gratuities received by employees designated in section 1 hereof as part of the legal minimum wages fixed by said section of this Order." The remaining nine sections deal with hours of labor, working conditions, the employer's duty to keep records, and the like.

In 1929 (Stats.1929, p. 1971), a statute was passed by the Legislature, now appearing in sections 350–356 of the Labor Code, St.1937, pp. 202, 203. Section 351 of the Labor Code reads:

"Every employer or agent who collects, takes, or receives any gratuity, or a part thereof, paid, given to, or left for an employee by a patron, or who deducts any amount from wages due an employee on account of such gratuity, or who requires an employee to credit the amount, or any part thereof, of such gratuity against and as a part of the wages due the employee from the employer, shall keep posted in a conspicuous place at the location where his business is carried on, in a place where it can easily be seen by the patrons thereof, a notice, in lettering or printing of not less than forty-eight point black-face type, to the following effect:

"(a) If not shared by the employees, that any gratuities paid, given to, or left for employees by patrons go to and belong to the business or employer and are not shared by the employees thereof.

"(b) If shared by the employees, the extent to which gratuities are shared between employer and employees."

Section 352 specifies that the notice shall also state the extent to which employees are required to accept gratuities in lieu of wages or permit them to be credited against their wages. The provisions apply to all businesses having one or more persons in service. A gratuity "includes any tip, gratuity, money, or part thereof, which has been paid or given to or left for an employee by a patron of a business over and above the actual amount due such business for services rendered or for goods, food, drink, or articles sold or served to such patron." Section 350.

A penalty is imposed for violation of the act, and it is declared that: "The Legislature expressly declares that the purpose of this article is to prevent fraud upon the public in connection with the practice of tipping and declares that this article is passed for a public reason and can not be contravened by a private agreement. As a part of the social public policy of this State, this article is binding upon all departments of the State." Labor Code, § 356.

[1-3] Whether the 1929 statute impliedly annulled section 3 of said Order 12-A must be determined in the light of the appropriate rules of statutory construction. Generally, the same rules of construction and interpretation which apply to statutes govern the construction and interpretation of rules and regulations of administrative agencies. Miller v. United States, 294 U.S. 435, 55 S.Ct. 440, 79 L.Ed. 977. With reference to implied repeals of statutes this court stated in Penziner v. West American Finance Co., 10 Cal.2d 160, 176, 74 P.2d 252, 260: "The presumption is against repeals by implication, especially where the prior act has been generally understood and acted upon. To overcome the presumption the two acts must be irreconcilable, clearly repugnant, and so inconsistent that the two cannot have concurrent operation. The courts are bound, if possible, to maintain the integrity of both statutes if the two may stand together. Where a modification will suffice, a repeal will not be presumed." See 23 Cal.Jur. 694 et seq. The purpose and object sought to be accomplished by legislation is an important factor in determining the legislative intent. City and County of San Francisco v. San Mateo County, 17 Cal.2d 814, 112 P.2d 595.

[4] Applying those rules to the instant case we find no repugnancy. The statute of 1929 and section 3 of Order 12-A rather than being irreconcilable are entirely harmonious. The basic policy underlying the order is the regulation of wages, hours and working conditions for minors and adult female employees in eating establishments. The subject of tipping is embraced only incidentally in the furtherance of that general purpose. Broadly, it was designed to deal with the industrial welfare of such employees, and the relation of their welfare to the general public interest. On the other hand the statute is concerned exclusively with tipping in respect to its relation to the public which patronizes not only restaurant establishments but many other businesses. The Legislature expressly stated that its purpose is "to prevent fraud upon the public," a policy underlying no part of the order. Section 3 of the order states that tips received by the designated employees may not be included in the minimum wage therein fixed. If it be conceded that the effect of said section is to prohibit the deduction of tips from the employees' wages, and that the statute impliedly authorizes such deduction as asserted by plaintiffs, such prohibition should be strictly limited, and said section would not be violated in instances where the employer retained the entire amount of all tips received above the minimum wage, or deducted the tips from the amount of any wages he agreed to pay in excess of the specified minimum. It does not apply to male employees or persons employed in businesses other than those mentioned.

Further, it is not necessary to conclude that the statute authorizes tipping. It does not purport to authorize or legalize the retention or deduction of the tips received by the employees. It is nothing more than a comprehensive regulation in respect to advising the public of the retention of tips by the employer whether such retention is legal or not, the essential requirement being that the public be informed of the practice. Fairly interpreted, the posting of the notice is required regardless of whether such retention or deduction is being made from the minimum legal wage fixed by section 3. It may be said that section 3, given a liberal meaning to effectuate the ends in view, prohibits the retention by the employer of any amount of tips received by the employee below the minimum wage, because if the employer could retain such tips he would be, in effect, accomplishing indirectly that which he could not do directly, namely, including the tips in the legal wage. It would be a subterfuge for him to receive all the tips and pay the minimum wage. The end result would be counting the tips as a part of the legal wage. That conclusion does not mean that section 3 and the statute are inconsistent to that extent. The purpose of the statute and section 3 are entirely different. The statute does not purport to cover the special field of tipping in regard to its effect on the minimum wage law. It is aimed at the protection of the public against fraud.

For the same reasons the historical arguments advanced by plaintiffs are not persuasive. True, a statute was enacted in 1917 (Stats.1917, p. 257) which made it unlawful for an employer to demand tips received by his employee in consideration of the latter's being hired or retained. That act, like the 1929 Act, was broad in its scope and did not purport to affect tipping in relation to minimum wages. It was declared invalid in Re Farb, 178 Cal. 592, 174 P. 320, 3 A.L.R. 301, and thereafter the 1929 Act was passed. Both of those statutes were aimed at the prevention of a fraud on the public and were not concerned with the effect on the inclusion of tips in minimum wages and the purpose of section 3 of said Order 12-A. If it be assumed that the Legislature in passing the 1929 statute was endeavoring to avoid the difficulty encountered with reference to the 1917 Act in In re Farb, supra, still it did not purport to authorize the deduction of tips from the minimum wage. It was regulating the retention of tips by employers regardless of whether such retention was or was not a violation of section 3 of Order 12-A. The statute and the order were designed for fundamentally different purposes.

[5] Plaintiffs urge that because the predecessors in office of defendants did not enforce section 3 of Order 12-A, they must have considered it annulled by the 1929 statute, and some of the plaintiffs having been so advised by executive officers of defendants predecessors, the statute should be interpreted to annul said section 3. It is undoubtedly a rule of statutory interpretation that the construction given a statute by the administrative agency charged with the enforcement of it is a significant factor to be considered by the courts in ascertaining the meaning of such statute. Los Angeles County v. Superior Court, 17 Cal.2d 707, 112 P.2d 10; 23 Cal.Jur. 776, 777. But where there is no ambiguity and the interpretation is clearly erroneous, such administrative interpretation does not give legal sanction to a long continued incorrect construction. The administrative interpretation cannot alter the clear meaning of a statute. Los Angeles County v. Superior Court, supra; 23 Cal. Jur. 776. We have seen that the 1929 statute does not purport to legalize the deduction or retention of tips by an employer, nor does section 3 of Order 12-A prohibit tipping; it merely prohibits the inclusion of tips in the minimum wage for certain employees. The alleged implied nullification which is not favored in the law does not exist.

[6] The trial court found: "* * * that in adopting section 3 of Order 12A * * * defendant * * * acted in excess of its jurisdiction." That finding is not, as claimed by plaintiffs, binding upon this court, inasmuch as it is a conclusion of law. In support of it plaintiffs challenge the constitutionality of section 3, and the validity of the adoption of the order.

Plaintiffs contend that section 3 is invalid because it is an unconstitutional interference with the freedom of contract as between employer and employee. United States Const. Fourteenth Amendment; Cal. Const. art. I, secs. 1, 13; art. XX, sec. 18. The main premise relied upon by plaintiffs is that section 3 prohibits an employer and his employee from agreeing that the former shall retain all tips received by the latter, citing In re Farb, supra, declaring unconstitutional the 1917 Act, supra, and denouncing such practice. It has heretofore been pointed out that the 1917 Act was not aimed at and did not involve any restrictions on such contracts directly as a part and in aid of the minimum wage requirements. The 1917 Act applied expressly to any and all employees without regard to whether a legal wage was fixed for them. For that reason we do not consider the Farb case as necessarily supporting plaintiffs' position. Furthermore, the reasoning of the Farb case is out of line with the later authorities upholding minimum wage legislation. See United States v. Darby, 312 U.S. 100, 657, 61 S.Ct. 451, 85 L.Ed. 609, 132 A.L.R. 1430, 1443; West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U. S. 379, 57 S.Ct. 578, 81 L.Ed. 703, 108 A.L.R. 1330; 31 Am.Jur., Labor, § 503; 130 A.L.R. 273. There is a distinct difference between a comprehensive prohibition of retention of tips by employers and the prohibition of such practice as a part of an order fixing minimum wages.

[7-11] It must be remembered that in the field of regulation of wages and hours by legislative authority, constitutional guarantees relating to freedom of contract must give way to reasonable police regulations. The Supreme Court of the United States in discussing the regulation of hours and wages of women employees stated in West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, supra, 300 U.S. at page 392, 57 S.Ct. at page 582, 81 L.Ed. 703, 108 A.L.R. 1330:

> "This power under the Constitution to restrict freedom of contract has had many illustrations. That it may be exercised in the public interest with respect to contracts between employer and employee is undeniable. Thus statutes have been sustained limiting employment in underground mines and smelters to eight hours a day (Holden v. Hardy, 169 U.S. 366, 18 S.Ct. 383, 42 L.Ed. 780); in requiring redemption in cash of store orders or other evidences of indebtedness issued in the payment of wages (Knoxville Iron Co. v. Harbison, 183 U.S. 13, 22 S.Ct. 1, 46 L.Ed. 55); in forbidding the payment of seamen's wages in advance (Patterson v. Bark Eudora, 190 U.S. 169, 23 S.Ct. 821, 47 L.Ed. 1002); in making it unlawful to contract to pay miners employed at quantity rates upon the basis of screened coal instead of the weight of the coal as orginally produced in the mine (McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 539, 29 S.Ct. 206, 53 L.Ed. 315); in prohibiting contracts limiting liability for injuries to employees (Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire supra, 219 U.S. 549, 31 S.Ct. 259, 55 L.Ed. 328); in limiting hours of work of employees in manufacturing establishments (Bunting v. Oregon, 243 U.S. 426, 37 S.Ct. 435, 61 L.Ed. 830, Ann. Cas.1918A, 1043); and in maintaining workmen's compensation laws (New York Central R. Co. v. White, 243 U.S. 188, 37 S.Ct. 247, 61 L.Ed. 667, L.R.A. 1917D, 1, Ann.Cas.1917D, 629; Mountain Timber Co. v. Washington, 243 U.S. 219, 37 S.Ct. 260, 61 L.Ed. 685, Ann.Cas.1917D, 642). In dealing with the relation of employer and employed, the Legislature has necessarily a wide field of discretion in order that there may be suitable protection of health and safety, and that peace and good order may be promoted through regulations designed to insure wholesome conditions of work and freedom from oppression. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, supra, 219 U.S. 549, at page 570, 31 S.Ct. 259, 55 L.Ed. 328."

And at page 399 of 300 U.S., 57 S.Ct. at page 585, 81 L.Ed. 703, 108 A.L.R. 1330:

> "The Legislature had the right to consider that its minimum wage requirements would be an important aid in carrying out its policy of protection. The adoption of similar requirements by many states evidences a deepseated conviction both as to the presence of the evil and as to the means adapted to check it. Legislative response to that conviction cannot be regarded as arbitrary or capricious and that is all we have to decide. Even if the wisdom of the policy be regarded as debatable and its effects uncertain, still the Legislature is entitled to its judgment." (Emphasis added).

Many other illustrations could be given. In the recent case of Williams v. Jacksonville Terminal Co., 315 U.S. 386, 62 S.Ct. 659, 86 L.Ed. 914, the court had before it the question of whether the tips received by red caps could be counted as a part of the minimum wage under the Fair Labor Standards Act, 29 U.S.C.A. § 201 et seq. It was held that they could and that legally speaking such tips were wages under the agreement between the employer and employee. However, the court was careful to point out that the Fair Labor Standards Act did not prohibit the inclusion of tips in the minimum wage, and it recognized that such a prohibition might well be valid. It stated at page 388 of 315 U.S., 62 S.Ct. at page 662, 86 L.Ed. 914:

> "The Fair Labor Standards Act is not intended to do away with tipping. Nor does it appear that Congress intended by the general minimum wage to give the tipping employments an earnings-preference over the non-service vocations. The petitioners do not dispute the railroad's contention that, during the entire period, each red cap received as earnings—cash pay plus tips—a sum equal to the required minimum wage. Nor is there denial of increased pay to the red caps on account of the minimum wage guarantee of the challenged plan as compared with the former tipping system. The guarantee also betters the mischief of irregular income from tips and increases wage security. The desirability of considering tips in setting a minimum wage, that is whether tips from the viewpoint of social welfare should be counted as part of that legal wage, is not for judicial decision. We deal here only with the petitioners' assertion that the wages Act requires railroads to pay the red caps the minimum wage without regard to their earnings from tips." (Emphasis added.)

[12, 13] The presumption is that the Legislature had adequate and reasonable basis for its police regulations and that a statute providing for such regulations is constitutional (5 Cal.Jur. 628, et seq.), and, as expressed in West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, supra, the only question to be decided is whether it acted arbitrarily or capriciously. There may be others, but certain reasonable grounds appear for the policy established by section 3 of Order 12-A. As we have seen from the foregoing quotation from Williams v. Jacksonville Terminal Co., supra, that possibility is recognized where the court declared that whether the social welfare required that tips be not counted as part of the minimum wage was not for "judicial decision." It cited for that statement, Anderson, Tips & Legal Minimum Wages, XXXI American Labor Legislation Review 11, at page 13, where it was aptly said that if the tips received were to be counted as a part of the minimum wage "* * * the employee would be required to report to her employer the amount of tips received each week, in order that he in turn could know the amount of wage he must pay to make up the $16.

"If this practice were followed the purpose of the minimum-wage law would soon be defeated. It would not be long before employers discovered which of their employees were costing them the most money. Obviously, the girls who received the least in tips would have to be paid the highest wages to make up the $16. Gradually the girls receiving low tips would be dismissed, whether efficient or not, and those with ability to wile larger tips from an irresponsible public would be employed in their places. The workers would be no slower that the employers in discovering the effects of the reporting system on their welfare. The dismissal of one or two workers would be sufficient to warn the others that if they were to retain their jobs their tips must equal those of their more fortunate co-workers. There is always one effective way out of a situation like this for a worker who is desperately in need of a job, and that is to report to the employer a greater amount of tips than actually is received. The whole purpose of the minimum wage law, that of guaranteeing the worker a living wage, would be defeated if this practice were permitted and the State authorities would be almost helpless to correct the situation. To prevent just this kind of abuse, most State minimum-wage orders for hotels and restaurants contain a provision that under no circumstances shall tips be counted as a part of the legal minimum wage." In order that the welfare of the employees be advanced and the benefits of the minimum wage law be preserved, it may well be said that section 3 has a reasonable basis. If the employees may be induced, and in effect coerced, by fear of dismissal by an employment contract requiring the tips to be counted as a part of the minimum wage, to report their tips as equal to the minimum wage even though they are not, the minimum wage requirement is seriously undermined. By indirect method they would be forced into a position of receiving less than the standard fixed. If the employer is permitted to retain the tips in an amount equal to the minimum wage, which as seen would be a violation of section 3, the same condition would exist. The fear of dismissal might well coerce the employees to turn over as tips a portion of their own funds when the tips received were not equal to the legal wage. The effectiveness of the minimum wage law would be thus impaired. With the employer prevented from retaining tips in the amount of the minimum legal wage, a salutary result would follow. The benefits of the minimum wage law would be preserved, and the dignity of the laborer and his social position would be advanced by relieving him of the necessity of resorting to the undignified conduct encouraged by the tipping practice.

The Legislature clearly sets forth the purpose sought to be obtained by the fixing of minimum wages as that adequate to supply the necessary cost of proper living and to maintain the health and welfare of the employees. Labor Code, sec. 1182, St.1937, p. 215. We perceive that that purpose may be thwarted if tips may be included in the minimum wage.

The foregoing discussion does not mean that tips may not be considered wages under certain circumstances such as, computation of compensation under workmen's compensation laws. Hartford Acc. & Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 41 Cal.App. 543, 183 P. 234; 29 Cal.L.Rev.

774; Case of Powers, 275 Mass. 515, 176 N.E. 621, 75 A.L.R. 1223, and generally Williams v. Jacksonville Terminal Co., supra. An employer may permit his employee to retain the tips and the arrangement may be that they shall be compensation, but section 3 is aimed at the evils above-mentioned in connection with minimum wages, and merely because tips may be termed wages under certain circumstances does not mean that they may be counted as part of the minimum wage where to do so would contravene the policy of section 3 and permit the evils there denounced.

[14-18] In their contention that section 3 is not uniform and is discriminatory (United States Const. Fourteenth Amendment; Cal.Const. art. I, sec. 21; art. IV, sec. 25), plaintiffs suggest that section 3 would not be violated if the employment contract called for all tips to be retained by the employer, citing Setree v. Falkner, Ohio App., 50 N.E.2d 412, but in any event we are not persuaded by its reasoning. Section 3 does present such a situation.

Section 3 creates no improper discrimination in respect to employers or the employees affected. The particular evils at which it is aimed are a part of the minimum wage policy and must be viewed in that light, hence it applies only to situations where such wages are fixed. A reasonable classification has been made. There are many instances where classifications with reference to wages and hours have been upheld. See Matter of Application of Martin, 157 Cal. 51, 106 P. 235, 26 L.R.A.,N.S., 242, hours of employment in underground mines; Matter of Application of Miller, 162 Cal. 687, 124 P. 427, hours of labor for women but not men. It is said in 31 Am.Jur., Labor, § 414: "The relation of employer and employee has long been the basis for specific legislation, and statutes applicable only to such relation are not subject to the objection that they constitute class legislation. Moreover, the equal protection of the laws is not denied by the classification of occupations if such classification has a reasonable basis. Such classification may be based upon matters which are personal to the individuals who are acting as employees. For example, statutory regulations with reference to labor of women or children or both may be sustained as against the objection that they constitute an arbitrary discrimination because they do not extend to men. Moreover, the classification may be based not only on the character of the employees but upon the nature of the employer's business, since the character of the work may largely depend upon the nature and the incidents of the business in connection with which the work is done. A statute dealing with employees in a particular line of business does not create an arbitrary discrimination merely because the operation of the statute is not extended to other lines of business having their own circumstances and conditions, or to domestic service."

[19, 20] It is contended that there was no finding by the Industrial Welfare Commission as a basis for its Order 12-A, and that such finding was necessary to the validity of said order; that is, that the wages fixed were adequate to supply the cost of proper living as specified in the minimum wage law at the time of its adoption. Stats. 1913, p. 632, as amended. That contention must necessarily be limited to the claim that such finding must appear in the order itself inasmuch as the appeal is on the judgment roll alone and hence all of the court's findings must be deemed to have been supported by the evidence. Plaintiffs, respondents herein, are bound by those findings. The trial court found that the order was adopted by the commission pursuant to and under the authority of the minimum wage laws; that on "June 8, 1923, the * * * Commission promulgated Order 12-A for the hotel and restaurant industries. That prior to the formulation and adoption of said Order 12-A, and in the manner and form prescribed by statute, a conference denominated a wage board of the employers and employees of the said hotel and restaurant industries was called by said commission; that thereafter and prior to the adoption of said Order 12-A, and within the time and in the manner prescribed by law a public hearing was called and held upon said proposed Order 12-A, at which said meeting and wage board conference the employers and employees of said restaurant industry of the State of California were regularly represented.

"That at said public hearing and other meetings witnesses were sworn, testimony taken, and evidence received. It is further true that every act and thing required by statute to be done by said Commission in the promulgation and adoption of said Order 12-A was done by said Commission within the time and in the manner and form required by statute." (Emphasis added.) It was also found that the order was in full force and effect except as otherwise found in the findings referring to its constitutionality and implied repeal by the 1929 statute.

There have been decisions by the United States Supreme Court both ways upon the question of the necessity of findings by an administrative agency as a basis for a rule or regulation issued by it. In Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan, 293 U.S. 388, 55 S.Ct. 241, 79 L.Ed. 446, findings were declared necessary to support a presidential order. The most recent holding by that court in Pacific States Box & Basket Co. v. White, 296 U.S. 176, 56 S.Ct. 159, 80 L.Ed. 138, 101 A.L.R. 853, is that no findings are necessary where the statute does not require them to support the order of the Department of Agriculture of the State of Oregon fixing the sizes for containers of horticultural products, although a violation of the order is a misdemeanor. That holding is a definite departure from the broad rule announced in Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan, supra. See 49 Harvard L.Rev. 828. Other cases have considered the question. See American Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. United States, D.C., 14 F.Supp. 121; Bayley v. Southland Gasoline Co., 8 Cir., 131 F.2d 412; Twin City Milk Producers Ass'n v. McNutt, 8 Cir., 122 F.2d 564. We have not been referred to and have been unable to find any case in California on the subject, and while some of the federal court cases indicate that the findings must appear in the order, plaintiffs have suffered no prejudice. The findings of the trial court show that if findings were required by the statute the commission made them. The mere fact that they do not appear on the face of the order is not therefore of importance. The statute did not require that the findings appear on the face of the order. Section 6(c) of the act states merely that the order shall specify "the minimum wage for women or minors in the occupation in question, the maximum hours * * * and the standard conditions of labor * * *." Stats. 1913, p. 632, as amended Stats. 1921, pp. 378, 380.

[21, 22] The adoption of section 3 of Order 12-A was within the power and authority delegated to the Industrial Welfare Commission by the Legislature. The Constitution authorizes the Legislature to provide a minimum wage for women and minors and for the comfort, health, safety and general welfare of employees, and to confer upon a commission the authority it deems necessary to carry out those purposes. Cal.Const. art. XX, sec. 17½. The act under which Order 12-A was promulgated empowers the commission to fix "a minimum wage to be paid to women and minors engaged in any occupation, * * * which shall not be less than a wage adequate to supply to such women and minors the necessary cost of proper living and to maintain the health and welfare of such women and minors," and to establish the maximum working hours and the standard conditions of labor. Stats. 1913, p. 632, sec. 6(a), as amended Stats. 1921, pp. 378, 379. In our previous discussion of the constitutionality of section 3 we have shown that it had a direct relation to minimum wages and was a natural and important incident thereof. It is an incident of the establishment of minimum wages similar to the provisions in Order 12-A, which specify to what extent board and lodging furnished by the employer may be considered wages. The power to provide safeguards to insure the receipt of the minimum wage and to prevent evasion and subterfuge is necessarily an implied power flowing from the power to fix a minimum wage delegated to the commission.

[23] It is true that an administrative agency may not, under the guise of its rule making power, abridge or enlarge its authority or exceed the powers given to it by the statute, the source of its power. Boone v. Kingsbury, 206 Cal. 148, 273 P. 797; California E. Comm. v. Black-Foxe Military Inst., 43 Cal.App.2d Supp. 868, 110 P.2d 729; Hodge v. McCall, 185 Cal. 330, 197 P. 86; Bank of Italy v. Johnson, 200 Cal. 1, 251 P. 784. However, "the authority of an administrative board or officer, * * * to adopt reasonable rules and regulations, which are deemed necessary to the due and efficient exercise of the powers expressly granted, cannot be questioned. This authority is implied from the power granted." Bank of Italy v. Johnson, supra, 200 Cal. 20, 251 P. 791. See, also, Crawford v. Imperial Irrigation Dist., 200 Cal. 318, 253 P. 726; 21 Cal.Jur. 874. In the instant case the power to adopt section 3 may be implied as a power to make effective the order fixing the minimum wage. The power to fix that wage does not confine the agency to that single act. It may adopt rules to make it effective. Plaintiffs cite Adolph Coors Co. v. Corbett, Cal.App., 123 P.2d 74, decided by the District Court of Appeal. A hearing was granted by this court in that case and thereafter it was dismissed. It is not a controlling authority.

The judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, and EDMONDS, JJ., concur.

TRAYNOR and SCHAUER, JJ., did not participate herein.

Rehearing denied: TRAYNOR and SCHAUER, JJ., not participating.

22 Cal.2d 685

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. v. BOYD, Controller.

S. F. 16932.

Supreme Court of California.

Aug. 10, 1943.

1. Municipal corporations 🔑220(2)

A city charter provision that compensation of employees should be "in accord" with prevailing wages for like service in private employment or other comparable governmental organizations does not require that compensation be identical with or not higher than generally prevailing rates but that there be a reasonable or just correspondence between the rates established and those elsewhere prevailing, namely that they be in harmony with and substantially conform to such other rates, since "accordance" means "agreement", "harmony", "concord", "conformity".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Accordance", "Agreement", "Concord", "Conformity", "Harmony" and "In Accord".

2. Municipal corporations 🔑63(1)

Whether proposed rates of compensation for city employees are in accord with generally prevailing rates is matter resting in discretion of rate-making authority and courts will not interfere unless determination of such authority is fraudulent or so palpably unreasonable as to indicate an abuse of discretion as a matter of law.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑213

Where it appeared that the generally prevailing rates of compensation for motormen, conductors, street car operators and bus operators was somewhere between 70 cents and 93½ cents an hour, the fixing of compensation for city motormen, etc., at 85 cents to 97½ cents an hour was not an abuse of discretion to fix rates "in accord" with generally prevailing rates of wages for like service in private employment or in other comparable governmental organizations.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑213

Where civil service commission set forth in official records a summary of wage recommendations and supporting data showing present rate paid by municipal railway, prevailing union wages and appropriate prevailing wage for all designated employees, which reflected findings of commission with respect to prevailing wages, there was a substantial compliance with charter provisions though not all data collected by commission was set forth in official records.

5. Courts 🔑207(4)

In original mandamus proceeding in Supreme Court by City and County of San Francisco and another against controller to compel audit and approval of wage claims, evidence showed that the proceeding was not "collusive" notwithstanding that fee of counsel of both sides would be paid from public funds.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Collusive Action".

6. Action 🔑8

A suit is not condemned by law merely because it is friendly.

7. Action 🔑8

An action not founded upon an actual controversy between the parties to it, but brought for purpose of securing a determination of a point of law for the gratification of curiosity or to settle rights of third persons not parties is "collusive" and will not be entertained.

8. Municipal corporations 🔑1009

The controller of the City and County of San Francisco would be acting in violation of his public duty if he authorized payment of claims that involved an illegal expenditure of public funds.

CURTIS, EDMONDS, and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank.

Original proceeding by City and County of San Francisco and others against Harold J. Boyd, as controller, etc., for a writ of mandamus to compel the respondent to audit and approve wage claims of employees of the municipal railway.

Writ granted.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Walter A. Dold, Chief Deputy City Atty., both of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Jesse H. Steinhart, John J. Goldberg, and S. A. Ladar, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

Leo R. Friedman, of San Francisco, amicus curiæ on behalf of respondent.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

By this proceeding in mandamus the city and county of San Francisco and its Public Utilities Commission seek to compel respondent, as controller of the city and county, to audit and approve wage claims of certain motormen conductors, street car operators and bus operators employed by the municipal railway at the rates of compensation fixed in the Salary Standardization Ordinance (Ordinance No. 2184), effective July 1, 1943, and in the Annual Salary Ordinance for the year 1943–1944 (Ordinance No. 2148), also effective July 1, 1943. In support of his refusal to audit and draw warrants for these claims, the respondent contends that their payment would constitute an illegal expenditure of public funds for the reason that the cited ordinances are void as being in contravention of section 151 of the city charter.

So far as presently material, section 151, by virtue of an amendment effective January 11, 1943, provides:

"The board of supervisors shall have power and it shall be its duty to fix by ordinance from time to time, * * * all salaries, wages and compensations * * * for the positions, or places of employment, of all officers and employees of all departments, offices, boards and commissions of the city and county in all cases where such compensations are paid by the city and county. * * *

"In fixing schedules of compensation as in this section provided, the civil service commission shall prepare and submit to the board of supervisors and the board shall adopt a schedule of compensations which shall include all classifications, positions and places of employment the wages or salaries for which are subject to the provisions of this section; * * *. The compensations fixed as herein provided shall be in accord with the generally prevailing rates of wages for like service and working conditions in private employment or in other comparable governmental organizations in this state; * * *."

The Annual Salary Ordinance for the fiscal year just expired (1942-1943) had provided rates of compensation for motormen, conductors and bus operators ranging from 80¢ to 87½¢ an hour depending on the type of work and the length of service.

Between January 15 and March 2, 1943, pursuant to the provisions of section 151 of the charter, the Civil Service Commission conducted a comprehensive investigation and by such survey obtained facts and data concerning wages paid to motormen, conductors, street car operators and bus operators for like service and working conditions in private employment and in other governmental organizations in this state. This survey extended to the rates of wages paid such employees in fourteen communities by some nineteen transportation systems or their branches, representing all of the street railway systems and comparable bus lines in the state. A schedule of the data thus considered by the commission discloses rates of pay ranging from 70¢ to 93½¢ an hour. It appears, however, that only operators of one-man cars and bus drivers received in excess of 87½¢ an hour. Based on such data and on changed economic conditions resulting in an increased cost of living, the commission, as required by the charter, after several public hearings at which all interested persons were heard, published its proposed schedule of rates of wage ranging from 85¢ to 92½¢ an hour, together with a comparison of existing schedules. Thereafter (and also as required by the charter) the commission transmitted the schedule to the board of supervisors with a summary of the facts and data obtained and considered by it in recommending the proposed rates.

Following many hearings the board of supervisors approved and adopted the rates of wage as recommended by the Civil Service Commission excepting only the rates proposed for bus operators. As to the latter class the board, under authority of the charter, amended the schedule proposed by the commission, and fixed the rates of pay at 5¢ an hour higher, the maximum rate being 97½¢ an hour. Thus, the board of supervisors in thereafter adopting the Salary Standardization Ordinance and the Annual Salary Ordinance, fixed rates of wages for motormen, conductors, street car operators and bus operators, ranging from 85¢ to 97½¢ an hour.

Respondent's principal contention is that these ordinances are invalid for the reason that the board of supervisors in fixing the rates exceeded the authority granted to it by section 151 of the charter. While conceding that the fixing of rates of compensation for municipal employees is a legislative function (citing to that effect San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 556, 50 P. 633, 38 L.R.A. 460, 62 Am.St.Rep. 261; Contra Costa Water Co. v. Oakland, 159 Cal. 323, 335, 113 P. 668; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U.S. 466, 18 S.Ct. 418, 42 L.Ed. 819), respondent contends that the power of the board of supervisors in this respect is subject to the charter limitation that the compensations fixed "shall be in accord with the generally prevailing rates of wages for like service and working conditions in private employment or in other comparable governmental organizations in this state," and that the power of the Civil Service Commission is subject to the limitation that the rates recommended by it be "in accordance" with the prevailing rates of compensation. He argues that since the rates fixed in the ordinances exceed to the extent above noted the maximum rates paid elsewhere in this state to like employees for comparable work, they are not "in accord with" or "in accordance" with the generally prevailing rates. In other words, respondent contends that the quoted phrases as used in the charter, mean not higher than the prevailing rates of wages.

[1, 2] In our opinion, the phrases do not require that the rates of wages recommended by the commission or fixed by the board be identical with or not higher than the generally prevailing rates, but rather that there be a reasonable or just correspondence between the rates established and those elsewhere prevailing, i.e., that they be in harmony with and substantially conform to such other rates. (See Webster's Int'l. Dictionary; The Oxford English Dictionary; Roget's Thesaurus.) The word "accordance" is defined in Webster, supra, and in Black's Law Dictionary to mean in "agreement; harmony; concord; conformity." It should be noted that prior to its amendment in January, 1943, section 151 provided that the rates of compensation fixed "shall be not higher than prevailing rates for like service and working conditions." The amendment deleted that express limitation.

The determination whether proposed rates of compensation are in accord or in harmony with generally prevailing rates is within the discretion of the rate-making authority. The courts will not interfere with that determination unless the action is fraudulent or so palpably unreasonable and arbitrary as to indicate an abuse of discretion as a matter of law. See Hannon v. Madden, 214 Cal. 251, 257, 5 P.2d 4; see, also, Mann v. Tracy, 185 Cal. 272, 196 P. 484; In re City and County of San Francisco, 191 Cal. 172, 184, 215 P. 549; McQuillin, Municipal Corporations, 2d Ed., sec. 535, p. 227.

[3] Respondent concedes that this court is not required to determine the generally prevailing rates of compensation and admits that a writ of mandamus should issue unless it is concluded "that upon no conceivable basis under all of the evidence * * * can the rates as fixed be brought within the charter limitation." The evidence discloses that the generally prevailing rates of compensation are somewhere between 70¢ and 93½¢ an hour, the minimum and maximum rates paid by other transportation systems in the state. Under the facts of the present case we are not prepared to hold that the board of supervisors abused its authority to fix rates "in accord with" or in harmony with the generally prevailing rates of compensation.

Respondent also contends that the ordinances are invalid for the reason that the Civil Service Commission failed to comply with certain requirements of section 151 of the charter prescribing the procedure to be followed in formulating a proposed schedule of rates of compensation. This procedure is outlined in the following portion of section 151: "The proposed schedules of compensation or any amendments thereto shall be recommended by the civil service commission solely on the basis of facts and data obtained in a comprehensive investigation and survey concerning wages paid in private employment for like service and working conditions or in other governmental organizations in this state. The commission shall set forth in the official records of its proceedings all of the data thus obtained and on the basis of such data the commission shall set forth in its official records an order making its findings as to what is the generally prevailing rate of pay for each class of employment in the municipal service as herein provided, and shall recommend a rate of pay for each such classification in accordance therewith. The proposed schedules of compensation recommended by the civil service commission shall be transmitted to the board of supervisors together with a compilation of a summary of the data obtained and considered by the civil service commission and a comparison showing existing schedules. Before being presented to the board of supervisors for consideration, the proposed schedules and a comparison with existing schedules shall be published once a week for two weeks. * * *"

[4] It is agreed that the commission proceeded in conformity with the requirements of the foregoing charter section except it is claimed that it did not set forth in the official records of its proceedings all of the data obtained in its investigation, nor did it set forth an order making its findings as to the generally prevailing rates. As before stated the commission made a survey of the rates of wages paid to conductors, motormen and bus operators in all street car and bus line operations of all street railway systems and comparable bus lines in the State of California. In formulating its recommendations to the board of supervisors the commission had before it and considered all the facts collected in such survey. Not all of this data was set forth in its official records but it did set forth therein a Summary of Wage Recommendations and Supporting Data. This summary listed among other things the present rate paid by the municipal railway, the prevailing union wages, and the appropriate prevailing wage for all such designated employees. These schedules reflected the findings of the commission with respect to prevailing wages and constituted a substantial compliance by the Civil Service Commission with the procedural steps enumerated in section 151. Moreover, the charter section provides that "The board of supervisors may approve, amend or reject the schedule of compensations proposed by the civil service commission." Thus it is clear that the rates of compensation are fixed by the board of supervisors and involve an exercise of the independent judgment of that body. A compilation of the data obtained and considered by the commission with its recommendations was transmitted to the board. The board thereupon held many hearings after which these ordinances were enacted fixing the rates of compensation pursuant to the schedule recommended by the commission and amended by the board.

The case of Sullivan v. McKinley, 14 Cal. 2d 113, 92 P.2d 892, 894, relied on by respondent, does not support his contention that the ordinances here involved are invalid. In that case certain persons employed as car painters by the municipal railway sought a writ of mandamus to compel the payment to them of a rate of wage of $10 a day as provided in the annual salary ordinance. Payment was resisted on the ground that a $9 rate of wage had been fixed for them in the budget and annual appropriation ordinance. In denying a writ this court held, in view of the provisions of section 71 of the charter that "All increases in salaries or wages * * * shall be determined at the time of the preparation of the annual budget estimates and the adoption of the annual budget and appropriation ordinances * * *," any effort of the board of supervisors to increase a wage scale in the annual salary ordinance over the amount provided in the approved budget was void. It was pointed out that "Once the budget is approved by the Board of Supervisors, the fiscal terms of the annual appropriation ordinance and the annual salary ordinance are automatically fixed beyond the power of change by any amendment." In the present case the increase was timely and was published as provided in the charter, thus affording opportunity to interested parties to object thereto. While an ordinance is invalid if the mandatory prerequisites to its enactment are not substantially observed (Sullivan v. McKinley, supra, 14 Cal.2d 117, 92 P.2d 892; McQuillin, Municipal Corporations, 2d Ed., p. 610, sec. 709), no attack is here made on the procedure followed by the board itself; and as there was substantial compliance by the commission with the procedural steps governing its action, we do not find it necessary to determine whether the validity of an ordinance enacted by the board of supervisors could be affected by irregularities or defects in the procedure followed by the commission.

[5] There is nothing in the record indicating that this proceeding is collusive. On June 29, 1943, an action was commenced in the superior court by a taxpayer to enjoin payment of the compensations provided in the ordinances in question. Because of the pendency of that action respondent controller refused to audit and approve wage claims of employees of the municipal railway. This proceeding in mandamus was thereupon commenced by the city and its public utilities commission. The taxpayer, plaintiff in the superior court, filed a petition for leave to intervene which was thereafter withdrawn. It appears from the petition and the answer thereto that a sum of money was appropriated by the board of supervisors to employ and pay counsel to represent respondent controller in this proceeding. In his petition to intervene the taxpayer alleged that the present proceeding was "an amicable suit" and was brought to "by-pass" his superior court action. Upon the hearing of this proceeding, however, the attorney for the taxpayer declared, "I did state in my brief that this was an amicable suit. I have listened to [counsel for respondent] and he has made, as he always does, a very able presentation of his side of the matter. I have no desire to disrupt the agreed statement of facts in this proceeding, but I would like an opportunity to present my views so far as they are applicable to this charter. Whether that is done by the court granting my application [to intervene] is a matter of indifference to me so long as I have an opportunity to present the legal phase of it, as I see it." After orally presenting his views on the issues involved, and receiving permission to file a brief "as a friend of the court" (which brief has been since filed), he withdrew his petition for leave to intervene. It is evident from these facts and the contents of the brief filed on behalf of the taxpayer that he does not claim this proceeding is collusive.

[6-8] A suit is not condemned by law merely because it is friendly. Price v. Sixth Dist. Agricultural Ass'n, 201 Cal. 502, 516, 258 P. 387; Golden Gate Bridge, etc., Dist. v. Felt, 214 Cal. 308, 316, 5 P.2d 585. It is true, of course, that an action not founded upon an actual controversy between the parties to it, but which is brought for the purpose of securing a determination of a point of law for the gratification of the curiosity of the litigants, or the sole object of which is to settle rights of third persons who are not parties, is collusive and will not be entertained. Golden Gate Bridge, etc., Dist. v. Felt, supra; Collier v. Lindley, 203 Cal. 641, 644, 645, 266 P. 526; People v. Pratt, 30 Cal. 223. This is not such a case. Respondent, as a public officer, is bound by oath to faithfully perform and discharge the duties of his office. He would be acting in violation of his public duty if he authorized payment of claims that involved an illegal expenditure of public funds. Whether he could safely approve the payment of these claims depends upon the validity of the ordinances authorizing the compensation, and the determination of this question involves a construction of the charter and the application of its provisions to the facts of this case. His right to approve the payments had been challenged in a suit. A real controversy therefore existed as to respondent's duties in the premises.

The fact that the fees of counsel for both sides ultimately must be paid from public funds does not render the proceeding collusive. It has been held that in litigation involving only private parties and rights, payment of all counsel fees by one party to the litigation may give that party "such control over both the preparation and argument of the cause as to make the suit * * * collusive * * *." Gardner v. Goodyear, etc., Co., 131 U.S.Append. ciii, 21 L.Ed. 141. This does not apply, however, where, as here, the adversary parties are a municipal corporation and one of its officers. It is not uncommon for a public official charged with the auditing or disbursement of public funds to question expenditures directed by another officer, agency or department of government. His refusal to audit or pay claims frequently gives rise to controversies which usually can be settled only by judgment of a court. The fact that the opposing parties are authorized to employ attorneys who are paid from public funds does not render the suit collusive since the common source of such payment does not give one party control over the preparation and argument of the cause. There is nothing in the record before us which indicates that the board of supervisors selected counsel for respondent or exercised any control over the preparation or presentation of the case on behalf of respondent. There have been many cases in the courts of this state involving public officers similar to the present suit in which opposing parties were represented by attorneys who were paid from the same public source, yet no contention was made that the suits were thereby rendered collusive. See Parker v. Riley, 18 Cal.2d 83, 113 P.2d 873, 134 A.L.R. 1405; Swing v. Riley, 13 Cal.2d 513, 90 P.2d 313; Railroad Commission v. Riley, 12 Cal.2d 48, 82 P.2d 394; Vandegrift v. Riley, 220 Cal. 340, 30 P.2d 516; Heron v. Riley, 209 Cal. 507, 289 P. 160; Hecke v. Riley, 209 Cal. 767, 290 P. 451; Stockburger v. Riley, 21 Cal.App.2d 165, 68 P.2d 741. In Golden Gate Bridge, etc., Dist. v. Felt, 214 Cal. 308, 5 P.2d 585, 589, the district sought a writ of mandate to compel Felt, as secretary of the district's board of directors, to sign certain bonds proposed to be issued by it. Amici curiæ, representing certain taxpayers not parties therein, contended that the proceeding was collusive. This court disposed of the contention as follows: "It is conceded that respondent secretary is personally desirous of a decision in favor of petitioner. In other words, this is a friendly suit. It appears that the bridge district agreed to reimburse respondent for the expense incurred by him in the litigation, in the event that the contractors or the bidders for the bonds or other persons interested did not do so. * * * These facts, amici curiæ assert, show that the proceeding is fictitious and collusive, being a mere attempt to secure an advisory opinion without an actual contest. * * * Neither on principle nor authority does this position commend itself to us. * * * Nor is the fact that he [respondent] is removable at the pleasure of the board material * * *. A genuine controversy existed * * *. Able counsel were retained to present the case for respondent to this court, and it is not suggested that they were lacking in diligence or good faith in their preparation of the case. Under these circumstances this court can properly consider the petition and adjudicate the issues raised therein." The parties here were ably represented and the issues were fully developed and forcefully presented in evident good faith, and as before stated there is no evidence of collusion in this proceeding.

Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue as prayed, and pursuant to stipulation of the parties waiving the right to petition for rehearing and the statutory time within which such writ may issue, it is ordered that such peremptory writ may issue upon the filing of this decision.

SHENK, SCHAUER, and CARTER, JJ., concurred.

CURTIS, Justice.

I dissent. I agree with the conclusion reached by the majority opinion upon all questions discussed therein excepting that part which holds that this action is not collusive. The answer of the city and county, filed herein, to the petition for leave to intervene in this action, filed by a taxpayer of the municipality, admits that the board of supervisors appropriated a substantial sum of money to pay the attorney representing the controller in the defense of this action. This action, as shown by the majority opinion, is to sustain an ordinance of the board of supervisors. The plaintiff contends that this ordinance is a valid legislative enactment of the board. The defendant contends that it is unconstitutional and void. These admitted facts show conclusively that the action is collusive. The majority opinion goes far beyond any of the authorities cited therein in support of its ruling.

EDMONDS, Justice (dissenting).

I cannot join in a decision which, in my opinion, upholds an ordinance authorizing the payment of wages concededly larger than the highest amounts for like services paid elsewhere in the state, in defiance of express provisions in the city's charter.

In September, 1942, the Board of Supervisors of San Francisco ordered a proposed amendment to section 151 of the charter submitted to a vote of the people. Pursuant to the provisions of section 183 of the charter, the board then authorized the mailing of a statement to the voters under the heading: "Standardize Municipal Salaries In Accord With Private Employments. Vote Yes." The reasons for approving the proposed amendment were summarized as follows:

"It provides that municipal salaries shall be in accord with the general prevailing rate in private or other governmental organizations.

"It provides for all employees instead of a favored few.

"It provides for a minimum salary of $106 per month for a full time employee.

"It provides for periodic surveys to keep schedules in line with private employment."

In conclusion the statement added: "We must end favoritism in municipal salaries. We must put municipal and private salaries in accord."

The new section was adopted at the November election, and ratified by the Legislature of 1943.

Prior to its amendment, section 151 provided that compensations to be standardized "shall be not higher than prevailing rates for like services and working conditions in private employment or in other comparable governmental organizations in this state." By the amendment, the words "shall be in accord with" were substituted for "shall be not higher than." The reason for the change is clear. Before the amendment was adopted, the municipal employee had no assurance that he should receive the generally prevailing wage, for the charter only fixed a maximum limitation beyond which his compensation could not go. The amendment retains the limitation but also declares that the employee shall receive the generally prevailing wage, which is a fair and practical standard from the standpoint of both the employee and the taxpayer.

That this is the proper construction of the amendment clearly appears from the argument sent to the voters. Implicit in the statements that the proposed amendment "Provides for all employees instead of a favored few" and that "We must end favoritism in municipal salaries—we must put municipal and private salaries in accord," is the fact that under the provision then existing, prescribing only a maximum limitation upon the compensations of the city's employees, only those in a few classifications were receiving that wage and that they were the "favored few" with whom the salaries of the other municipal employees should be equalized. Thus the people, in voting for the charter amendment, were informed not only upon the authority of the board of supervisors, which had placed the measure upon the ballot "with favorable recommendation," but also by the wording of the proposed amendment, that the municipal salaries would be not higher nor lower than, but "in accord with" the rates prevailing in private employment, thereby enabling the city's employees to obtain the same compensation as the sometimes more-favored privately-employed workers performing the same duties.

There is nothing in either the amendment, or the reasons advanced in favor of its adoption, to indicate that the purpose of the new provision is to give the employee in public service an advantage over those privately employed, or to authorize the payment of a larger wage than the highest paid by any other employer in the state. The only authority which the board has to fix a rate of compensation higher than that prevailing in comparable employment is to provide a minimum wage in the municipal service of $106 per month. And the provision of the proposed amendment in this regard was one of the points emphasized in the statement to the voters. With the exception of this minimum standard, not only would the allowance to the municipal employee of a grater wage than that generally prevailing violate the limitation usually found in municipal charters that the taxpayer shall pay no more than private industry for the services of its employees, but it would also be contrary to the procedure of the proposed amendment, which, as construed by the statement to the voters, "provides for periodic surveys to keep schedules in line with private employment." And a court, in interpreting a charter provision adopted by the voters, should give it a construction consistent with the general and customary understanding of the words used.

Certainly the amendment was not adopted for the immediate benefit of the municipal street car employees, for they, at the time of the election, were included in the "favored few" who were already receiving the highest wage then prevailing for like services paid by any street car operator in the state. In fact, it may fairly be said that the salaries which they are receiving, prior to the adoption of the amendment, were being paid in violation of the charter. Far from the stipulated facts in this case, it appears that, in recommending rates to be paid the motormen and conductors of the municipal railway for the fiscal year 1942–43, the Civil Service Commission knowingly acted contrary to the plain limitation of the city charter with the acknowledged purpose of avoiding labor difficulties, for it justified increasing the rates of these employees to amounts larger than the highest paid elsewhere in the state for like services, upon the ground "that disruption of transportation service would interfere with production of vital war industries and would also seriously inconvenience a large portion of the population of the community." And as a further reason for its action, said the commission, it "is of the opinion that when the provisions of Section 151 of the charter were drafted by the freeholders and subsequently adopted by the people, they could not know of the problems that would be created by the war conditions which we now face." However, the commission concluded, its action "shall not be considered or construed in any sense as a precedent in future cases."

Yet despite the clear purport of the amendment to correct inequalities existing because most municipal employees were receiving less than the rates prevailing for like services in private employment and other governmental organizations, a majority of this court construe the amendment as authorizing a still higher rate of compensation for the "favored few" already receiving the highest prevailing rate, and declare that, because of it, the board of supervisors may now fix a wage "higher than the generally prevailing rates." I submit that their conclusion in this regard, and as applied to the facts of this action, is not justified in law or in fact.

The case is decided upon these two issues: (1) Are the compensations fixed in the schedule adopted by the board of supervisors "in accord with the generally prevailing rates of wages for like service and working conditions in private employment or in other comparable governmental organizations in this state"; and (2) if so, did the failure of the Civil Service Commission to follow the requirements of the charter is establishing its recommended schedule of compensations render the ordinance invalid?

It is conceded that the charter provision requiring the compensation schedule to be "in accord with the generally prevailing rates of wages" is mandatory and that if the compensations for the municipal railway employees established by the ordinance under consideration are not so in accord, the ordinance is void. And the majority opinion admits that "The evidence discloses that the generally prevailing rates of compensation are somewhere between 70¢ and 93½¢ an hour, the minimum and maximum rates paid by other transportation systems in the state." (Italics added.) It also states that the rates fixed by the board of supervisors range from 85¢ to 97½¢ an hour, but does not break down these figures to reveal the fact that the proposed municipal wage is 5 cents higher than the highest amount paid by any other operator of street railway service in the state for comparable classifications of employees.

Is, then, a wage which is 5 cents an hour higher than the highest wage paid by any private corporation whose schedule is included in the survey relied upon by the commission, or which is 5 cents an hour lower than the lowest wage shown, "in accord with" the prevailing wage for such services? The definitions of "accordance" in Webster's International Dictionary and in Black's Law Dictionary, are quoted in the majority opinion as meaning in "agreement; harmony; concord; conformity." But the majority opinion's addition of the word "substantially," when speaking of the measure of conformity required by the charter, is an acknowledgment that its conclusion cannot rest upon the language of that instrument. To so qualify the people's requirement in this regard is judicial legislation in its plainest form.

The majority opinion reaches its conclusion as to the validity of the rates by treating the question as one within the range of legislative discretion. The legislative determination of what is "in accord * * * with" the prevailing wage is one which will be disturbed, says the majority opinion, only upon a showing of an abuse of authority by the legislative body. "The courts," it states, "will not interfere with that determination unless the action is fraudulent or so palpably unreasonable and arbitrary as to indicate an abuse of discretion as a matter of law." Such a rule would be applicable if the only duty of the commission and the board of supervisors were to fix a "reasonable" salary. See Graves v. Paducah, 89 S.W. 708, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 576. But the charter provision establishes a definite standard for legislative and administrative action.

None of the authorities in the majority opinion sustains the rule for which it is cited. Thus in Mann v. Tracy, 185 Cal. 272, 196 P. 484, the petitioner attacked a ruling of the Civil Service Commission, made prior to the giving of an examination, which limited to three years the maximum period during which an eligible list should remain effective. The court found no charter limitation preventing such action, and based a decision upholding the action upon a charter provision allowing the commissioners to strike the name of a candidate from the list after it had been there for more than two years. And in Hannon v. Madden, 214 Cal. 251, 5 P.2d 4, 6, the court considered an attack upon the determination of a city council upon the question of a contractor's compliance with a street improvement contract. Not only was there no standard or limitation provided by the charter or constitution, but a state law then provided that "All the decisions and determinations of said city council * * * shall be final and conclusive." St.1923, p. 114, § 1. Under such a statute, said the court, the decision of the council upon "such nonjurisdictional matters as the failure of the work to comply with the contract cannot be urged in a court action as grounds for invalidating the assessment," and it "may be attacked in a legal proceeding only upon pleading and proof that the board acted fraudulently or that its action is so palpably unreasonable and arbitrary as to raise an inference of plain abuse of discretion as a matter of law."

In the only other case cited by the majority opinion to support its statement, the action questioned was the wisdom of the city in entering into a contract with the county of Alameda for the latter's care of the former's tubercular patients. The court emphasized the fact that no charter provision or statute limited the right to make such a contract. On the contrary, said the court, "'The law cast upon the board the duty of determining whether in its judgment the public necessity required that the county should acquire a new county hospital and conferred upon it the power necessary to accomplish this if it should so determine. * * * Whether, in the exercise of legislative powers the board acts wisely or unwisely is no concern of the courts.'" In the absence of a showing of want of jurisdiction or of bad faith, the court continued, it would not inquire into the question of whether the city had made a good or a bad bargain. In re City and County of San Francisco, 191 Cal. 172, 184, 185, 215 P. 549, 556.

Unlike the present action where the charter clearly establishes a definite standard for the legislative and administrative action, in all three of these cases there was no constitutional or charter limitation or standard governing or limiting the exercise of the area of discretion involved. And in the section of McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, cited by the majority opinion, appears the following statement of the principle: "If the salary is fixed by the proper authority and in the manner prescribed, the general rule is that the courts will not interfere. * * * Usually the council or governing legislative body is given power to fix salaries of municipal officers and employees, which is done generally by ordinance (a legislative act) and not by mere resolution. Ordinances providing for salaries must conform with charter and statutory provisions, and cannot provide a salary less or greater than that fixed by the charter or statutes. * * * Where a salary is to be fixed by an officer or board it is an administrative act and need not be fixed by ordinance." (2 McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, 2d Ed. 1939, sec. 535, pp. 303-306.)

The charter of a municipality is its constitution and to be valid, an ordinance must harmonize with its provisions. Marculescu v. City Planning Comm., 7 Cal.App.2d 371, 373, 46 P.2d 308; In re Pfahler, 150 Cal. 71, 82, 11 L.R.A.,N.S., 1092, 88 P. 270, 11 Ann.Cas. 911; Platt v. San Francisco, 158 Cal. 74, 84, 110 P. 304; South Pasadena v. Los Angeles Terminal Ry. Co., 109 Cal. 315, 321, 41 P. 1093. As has been aptly stated, "An ordinance can no more change or limit the effect of the charter than a statute can modify or supersede a provision of the State Constitution." Marculescu v. City Planning Comm., supra., 7 Cal.App.2d page 373, 46 P.2d page 309. And, in considering a question arising under the San Francisco Charter, this court recently said that "the provisions of the charter * * * must control the actions of the Board of Supervisors and the Civil Service Commission in determining the salary to be received" by certain municipal employees. Banks v. Civil Service Comm., 10 Cal.2d 435, 438, 74 P.2d 741, 743.

Under the provisions of the charter, the "legislative" action of the board of supervisors is predicated upon prior administrative action by the Civil Service Commission, and although the procedure established by the charter is culminated by the "legislative" act of passing an ordinance, the basic steps in adopting the ordinance are what would generally be called "administrative" in character. In this respect the adoption of the standardization ordinance is unlike the determination of fact implicit in the action of a state legislature or the federal Congress (see People v. Western Fruit Growers, Cal.Sup., 140 P.2d 13), but is comparable to that of legislative and administrative agencies. And it is a rule of universal application that one adversely affected by such action is entitled to a judicial determination as to whether any facts exist to support the administrative determination. South Chicago Coal & Dock Co. v. Bassett, 309 U.S. 251, 257, 258, 60 S.Ct. 544, 84 L.Ed. 732; Interstate Commerce Comm. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 222 U.S. 541, 547, 548, 32 S.Ct. 108, 56 L.Ed. 308; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Department of Public Works, 268 U.S. 39, 44, 45, 45 S.Ct. 412, 69 L.Ed. 837; Booth Fisheries Co. v. Industrial Comm. of Wisconsin, 271 U.S. 208, 209, 210, 46 S.Ct. 491, 70 L.Ed. 908.

Obviously wide latitude must be allowed the commission in determining what is the "generally prevailing" wage within the limitations of the highest and lowest amounts paid by any other employer. But when the commission has obtained data showing the highest wage paid, there is no basis for saying that any greater sum is "prevailing," and the range of discretion is at an end; no wage exists with which the municipal rate may be "in agreement" or "conformity." Consequently no data before the commission supports the rates arrived at by it and adopted by the board of supervisors. For a majority of this court to refuse to enforce the plain language of the charter in deference to a determination unsupported by any evidence is, to me, indication of an unwillingness to check violation of constitutional or charter provisions. In my opinion, the use of the phrase, "legislative discretion," as applied to the facts of this case, is but an instrument of judicial self-abnegation for the avoidance of a constitutional function.

And if the decision of the majority of this court is, in reality, based upon the principle that a 5-cent deviation above the charter limitation comes within the principle of de minimis non curat lex, I must again disagree. For I am sure that the public employee would consider the payment of a wage of 5 cents an hour less than the lowest paid elsewhere in the state to be of definite importance to his standard of living. Nor is an excessive wage of 5 cents an hour a matter too small for judicial concern in the consideration of a salary standardization ordinance fixing compensation in an aggregate amount of $20,000,000 for a single fiscal year.

In addition, the interpretation of the majority opinion renders useless the charter provision as a standard which either the employee or the taxpayer may enforce. For by what rule is the reviewing court to decide that a compensation of 10, 15, 25 cents or more per hour higher than the highest, or lower than the lowest, wages paid for like services in private employment is either within or without the permitted administrative and legislative discretion? Can it be fairly said that such a result was contemplated or intended by the people in adopting the charter provision?

A consideration of the second issue serves only to emphasize the accuracy of my conclusion that the compensations established by the ordinance are not and were not intended to be "in accord with" the generally prevailing rate. The basic limitation upon the action of the commission in drafting a proposed schedule is that its recommendations must be made "solely on the basis of facts and data obtained in a comprehensive investigation and survey concerning wages paid in private employment for like service and working conditions or in other governmental organizations in this state." To insure that the commission's consideration be confined to such data, the charter commands, first, that it "shall set forth in the official records of its proceedings all of the data thus obtained." Secondly, the section requires that "on the basis of such data the commission shall set forth in its official records an order making its findings as to what is the generally prevailing rate of pay for each class of employment in the municipal service." Finally, it "shall recommend a rate of pay for each such classification in accordance therewith. (Italics added.)

The obvious purpose of these limitations is to prevent such an administrative determination as is now before this court for review. The charter carefully delineates the scope of the discretion which the commission may exercise, and limits a determination by the data, and only the data, of wages paid by other employers which were before it for consideration. And to safeguard the interests of the municipal employee and also of the taxpayer, the charter requires the commission to include in the record of its action both the data considered and the findings made upon it.

In excusing compliance with the charter provisions, the city attorney insists that the word "shall" is not always to be construed as mandatory, and although ordinarily having that meaning, as here used should be held to be directory only. Under some circumstances, such a construction is permissible, but the test is whether the requirement is of such importance and materiality to the purpose of the statute being considered as reasonably to permit the conclusion that the Legislature intended to allow action to be taken only upon compliance with the specified procedure. In this connection a court should consider whether an undue advantage is gained from failure to follow the steps outlined or a benefit to the public or to an individual is impaired or lost by the failure to do so. See Cake v. City of Los Angeles, 164 Cal. 705, 710, 130 P. 723.

Applying these tests to the procedural requirements of section 151, supra, it is clear that each is material to the admittedly mandatory provision requiring the compensation to be in accord with the prevailing rates of wages for similar service. Their importance in confining the action of the commission to tangible data and in establishing a clear record of the basis of that body's determination, unquestionably operates to the advantage of both the public and the affected employee, for it affords those interested a satisfactory means of challenging any asserted departure from the standard set by the charter, both before the board of supervisors, and in any judicial review of the action taken. The word "shall" therefore should be given its normal connotation, and the procedural requirements interpreted as mandatory,

The majority opinion recognizes that, as stipulated by the parties, the commission did not comply either with the requirement that it set forth in the official records of its proceedings all of the data obtained in its investigation, or with the requirement that it set forth therein "an order making its findings" as to the generally prevailing rates. Moreover, the record of the commission shows that its recommendation was not based "solely" upon the data which it considered. For none of those data included a rate comparable to the ones contained in the proposed schedule. In addition, the majority opinion admits, the commission based the schedule of rates, at least in part, "on changed economic conditions resulting in an increased cost of living." This statement conforms to the agreement of the parties that the commission, as a basis for its recommendation, "took into consideration the fact that since July 1, 1942, economic conditions had changed and the cost of living had increased." Yet the charter authorizes the commission or the board of supervisors to consider changed economic conditions only for the purpose of determining whether a new survey is necessary to make certain that compensation paid the municipal employees is still in accord with that prevailing for like service elsewhere in the state, and not as a factual basis for the computation of new rates. (Sec. 151, as amended.)

Thus it appears that the commission complied with none of the three major procedural requirements for a determination of recommended compensation. Yet despite this fact, and the admissions of noncompliance implicit in the opinion of the Chief Justice and in the agreed statement of facts, it is decided that the action of the commission "constituted a substantial compliance * * * with the procedural steps enumerated in section 151." And the discussion in the majority opinion, upon which this conclusion is predicated, is too general and ambiguous for a clear understanding of the measure of compliance by the commission with the requirements.

The stipulation of facts shows that the only data concerning the rates of wages paid by other street railway operators in the state, which were considered by the commission in recommending the proposed schedule, were set forth in a schedule prepared by the Public Administration Service, a nonprofit organization of Chicago. This schedule lists the 19 California communities in which street cars or buses are operated and the minimum and maximum rates paid by each operator. Neither this schedule nor the data contained therein was placed in the official records of the commission.

The only schedule which the commission did include in its official records was one entitled "Summary of Wage Recommendations and Supporting Data." Except for the then current San Francisco Municipal Railway rates, this summary does not purport to contain or identify the rates of any employer, public or private, nor can it be determined from the summary what rate of pay was being paid to any particular class of employee by any employer other than the city and county of San Francisco. Unquestionably, the summary does not contain "all of the data" on the subject of the compensations here involved which were obtained and used by the commission and which the charter requires should be set forth in its official records. This is further emphasized by the fact that in the summary under the heading "Appropriate Prevailing Rates" are set forth rates for each of the four classes of employees included in the commission's recommendation, ranging from 80¢ to 87½¢ per hour. There is no means whatever, based on examining the summary alone, of determining how such "Appropriate Prevailing Rates" were arrived at, thus demonstrating that they are based on underlying data not set forth in the summary or in the official records of the commission's proceedings.

And not even a suggestion appears in the stipulated record that the schedule containing the factual data used by the commission was available to public examination in even unofficial form or that the commission purported to make an order including its finding as to the prevailing wage rate. Under such circumstances, I see no basis in fact for the conclusion of the majority opinion that "These schedules reflected the findings of the commission with respect to prevailing wages and constituted a substantial compliance by the Civil Service Commission with the procedural steps" of the charter.

Nor may the result reached in the majority opinion be justified by its statement that "the rates of compensation are fixed by the board of supervisors and involve an exercise of the independent judgment of that body." For the determination of the board, as well as the commission, is confined to data which have been considered by the commission, and the same limitations apply to the area of discretion it may exercise. Section 151, supra, provides that "the civil service commission shall prepare and submit to the board of supervisors and the board shall adopt" the schedule of compensations. The board of supervisors can only adopt a schedule of compensations "in accord with the generally prevailing rates of wages" for like services. The schedules recommended by the commission "shall be transmitted to the board of supervisors together with the compilation of a summary of the data obtained and considered by the civil service commission and a comparison showing existing schedules." In addition, the charter requires that, "before making any amendment" to the schedule of compensations recommended by the commission, "the data considered by the board of supervisors shall be transmitted to the civil service commission for review and analysis." Such provisions clearly show that the board, in adopting the schedule, is limited to specific data considered by the commission, and that the board's determination, as well as the commission's, must also be supported by such evidence.

If democracy is to continue to mean a government of law, then, as was said at an earlier time, "no argument of hardship or inconvenience will justify a court in setting at naught the written terms of a city's charter, even at the instance of the city's officials." San Christina Investment Co. v. San Francisco, 167 Cal. 762, 141 P. 384, 388, 52 L.R.A.,N.S., 676. And, as I pointed out in City and County of San Francisco v. Linares, 16 Cal.2d 441, 448, 106 P.2d 639, certainly this should not be done in a suit between the city and one of its administrative officers, for it allows a question of public interest to be conclusively decided in a proceeding which is not brought in such form as to allow a full and fair judicial examination of the merits of the controversy. Especially is this true where, as in the present proceeding, the city officials, purportedly adverse to one another on the issues presented, have waived in advance the right to apply for a rehearing. Moreover, the city attorney has admitted that the board of supervisors appropriated the money to pay the fees of counsel who are appearing for the respondent city controller. The United States Supreme Court very recently dismissed an action instituted as a "friendly suit." Characterizing it as collusive, the court said: "Even in a litigation where only private rights are involved, the judgment will not be allowed to stand where one of the parties has dominated the conduct of the suit by payment of the fees of both." United States v. Johnson, 63 S.Ct. 1075, 1076, 87 L. Ed. 1413.

For these reasons, in my opinion, the writ of mandate should be denied.

TRAYNOR, Justice (dissenting).

It seems to me clear that the ordinance under review was adopted in violation of the provisions of the city charter. I cannot agree, however, with Justices CURTIS and EDMONDS that this is a collusive proceeding.

60 Cal.App.2d 268

BANK OF AMERICA NAT. TRUST & SAV. ASS'N et al. v. TOWN OF ATHERTON et al.

No. 12347.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 23, 1943.

Hearing Denied Oct. 21, 1943.

1. Pleading ⚷214(1)

On demurrer all allegations of a complaint are deemed to be true.

2. Quieting title ⚷7(1)

An "action to quiet title" embraces every sort of a claim whereby the plaintiff might be deprived of his property or his title clouded or its value depreciated, or whereby the plaintiff might be incommoded or damnified by assertion of an outstanding title already held or to grow out of the adverse pretension.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Action to Quiet Title".

3. Quieting title ⚷7(1)

Where building restrictions imposed by municipal ordinance limited use, obstructed sale, and greatly depreciated value of property, action to quiet title was proper remedy to determine validity of ordinance.

4. Constitutional law ⚷296(2)

"Zoning" is a deprivation for the public good of certain uses by owners of property to which their property might otherwise be put, and if the use is so far restricted and the value depreciated that it can be said that the regulation goes too far, it will be deemed a taking of the property, in which event the ordinance becomes unconstitutional because the taking is without "due process of law."

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law" and "Zoning".

5. Quieting title ⚷1

The use of the terms "removing cloud" and "preventing a cloud" does not represent a real difference, and those cases in which a cloud is "removed" and those in which it is "prevented" are not merely governed by the same principles, but are indistinguishable as to the form of relief, and also as to the circumstances on which relief is granted.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Preventing a Cloud" and "Removing a Cloud".

6. Quieting title ⚷7(1)

Where action to quiet title was brought to determine validity of ordinance containing building restrictions which limited use, obstructed sale and depreciated value of property, relief sought was both preventive and remedial, so that action could not be dismissed on ground that cause sought to be removed must be an anticipated or apprehended danger to title.

7. Executors and administrators ⚷438(5)

Remaining heirs at law not joined in action by administrator and an heir at law to quiet title were not "necessary parties" to a determination thereof under statutes relating to administrator's right to sue. Code Civ.Proc. § 369; Probate Code, §§ 573, 581.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Necessary Party".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Maxwell McNutt, Judge.

Action by the Bank of America National Trust & Savings Association, administrator of the estate of Harry R. Fee, also known as H. R. Fee, deceased, Bessie M. Zapfee Forbes, individually and as executrix of the last will of Bessie Fee Chase, deceased, and Alice M. Lynch against the Town of Atherton, a municipal corporation, and others to have declared unconstitutional and void a zoning ordinance. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiffs appeal.

Judgment reversed.

Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel and I. M. Peckham, all of San Francisco, and Edmund Scott, of Redwood City, for appellants.

Albert J. Dibblee, of San Francisco, and Ross & Ross, of Redwood City, for respondents.

KNIGHT, Justice.

The plaintiffs herein are respectively the administrator of the estate of Harry R. Fee, deceased, an heir at law of the deceased, and the assignee of an undivided one-quarter of the interests of three other heirs at law. As such they brought this action against the town of Atherton, a municipality of the sixth class, its mayor, councilmen, and chief of police, for the purpose of having declared unconstitutional and void a zoning ordinance embodying certain building restrictions, in so far as the ordinance purported to affect the tract of land described in the complaint which belongs to the estate of the decedent. Plaintiffs also ask for a permanent injunction to enjoin the enforcement of the ordinance against the estate's property. The trial court held that plaintiffs did not have capacity to sue, and upon that ground sustained the demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend. From the judgment of dismissal entered thereon plaintiffs appeal.

Section 573 of the Probate Code authorizes an administrator to maintain an action to quiet title to real or personal property belonging to the estate, or to determine any adverse claim thereon; and section 581 of the same code provides that the heirs may themselves or jointly with the executor or administrator maintain an action to quiet title to real property belonging to the estate against any one except the executor or administrator, but that they are not required so to do. The question here involved is whether the present action may be construed as an action to quiet title.

[1] On demurrer all of the allegations of the complaint are deemed to be true, and according to the allegations of the complaint herein the provisions of the ordinance not only unreasonably and unconstitutionally restrict and limit the use of the property so as to obstruct the power and right to sell or lease the same, thereby, so the complaint alleges, placing a cloud on the title, but they also have the direct effect of greatly depreciating the value of the property. Plaintiffs contend, therefore, that to all intents and purposes the action is one to quiet title, which, under the code sections above cited, they are authorized to maintain. We are of the opinion that the position so taken by plaintiffs must be sustained.

In brief, the following are the facts as they appear from the allegations of the complaint: The ordinance as amended divides the town into two zones, residential and commercial; and the residential zone is divided into three areas, A, B, and C, for which certain building restrictions are established. The Fee estate property is a parcel of unimproved and vacant land situate on the corner of Selby Lane and El Camino Real. It has a frontage on El Camino Real for a distance of 637.56 feet and runs back to a depth of 393.15 feet, and is located within area A of the residential zone so that by virtue of the provisions of the ordinance it may not be utilized for any commercial purpose; and any residential structure erected thereon must conform to the building restrictions prescribed for that area. Among those restrictions are that all dwellings erected therein must have a yard 20 feet wide on each side, a rear yard of 30 feet from the house to the property line, and a 30 foot set-back from house to front property line. El Camino Real is one of the main highways and arteries of commerce and travel in the state. It leads to and connects various cities and towns, and daily thousands of automobiles, buses, and heavily laden trucks with merchandise and produce pass the property in question. The highway forms the northeasterly boundary of the town of Atherton, and on the opposite side are unincorporated areas of San Mateo county, not subject to zoning or building restrictions of any kind. The area fronting on the opposite side of the highway has developed rapidly and solely into a commercial and industrial center, with the result that the Fee estate property is made unfit, unattractive, and useless as residential property. There are no residences or homes on the property fronting on the Atherton side of the highway in the area where the Fee estate property is located, save and except one residence situate at a considerable distance from the highway on property northwesterly of the Fee estate property; and there is not now nor has there ever been any residential building activity in the area in which the Fee estate property is situated; and no practical use can be made of the land for residential purposes. The northeasterly side of the highway opposite the Fee property is more or less closely built up with various kinds of commercial and manufacturing buildings, including "hot dog" and "hamburger" establishments, fruit and vegetable stands, gasoline filling stations, restaurants, night clubs, cocktail lounges, retail and wholesale liquor stores, etc.

The complaint then goes on to allege that a sale of the Fee estate property is necessary to pay the debts of the estate and expenses of administration; that some of the heirs other than plaintiffs are scattered and reside outside of the state of California; that the property is mortgaged, and that plaintiffs are informed and believe that the mortgagee will not be content longer to let the mortgage run, and that if the estate is not distributed at this time foreclosure proceedings will be instituted; that because of the existence of the zoning ordinance and the building restrictions prescribed therein it is impracticable and impossible to sell or lease the property; that the existence of said ordinance and building restrictions "scares away purchasers and lessees, and depresses the sale or rental price of said real property, and interferes with, obstructs and hinders the power and right of plaintiff administrator to sell or lease said real property and no one will purchase or lease the same * * *" to the great and irreparable damage of all the plaintiffs herein; that for commercial purposes the property is of the value of over $40,000, but that as residential property its value does not exceed $7,500, and that even at such price no sale can be made unless the alleged illegal limitations and restrictions established by the ordinance, as to this property, are removed; that the same operate as a cloud on the title.

[2, 3] As said in Akley v. Bassett, 68 Cal.App. 270, 228 P. 1057, 1064, "The nature and object of the action to quiet title have been often defined in most comprehensive terms. The statement has been made that it embraces every sort of a claim whereby the plaintiff might be deprived of his property or his title clouded or its value depreciated. Withers v. Jacks, 79 Cal. 297, 21 P. 824, 12 Am.St.Rep. 143."; and a broader definition is given in the case of Head v. Fordyce, 17 Cal. 149, wherein the court said: "The statute giving this right of action to the party in possession, does not confine the remedy to the case of an adverse claimant setting up a legal title, or even an equitable title; but the act intended to embrace every description of claim whereby the plaintiff might be deprived of the property, or its title clouded, or its value depreciated, or whereby the plaintiff might be incommoded or damnified by the assertion of an outstanding title already held or to grow out of the adverse pretension." (All italics ours.) Among the later cases wherein most of the above language has been quoted approvingly are Andrews v. Russell, 85 Cal.App. 149, 259 P. 113, and Hughes v. Beekley, 85 Cal.App. 313, 259 P. 337. Applying those definitions to the foregoing alleged facts, it would seem clear that the action herein falls within the classification of an action to quiet title, first, because the alleged illegal building restrictions doubtless operate as a cloud on the title to the property by limiting its use and obstructing the sale or the leasing thereof; and secondly, because, as alleged in the complaint, they have the direct effect of greatly depreciating the value of the property. If these same buildings restrictions were embodied in a deed or a contract, there would be no question that an action to quiet title would be the proper remedy to invoke to have determined the validity or invalidity thereof (Strong v. Hancock, 201 Cal. 530, 258 P. 60; Werner v. Graham, 181 Cal. 174, 183 P. 945; Moe v. Gier, 116 Cal.App. 403, 2 P.2d 852; Bernstein v. Minney, 96 Cal.App. 597, 274 P. 614; Strong v. Shatto, 45 Cal.App. 29, 187 P. 159), and there would seem to be no good reason why the same remedy may not be invoked where such restrictions are imposed by a municipal ordinance.

Defendants take the position that the adverse claim or cloud must arise from a written instrument of some kind; but in the following cases it is held in effect that they may emanate from the provisions of a municipal ordinance. City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles City Water Co., 177 U.S. 558, 580, 581, 20 S.Ct. 736, 44 L.Ed. 886; Los Angeles City Water Co. v. City of Los Angeles, C.C., 88 F. 720, 747, 748; Faulkner v. City of Keene, 85 N.H. 147, 155 A. 195. In the latter case the question presented was whether the claim made by the city, that the structure the plaintiffs were about to erect would violate a statute and a zoning ordinance, constituted an adverse claim by the city to plaintiffs' title; and in answering defendant's contention that it had made no claim of right adverse to plaintiffs' title the court said, 85 N.H. at page 152, 155 A. at page 199: "It appears that the position taken by the city as to the effect of the statute and ordinance has resulted in preventing the plaintiffs from making an advantageous disposal of the property. This result has come about because of doubt as to the plaintiffs' right to the unrestricted use of their land. According to the defendant's claim, their title is materially limited. If in a technical sense it may be said that certain of their rights have been extinguished, rather than transferred to others, yet in another and practical sense it is true that they have been transferred. That part of the public affected by the use of the land are the gainers by the limitation of that use. The rights thus created, and the limitations imposed, are of a like nature to negative easements, which unquestionably limit titles." (Italics ours.)

[4] Defendants further contend that a zoning ordinance has its origin in the exercise of the police power, and that therefore the restrictions embodied therein are merely regulatory in character and do not impose any burdens on the land itself or the title thereto. The courts have held, however, that zoning is the deprivation, for the public good, of certain uses by owners of property to which their property might otherwise be put (Gilgert v. Stockton Port Dist., 7 Cal.2d 384, 60 P.2d 847) and that if the use is so far restricted and the value depreciated that it can be said that the regulation goes too far, it will be deemed a taking of the property, in which event the ordinance becomes invalid and unconstitutional, because the taking is without due process of law. Arverne Bay Const. Co. v. Thatcher, 278 N.Y. 222, 15 N.E.2d 587, 117 A.L.R. 1110; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Mahon, 260 U.S. 393, 43 S.Ct. 158, 67 L.Ed. 322, 28 A.L.R. 1321. Whether or not that is the case here is a question to be determined upon the trial of the action on the merits.

[5, 6] The trial court's ruling was apparently based on the theory that under the principle of quia timet the cloud sought to be removed must be an anticipated or apprehended danger or threat to the title, and that this is not such a case. But as said in the note found in 78 A.L.R. 34, which is supported by ample authority therein cited, "Although the courts speak of removing a cloud and preventing a cloud as though the two were distinct, an examination and comparison of the cases suggests the conclusion that the use of the two terms does not represent a real difference, that the cases in which a cloud is 'removed' and those in which it is 'prevented' are not merely governed by the same principles, but are indistinguishable as to the form of relief and also as to the circumstances in which the relief is granted. * * * Whether the bill prays for the removal or prevention of a cloud, the decree is frequently both declaratory and injunctive. The distinction appears to be one neither of substance nor of form, but at most of emphasis; the court in one case referring to what has already occurred, and, in the other, to the next step in the sequence. In both cases, the relief granted is both preventive and remedial. The courts have said that the prevention and the removal of a cloud are but two aspects of the same thing, and in some of the cases have pointed out, what is believed to be implied in all the cases, that whenever a decree is granted for the prevention of a threatened cloud, there is a cloud already in existence." That is the situation here, the relief sought being both preventive and remedial.

[7] Defendants urge the additional point that there is a misjoinder of parties, in that the remaining heirs are not made parties plaintiff or defendant, it being claimed in this behalf that the absent heirs are necessary and indispensable parties to a determination of the action. There is no merit in the point, for as will be noted, under section 573 of the Probate Code an administrator alone may sue to quiet title, and under section 581 the heirs themselves or jointly with the administrator may bring such an action, "but they are not required so to do." Moreover section 369 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that an administrator "may sue without joining with him the persons for whose benefit the action is prosecuted."

The judgment is reversed.

PETERS, P. J., and WARD, J., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 251

KIRKPATRICK v. TOWERS et al.

Civ. 6883.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 20, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 18, 1943.

Hearing Denied Oct. 18, 1943.

1. Fraudulent conveyances 🔑74(3)

In action to set aside transfers as made in fraud of creditors where evidence showed that at time of transfer property owned by defendants was in excess of $25,000 as against indebtedness of $11,156, and no actual fraud was shown, lack of consideration alone was insufficient to constitute fraud and transfers could not be set aside. Civ.Code, § 3442.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1)

On appeal, Court of Appeal must uphold the findings of the trial court unless it can be said that there is no evidence to sustain them.

3. Appeal and error 🔑996

In action to set aside transfers as made in fraud of creditors, where no actual fraud on part of defendants was shown, if any inferences were deducible from the evidence as to their intent to defraud, such inferences were for the trial court.

4. Fraudulent conveyances ⚷297

In action to set aside transfers as made in contemplation of insolvency where ranch which was security for debt exceeded value of debt, evidence sustained finding that at time of transfer of property transfers were not made in contemplation of insolvency and hence were not void.

5. Fraudulent conveyances ⚷57(2)

Where security for note exceeded value of note, transfers by wife, who had no interest in security and was secondarily liable on note, were not transfers made "in contemplation of insolvency" as a matter of law which could be set aside by creditors.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "In Contemplation of Insolvency".

6. Fraudulent conveyances ⚷59

Amply secured debts are not to be taken into consideration for purpose of determining whether the financial condition of the grantor renders the conveyance presumptively fraudulent as to existing creditors.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; Raymond McIntosh, Judge.

Action by W. J. Kirkpatrick against Martha C. Towers and others to set aside transfers allegedly made in fraud of creditors. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Van Dyke & Harris, of Sacramento, for appellant.

K. D. Robinson, of Auburn, and Fontaine Johnson, of Sacramento, for respondents.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought by appellant to set aside transfers alleged to have been made in fraud of creditors.

Prior to December, 1937, defendants Martha C. Towers, W. R. Towers and Maysie K. Towers, his wife, were indebted to Bank of America National Trust & Savings Association on a promissory note, which said note was secured by a deed of trust upon certain real property hereinafter referred to as the Newcastle Ranch property. Sale of this property on foreclosure of the deed of trust resulted in a deficiency of $5,924.16, for the collection of which appellant Kirkpatrick, as assignee of the bank, began suit May 3, 1938, and recovered judgment November 17, 1938.

Said judgment being wholly unsatisfied on January 30, 1939, appellant began this action seeking to set aside certain transfers of property made by Maysie K. Towers and her husband, W. R. Towers, which were alleged to have been made without consideration, and with intent to hinder, delay and defraud the creditors of said transferors, including plaintiff, and to have been accepted by the transferees with knowledge of said fraudulent intent and with the intent to assist the transferors. It was further alleged that at the time of said transfers said transferors were insolvent.

The transfers complained of were (1) the transfer on January 28, 1938, of what is referred to as the San Francisco property which belonged to Maysie K. Towers (she having, on December 17, 1937, acquired same by inheritance from her mother), which she and her husband conveyed to defendants Ralph E. Corbett and Margie L. Corbett, who, in turn, executed a trust deed conveying said property to trustees for the benefit of Maysie K. Towers as beneficiary, securing thereby the payment of their promissory note in the sum of $2,300 to said beneficiary, which note and deed of trust Maysie K. Towers assigned to her minor daughter; (2) the transfer, also on January 28, 1938, to said minor daughter, of what is called the Sacramento property (which also belonged to Maysie K. Towers, and had been acquired by her inheritance); (3) the transfer to said daughter on February 5, 1938, by Maysie K. Towers and her said husband, of what is referred to as the Newcastle town property.

The foregoing transfers were admitted by defendants' answers, and it was admitted that the first two were without consideration; but consideration for the transfer of the Newcastle town property was alleged to have been the sum of $450 which the parents owed the child, they having used that sum of her money for the improvement of said property some years before.

The action was tried in January, 1940, before the court sitting without a jury, and resulted in a judgment that plaintiff take nothing. The court found that the transfers above mentioned were made by W. R. Towers and his wife, but it further found that they were not fraudulent and void as to plaintiff; that it was not true that they were made without consideration and with intent to hinder, delay and defraud creditors of the transferors; that it was not true that at the time of making said transfers they were insolvent; and that it was not true that said W. R. Towers and Maysie K. Towers had no other land or property in this state out of which plaintiff could realize his claim evidenced by his judgment.

[1] Appellant's contention here is that the findings of the court are not sustained by the evidence; that, to the contrary, the evidence shows that said transfers were made with intent to defraud creditors and that they rendered defendants insolvent. Respondents counter by pointing out that the evidence shows that at the time said transfers were made Towers and his wife owned property worth in excess of $25,000, to wit, the Newcastle Ranch property, worth $12,500, exclusive of the mineral rights thereon; $2,300 due from the Corbetts on their note; cash in bank, $1,261.32; the Newcastle town property worth $1,000; the Sacramento property worth $5,000; a bond worth $1,000, and the property referred to as the Auburn property, worth $2,500, both of which were a part of Mrs. Towers' inheritance; that their total indebtedness at the time of said transfers was approximately $11,156 made up of $8,300, taxes and interest owing the bank (secured by the Newcastle Ranch), $450 due on an automobile, $1,250 owing one Ludwig (secured by mortgage on the Auburn property), household bills $150, a note of $371 which was an obligation of the estate of Mrs. Towers' mother, and an obligation of $600 to their attorney; and that after the conveyances to their daughter they still had a clear net worth in excess of the indebtedness to the bank, as the automobile balance, the household bills and the note for $371 had then been paid, and the indebtedness to their attorney secured by a chattel mortgage on the automobile; and that in any event, as the value of the Newcastle Ranch was in excess of the amount of indebtedness to the bank, they had property of sufficient value to satisfy claims and were free to make transfers. Birkhauser v. Ross, 102 Cal.App. 582, 283 P. 866. They assert that lack of consideration alone is insufficient to constitute fraud, sec. 3442, Civ. Code; and that as no actual intent to defraud was shown, the transfers could not be set aside. Burton v. Mullenary, 147 Cal. 259, 81 P. 544.

[2, 3] We are of the opinion that these claims of respondents must be sustained. On appeal it is the duty of this court to uphold the findings of the trial court unless it can be said that there is no evidence to sustain them. Reay v. Butler, 95 Cal. 206, 30 P. 208; Badin v. Gaugh, 5 Cal. App.2d 185, 186, 42 P.2d 394; Herrlein v. Tocchini, 128 Cal.App. 612, 619, 620, 18 P.2d 73. No actual fraud on the part of defendants was shown, and if any inferences were deducible from the evidence as to their intent to defraud, such inferences were for the trial court (Lufkin v. Patten-Blinn Lumber Co., 15 Cal.App.2d 259, 261, 59 P.2d 414) and have been drawn in favor of defendants.

[4] As to appellant's contention that the transfers were made in contemplation of insolvency and were therefore void, the case of Norton v. Blenkiron, 138 Cal.App. 66, 31 P.2d 807, appears to be directly in point. There it was sought to set aside conveyances made by defendant Wolter to his sister. Wolter owed plaintiff on a promissory note for $26,500 secured by a mortgage, which mortgage plaintiff brought action to foreclose. While said action was pending Wolter made a transfer to his sister of practically all other property owned by him. Plaintiff obtained a deficiency judgment of some $5.000, and, execution being returned unsatisfied, brought this action. Whether there was any consideration from the sister was an issue at the trial, but on appeal the court said that issue need not be considered, as plaintiff had failed to show that Wolter's indebtedness to him was not fully secured. Wolter testified that the mortgaged property was worth $31,000, and plaintiff made no showing as to its value (except that he had a deficiency judgment). The court said that the mere showing that plaintiff purchased the property on foreclosure sale for an amount inadequate to discharge the indebtedness was insufficient, citing McMillan v. McMillan, 42 Idaho 270, 245 P. 98, and Craig v. Partridge, 48 Idaho 471, 282 P. 940.

Fross v. Wotton, 3 Cal.2d 384, 44 P.2d 350, is also pertinent. There a trust deed securing a note for $12,500 was given by defendants in August, 1929, in connection with the purchase of certain property. On January 11, 1930, notice of default and election to sell was given defendants. On February 21st defendants conveyed to a sister four parcels of land and declared a homestead on their one remaining piece of real property. Plaintiff sold under his trust deed for about $1,500 and thereafter secured a deficiency judgment of $12,239.36 and costs; he then instituted action to set aside the transfers to the sister, as having been made in fraud of creditors. On June 16, 1931, the Wottons were adjudged bankrupts on a voluntary petition. Fross filed the only substantial claim and the trustee in bankruptcy intervened. A judgment of nonsuit was entered and the intervenor appealed. Respondent contended that there was a complete absence of proof that the property was conveyed with intent to defraud creditors, and that the judgment of nonsuit should be sustained because of the failure to show that the security for the note was insufficient at the time the conveyances were made. Reliance was had upon the Blenkiron and McMillan cases, supra. The court said that what they held in those cases was that where there is no other evidence to show a fraudulent intent in making the conveyance complained of, or where reliance is had upon a presumption of fraud from the making of a voluntary conveyance during or in contemplation of insolvency, and the only debt is a secured debt, the security must be shown to be insufficient to meet the obligation at the time the conveyance was made. And it was held that under the authority of the Blenkiron case the failure of plaintiff to make a showing of the insufficiency of the security at the time of the conveyance was fatal to his contention that he had made out a case under Section 3442 of the Civil Code. The court then considered whether on the record a case of actual fraud had been made out under Section 3439 of the Civil Code, and on the ground that it had, the judgment was reversed.

In Hibernia Savings & Loan Society v. Belcher, 4 Cal.2d 268, 48 P.2d 681, it appeared that on the day before a foreclosure sale under a mortgage, the Ellis Estate Company, mortgagor, made an assignment of rents to defendant Belcher. Plaintiff, having secured a deficiency judgment, sought to set aside the assignment on the ground that it was without consideration and made with intent to defraud creditors. The trial court found the assignment had been made in good faith, in payment for legal services. The appellate court held that plaintiff must fail as there was evidence that the value of the mortgaged premises was in excess of the indebtedness which it secured, and plaintiff introduced no evidence to show that at the time the assignment was made or at the time of the action its value had declined to the extent that it was worth less than the indebtedness to plaintiff. Citing Norton v. Blenkiron, supra.

In Cain v. Richmond, 126 Cal.App. 254, 14 P.2d 546, an action brought to quiet title to property attached by defendants, and by them alleged to have been acquired by plaintiff through fraudulent conveyances after recovery of a deficiency judgment against plaintiff's grantor on sale of property under a trust deed, the question on appeal was the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the judgment quieting plaintiff's title. Conveyance was to a daughter and her husband, and it was contended to have been without consideration and to have rendered the grantor insolvent. On appeal the court said that whether a conveyance is with intent to defraud creditors is a question of fact (12 Cal.Jur. 1045, sec. 87) except that under section 3442 as amended in 1895, insolvency and lack of consideration were made conclusive evidence of intent to defraud creditors. It said, however, that the price of the mortgaged property was presumed to be its value, in the absence of other evidence of value, and as it exceeded the indebtedness leaving an equity in the grantors, they could not be said to have been insolvent.

In the instant case there was not a failure of plaintiff to adduce evidence that the value of the Newcastle Ranch property was less than the indebtedness upon it at the time of the transfers by Mr. and Mrs. Towers. Apparently recognizing the applicability of the foregoing cases, plaintiff introduced evidence of its value. One of his witnesses, Mr. Wisner, district manager of California Lands, Incorporated, which handled the bank's properties, appraised it at $4,107 (exclusive of mineral values); he also testified that they sold the property for $2,500, but reserved oil, gas and mineral rights. Another witness for plaintiff appraised it at $3,650 (exclusive of mineral values), and a third at $3,267 (also exclusive of mineral values).

But defendants also introduced evidence of value. Defendant W. R. Towers testified that prior to the sale, Mr. Kellogg, manager of the Newcastle Branch of the bank, told him he had recommended that the bank take a deed to the property in satisfaction of the indebtedness against it, and that such a deed was drawn up; that Kellogg said the ranch was worth the debt, that he would gladly give $10,000 for it, and also that he was interested in the mining values. Towers also testified that he believed the ranch without the mineral values was worth $15,000 in 1938, as it was then in good shape; that he had asked $20,000 for the mining rights. A mining engineer called by defendants, who had taken assays from the property, fixed the cash value of the mineral rights at $2,500, and said that he had discussed with Mr. Werner, of California Lands, Incorporated, the purchasing of the property, and that Werner wanted $17,500 for the mineral rights on a ten year bond and lease. Another witness for defendants, a former Federal Land Bank appraiser, said that if the ranch was in fair condition in June, 1938, he would say its value would be $12,000 or a little better. Another witness for defendant, who had mined a portion of the ranch, said the "forty" they were on had a fair value of five or six thousand dollars. Another witness fixed the market value of the property in 1938 at $10,000 and testified that he, too, had discussed the purchase of the ranch with Mr. Werner in January, 1938, and the bank then wanted $10,000 for it, reserving mineral rights. R. W. Towers, brother of defendant Towers, familiar with fruit ranches in that neighborhood, fixed the market value in January, 1938, at between $14,000 and $15,000; and another former appraiser for the Federal Land Bank fixed a value of $12,250, exclusive of mineral values.

There was, therefore, a sharp conflict of evidence as to the value of the property at the time the transfers were made; but it was for the trial court to weigh the evidence, and it cannot be said that its implied finding that the value of the Ranch exceeded the indebtedness against it is without substantial support in the evidence. That the bank considered its security adequate may be inferred not only from the evidence that its representative had so stated, but from the fact that though the original indebtedness was incurred in 1930, and though interest and taxes had not been paid since the early part of 1936, it delayed foreclosure until December, 1937, after Mrs. Towers' inheritance.

[5, 6] Appellant particularly contends that the transfers must be held to have been in contemplation of insolvency on the part of Mrs. Towers, because she was subsequently without means and because she owned no interest in the Newcastle Ranch property. However, in support of the finding of the trial court we note that after the three transfers made by her and her husband to the daughter, Mrs. Towers still had the Auburn property valued at $2,500 and a bond for $1,000 which came from her mother's estate. It is true that $1,250 was borrowed on the security of the Auburn property but this money was used to clear the indebtedness on her automobile and to pay all other outstanding debts except attorney's fees, which were then secured by a chattel mortgage on the automobile. Not until after the transfers to the daughter was the declaration of homestead on the Auburn property made. It is true that Mrs. Towers owned no interest in the Newcastle Ranch, but it is conceded by appellant that her obligation on the note was only secondary, and as the court has found that the security therefor was sufficient, her transfers did not endanger the mortgage security; and it cannot be said as a matter of law that said transfers were made by her in contemplation of insolvency. Her transfers were not fraudulent any more than her husband's if the security was sufficient to pay the debt. The court said in Norton v. Blenkiron, supra [138 Cal.App. 66, 31 P.2d 808], that "it was essential for plaintiff to show that defendant's indebtedness to him was not fully secured in order to establish his right to have the conveyances set aside as fraudulent." The validity of the transfers did not depend upon future events. 27 C.J. 498. And it was said in Fross v. Wotton, supra, 3 Cal.2d at page 388, 44 P.2d at page 351, "that amply secured debts are not to be taken into consideration for the purpose of determining whether the financial condition of the grantor renders the conveyance presumptively fraudulent as to existing creditors."

Appellant cites and relies upon Allee v. Shay, 92 Cal.App. 749, 268 P. 962; Keeley v. Anderson, 14 Cal.App.2d 467, 58 P.2d 410, and Knox v. Blanckenburg, 28 Cal.App. 298, 152 P. 59; but they are not in point as the facts are not comparable and in none of them was the debt secured.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEEK and THOMPSON, JJ., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 298

PHILLIPS v. HARPER et al.

Civ. 3105.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 26, 1943.

1. Automobiles 🔑244(20)

In action for death of one riding in defendant's automobile driven by codefendant, evidence held to justify findings that deceased was "guest" not "passenger for compensation", at time of fatal accident while he and defendant driver were returning to their places of abode near their place of work after week-end vacation and that deceased's loan of tire on automobile to driver was not considered as compensation for ride.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Guest" and "Passenger for Compensation".

2. Automobiles 🔑245(24)

Evidence of driving of automobile at high speed does not necessarily prove driver's "willful misconduct" rendering driver liable for resulting injuries to guest.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Willful Misconduct".

3. Automobiles 🔑245(24)

In action for death of guest in defendant's automobile driven by codefendant, evidence as to speed of automobile and defendant driver's testimony that he had no recollection of accident because he probably fell asleep held not to show that he was guilty of "willful misconduct" as matter of law.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; W. L. Bradshaw, Judge.

Action by Grace Phillips against James C. Harper and another for the death of Jack D. Christiansen as the result of an automobile accident. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Laurenz J. Krueger, of San Francisco, and Kendall & Howell, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

West & Vizzard, of Bakersfield, for respondents.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Jack D. Christiansen, aged 19, son of plaintiff and appellant Grace Phillips, was killed on February 2, 1942, on U. S. Highway No. 99, 13 miles south of Bakersfield, while riding in a 1936 convertible Ford coupe owned by defendant and respondent Ruth H. Harper and driven by her son, defendant and respondent James C. Harper, aged 19, with the consent of his mother. Defendant James C. Harper, called as a witness under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, testified generally that he lived in Whittier; that Jack lived in Los Angeles; that he and Jack were employed as civilian employees at Minter Field, about 15 miles west of Bakersfield; that each took a Ford automobile owned by their respective mothers to Bakersfield with them; that since January 5, 1942, they had been living in Bakersfield as roommates; that on Saturday, January 10, 1942, they both drove home to Los Angeles in their respective cars and returned in Jack's car; that the next week-end they went to Los Angeles in Jack's car; that each took his own car back to Bakersfield that week-end; that on the following week-end, January 24, 1942, they went to Los Angeles in James's car but that Jack drove; that on January 31, they went home to Los Angeles in James's car and returned Sunday night, February 1, leaving Jack's home about 11 p. m.; that Jack wanted to leave at an earlier hour but that he, James, wanted to go to a party; that they picked up another boy named Harold; that all three boys were seated in the front seat and that James was driving; that at around 1:20 a. m. they arrived at Gorman and all had "cokes"; that it had not been raining; that the road was "absolutely dry"; that he had not used his windshield wiper; that his lights were good and that he could see ahead without any trouble; that the brakes on his car were good. He then testified that in the second week in January he obtained a spare tire from Jack in Whittier; that he asked him if he could borrow the tire and he said "sure"; that the borrowed tire had been on his car since that time; that they didn't have any understanding in regard to the use of their respective cars. He testified that there was nothing said by Jack or him as to any compensation due for the loan of the tire; that he would have given him a ride just the same; that up to Gorman and thereafter he had traveled around 50 or 55 "maybe up to 65" miles per hour except for the turns where he slowed down; that his dashlight was not on; that Jack and Harold both went to sleep just north of Gorman; that he didn't feel drowsy but that he guessed he "must have been". When asked as to whether or not he fell asleep he said: "I don't know for sure, I guess so, I don't remember anything about the accident * * * so I guess I did"; that the next thing he knew he awakened in the hospital where he remained until April 12. He suffered a fractured pelvis, concussion of the brain, fractured nose, and scratches all over him; that he told his mother he thought he went to sleep at the wheel.

Paul S. Smith testified that he was proceeding north on Highway No. 99 in his car and near the scene of the accident he was traveling about 35 miles per hour in the right-hand lane of the four-lane highway; that several cars had passed him; that one of them, while overtaking him, struck his car lightly near the left rear fender, passed on ahead of him and apparently veered off to the left-hand side of the road and struck a tree. The car was wrecked. The passengers were thrown out ahead of the wrecked car. One was underneath it and the other two boys were 25 to 40 feet from it. He testified that he went for help, which took 15 to 20 minutes; that an officer arrived on the scene. The officer found James severely injured. Harold and Jack were killed in the accident.

The officer testified that he spoke to James and asked him what caused the accident and that James said "just too damned much speed"; that he thought he was going between 55 and 60 miles per hour but did not know; that "he possibly had fallen asleep". James testified that he was unconscious and did not remember making any such statements to him. The officer further testified that at the scene of the accident the road was "wet"; that it had been raining; that in going to the scene of the accident he traveled around 60 miles per hour and had no trouble in holding the road at that speed; that the pavement at that place was of asphalt and concrete mixture and was not as slippery as other types. The witness Smith then testified that he observed James until the time he was taken away in the ambulance; that he was groaning and mumbling and seemed to be entirely incoherent; that he didn't hear James tell the officer about the speed of the car as above related; that as to the weather, the road was wet, there "might have been a fog"; that he was using his windshield wiper. However, he testified that when James's car hit the palm tree he saw a big cloud of dust that rose from the tree, presumably from the car, obstructing the details for some little time".

The trial of the issues here presented was had without a jury. The case was submitted to the trial court without argument. It found: (1) That Jack Christiansen was riding as a guest and not as a passenger for hire in the automobile operated by James C. Harper; (2) that Harper negligently drove his automobile and as a proximate result thereof Jack D. Christiansen was killed, but that his death did not proximately or otherwise result from any wilful misconduct of defendant Harper. Judgment in favor of all defendants followed.

[1] Plaintiff appealed and argues that the uncontradicted testimony shows, as a matter of law, that Jack was a passenger for compensation, citing such cases as Crawford v. Foster, 110 Cal.App. 81, 293 P. 841; Parrett v. Carothers, 11 Cal.App.2d 222, 53 P.2d 1023; and Peccolo v. City of Los Angeles, 8 Cal.2d 532, 66 P.2d 651. The trial court, under the evidence, might well have believed that the automobile trip during which the decedent Jack D. Christiansen was killed was a pleasure trip and not a business trip; and, too, that the evidence established that the automobile tire was not loaned to Harper as a consideration or compensation for riding in his car. The abstract propositions of law stated in the cited decisions seem to be sound and do apply reasonably to the facts there involved. However, each case must stand upon its own set of facts and the propositions of law which the courts declare must necessarily be applied to the evidence in each particular case. The evidence in this case shows that the boys had established places of abode in Bakersfield. It was only for a week-end vacation that they journeyed to Los Angeles. The trip upon which the decedent was killed does not therefore come under the classification of business, such as might a trip from the boarding house in Bakersfield to Minter Field. The guest cases draw a sharp distinction between business trips and pleasure trips, and these authorities have been collected in the case of McCann v. Hoffman, 9 Cal.2d 279, 70 P.2d 909. Under the authority of that decision the trial court was fully justified in this case in holding that the deceased was a guest and not a passenger for compensation, that the loan of the tire was not considered as compensation for the ride, and that there was no agreement, express or implied, between the parties to that effect.

[2] It is next contended that even if the deceased were a guest, the uncontradicted evidence shows that James was guilty of wilful misconduct as a matter of law. In the first place the evidence is not uncontradicted. The speed at which James was traveling is open to conjecture. Speed alone does not necessarily of itself prove wilful misconduct. Stacey v. Hayes, 31 Cal.App.2d 422, 88 P.2d 165; Robertson v. Brown, 37 Cal.App.2d 189, 99 P.2d 288.

[3] The testimony of James indicates that he had no recollection of the collision itself. He attributes such lack of knowledge to the assumption that he fell asleep. This may have been a conclusion of the witness. A person who has suffered a severe concussion of the brain may have a lapse of memory as to the blow or impact causing the concussion and as to the facts and circumstances occurring shortly thereafter or even before the impact. Hoppe v. Bradshaw, 42 Cal.App.2d 334, 339, 108 P.2d 947.

Wilful misconduct has been so many times defined by the appellate courts of this state that further definition is probably redundant. See Meek v. Fowler, 3 Cal.2d 420, 45 P.2d 194; Lennon v. Woodbury, 3 Cal.App.2d 595, 40 P.2d 292. In Rode v. Roberts, 11 Cal.App.2d 638, 642, 54 P.2d 498, 500, it is said: "On the trial it was the theory of the plaintiff that because defendant got up at 4 o'clock she had become tired and worn-out and had become drowsy. Conceding such to be the fact, if she drove the car while drowsy such fact might indicate negligence, but not wilful misconduct." See also Forsman v. Colton, 136 Cal.App. 97, 28 P.2d 429.

Upon the authority of the cases cited and under the evidence, it seems to us that the conclusion is inescapable that the trial court was fully justified in holding that there was substantial evidence that the defendants were not chargeable with wilful misconduct. Since it cannot be said that the evidence shows wilful misconduct as a matter of law, the trial court's finding will not be disturbed on appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., concurs.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 349

ALPHA STORES, Limited, v. CROFT et al. (two cases).

Civ. 6922; Sac. 5579.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 28, 1943.

1. Estoppel 🔑58

An "estoppel" may not be set up to defeat title to realty of one who has made representations concerning the state of his title unless he was appraised of true state of his title and made admission with express intention to deceive or with such culpable negligence as to amount to constructive fraud and the other party had neither knowledge nor means of obtaining knowledge of true state of the title and relied directly on such admission and would be injured by allowing its truth to be disproved.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estoppel".

2. Gifts 🔑49(4)

Though equity may, under extreme circumstances, support an oral promise to convey realty contrary to provisions of statute of frauds, an oral gift of realty can be sustained only upon clear and satisfactory proof of identity of the property and of an intention of donor presently to convey title thereto. Civ.Code, § 1091.

3. Judgment 🔑251(1)
Trial 🔑396(1)

There was a "fatal variance" between cross-complaint seeking to quiet title to mining claim allegedly acquired by oral gift and described in cross-complaint as lots 60 and 63 of designated section, township, and range, and findings and judgments quieting title to a tract in designated township, section, and range describing it by metes and bounds and identifying it as a portion of lots 60 and 63 and four other enumerated lots.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Fatal Variance".

4. Gifts 🔑49(4)

Donee's statement that he was given a named hill which he described as including everything between the divide and named canyon did not sufficiently identify the land to sustain oral gift thereof contrary to statute of frauds. Civ.Code, § 1091.

5. Gifts 🔑49(4)

Uncorroborated testimony of alleged donee and evidence as to conduct of parties were insufficient to sustain findings that president and chief stockholder, whose authority to give away mining company's claims was not shown, made an oral gift to cousin of a claim which alleged donee thereafter worked under agreement to pay mining company a royalty. Civ.Code, § 1091.

6. Fraud, statute of 🔑158(4)

Clear and satisfactory evidence of donor's intention presently to part with title to realty and that donee in reliance upon gift made valuable improvements and so changed his situation and conditions that it would be inequitable not to enforce conveyance are necessary to sustain an oral gift of realty in violation of statute of frauds. Civ.Code, § 1091.

Appeal from Superior Court, Nevada County; Warren Steel, Judge.

Action by Alpha Stores, Limited, and another, against F. Ross Croft, also known as Frank R. Croft, and others, to quiet title to a mining claim, wherein named defendant filed a cross-complaint asking that title be quieted in him. From a judgment quieting title in named defendant, named plaintiff appeals.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded with directions.

H. Ward Sheldon, of Nevada City, for appellant.

James Snell, of Grass Valley, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice.

The plaintiffs and cross-defendants have appealed from that portion of the decree which was entered in this case quieting title in the defendant and cross-complainant Frank Ross Croft to a certain mining claim alleged to have been acquired by him April 15, 1934, by oral gift from the predecessor in title of the litigants in this suit.

This action to quiet title to certain gold-bearing placer properties was brought by Alpha Stores, Ltd., a private corporation, and Nevada Irrigation District, as co-owners, against F. Ross Croft and other defendants as lessees of Croft. Subsequent to the entry of judgment, the issues affecting the lessee defendants, concerning certain machinery and equipment, were settled and are now eliminated from consideration. Also, since the entry of judgment, plaintiff Alpha Stores, Ltd., succeeded to all of the interest and title of its co-plaintiff, Nevada Irrigation District. The only remaining question concerns the title to a portion of the land described in the complaint, as between the appellant, Alpha Stores, Ltd., and the respondent, F. Ross Croft.

The land is located in the You Bet Mining District, Nevada County, California. The evidence discloses that title to all of the land claimed by plaintiffs was acquired by early mining locators by patents issued to them from the United States Government, and all of these mining claims had vested through mesne conveyances in the You Bet Mining Company, a corporation. In 1935, through purchase at Sheriff's sale upon execution issued on a judgment against the You Bet Mining Company, the plaintiffs and appellants acquired title.

Respondent's answer does not deny the validity of the Sheriff's sale proceedings but, by way of affirmative defense and cross-complaint, it asserts that on or about the 15th day of April, 1934, prior to the initiation of appellant's claim against the You Bet Mining Company, he received title by parol gift from the owners "Ogden C. Chase and * * * You Bet Mining Company", to a portion of the land then owned by them. Respondent's answer and cross-complaint particularly describe the parcel of land subject to the oral gift as follows: "Lot sixty (60), Brown Brothers Placer Mine, and Lot sixty-three (63) Washington Heydliff Placer Mine, all in Section 31, Township 16, North Range 10 East, M.D.B.& M; that said Lots are sometimes designated in part as the Shorty Jeffurs Placer Mining Claim."

The answer of respondent further asserts that since the 15th day of April, 1934, he has been in open, notorious, exclusive, and adverse possession of the property described, and that in reliance upon said parol gift, he made valuable and expensive improvements to the dwelling house and to the land, of which the appellants were well aware, having had knowledge that said improvements were being made by respondent under a claim of title to said property.

[1] The trial court rendered judgment in favor of respondent to the extent of quieting title in him to the land alleged to have been received as a gift. The findings of the court determine that Ogden C. Chase and the You Bet Mining Company made a valid gift of the particular property to F. Ross Croft on or about the 15th day of April, 1934, and that he immediately took possession of the land. The court also made a finding that "plaintiffs and cross-defendants" by their conduct encouraged respondent to make expenditures on account of and improvements to the property. This finding in effect is that plaintiffs and cross-defendants are estopped from asserting title to this particular mining property. The defense of estoppel was pleaded by the lessees of the defendant Croft. Consequently, even though the findings appear to invoke the doctrine of estoppel in support of the judgment determining the ownership of the real property as between the parties to this appeal, we assume that defense was considered only on behalf of the lessee defendants who are no longer parties to this action. We shall therefore disregard that issue. If it be contended that the findings are to be construed as supporting the doctrine of estoppel with respect to the title to real property as between respondent and appellant, we are of the opinion that finding is unsupported by the evidence. The law in California is very strict in applying the doctrine of estoppel to defeat title to real property, and in applying that doctrine to defeat the title to real property it is necessary for the innocent party to show culpability, consisting of actual fraudulent intent or culpable negligence amounting to constructive fraud. The leading case in California on that subject is Boggs v. Merced Min. Co., 14 Cal. 279. It holds that where an individual made representations concerning the state of his title, no estoppel can be set up against him unless: (a) He was apprised of the true state of his own title; (b) he made the admission with the express intention to deceive, or with such culpable negligence as to amount to constructive fraud; (c) the other party had neither knowledge nor means of obtaining knowledge of the true state of the title; (d) the other party relied directly on such admission and would be injured by allowing its truth to be disproved. The rule of the Boggs case, supra, has been consistently reaffirmed in later California decisions. As indicated, the evidence introduced at the trial in the present suit fails completely to support any theory rendering applicable the doctrine of estoppel with respect to the title to the mining property involved herein.

Respondent did not claim title to the lots on the theory of adverse possession thereof for the statutory period of time, and the court did not purport to adopt findings in support of the judgment on that ground. The only issue, therefore, which is before us at this time concerns the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding that a parol gift of the real property was made to F. Ross Croft.

Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support a conclusion that a valid gift of the real property was consummated, as (1) the language used by the donor does not disclose an intention to transfer the property; (2) the property was never clearly identified (judgment gives respondent land not claimed by the pleadings or by the evidence); (3) the donee did not accept the land as a gift, but instead paid a royalty or rent to his donor; (4) donee did not enter into possession in reliance on a gift, and the mining company continued to work the ground after the alleged gift; (5) no explanation was given why the alleged gift was not consummated by the execution of a conveyance; and (6) the donor, as president of the corporation, had no title to give to respondent.

At the time of the alleged gift Mr. Chase was the president and general manager of the You Bet Mining Company, and during the trial it was indicated by statements made that he owned a total of 223,000 shares of stock of the corporation out of a total of 224,000 issued shares. No evidence of the corporate organization was introduced during the trial. Ogden C. Chase did not testify at the trial. Respondent argues that Ogden C. Chase's authority to make the alleged gift is disclosed by the evidence which indicates that Chase was the alter ego of the You Bet Mining Company; that he operated all of the properties as his own, and that authorization by the board of directors for the gift of the property was therefore not necessary. Respondent also contends that the appellants' title being that of purchasers at an execution sale, they may not question the legality of that gift of property or the transaction by means of which the respondent became vested with the title.

[2] We are of the opinion the findings and judgment quieting title in the defendant and cross-complainant, F. Ross Croft, to the parcel of land described therein by metes and bounds as "a portion of the said Lots numbered 60, 63, 10, 64, 71 and 58," of Section 31, T. 16, N.R. 10 East, M.D.B.& M., are not supported by the evidence, for the reasons that there is a fatal variance between the pleadings and the judgment in respect to the description of the land alleged to have been acquired by oral gift, that the subject of the alleged gift was not sufficiently identified, and that there is an absence of satisfactory proof of the asserted gift or conveyance of the land. The respondent, Croft, in support of the judgment, relies on proof of an implied conveyance of real property as the result of an alleged oral gift, in conflict with the provisions of the statute of frauds. Section 1091 of the Civil Code provides that the transfer of any interest in real property must be in writing subscribed by the party to be charged. It is true that under extreme circumstances equity may support an oral promise to convey real property, contrary to the provisions of the statute of frauds. This exception to the ordinary rule is based on the doctrine of estoppel and is invoked in order to prevent an injustice to the donee. An oral gift of real property has, however, been sustained only upon clear and satisfactory proof of the identity of the property and of an intention on the part of the donor to presently convey title to the real property.

[3, 4] In the present case there is a lack of proof of the identity of property in question, and there is a fatal variance between the allegations of the pleadings and the determination of the findings and judgment with respect to the subject of the alleged gift. The respondent's answer and cross-complaint specifically describe the property which is the subject of the alleged gift, as Lots 60 and 63 of section 31, township 16, N.R. 10 East, M.D.B.& M., "sometimes designated in part as the Shorty Jeffurs Placer Mining Claim." The findings and judgment quiet title in the respondent to a tract of land in the same township, section and range, describing it by metes and bounds, and identifying it as "a portion of the said lots numbered 60, 63, 10, 64, 71 and 58." The pleadings were not amended to conform to the proof. We are directed to no evidence supporting an alleged gift of the portions of the six lots which are specifically described by metes and bounds in the findings and judgment. We find no reference in the evidence to the designation of the location referred to in the pleadings as "Shorty Jeffurs Placer Mining Claims." On the contrary, the respondent testified that Mr. Chase said to him, "You can have Brown's Hill, go ahead and do what you want with it." The mere reference to the property as "Brown's Hill" is too indefinite and uncertain to meet the requirements of the law with respect to the identity of land claimed to be the subject of an oral gift. The respondent identified Brown's Hill as follows: "It is a general term that they use out there, that took in the hill. * * * No boundaries, no. * * * Brown's Hill is conceded to be everything between the divide and Bird's Eye Canyon." That description is certainly too indefinite to support an alleged oral gift of specific real property.

We are also of the opinion the finding and judgment upon which the respondent's title to the lots in question are based, to the effect that said mining claims were orally given to Croft by Ogden C. Chase and You Bet Mining Company, on April 15, 1934, are not supported by the evidence. On the date of said alleged oral gift the last mentioned mining company was the owner of the lots in question. Ogden C. Chase was the president, managing agent and chief stockholder of that corporation. The respondent Croft is his cousin. In the fall of 1933, Mr. Croft was employed by Mr. Chase and worked on the You Bet Mining Claims prospecting until the following spring. He occupied and improved a cabin belonging to the company which was situated on the lots in question. April 15, 1934, he had a conversation with Mr. Chase, in which he contends the lots in question were orally given to him. The only testimony of that conversation between Chase and Croft regarding the alleged parol gift of the lots, was given by the respondent himself. Chase was not called as a witness. A fair and reasonable construction of that testimony, together with the acts and conduct of the respective parties, convinces us there was no intention on the part of plaintiffs' predecessor in title to give those lots to the respondent. Respondent's own testimony and his conduct indicate that the respective parties understood that Croft was to occupy and prospect the Brown's Hill mining claims as a lessee in consideration of the payment to the owner, You Bet Mining Company, of twenty-five per cent of gold or other precious metals recovered by him. The conduct of the respondent appears to verify that fact. Moreover, there is absolutely no evidence that a promise was made by Chase or anyone else to execute a conveyance of those lots to the respondent. Nor is there any evidence that the You Bet Mining Company authorized Chase to make any oral gift of the lots. No conveyance was subsequently executed or demanded by the respondent. The evidence of this case does not warrant the conclusion that the alleged gift is valid and binding on the theory that Chase was the alter ego of the company. In June, 1934, after the respondent had taken possession of the mining claims, Mr. Chase posted on said lots a formal notice of location of mineral claim, bounding the property exactly as it was described in respondent's answer and cross-complaint. September 7, 1935, and again on November 5, 1935, while the respondent was working said claims, the You Bet Mining Company, by Ogden C. Chase, as president, executed mortgages to one James F. Peck, covering all of said property. Also on September 7, 1935, the You Bet Mining Company executed a mortgage covering the property in question, in favor of Mr. Chase. Subsequently Chase commenced an action to foreclose that last mentioned mortgage. These and other circumstances appear to refute the theory that the mining claims were orally given to the respondent.

On cross-examination, the respondent testified regarding the alleged oral gift of lots by Mr. Chase, as follows:

"Q. You came back then in the first part of the year 1934? A. Yes.

"Q. And went back to work for Mr. Chase? A. That is correct.

"Q. You continued to work for him until approximately the middle of April? A. Yes.

"Q. Then you worked and paid him a royalty? A. I paid him twenty-five per cent of what we recovered, yes. That is, I paid that to Magee. Chase told me he never got it.

"Q. You had an understanding with Chase that he would let you work the property for your own account and you would pay the royalty? A. He never asked for that. I suggested that and he said, 'We will try it and see how you make out.' I told Magee to hold out the twenty-five per cent. * * *

"Q. How long did he hold it out? A. Probably from spring until fall. I know that when Chase told me not to pay Magee any further royalties, I didn't pay him any more.

"Q. You are claiming lot sixty and lot sixty-three were given to you by Mr. Chase? A. Yes.

"Q. What did he say at the time he gave you those lots? A. He said, 'You can have Brown's Hill, go ahead and do what you want with it.'

"Q. Is that the expression he used, 'Brown's Hill'? A. Yes. * * * I understood that Brown's Hill took in that,—it is a general term that they use out there, that took in that hill. * * *

"Q. You felt you were the owner of that property ever since Mr. Chase gave it to you in 1934? A. Yes. * * * He gave it to me in the spring.

"Q. But you paid him a twenty-five per cent royalty after that? A. Yes, as payment for the property.

"Q. Did he ever give you any written agreement or sign any deed or other conveyance? A. No."

Again the respondent testified regarding the alleged oral gift of lots, in response to the inquiry of the trial judge, as follows:

"Q. How did he [Chase] tell you the same thing the second time? A. Due to the fact that he hadn't received,—I kind of crabbed about paying the twenty-five per cent. I said if I didn't have to pay for this ground I could make some money. He hadn't received the payments that were held out of our clean ups. He said, 'What the hell are you paying Magee for, I haven't received any money. Go ahead and work it.'"

[5] We are unable to construe the foregoing testimony of the respondent so as to uphold the finding and judgment to the effect that an oral gift of the lots in question was made to Mr. Croft. The evidence clearly indicates that both parties understood the transaction to be a mere oral lease or license to prospect the property for the consideration of the payment of royalties to the owners thereof in an amount equivalent to twenty-five per cent of the gold or mineral recovered. The record is uncontradicted that the mining claims belonged to the You Bet Mining Company. Chase had no authority to give them away. The subsequent conduct of the parties refutes the theory of an oral gift of the lots. The evidence does not support that finding.

[6] The California cases which have upheld judgments sustaining oral gifts of real property are not numerous. An examination of those cases discloses that very clear and satisfactory evidence of the elements required in support of a valid transfer of real property by parol gift must be proven in order to relieve the transfer from the statute of frauds. Burlingame v. Rowland, 77 Cal. 315, 19 P. 526, 1 L.R.A. 829; Bakersfield Town Hall Ass'n v. Chester, 55 Cal. 98; Kinsell v. Thomas, 18 Cal. App. 683, 124 P. 220; Peixouto v. Peixouto, 40 Cal.App. 782, 181 P. 830; Kennedy v. Scally, 62 Cal.App. 367, 217 P. 96. It must appear to have been the intention of the donor to presently part with his title to the land. It must also appear that the donee, in reliance upon such gift, makes valuable improvements and so changes his situation and conditions that it would be inequitable to fail to enforce the conveyance. The facts of this case fall far short of such requirements.

We find nothing in the authorities cited by the respondent in conflict with what we have previously said regarding the principle applicable to suits involving alleged oral gifts of real property.

In view of our conclusion regarding the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings and judgment based on an alleged oral gift of the property in question, it is unnecessary for us to pass upon the other issues raised by the appellant.

The judgment is reversed and the court is directed to render judgment quieting title to the lots involved on this appeal in the appellant, Alpha Stores, Ltd.

ADAMS, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 291

BAILEY v. BAILEY.

Civ. 14071, 14109.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
Aug. 25, 1943.

1. Divorce 🔑183

Record on appeal from interlocutory divorce decree failed to show any waiver of a demand for findings of fact and conclusions of law.

2. Divorce 🔑286

Where that portion of divorce decree making an award of community property, from which an appeal was taken, was not severable from portion of decree which awarded appellant alimony, it was proper for district court of appeal to review the alimony award along with the portion of the decree contested.

3. Divorce 🔑252

In determining division of property in divorce proceeding, trial court properly considered land held in joint tenancy by husband and wife as the separate property of the parties.

4. Divorce ⚷252

An award of money in lieu of a specific interest in community property was proper in determining division of property and alimony in divorce proceeding.

5. Divorce ⚷286

In divorce action where trial court failed to make findings as to extent of community property and evidence was insufficient to justify appellate court making any findings thereon, and without having ascertained such value an equitable division of property or compensation in lieu thereof was impossible, a money award in lieu of division of property was an abuse of trial court's discretion and cause would be remanded for new trial on issue of value of property.

6. Divorce ⚷286

A separate appeal from order allowing costs on appeal in divorce action may be disregarded where the decree making a division of community property and providing for alimony was reversed, since prevailing party is entitled to costs on appeal.

7. Divorce ⚷286

In divorce action an order allowing $50 attorney's fees for the appeal would not be disturbed where, in making the award, trial court apparently took into account the total amount of attorney's fees awarded in the case.

◆

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thurmond Clarke, Judge.

Action for divorce by Ernest De Witt Bailey against Laura H. Bailey, wherein defendant was granted a divorce on her cross-complaint alleging extreme cruelty. From that portion of the decree which purported to make an award of the community property of the parties, defendant appeals; and from an order awarding defendant the sum of $50 for costs on her appeal from the decree and the sum of $50 for attorney's fees on appeal, defendant takes a separate appeal.

Affirmed in part, and reversed and remanded in part.

Oscar S. Elvrum, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John K. Ford, of Los Angeles, and Paul Briskin, of Lancaster, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

In the court below defendant and appellant was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce from plaintiff and respondent upon the ground of extreme cruelty as set up in appellant's cross-complaint. Both parties concede the propriety of the decree of divorce, but appellant has taken this appeal from that portion of the decree which purports to make an award of the community property of the parties. The portion of the decree from which this appeal is taken reads as follows: "It is further ordered adjudged and decreed that Laura H. Bailey the Cross-Complainant herein, be awarded any and all monies deposited in the name of Laura H. Bailey at the Bank of America, Lancaster Branch, Lancaster, California, and the caracul sheep, numbering 11 head more or less, now in the possession of the said cross-complainant. It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed, that plaintiff and cross-defendant is hereby awarded all of the community property interest of the parties hereto in any and all real or personal property of the parties hereto and that from this day henceforth said interest shall be the separate property of said plaintiff and cross-defendant." Appellant also contests the recital in the decree that findings of fact and conclusions of law were duly waived by the parties. Appellant has also taken a separate appeal from an order awarding appellant the sum of $50 for costs on her appeal from the interlocutory decree in question and the sum of $50 for attorney fees on appeal. Counsel for the respective parties have stipulated that these two appeals may be consolidated.

[1] The contention that findings of fact and conclusions of law were not waived is supported by the reporter's transcript, certified as correct and settled by the trial judge, wherein the following appears:

"Mr. Elvrum (appellant's counsel): There will be findings of facts?

"The Court: I don't know as you need them unless you want them.

"Mr. Briskin (respondent's counsel): I don't think so.

"Mr. Elvrum: This court is not deciding as to that joint tenancy matter?

"The Court: I cannot touch it.

"Mr. Briskin: We will have findings and conclusions of law, and facts.

"Mr. Elvrum: Yes. * * *"

The record does not subsequently show any waiver of this demand for findings.

[2] Appellant's principal contention as to the error of the trial court in the disposition of the community property of the parties is based upon the proposition that in granting a divorce for extreme cruelty the innocent or prevailing spouse is entitled to more than one-half of the community property. In presenting her argument, however, appellant has ignored the fact that the record clearly indicates that the trial court made an award of $100 per month alimony to appellant in lieu of appellant's interest in the community property in question, although the decree did not recite that the award of alimony was in lieu of community property. No appeal has been taken from that portion of the decree, which reads as follows: "It is further ordered adjudged and decreed that cross-defendant shall pay to cross-complainant the sum of $100 per month commencing upon the 6th day of October, 1942 and payable $100 per month on the 6th day of each and every month thereafter until further order of court." At the trial the court expressly stated that this award was being made instead of an interest in the community property. The court also indicated that the state of appellant's health was a factor in fixing the amount of the monthly payments. That portion of the decree from which the appeal is taken is plainly not severable from that in which appellant was awarded alimony; and it is therefore proper here to review the award of money to appellant along with the portion of the decree contested by appellant. Milo v. Prior, 210 Cal. 569, 571, 292 P. 647.

Respondent and his brother are farmers, operating as partners upon some 240 acres of land, engaged in the business of raising alfalfa hay. This partnership was formed prior to the marriage of appellant and respondent. Before the marriage respondent and his brother as partners acquired 40 acres of land by purchase and took another 40 acres under lease, and have farmed both parcels as partners ever since. After the marriage of appellant and respondent and during coverture another 40 acres was purchased by the partnership and 160 acres was acquired in joint tenancy, in the name of respondent's brother, as a single man, and respondent and appellant, husband and wife. The bulk of the real and personal property in which appellant claims a community interest is involved in the farming operations of the partnership. Appellant and respondent were married in 1930. The farming operations appear to have lost money until 1941. The partners each drew $50 a month from the partnership. The value of the real property, other than the 160 acres in joint tenancy mentioned above, was not established, nor was any evidence given as a basis for the establishment of its value. The personal property, live stock and farm machinery connected with the farming operations at the time of the trial appears to have had a value of between four and five thousand dollars. At that time the partnership had about $1200 in the bank, subject to the payment of the month's bills. There was no evidence of the amount of profits derived from the farming operations since 1941, though there was some basis given for an estimate. Respondent in his complaint alleges a community property interest of the parties in the approximate sum of five thousand dollars. In passing, attention should be called to section 2419(2) (e) of the Civil Code, wherein it is provided that a partner's right in specific partnership property is not community property.

[3] As to evidence of property other than that involved in the partnership, respondent has a 20 payment policy of life insurance, the face value of which is not shown by the record. The policy was taken out when respondent was 15 years of age. The annual premium thereon is $70.71, and during the marriage of appellant and respondent the total sum of $777.81 was paid in premiums on the said policy. There is a 1942 Chevrolet automobile purchased by respondent, but there does not appear to be any equity therein. During their marriage the parties acquired a certain Bentonite mining claim located in the County of San Bernardino. There is some evidence that the necessary assessment work has not been kept up on this claim. The proceeds derived from a lease on this claim were divided equally between the parties as the same were received. The evidence reveals that the bank account in the Bank of America, Lancaster Branch, was derived from appellant's share of the proceeds from the Bentonite mine and from the proceeds of the sale of butter and eggs made by appellant. It is apparent from the record that the parties intended this money to be appellant's separate property. The caracul sheep were purchased by appellant partly from funds out of this account and partly through a loan from appellant's father. It is thus apparent that the sheep also constitute the separate property of appellant. The record reveals that the trial court considered the 160 acres held in joint tenancy as the separate property of the parties; and in this view the court appears to have been correct. Siberell v. Siberell, 214 Cal. 767, 7 P.2d 1003.

[4] An award of money in lieu of a specific interest in community property is a proper one for the court to make. Webster v. Webster, 216 Cal. 485, 488, 14 P.2d 522; Marshall v. Marshall, 196 Cal. 761, 765, 239 P. 36; Meyer v. Meyer, 184 Cal. 687, 195 P. 387. In Webster v. Webster, in lieu of awarding a portion of the property in kind to the plaintiff wife, the interlocutory decree granted to her a lump sum of money, represented by a promissory note in the sum of $3,500 to be executed by the defendant husband and to be secured by a mortgage on the real property awarded to the defendant husband. Plaintiff was also awarded $40 a month for her support and maintenance, to be paid by the defendant until such time as the plaintiff remarried. The court there said [216 Cal. 485, 14 P.2d 523]: "A reasonable construction of the interlocutory decree readily discloses that plaintiff was awarded a portion of the community property, her share being awarded to her in money rather than in kind, the same being secured by a mortgage on the real property. The fact that the decree awards said sum 'for the maintenance and support of the plaintiff,' does not make it any the less an award of a portion of the community property. In addition thereto, plaintiff was awarded support money, payable monthly, until such time as she remarried. This is a proper method of distribution of the property and is a matter to be determined in the sound discretion of the trial court." In Marshall v. Marshall, supra [196 Cal. 761, 239 P. 37], wherein alimony was awarded the wife in addition to a division of the community property, the court said: "The trial court in the divorce proceeding (which was upon the ground of extreme cruelty) had jurisdiction and power to divide the community property between the spouses or to award all of it to the wife, or to award her alimony in lieu of a division of the property, or in addition thereto, regardless of the question of the existence of children of the marriage of said parties." In Meyer v. Meyer, supra, there was community property consisting of real estate of the value of twenty-five thousand dollars. This real estate was not divided by the decree nor ordered sold, but the defendant was directed to pay the plaintiff eighteen thousand dollars, and its payment was made a charge upon the property by requiring the defendant to give a mortgage upon it for that amount. In Johnston v. Johnston, 33 Cal.App.2d 90, 91 P.2d 142, the trial court found and concluded that "plaintiff is entitled to the sum of Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) which said sum is to be paid by defendant to plaintiff in lieu of plaintiff's right to any alimony, maintenance and support and in lieu of plaintiff's right to any interest in the community property * * *", and "that upon the payment of said sum of Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) by defendant to plaintiff, all of the right, title and interest in and to the above described real and personal property is awarded to defendant". The interlocutory decree was entered accordingly; and this decree was affirmed.

[5] In the case at bar the trial court has failed to make any findings as to the nature and extent of the community property interest. This defect might be remedied by the appellate court, except for the fact, as already indicated, that the evidence is not sufficient upon which to make a finding as to the value of the community property interest of the parties. Without first having ascertained the value of the community property interest involved, it would be impossible, under the circumstances of this case, to make any just or equitable award as to division of the property or compensation in lieu thereof. Upon the record presented, it is impossible to state what proportion of the community property interest the monthly payments of $100 represent. Nor is it possible to determine what proportion of the $100 payments is to apply to the community property interest and what proportion thereof is to apply to alimony, awarded because of the state of appellant's health and her consequent need for support. Under the circumstances here presented, the trial court must be held to have abused its discretion in attempting to make an award of money in lieu of a division of property in kind, without first having found the value of the community property interest.

Appellant contends that it was the duty of respondent to render a true and accurate account of the partnership affairs subsequent to the date of marriage of the parties and disclose all community property in his possession or under his control to appellant, so that a fair and equitable division of the same can be made by the court. The record reveals that in many instances respondent professed an inability to render any accurate accounting; but it does not clearly appear from the record that respondent's failure in this respect was due to any desire on his part to hinder, delay or defraud appellant, and no such inference can be drawn by this court from the evidence presented. Appellant, on the other hand, does not appear to have made an attempt to obtain any positive or competent evidence in order to remedy the defect in this regard. In view of the insufficiency of the evidence as to the value of the community property and the impracticability of trying the issue of community property in this court, in the interests of justice and equity the case must be remanded for a new trial upon the question of the value of the community property involved.

[6] Upon the appeal from the order awarding costs and attorney's fees, the record shows that the motion for such costs and fees was heard upon affidavits of the respective parties. Appellant's affidavit, which alleged certain facts pertaining to plaintiff's ability to pay and defendant's lack of such ability, was disputed by counter affidavit. So far as the appeal from that portion of the order allowing $50 costs on appeal is concerned, it may be disregarded. The judgment being reversed, the prevailing party is entitled to costs on appeal.

[7] With regard to the question of attorney's fees, the record reveals that counsel had been awarded a total of $500 as attorney's fees, which fact the court in all probability took into account in fixing attorney's fees for the appeal. In the circumstances, notwithstanding the opportunity for a difference of opinion with respect to such matters, the showing is insufficient to warrant any interference with such order on appeal.

The portions of the interlocutory decree from which appeal has been taken, together with that portion of the decree awarding the sum of $100 per month alimony to appellant, are, and each of them is reversed; and the cause is remanded for a retrial of the issues as to the community property interest of the parties, with directions to the trial court to make findings thereon. The order awarding appellant counsel fees on appeal is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and WHITE, J., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 275

FLETCHER v. DEXTER, Superintendent of Public Instruction, et al.

Civ. 3094.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 24, 1943.

Appeal and error 🔑781(4)

Appeal and error 🔑781(4)

Where period during which a series of textbooks were to be printed and sold had expired, appeal from judgment restraining defendants from printing, or causing the series to be printed, was dismissed as presenting "moot questions".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Moot Question".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Arthur L. Mundo, Judge.

Action by Ed Fletcher against Walter F. Dexter as Superintendent of Public Instruction of the State of California, and others, for an injunction to restrain defendants from printing, or causing to be printed, a certain series of textbooks. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. On motion by plaintiff to dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Eugene M. Elson and Theo. A. Westphal, Jr., Deputy Attys. Gen., for appellants.

Curtis Hillyer and W. W. B. Seymour, both of San Diego, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This was an action for an injunction to restrain the defendants from printing or causing to be printed a certain series of textbooks. The court found for the plaintiff and entered judgment accordingly, from which judgment the defendants appealed.

The plaintiff, after due notice, has moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that a controversy no longer exists and that all questions involved herein have become moot. On the hearing of this motion it appeared that all of the defendants except one, who was merely a nominal defendant, have requested a dismissal of the appeal and counsel for the defendants stated that they would not oppose the same. It further appeared that the textbooks in question were to be printed and sold in accordance with the provisions of a certain contract entered into between the State Board of Education and a third party; that under the terms of that contract these textbooks were to be printed and sold only during a period of six years; and that such six-year period expired on July 1, 1943. Upon the record before us, no question remains which presents any present controversy or which calls for consideration and determination. The appeal is dismissed upon that ground.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 338

PROVIDENCE WASHINGTON INS. CO. v. HOTEL MARYSVILLE, Inc.

Civ. 6891.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 28, 1943.

Hearing Denied Oct. 25, 1943.

1. Innkeepers 🔑11(11)

Under statutes relating to innkeeper's liability, strict rule of common law that innkeeper is insurer of property of guest is modified to impose liability of a depositary for hire. Civ.Code, §§ 1859, 1860.

2. Innkeepers 🔑11(11)

Purpose of statutes relating to liability of innkeepers for property of guests was to relieve innkeepers of burden of common law liability, to limit liability in absence of special contract, and to provide a method by which innkeeper may relieve himself from liability as a depositary for hire for guest's articles of unusual value. Civ. Code, §§ 1859, 1860.

3. Innkeepers 🔑11(11)

One who seeks to impose upon innkeeper, who has given notice that he has a vault, the liability of an insurer of articles of unusual value, must make known to innkeeper that his baggage contains such articles and that they are being deposited for special safe-keeping. Civ.Code, § 1860.

4. Innkeepers 🔑11(11)

Evidence that bellboy assumed that hotel guest was jewelry salesman and that luggage consisted of sample cases, and fact that guest acceded to suggestion that luggage be placed in vault and accepted baggage check, were insufficient to constitute a "deposit" of valuables within meaning of statute relating to innkeeper's liability for valuables deposited for special safe-keeping. Civ.Code, § 1860.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Deposit".

5. Innkeepers 🔑11(11)

Where an innkeeper has relieved himself of liability for guest's valuables by giving statutory notice that a vault is provided, a guest who desires to impose liability upon innkeeper must notify innkeeper that baggage placed in innkeeper's custody contains valuables and is being deposited as such and cannot rely upon mere appearance of baggage as giving such information. Civ.Code, § 1860.

6. Innkeepers 🔑11(11)

A brass baggage check given by bellboy to a hotel guest for luggage containing valuable jewelry was not a "consent in writing" by hotelkeeper to assume greater than statutory liability for loss of luggage, within statute limiting liability unless hotel keeper consents in writing to a greater liability. Civ.Code, §§ 14, 1859.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Consent in Writing".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; Warren Steel, Judge.

Action by Providence Washington Insurance Company against Hotel Marysville, Inc., to recover value of two jewelry cases and their contents left with defendant by plaintiff's insured. Judgment for plaintiff for statutory limit of innkeeper's liability for luggage deposited with innkeeper without special contract, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Justin M. Jacobs, of San Francisco, Loyd Hewitt, of Yuba City, and Warren A. Palmer and Orrick, Dahlquist, Neff & Herrington, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Rich & Weis and Richard H. Fuidge, all of Marysville, for respondent.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff, insurance carrier for Measer-Straus Co., brought this action, seeking to recover the value of certain jewelry owned by Measer-Straus Co. which Leo R. Straus, vice president of said company, had taken with him on a selling trip contained in two valises or cases which were lost while said Straus was a guest at Hotel Marysville.

The evidence shows that Straus registered as a guest at said hotel about 6:45 p. m. on November 20, 1939. He had with him in his automobile three pieces of luggage in the nature of valises, two of which were sample cases weighing from 25 to 30 pounds each, which, he testified, contained jewelry and precious stones of large value. Straus delivered his baggage to Malone, the bellboy on duty, who asked him if he desired the sample cases placed in the vault. On being advised in the affirmative, Malone gave to Straus two brass checks numbered 31 and 41, bearing also the words, "Marysville Hotel, Marysville, Cal.," and attached the duplicates to said cases which were then placed in the vault of the hotel. Said brass checks were similar to baggage checks in use generally throughout the land in the ordinary course of checking miscellaneous items of personal property, and were commonly used by Hotel Marysville for that purpose. After delivering his baggage to Malone, Straus registered with the clerk of the hotel but did not state to the clerk or to Malone or to anyone else, either directly or indirectly, that the cases were other than ordinary baggage. Malone had seen Straus on two or three previous occasions as a guest in the hotel, but did not know his name or occupation. He testified that from the appearance of the cases he had assumed them to be sample cases, and Straus a jewelry salesman, though he was not so informed.

On the morning of November 21st, about 9:15 o'clock, Straus presented the brass checks to the bellboy on duty, asking him to bring the cases from the vault; but they were missing and were not thereafter found.

Plaintiff's complaint is in two counts. In the first it is alleged that defendants engaged in the business of depositaries for hire and maintained a vault and safe deposit boxes for use in connection with their business; that Straus deposited with defendants, as depositaries for hire, two jewelry telescope cases, and 2971 rings, including precious stones, to be stored for safekeeping; that at the time said cases were so delivered to defendants they were informed and knew that said cases contained valuable jewelry and accepted said cases and jewelry for deposit, and gave to Straus two "receipts in writing" therefor. The reasonable value of the cases and jewelry is alleged to be $40,112.42.

In the second count it is alleged that defendants maintained a vault and safety deposit boxes and that they gave a notice to guests that they would not be liable for money, jewelry, etc., if not deposited with the proprietor to be placed therein, nor in any case for more than $250 unless they had "given a receipt in writing therefor." Then follow allegations similar to those in the first count as to the deposit of the cases by Straus, that defendants were informed and knew that they contained valuable jewelry, and that defendants gave Straus two instruments in writing therefor, to wit, the two brass checks hereinbefore described. It is further alleged that defendants by their conduct "represented to Straus that defendants intended said receipts in writing to be receipts in writing for said two jeweler's telescope cases and the rings therein contained"; and that in reliance upon said representation Straus left the cases and rings in the possession of defendants.

The action was tried before the court sitting without a jury upon the complaint of plaintiff and the answer of defendant Hotel Marysville, Inc., findings of fact and conclusions of law were filed, and thereafter judgment rendered for plaintiff, as the assignee of Measer-Straus Co., in the sum of $100—$50 for each of the two lost cases. The court found that defendant maintained a vault and safety deposit boxes for use in connection with its business and gave notice to guests that it kept a fireproof safe and would not be liable for money, jewelry, documents, furs, fur coats and fur garments or other articles of unusual value and small compass unless placed therein, etc.; that defendant had a large number of safe deposit boxes but that Straus did not rent any of them; that Straus delivered the two valises to the bellboy, Malone, who asked if he desired them placed in the vault, and, on being answered in the affirmative, placed them in the vault and gave Straus the two brass checks; that at no time did Straus make any statement to the bellboy or to anyone else, directly or indirectly, that the valises were other than ordinary baggage; that there was no evidence that when Straus gave his valises to the bellboy he intended the deposit to be received and cared for other than in the usual and ordinary manner concerning ordinary luggage; and that until after the loss was discovered defendant was not informed by Straus, nor did it have reason to know, that said valises and contents were other than ordinary baggage or were of a value in excess of $50 each; and that defendant did not, by word or conduct, make any statement or representation whatsoever to Straus or to anyone in his behalf, with reference to the two brass checks; that defendant stored in its vault books and properties of its own, and kept said two valises and contents under similar circumstances, and used ordinary care for the preservation and safety thereof, and that said property was not taken by defendant or by any of its employees; that on at least one prior occasion Straus had been in the vault maintained by the hotel and was aware of the fact that during certain business hours it was the custom of the hotel to allow the doors of same to remain open. It was also found that the valises contained approximately 75 per cent of the stock of merchandise of Measer-Straus Co., a larger proportion than Straus had ever carried before, that on May 15, 1939, that company had procured from plaintiff insurance in the amount of $25,000, but that the travel limit thereon had, by an endorsement on November 16th, been increased to $35,000 for fifteen days; that plaintiff insurance carrier had paid to Measer-Straus Co. the amount of its liability for said loss, to wit, the sum of $30,624.94, and that plaintiff had been subrogated to the rights of said Measer-Straus Co.

However, the court further found that defendant did not consent in writing, or otherwise, with Straus to assume a greater liability than that prescribed by section 1859 of the Civil Code, nor did it give Straus a receipt in writing for the two valises or their contents; that from the evidence the matter was covered by the provisions of said section 1859 and not by those of section 1860 of the Civil Code; and that if the latter section were to govern, the conduct of Straus would preclude any recovery.

On this appeal, if we understand appellant's contentions they are that the provisions of section 1859 of the Civil Code do not apply to the case, but that it should have been decided under the provisions of section 1860 thereof, that the burden of proof was upon defendant to establish its freedom from negligence, and that it did not meet that burden. Section 1859 of the Civil Code provides that the liability of a hotel-keeper for losses of personal property is that of a depositary for hire; but it is provided that in no case shall his liability exceed $50 for each valise or traveling bag and its contents unless he shall have consented in writing with the owner thereof to assume a greater liability. Section 1860 provides that if a hotel-keeper keeps a fireproof safe and gives notice to a guest that he keeps such safe and will not be liable for money, jewelry, documents, furs, fur coats and fur garments, or other articles of unusual value and small compass unless placed therein, he is not liable, except so far as his own acts shall contribute thereto, for any loss of such articles if not deposited with him to be placed therein, nor in any case for more than $250 for any and all such property of any individual guest unless he shall have given a receipt in writing therefor to such guest.

[1, 2] It is said in Muehlebach v. Paso Robles Springs Hotel, 65 Cal.App. 634, 640, 225 P. 19, that these sections have changed the strict rule of the common law that an innkeeper is an insurer of the property of his guest, and that the liability of an innkeeper is now that of a depositary for hire who must use at least ordinary care for the preservation of the thing deposited (sec. 1852, C.C.). And in Baxter v. Shanley-Furness Co., 193 Cal. 558, 561, 226 P. 391, the court said, regarding sections 1859 and 1860, supra, that together they were intended to relieve innkeepers in this state of the burden of their common law liability; that section 1859 changed that liability from that of insurer to that of a depositary for hire as to personal property of every kind and description other than money, and, in addition, limits his liability, even though the evidence shows the innkeeper to be liable under the rule applicable to such a depositary, to fifty dollars for each valise or traveling bag and contents. It also said that section 1860 goes further than section 1859 and provides a method by which the innkeeper may relieve himself even of his liability as a depositary for hire of money, jewelry, etc., if he complies with the conditions provided therein and his guest fails to deposit such articles with him; and that as a depositary for hire under section 1859 an innkeeper is liable only when he has been guilty of some negligence, and that he is chargeable only with ordinary care and diligence in safeguarding his bailor's property. 3 R.C.L. secs. 22, 23, p. 96.

It thus appears that if we apply section 1859 to this case, even though defendant may have been negligent, its liability for Straus' two cases must be limited to $50 each unless defendant consented in writing with Straus to assume a greater liability; and that if we apply section 1860, defendant was not liable at all unless (1) Straus deposited his cases with defendant to be placed in its safe, and (2) then for not more than $250 unless Straus was given a receipt in writing.

Apparently appellant's contention is that Straus met the conditions of the latter section, that he deposited his cases with defendant to be placed in its safe, and that he received therefor a "receipt in writing."

[3] We shall consider first whether the evidence compels the conclusion that Straus dealt with his two cases as such property as is contemplated under section 1860, and deposited them as such with defendant to be placed in its safe. The evidence shows and the court found that Straus did not at any time make known to anyone that his two cases contained anything other than ordinary baggage, nor did he request that same be placed in defendant's safe. He was purely passive in the matter, merely acceding to the inquiry of the bellboy as to whether he wanted them put in the vault, and accepting without question only the two baggage checks therefor. He did not state that they were other than ordinary luggage or that they contained jewelry or articles of unusual value. While it is alleged by plaintiff that defendants were informed and knew that the cases contained valuable jewelry, for proof of this allegation it relies solely upon the fact that the cases were such as are carried by jewelry salesmen, and the statement of Malone that he assumed that the cases were sample cases, and Straus a jewelry salesman. We think this was insufficient to show knowledge on defendant's part that the cases contained articles of unusual value. As every lawyer knows, the fact that one seeking access to his office carries a lawyer's brief case is no evidence that the carrier is a lawyer or that his case contains legal documents. One who seeks to impose upon an innkeeper who has given the notice provided for by section 1860, supra, the liability of an insurer of articles of unusual value must make known to such innkeeper in some more definite fashion than this, that his baggage contains such articles and that they are being deposited for special safekeeping. The fact that Straus assented to the placing of the valises in the vault does not compel the inference that they contained articles of unusual value. Straus knew the "set up" as he put it, and may well have preferred that even his ordinary luggage be put in the vault rather than in the ordinary baggage room. His nonchalance alone is sufficient to support an inference that he did not consider the contents of his luggage of sufficient importance to call for greater concern on his part.

[4] We are of the opinion that Straus' acts did not constitute depositing "money, jewelry," etc., within the meaning of section 1860, supra. It is said in 14 Cal.Jur. 324, that a guest may not make an innkeeper a compulsory depositary of any amount of goods or treasure which he may desire to keep secure, citing Mateer v. Brown, 1 Cal. 221, 52 Am.Dec. 303; and in Goodwin v. Georgian Hotel Co., 197 Wash. 173, 84 P.2d 681, 119 A.L.R. 788, in construing a statute similar to our section 1860, supra, the court said that such statute intended to create mutual and reciprocal duties and rights between the hotelkeeper and his guests, and in that way to prescribe and maintain a fair and reasonable balance of protection to both. In Stoll v. Almon C. Judd Co., 106 Conn. 551, 138 A. 479, 482, 53 A.L.R. 1042, it is said that: "It is necessary and proper that the intent of the guest to deposit property for safe-keeping be brought home to the innkeeper in some reasonable and intelligible manner and that he should be given such notice of its character that he may know that it is valuable and to be safely kept and regulate the extent of his care accordingly and with a view to the liability which would attach to him in case of loss." In Horton v. Terminal Hotel, etc., Co., 114 Mo.App. 357, 89 S.W. 363, plaintiff, while a guest with defendant, lost a gold-filled locket containing an ivory miniature, the value of the two being alleged to be $221. The innkeeper had given notice of a safe, and that it would not be liable for loss of money or jewelry unless they were delivered to it for deposit in the safe. Plaintiff had handed a box containing the locket to the clerk, requesting him to keep it for him, but gave no notice of its contents. It was held that the hotel was at most a gratuitous bailee and was liable only for gross negligence; that it assumed no liability as an innkeeper for the reason that the article was one that, under the statute, it was plaintiff's duty to entrust to the defendant to be deposited in the hotel safe.

Under the English statutes, which require a deposit "expressly for safekeeping," something more than merely handing the goods to the clerk is required. O'Connor v. Grant International Hotel Co., Q.B.D., 2 Ir.R. 92; Whitehouse v. Pickett, H.L. [1908] App.Cas. 357, 12 Ann.Cas. 96. In the latter case the plaintiff's salesman had been accustomed to stay at the defendant's hotel, whenever he was in the city, over a period of eighteen years; on these occasions he always deposited his jewelry case in a particular recess behind the bar of the hotel; but on the occasion in question he gave his case to the porter without any communication to the latter or the hotelkeeper, and it was left in its usual place. It was held that, under such circumstances, no deposit "expressly for safe-keeping" had been made, and that the innkeeper could not be held liable under the innkeepers' act for loss of the jewelry. The court said, in the opinion of Lord James of Hereford: "My view is that the legislature intended that, before the innkeeper should be liable, proof should be given that he had received into his charge goods with the intention of making himself liable for their safety; that he should possess, or at any rate have opportunity of possessing, knowledge of the nature and value of the goods deposited, so that he might regulate the extent of his control over and care of them with some relation to the liability that would attach to him if the goods were lost."

[5] As above stated, the trial court found that there was no evidence that when Straus gave the valises to the bellboy he intended the deposit to be received and cared for other than in the usual and ordinary manner concerning ordinary luggage, and that until after the loss was discovered defendant was not informed nor did it have reason to know that said valises were other than ordinary baggage. There is no evidence that Straus made any representation that his cases were jewelry cases or that they contained jewelry of great value. On the contrary, his conduct in turning them over to Malone, the bellboy, and his acceptance of only ordinary baggage checks therefor carries an implication to the contrary. We believe that where an innkeeper relieves himself of liability by giving the notice provided for by section 1860, supra, a guest who desires to impose liability upon him must, in some manner, bring to the notice of such innkeeper that he is doing so; and that he cannot rely upon the mere appearance of his baggage as giving information to the innkeeper that it contains jewelry, etc., and is being deposited with him as such.

[6] We are further of the opinion that defendant did not in this case "consent in writing" to assume a greater liability than that provided for by section 1859, supra, nor did it give to Straus "a receipt in writing" for the jewelry contained in his cases. Appellant relies upon Greer v. Los Angeles Athletic Club, 84 Cal.App. 272, 258 P. 155, 157, but the facts in that case are in no wise similar. There plaintiff, a member of the club and a resident at its club house, delivered to one of defendant's clerks a package containing money, for deposit in the fireproof safe which the club maintained for the safekeeping of packages deposited therein by members of or lodgers in the club house. Plaintiff's package was placed by the clerk in an envelope specially prepared for such purposes, upon which was printed: "Directions for Using this Envelope. After the depositor has placed his money or valuables in the envelope and sealed it, have him sign his name in full on check A, and then tear off and give him check B, to keep as a receipt. When he calls for his deposit, cause him to put his signature on check B, and then compare it with that on check A; if the result is satisfactory, deliver the envelope, and date and file the two checks as receipts." The portion of the paper referred to above was delivered to the plaintiff at the time of making his deposit and was in words and figures as follows: "Check B. Date———, 192—, Los Angeles Athletic Club. No. 304. Los Angeles, Calif. Depositor is to sign here only when he withdraws his deposit ———. Deliverable to the owner only." The evidence shows that at the time the plaintiff deposited his package with one of the clerks in the office of the defendant there was delivered to him the above slip of paper which was detached from the envelope in which the deposit was placed. The portion of the envelope taken by plaintiff bore a number corresponding to the number on the envelope retained by the club. It was not there denied that the deposit was made especially for deposit in defendant's safe, nor was it denied that it was accepted by defendant with knowledge that it was being so deposited; defendant's contention was that no receipt was given. But the court said that the paper given to Greer was such as was prepared by the club for use by persons depositing money or valuables in the safe and was regarded and considered as a receipt by all parties to the action.

The evidence in the case before us shows that defendant used a similar envelope for deposit of articles of value by its guests, and that Straus was aware of it, and had, on at least one other occasion, deposited articles with the clerk of the hotel and received a similar receipt. However, he did not request any such receipt for his sample cases on the occasion of his visit on November 20, 1939, and because in the Greer case the printed slip given plaintiff was held to be a sufficient receipt under the circumstances of that case, it does not follow that the brass checks given to Straus under the circumstances of this case constitute or were intended to constitute receipts in writing for articles of unusual value, within the contemplation of section 1860, supra. If such brass checks be held to constitute receipts in writing under that section, they may, as well, be held to constitute "consent in writing" under section 1859; and to hold the latter true would, in effect, nullify the limitation of liability provided in the latter section, and would render an innkeeper liable for the full value of any article of baggage for which such a baggage check were given, regardless of where it was placed, whether in its vault or its ordinary baggage room. Conceding, as is argued by appellant, that a baggage check is evidence of the receipt of baggage, and that "writing" is defined by section 14 of the Civil Code to include "printing and typewriting," it does not follow that the brass checks given to Straus constituted receipts in writing for jewelry deposited for safe-keeping sufficient to impose liability upon defendant for the full value of the contents of Straus' valises.

In McFarland v. Spengler, 199 Cal. 147, 248 P. 521, it was held that under the election statutes permitting the voting for a candidate by writing in of such candidate's name on the ballot, a printed sticker pasted on the ballot with the candidate's name printed on the sticker was not a compliance with the requirements of the statutes. The court said that the use of the words "writing", "written in" and "written" used in the statutes evidenced an intention on the part of the legislature to exclude other methods, that the printed pasters were not writings, etc., and that the provision of sections 16 and 17 of the Political Code to the effect that "writing includes printing and typewriting" did not apply.

In Norris v. Manischewitz Broadway Cent. Hotel, 129 Misc. 329, 221 N.Y.S. 363, a hotel-keeper accepted a guest's money belt and put it in a tin box, delivering the key to the guest stating it was his receipt. The court said this was not a special agreement in writing within the provisions of the applicable statute. But it said that had plaintiff informed defendant of the contents of the package and that he was depositing a sum of money in excess of $500, and the defendant had told plaintiff, upon the latter's request for a receipt, that the key was his receipt, there might have been a question for the jury to determine whether by such action defendant had waived the provision of the statute as to its responsibility beyond $500.

In the instant case the determination of questions of fact and the inferences to be drawn from the evidence were for the trial court, and being of the opinion that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the findings made, and that Straus did not make a deposit of his cases with defendant as articles of unusual value to be placed in its safe nor receive a receipt in writing therefor, within the meaning of section 1860 of the Civil Code, it follows that plaintiff was not entitled to recover under the provisions of that section. The most that it was entitled to recover was the amount allowed by the trial court, to the allowance of which defendant interposes no objection.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEEK and THOMPSON, JJ., concur.

Hearing denied; TRAYNOR and SCHAUER, JJ., dissenting.

59 Cal.App.2d 620

WEINER v. MULLANEY et al.

Civ. 13692.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 9, 1943.

Hearing Denied Sept. 1, 1943.

1. Trusts 🔑305

In action by beneficiary against trustee for an accounting finding that plaintiff was entitled to one-third of landowner's royalty and to one-third of proceeds from sale of the 2½ per cent. landowner's royalty was sustained by the evidence.

2. Trusts 🔑30½(2)

Initialed letters from brother to sister stating that one-third of deceased mother's property belonged to sister and asking for directions as to what should be done with sister's third and reports concerning the matter and transmission of moneys as due to sister on account of such interest sufficiently disclosed an intent to create a valid "trust". Civ.Code, §§ 1052, 2221.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Trust".

3. Trusts 🔑25(1)

No particular language or terminology is necessary to create a trust, nor need the word "trust" or "trustee" be used. Civ. Code, §§ 1052, 2221.

4. Trusts 🔑21(1)

All the conditions of the trust need not be expressed in a single paper. Civ.Code, §§ 1052, 2221.

5. Trusts 🔑17(2)

A trust in personal property need not be in writing. Civ.Code, §§ 1052, 2221.

6. Trusts 🔑25(1)

A "trust" whether of real or of personal property is created as to the trustor and beneficiary by any words or act of the trustor indicating with reasonable intent an intention on the part of the trustor to create a trust and the subject, purpose and beneficiary of the trust. Civ.Code, § 2221.

7. Property 🔑4

A landowner's royalty or per cent is an "interest in real property".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Interest in Real Property".

8. Trusts 🔑22

Under statute providing that no trust in relation to real property is valid unless created by a written instrument subscribed by the trustee or his agent, what constitutes a subscription is a matter of intent and must be determined by the circumstances. Civ.Code, § 852.

9. Trusts 🔑22

Where brother did not deny writing letters and subsequently conducted himself in accordance with many declarations therein contained and adopted his initials as signature, letters were sufficiently signed although some of the initials were typewritten within statute requiring written instruments to be "subscribed" by trustee. Civ.Code, § 852.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Subscribe".

10. Signatures 🔑2

An instrument is deemed "signed" although the signature is typed, lithographed, rubber-stamped or printed.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Signed".

11. Trial 🔑396(1)

Findings that plaintiff's mother owned certain shares of stock and assigned and transferred one-third of them to plaintiff and that defendant directed broker to sell shares owned by plaintiff were inconsistent with defendant's allegations that defendant transferred such shares to plaintiff without consideration.

12. Trial 🔑404(1)

Findings are liberally construed in support of the judgment.

13. Trusts ⚷305

In action by beneficiary against trustee for breach of trust findings that plaintiff's deceased mother owned certain shares of stock and had signed or transferred one-third of them to plaintiff and that defendant had directed broker to sell shares owned by plaintiff were sustained by the evidence.

14. Trusts ⚷218(2)

Where trustee failed to make full disclosure of facts surrounding use of beneficiary's shares in stock transactions contrary to instructions, that it was no longer within beneficiary's power to rescind transaction when she finally learned the true situation and her only recourse was to salvage what stocks were left, such action on her part did not amount to a "ratification" of trustee's conduct.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Ratification".

15. Trusts ⚷217(4)

Where trustee was expressly instructed not to sell or deal in stocks for beneficiary, his action in dealing in stock was a "breach of trust" for which he was liable.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Breach of Trust".

16. Principal and agent ⚷48

An agent may not do anything which a trustee is forbidden to do. Civ.Code, § 2322.

17. Trusts ⚷179

In all matters connected with his trust a trustee is bound to act in the highest good faith toward his beneficiary and may not obtain any advantage therein over the latter by the slightest misrepresentation, concealment, threat or adverse pressure of any kind. Civ.Code, § 2228.

18. Trusts ⚷231(1)

A trustee may not use or deal with trust property for his own benefit or for any other person unconnected with the trust in any manner. Civ.Code, § 2229.

19. Trusts ⚷231(1)

A trustee who uses or disposes of trust property may at the option of the beneficiary be required to account for all profits so made, and if he has disposed thereof, to replace it with its fruits or to account for its proceeds with interest. Civ.Code, § 2237.

20. Trusts ⚷218(1)

Where trustee speculated in stocks contrary to beneficiary's direction resulting in loss to beneficiary of $5,868.84, beneficiary was entitled to judgment for such amount. Civ.Code, § 2237.

21. Appeal and error ⚷931(1)

On appeal from judgment for beneficiary against trustee where beneficiary testified that she first knew of brokerage account opened by trustee contrary to instructions in January, 1938, such testimony must be accepted rather than trustee's testimony that beneficiary was informed of the matter in 1937.

22. Trusts ⚷218(2)

Where beneficiary learned from broker in January, 1938, that instructions to trustee not to deal in stocks had been violated, beneficiary was put upon inquiry at that time and was charged with "notice" of all that an inquiry would have disclosed.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Notice".

23. Trusts ⚷218(2)

A beneficiary who learned that trustee had disobeyed instructions not to speculate in stocks was required to act within a reasonable time thereafter and could not wait and hold trustee for subsequent decreases in value of stocks in the account.

24. Trusts ⚷305

Beneficiary made a "prima facie case" by showing amount salvaged from brokerage account wrongfully opened by trustee and value of stocks and money in the account when she should have acted in regard to it, and burden was on trustee to show any changes thereafter affecting the amount of beneficiary's damages.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Prima Facie Case".

25. Trusts ⚷305

In action by beneficiary for an accounting against trustee findings that beneficiary's mother owned certain shares of stock and just prior to her death she assigned certain shares to beneficiary and on certain date trustee caused such shares to be recorded on books of corporation in beneficiary's name and certificate issued in her name therefor and that by use of power of attorney from beneficiary and without beneficiary's consent or knowledge trustee caused shares to be transferred to himself and sold and converted proceeds to his use were sustained by the evidence.

26. Corporations ⚷114

Where brother was acting for sister in all matters relating to disposition and handling of their mother's property, the delivery to brother was a sufficient delivery to pass title to certain shares of stock to sister.

27. Evidence ⚷589

The trial court was not bound to believe testimony of defendant.

28. Appeal and error ⚷1009(1)

Trial court's finding on facts in equity suit were binding on appellate court.

29. Trusts ⚷305

Findings that plaintiff's mother owned certain shares of stock and assigned part of them to plaintiff and that the defendant without authority transferred them to himself were inconsistent with defendant's allegation that shares were placed in plaintiff's name by defendant without consideration and merely for convenience.

30. Evidence ⚷591

Trial court was not required to believe defendant's testimony contrary to prior written declarations.

31. Trusts ⚷305

In action by beneficiary against trustee for breach of trust evidence showed that shares sold by trustee belonged to beneficiary who was entitled to money received by trustee on sale thereof.

32. Trusts ⚷305

In action by beneficiary against trustee for breach of trust finding that mother of the parties and the parties agreed that income from certain parcels should be divided in equal parts between mother and such parties was sustained by the evidence.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Goodwin J. Knight, Judge.

Action by Marcella Mullaney Weiner against George J. Mullaney and Marie E. Mullaney for an accounting. From a judgment for plaintiff against George J. Mullaney for $14,887.04 together with interest, which judgment also contained certain alternative provisions for recovery of certain stock or value thereof, both defendants appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

Henry G. Bodkin and Charles S. Gass, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Herzbrun & Chantry, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

Plaintiff instituted this action to obtain an accounting from her brother, George J. Mullaney, hereinafter referred to as "the defendant." Also joined as a defendant was her sister, Marie Mullaney, sued as such because of her refusal to join as plaintiff. A prolonged trial resulted in the entry of findings and judgment in favor of plaintiff and against defendant George J. Mullaney, requiring said defendant to pay to plaintiff the sum of $14,887.04, together with interest, and certain alternative judgments for recovery of Exeter Oil Company and Mt. Diablo Oil Company stock or the value thereof in case delivery of said stock could not be had, from which judgment both defendants appeal.

The parties to this action are the surviving children of Agnes Mullaney, a widow, who in her lifetime owned certain real and personal property, consisting of an oil lease, stocks and cash. In 1927 the plaintiff married and left home, but the defendants continued to live with their mother until her death. Defendant Marie Mullaney taught school and was away a great deal of the time, but defendant George J. Mullaney, because of a "sleeping illness" requiring him to sleep 12 to 14 hours out of every 24, was unemployed for several years prior to his mother's death, and remained at home at all times. By reason of his constant attendance at home he became familiar with and was fully advised of his mother's finances and business affairs. He testified that when his mother became seriously ill in the early part of 1936 he conducted and managed her business for her and continued to do so until her death in January, 1937, at the age of 72 years; that during that time she gave him various sums of money without any restriction or limitation. In 1933 plaintiff and her family moved to London, England, and remained there continuously until November, 1937, except for two visits to the United States which plaintiff made in 1936 and 1937. While in England, plaintiff corresponded with her family regularly and they likewise with her. In the many letters which plaintiff received from her brother he continually advised her that their mother was going to put all of her property into the names of her children in equal shares, to wit, one-third each, in order to avoid probate and payment of inheritance taxes upon her death, and on several occasions stated that he needed plaintiff's power of attorney to properly record and protect her interests, pay taxes, bond assessments, etc. In reliance upon these representations the plaintiff executed and delivered to her brother a power of attorney. He, in turn, forwarded to plaintiff in England various sums of money representing her one-third share in the proceeds received from a sale of a 5% landowner's royalty interest under an oil lease and, after the death of their mother, she was forwarded one-third of the royalty received from the lease. In 1938, after plaintiff's return to the United States, she requested of her brother additional money. He refused and stated that it was gone and that he had lost it in the stock market. She then discovered, among other things (a) that the real property hereinafter referred to as Parcel 1 had been deeded one-half to her brother and one-quarter each to herself and her sister, instead of equally, (b) that he had sold 184 shares of Union Oil stock belonging to her and converted the proceeds to his own use, (c) that he had used the power of attorney vested in him to speculate on the stock market contrary to her instructions, and (d) had converted her share of the money due from her mother's estate. In June, 1938, she revoked the power of attorney and thereafter requested defendant to give her an accounting. Upon his refusal so to do, she commenced the present action.

The trial court proceeded on the issues joined on the amended complaint, which alleged among other things, that Agnes Mullaney during her lifetime owned certain real and personal property, consisting of parcels of land in Kern and Los Angeles Counties, of an oil lease on property located in Kern County [Parcel 1], of stocks of the Union Oil Company, Consolidated Steel Company, Exeter Oil Company, Mt. Diablo Oil Company, and other corporations, and of cash, which properties were owned by the three children, plaintiff and defendants, in equal shares after their mother's death and one-third of which was held by defendant "in trust" for plaintiff; that on November 5, 1928, Agnes Mullaney "signed and acknowledged" a deed to Parcel 1 "purporting" to convey one-half to George J. Mullaney, and one-fourth each to the plaintiff and Marie Mullaney, which deed was recorded by George J. Mullaney on April 24, 1936 to avoid probate proceedings and the payment of inheritance tax; that defendant "acknowledged in writing * * * by instruments subscribed by him, that said real property [Parcel 1], all the proceeds of oil and gas produced therefrom, and all personal property belonging to said Agnes Mullaney were held by him, one-third for the plaintiff, one-third for himself and one-third for the defendant Marie E. Mullaney"; that defendant sold a 2½% landowner's royalty on Parcel 1 and refused to deliver plaintiff's one-third to her; that prior to her death Agnes Mullaney assigned 184 shares of Union Oil stock to plaintiff, which George had recorded in plaintiff's name on the company's books and subsequently transferred these shares out of plaintiff's name into his own, sold them and converted the proceeds; that Agnes Mullaney assigned to plaintiff and each of the defendants one-third of 1500 shares of Consolidated Steel stock owned by her; that George opened a marginal brokerage account, contrary to plaintiff's instructions and by using the power of attorney, and sold plaintiff's 500 shares of Consolidated Steel and with its proceeds purchased 3500 shares of Exeter Oil and 1000 shares of Electrical Musical Industries, which last mentioned shares were to be held as security by the broker for the unpaid balance; that subsequently defendant had 500 shares of the Exeter Oil Company withdrawn from plaintiff's account and deposited to Marie Mullaney's account; that on February 4, 1939, plaintiff was advised of this brokerage account through a demand upon her by the broker to pay a portion of the unpaid balance on said stock or he would sell it to satisfy the unpaid balance; that in order to salvage a portion of the property purchased with the proceeds of the Consolidated Steel Company stock, plaintiff sold sufficient shares to satisfy the unpaid balance.

The answer of Marie Mullaney denied, on information and belief, the allegations of the amended complaint.

Defendant George J. Mullaney's answer to the amended complaint, among other denials and allegations, denied that Agnes Mullaney deeded all the real property to the parties in equal proportions and alleged that on November 5, 1928, she signed, acknowledged "and delivered" a deed to Parcel 1, conveying one-half to defendant and one-fourth each to plaintiff and Marie Mullaney; admitted he sold the 2½% landowner's royalty and refused to deliver one-third to plaintiff, alleging she was entitled to only one-fourth thereof; admitted he recorded a certificate of stock in plaintiff's name on the books of the Union Oil Company, subsequently transferred and sold same, alleging that the stocks were placed in plaintiff's name "without consideration and merely for convenience"; admitted he opened the brokerage account, transferred 500 shares of Consolidated Steel to plaintiff, and subsequently sold said stock for $7,204.85, of which sum he invested $6,350 cash in 1000 shares of Electrical Musical Industries; that he then purchased "on margin" 3500 shares of stock of Exeter Oil Company and deposited the 1000 shares of Electrical Musical Industries, together with $894.95 cash, as security for said purchase; that the market price of both stocks decreased and the Electrical Musical Industries stock was insufficient security for the Exeter Oil Company stock purchased on margin, and it became necessary for him to purchase 500 shares of said Exeter Oil Company and deposit $200 in cash of his own funds as well as to personally guarantee the remaining 3000 shares of Exeter Oil Company; that through his acts plaintiff became the owner of 1000 shares of Electrical Musical Industries, 3000 shares of Exeter Oil Company stock and 545 shares of stock in Exeter Refining Company, which last mentioned shares were stock dividends declared by Exeter Oil Company in December, 1937; that plaintiff ratified the acts of defendant when she made certain sales from this account and is estopped from complaining thereof. As a second defense, he alleged he paid plaintiff "more than she was entitled to receive." His third defense alleged that his written acknowledgments with reference to plaintiff's alleged interest in Parcel 1, in the proceeds of oil and gas produced therefrom, and in all the personal property belonging to their mother, were made without consideration.

The findings of the court were, in the main, in accord with the allegations and averments of the complaint. The case is before us on a bill of exceptions wherein the testimony set forth is somewhat meagre, but contains therein many of the plaintiff's exhibits, numbered 1 to 40, and defendant's exhibits, numbered A to Z and "AA".

As one of the grounds for reversal, defendants urge that the findings, conclusions and judgment that plaintiff was entitled (a) to one-third of the landowner's royalty and (b) to one-third of the proceeds from the sale of the 2½% landowner's royalty is contrary to the evidence and law. The court found that on April 24th, 1936, George Mullaney recorded the deed to Parcel 1 and informed the plaintiff that the property had been transferred to plaintiff and defendants. At that time and thereafter George J. Mullaney stated to plaintiff in writing that one-third of said real property and one-third of the rents and profits thereof belonged to plaintiff, one-third to Marie Mullaney and one-third to himself. Upon the mother's death, and until the institution of suit herein, George J. Mullaney, collected the oil royalties from said real property and distributed them, except as to $153.81, one-third to each of them, pursuant to a written statement and promise that one-third of said royalties belonged to plaintiff and one-third each to Marie Mullaney and defendant; that on March 1, 1936, George J. Mullaney sold a 5% landowner's royalty on Parcel 1 and forwarded to plaintiff in England one-third of the proceeds; that on January 30, 1937, he sold an additional 2½% landowner's royalty for $10,000; that said defendant acknowledged in writing, prior to and after the receipt of said sum, that one-third belonged to plaintiff and it was being held by him for plaintiff, subject to her further desire and direction; upon plaintiff's demand said defendant refused to deliver her one-third interest and converted it to his own use and benefit.

The court concluded from these findings that plaintiff was entitled to (1) recover $3,225.00, with interest, from George J. Mullaney because of the conversion of the proceeds from the 2½% landowner's royalty sale and (2) to a judgment providing that plaintiff was entitled to the net income permanently from Parcel 1.

[1] We believe that the findings are fully supported by the evidence and the inferences reasonably deducible therefrom. George testified, regarding the landowner's royalty transaction, that he sold a 5% royalty interest on Parcel 1 for $24,000 and later a 2½% for $10,000; that he never sent plaintiff any of the money received from the 2½% royalty sale; that he did not pay any of the royalties received for the months of December, 1936 and January, 1937 out of the money received from the lessee, Gilmore, but that he did pay said royalties out of other moneys, but he could not say from just what income the moneys were received; that in October, 1937, plaintiff received one-third of the royalty check and has received one-third of all other royalty checks received since that time because the royalty checks were made payable to all three and plaintiff refused to endorse the checks unless she received one-third; that the deed to the oil land, Parcel 1, was delivered to him by his mother, was kept in his safe deposit box and recorded April 24, 1936; that he has known since 1926 that there was oil on the property; that he did not tell plaintiff that the deed to the oil property gave him one-half and his sisters one-quarter each until the present action was filed; that in November, 1937, he burned all his mother's cancelled checks, but on cross-examination he did not remember whether the cancelled checks were burned prior to plaintiff making a request for accounting. Defendant identified certain letters as those he had written and mailed to plaintff while she was in London, which letters were received in evidence as plaintiff's exhibits. Only the pertinent parts of several of these exhibits are set forth herein:

(a) Typewritten letter, dated April 20, 1936, containing typewritten initials "G. J. M." at the end: "* * * there isn't very much of the estate left but what little there is I thought we should have and Ma wanted to put the ranches and house in our names before she ever got sick at all * * * We don't need any attorneys to look after our enormous holdings but if this is the way you want it, you can have all you want for your third * * *. Ma wanted to put them in our name so that in case anything did ever happen to her that they would not have to be probated. * * * I have no idea of gyping you, as you are entitled to as much as I am, one-third, and one-third rightfully belongs to Marie, the same as it does to you and I. I wanted your power of attorney so that you wouldn't be troubled with the bills, taxes, bond assessments and other expenses that come with them. * * * However, I didn't see anything to your debits if the property was put in our names. * * * I hope I haven't insulted you or got you sore, as after all, in all matters I think I am doing what is best for you * * *." (Italics added.)

(b) Typewritten letter, dated August 6, 1936, containing typewritten initials "G. J. M." at the end: "I'll do whatever you say with your third (and not pressing the fact, but you already got your third out of the grand) don't want to intimidate myself or influence you, but I think I could invest the amounts to advantage but you will have to say so first. Otherwise, I'll just take your third and put it in your account at the Wilshire-Western Branch of the Bank of America. * * * I can sell the rest of our percents at the same price but I think we have sold enough." (Italics added.)

(c) Typewritten letter, written in October, 1936, containing typewritten initials "G. J. M." at the end: "I was kind of surprised to get the second payment of the royalty dough last Thursday. * * * so as per your instructions I sent you your third of it ($1600.00) and through the same bank. * * * How does it suit you if we split this, or these checks four ways * * * and the other fourth, or Ma's part we'll use for running the house? * * *" (Italics added.)

(d) Letter, dated February 25, 1937, containing no signature or initials: "This is 1100 berries and I am sending you two more envelopes registered at different times so that all three will make Wednesday's Normandie as I cabled you. * * * I am sending two more letters, one with 1100 more and the other with 1000 making a total of 3200 or two $1600.00 payments, the last two out of the 5% I sold at 5000 each percentage less 1000 for the commission & escrow & permit charges. * * * Instead of making money for you as I could if you gave me a chance, I was trying to save you paying out half of it to get it. But its yours & I had it put aside for you awaiting your orders & the cable today for the Dec. & Jan. checks. Can't send you them as I haven't got them yet, but will instruct Gilmore to mail you your third of the amount and copy of the run sheets and mail it to you every month." (Italics added.)

(e) Letter, dated February 27, 1937, not signed or initialed: "* * * All the estate consists of is 600 bucks in one bank and 1500 cash in another and one mortgage that isn't assigned, the rest of the stuff I transferred last spring, about the first of May into all three of our names. * * * I have the copies of all the run sheets and when Gilmore releases the Jan. Dec. & rest of the checks, I'll have them mail you your third directly with a copy of the run sheets for you, if you want it that way. I'd rather have it that way and then theres no chance of you not getting your third. I have a chance to sell 2½ per cent more than 10,000 and that would leave us six per cent, but I don't know what to do with the cash. I could have yours working to good advantage as I have Marie's and mine, but that I told you was up to you, & since you didn't instruct me to invest it, or put it to work I just left it in the bank. * * * Well, it is your dough & you can do with it what you want." (Italics added.)

(f) Letter, dated March 1, 1937, not signed or initialed: "The administrator is allowed so much by the court and the attorney so much too. Of course I'll take what they allow me, as it is exempt from taxes, but I, of course, will divy it up three ways as I have done with everything. * * * The places in Bakersfield and the place in Pasadena was deeded to us in 1928, and I didn't record the deeds until April of last year. * * * There was some Union Oil stock, some Consolidated Steel and some Exeter Oil stock, but I also fixed that up last April, and it is alright, divided three ways * * *. I have the dividends and also the rents from the places on the ranch and the proceeds of our cotton rent from the ranch, all deposited in a special account that is now about 1200 berries; and of course one-third of it is yours. * * *" (Italics added.)

Also identified by defendant was a copy of his 1937 federal income tax return, which was admitted over his objection that it was an attempt to vary the terms of the deed to Parcel 1, containing a statement that he had sold certain landowner's royalties in which he had a one-third interest. He further identified a copy of Marie Mullaney's 1936 California income tax return and testified that the writing on the copy was his writing, to wit: "Sale of 1/3 interest in 5% landowner's royalty from oil land 6400." The defendant was then shown the California inheritance tax department's report, on file in his mother's estate, which report showed the inheritance tax department's opinion of the value of the estate each of the heirs was to receive, to wit, and undivided one-third interest in and to the oil and gas lease on said Parcel 1.

George J. Mullaney contends that the statements contained in his letters do not create a trust because they do not evince an intent to create a trust; that they are simply statements of past events. Plaintiff, on the other hand, claims that she is not attacking the validity of the deed to Parcel 1, but maintains that these letters establish the fact that defendant intended to and did create a trust in one-third of the property left by their mother, whether probated or not, and that defendant is now estopped to deny her one-third ownership.

[2-6] Despite the informality of the language, we believe the letters initialed by defendant sufficiently disclose a trust intent. It is well settled that no particular language or terminology is necessary to create a trust; nor need the word "trust" or "trustee" be used; nor need all the conditions of the trust be expressed in a single paper; nor need a trust in personal property be in writing. Luco v. De Toro, 1891, 91 Cal. 405, 417, 18 P. 866, 27 P. 1082; Booth v. Oakland Bank of Savings, 1898, 122 Cal. 19, 24, 54 P. 370; Root v. Kuhn, 1921, 51 Cal.App. 600, 604, 197 P. 150; Hellman v. McWilliams, 1886, 70 Cal. 449, 452, 11 P. 659; Civ.Code, sec. 1052. A trust, whether of real or personal property, is created "as to the trustor and beneficiary, by any words or acts of the trustor, indicating with reasonable certainty: 1. An intention on the part of the trustor to create a trust, and, 2. The subject, purpose and beneficiary of the trust." (Civ.Code, sec. 2221.) There is a concurrence of these elements so as to indicate with reasonable certainty that a trust was created by defendant and so intended by him. There was nothing equivocal or vague in defendant's statements of his intention when he said, "I have no idea of gyping you, as you are entitled to as much as I am, one-third, and one-third rightfully belongs to Marie, the same as it does to you and I." The subject of the trust was all the property of which their mother had been seized during her lifetime; the purpose was to acknowledge a one-third interest in the beneficiaries, to wit, plaintiff and her sister Marie. Not only is defendant's intention to create a trust evident by his declarations, but his subsequent acts in forwarding one-third of the 5% royalty sale and royalties from Parcel 1, and otherwise dealing with the other property as though one-third belonged to plaintiff, establish beyond reasonable certainty his intent. In Lynch v. Rooney, 1896, 112 Cal. 279, 283, 284, 44 P. 565, 566, the following declaration in a letter was held to create a trust: "My dear Aunt: * * * Some time after Uncle Bryan's property was deeded to me I heard that Uncle Patrick was still living, and I resolved that he should have half of the estate, though the law does not compel the division. * * * Your affectionate niece, Mary Rooney." The court, at page 285 of 112 Cal., at page 566 of 44 P., states: "Upon a careful consideration of this letter, we are satisfied that an intention upon the part of Mary Rooney to create and declare a trust appears therefrom with reasonable certainty. The subject of the trust is disclosed by the letter to be the land. The purpose is to acknowledge an undivided interest therein in fee in the beneficiaries, and the beneficiaries are the heirs of Patrick Lynch, deceased. * * * When Mary Rooney wrote this letter she recognized the fact that a moral obligation rested upon her to give the heirs of Patrick Lynch that portion of the estate which would have gone to him by the decree of distribution, if Mary had known that he was then in life; and it was to satisfy this moral obligation resting upon her that, as an honest woman, she desired Patrick's heirs to have his interest in the estate. She declared this trust for that reason, and with that end in view * * *."

[7] The next point raised by the defendants is that the letters, insofar as they relate to the landowner's royalty or percent, are not sufficiently "subscribed" to come within the provisions of Section 852 of the Civil Code, because some of the letters contain only initials and others are not signed at all. Section 852 of the Civil Code provides that "no trust in relation to real property is valid unless created or declared: 1. By a written instrument, subscribed by the trustee, or by his agent thereto authorized by writing * * *." That a landowner's royalty or percent is an "interest in real property" is now well settled in California. Callahan v. Martin, 1935, 3 Cal.2d 110, 43 P.2d 788, 795, 101 A.L.R. 871; Dabney v. Edwards, 1935, 5 Cal.2d 1, 53 P.2d 962, 103 A.L.R. 822; Standard Oil Co. v. John P. Mills Organization, 1935, 3 Cal.2d 128, 43 P.2d 797. This being true, have defendant's letters been "subscribed" within the purport of Section 852 of the Civil Code when they contain only his initials? We have under consideration personal letters between a brother and sister written during a period when there was considerable affection between them. It is not unusual to find in such letters that the full name has been omitted in the signature and in its place has been substituted only the given name, an abbreviated name, a humorous pet name, and sometimes even initials. The defendant does not deny writing the letters; his complaint is that the initials are an insufficient subscription. While he used his initials only, we cannot say that he entirely omitted his name, he merely abbreviated it and used a combination of letters which were a part of his full name. The initials having been placed at the end of the letters, the accepted place for a signature, it is difficult to arrive at any other conclusion but that they were meant by him to be his signature and to thus identify himself in his letters. In Re Walker's Estate, 1895, 110 Cal. 387, pp. 391, 392, 42 P. 815, 816, 1082, 30 L.R.A. 460, 52 Am.St.Rep. 104, in discussing the words "subscribe" and "sign," the court uses this language: "It will be noted in the section of the Code above quoted that the duty enjoined upon the testator is to subscribe the will, while that imposed upon the attesting witnesses is that each must sign his name as a witness. The difference is neither immaterial nor accidental. A testator may be illiterate, or he may, by reason of paralysis, or other disabling cause, be incapacitated from signing his name, and the law has wisely and liberally provided for the due execution of a will by one so situated. It has required of him that he shall subscribe, and, while the word unquestionably has for one of its significations the signing of a name, it is a verb of comprehensive meaning. Any form or kind of underwriting is a subscription, and generally it has been held that any mark or writing by the testator meant by him to be his name, or to take the place of his signature, or to serve for his identification, will answer the requirements of a statute which calls merely for subscription or signing. The same liberality of construction and interpretation has been put by the courts upon statutes which require the witnesses merely to subscribe or to sign. There are thus numerous cases under such statutes which hold, in effect, that any signing by which alone, or by which, aided by parol evidence, the identity of the subscriber may be ascertained, substantially complies with the statute." And again, at page 393 of 110 Cal., at page 816 of 42 P., 30 L.R.A. 460, 52 Am.St.Rep. 104: "To 'subscribe' is to attest or give consent or evidence knowledge by underwriting, usually (but not necessarily) the name of the subscriber. * * * To 'sign,' in the primary sense of the word, is to make any mark." In Re Estate of Manchester, 1917, 174 Cal. 417, 421, 163 P. 358, 360, L.R.A.1917D, 629, Ann.Cas.1918B, 227, the court states: "The declarations in these cases are entirely consistent with the rule stated in Re Walker's Estate, supra, that: 'To sign an instrument or document is to make any mark upon it in token of knowledge, approval, acceptance, or obligation. The signature is the sign thus made.' * * * The true rule, as we conceive it to be, is that, wherever placed, the fact that it was intended as an executing signature must satisfactorily appear on the face of the document itself. If it is at the end of the document, the universal custom of mankind forces the conclusion that it was appended as an execution, if nothing to the contrary appears."

[8-10] As in all cases where the intent is the test, there can be no hard and fast legal rule as to form. The statute here required that the instrument be "subscribed," and what shall constitute a subscription must be determined in each case by the circumstances. Where, as in the instant case, defendant does not deny writing the letters, subsequently conducts himself in accord with the many declarations in his letters, and adopts the use of his initials "G. J. M." as a signature when also writing to his sister Marie, we can but conclude that he intended his initials to constitute his signature. Signature by initials has been held to be sufficient under the Statute of Frauds and the Statute of Wills. The fact that some of the letters in this case were typewritten rather than handwritten by defendant does not alter the situation. An instrument is deemed signed although the signature is typed, lithographed, rubber-stamped or printed. The foregoing methods of signature have been sustained in many cases. People v. Brussel, 1932, 122 Cal.App.Supp., 785, 789, 7 P.2d 403 (rubber stamp signature); Allenberg v. Rapken & Co., Ltd., 1930, 108 Cal.App. 99, 291 P. 281 (rubber stamp signature); O'Neil v. Brode, 1919, 40 Cal.App. 371, 181 P. 91 (rubber stamp signature); Hewel v. Hogin, 1906, 3 Cal. App. 248, 254, 84 P. 1002 (lithographic signature); Ligare v. California S. R. Co., 1888, 76 Cal. 610, 18 P. 777 (printed signature); Williams v. McDonald, 1881, 58 Cal. 527 (printed signature).

Defendants contend further (a) that the findings and judgment awarding plaintiff damages arising out of the operation of the brokerage account are contrary to the law and evidence, (b) that plaintiff's conduct in revoking the power of attorney and personally taking over the account amounted to a ratification, and (c) that the court erred in failing to find on the issue raised by defendant's answer that he transferred the 500 shares of Consolidated Steel to plaintiff without consideration.

The court found that plaintiff, while absent from this country, executed a power of attorney upon defendant's representations that he would protect her interests and he was instructed not to use the power of attorney in stock market speculations; that Agnes Mullaney assigned and transferred to plaintiff and each of the defendants one-third of the 1500 shares of Consolidated Steel stock owned by her; that George Mullaney used the power of attorney, contrary to plaintiff's instructions, to open a brokerage account for her, sold her 500 shares of Consolidated Steel for $7,204.85, and then purchased 3500 shares of Exeter Oil Company stock and 1000 shares of Musical Industries, authorizing the broker to hold said shares as security for the unpaid balance of $2,201.12 remaining due on the purchase price after applying all the proceeds received from the sale of the 500 shares of Consolidated Steel; that subsequently defendant directed 500 shares of the Exeter Oil to be withdrawn from the brokerage account and deposited to the account of Marie Mullaney; that on February 4, 1939, plaintiff was advised of the brokerage account when demand was made upon her by the broker to pay an unpaid balance or he would sell the stock to satisfy the balance; that plaintiff, solely for the purpose of salvaging a portion of the property purchased with the proceeds of the Consolidated Steel, sold sufficient shares of stock to satisfy the unpaid balance; that after deducting the proceeds of said sale there remained in said account 1400 shares of Exeter Oil Company stock, of the value of $525, and the sum of $811.01 cash; that plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $5,868.84 by reason of the sale and conversion of the 500 shares of Consolidated Steel stock, after deducting from the proceeds of the sale the reasonable value of the shares of stock and cash remaining in the account.

Plaintiff's testimony was to the effect that while she trusted her brother she wrote him not to invest her money and to put it in the bank; that during 1937 and 1938 she received money from defendant upon her request; that thereafter he refused to give her money, stating that it was gone, he having lost it in the stock market; that in 1936 her mother told her that she owned Consolidated Steel stock; that in July, 1937, she and her husband were going to Santa Barbara and she asked George what stocks she owned and he listed them on a slip of paper, which was introduced in evidence and reads:

"184 Union Oil	4336.00
500 Con. Steel	7500.00
1000 E. M. I @ 6 1/4
2000 Exeter 92 1/2–1.05"

Plaintiff further testified that in January, 1938, she first learned of the brokerage account when she received an interest slip; that defendant told her not to worry about the account; that she revoked her power of attorney in June, 1938; that in January, 1939, she was advised by the broker that the account needed additional money to be properly margined; that she consulted her attorney and he advised her to sell only enough stock to cover the margin calls.

Defendant testified that he gave plaintiff the slip of paper above copied, that his mother gave him 1500 shares of Consolidated Steel [apparently indorsed in blank] and that he had 500 shares put into the name of each of his sisters "merely for convenience". At this point, his March 1, 1937 letter was introduced in evidence. It contained the following declaration: "* * * There was some Union Oil stock, some Consolidated Steel and some Exeter Oil stock, but I also fixed that up last April, and it is alright, divided three ways. * * *" (Italics added.)

[11, 12] The findings that Agnes Mullaney owned 1500 shares of Consolidated Steel stock and assigned and transferred one-third of this amount to plaintiff and that defendant directed the broker to sell the 500 shares of Consolidated Steel stock owned by plaintiff, are necessarily inconsistent with and therefore sufficient to dispose of defendant's allegation in his answer that defendant transferred these shares to plaintiff without consideration. Findings are liberally construed in support of the judgment.

[13] These findings are supported by the evidence above reviewed. George admitted that his mother endorsed and delivered to him her Consolidated Steel stock. The trial court was not bound to accept his testimony that she gave him no instructions when she did so, and that plaintiff had no interest in this stock, but might infer from the slip of paper he gave plaintiff, the letter he wrote to plaintiff, and his acts in having the certificate for 500 shares issued in plaintiff's name, that his mother had directed him to do so.

[14] The case of Griffin v. Payne, 1933, 133 Cal.App. 363, 24 P.2d 370, cited by defendant in support of his contention that plaintiff ratified his acts when she took over the account, is not applicable to the situation in the case at bar. Payne was informed the same day the stocks were purchased and had subsequent notices, but waited until after the market value of the stock had decreased before he made objections to the purchases. There the court properly held that he ratified the purchases. Not so, in the instant case. Here, defendant failed to make a full disclosure of the facts surrounding the stock transactions and when plaintiff finally learned the true situation, after having been misled by defendant, it was no longer within her power to rescind the transaction and her only recourse was to salvage what stocks were left on hand. Such action on her part cannot be said to amount to an exonerating ratification. We believe the conclusion reached in Pacific Vinegar, etc., Works v. Smith, 1907, 152 Cal. 507, 511, 512, 93 P. 85, 86, is controlling in the instant case. There the court used the following language: "But, upon a moment's reflection, it will become apparent that the reason for applying the rule in all its liberality to innocent third persons does not exist in the same broad and benignant sense to the unwarranted and perhaps unlawful act of the agent. Thus, in many instances, the transaction is one which the principal could not rescind, because of the ostensible power of his agent. The innocent third party is thus fully protected. But can it with reason or justice be said that, because the principal is thus compelled to accept the consideration from the innocent third party, the agent himself must of necessity be held harmless for his violation of duty and breach of trust? If an agent with ostensible authority to sell his principal's wheat, but under instructions to sell it for not less than $1 a bushel, shall sell and deliver it for 50 cents a bushel, there is no power in the principal to rescind the sale. Shall the principal by accepting the 50 cents be held to have exonerated his agent from liability for the other 50 cents per bushel? Such a doctrine certainly does not commend itself, and is not sustained. It is limited, so far as the agent is concerned, to those cases where there remains with the principal, after his first complete knowledge of the transaction, the power to rescind, and, failing so to do, he is properly charged with full acceptance of all the responsibilities of the contract, even to the exoneration of his agent, because, with the ability to rescind, if he had rescinded, the transaction would be at an end and nobody would be injured. But, in a case such as the one here presented, it cannot successfully be contended that the acts of the plaintiff in endeavoring to realize upon the notes of the insolvent corporation, taken and indorsed by Smith in violation of his instructions, could amount, as to him, to an exonerating ratification. * * * it was not only the right, but it was the duty, of the plaintiff to realize as much as it could upon the notes thus improperly taken by its president, not to the end that he should be relieved from responsibility for the differences, but to the very end that by using every endeavor to realize upon the notes the agent's liability by way of damage could be accurately estimated in terms of that difference."

[15-20] George was never authorized to sell or deal in stocks for plaintiff; to the contrary, he was specifically instructed not to do so, and his action in so doing constituted a violation of his duty and breach of trust for which he is liable. Pacific Vinegar, etc., Works v. Smith, supra; Corbett v. Benioff, 1932, 126 Cal. App. 772, 776, 14 P.2d 1028. In this connection, he argues that plaintiff cannot accept the benefits, i. e. the increased price of Consolidated Steel shares and decline the losses incurred in the purchase of other securities. This argument is untenable. An agent may not "do any act which a trustee is forbidden to do." Civ.Code, sec. 2322; Calmon v. Sarraille, 1904, 142 Cal. 638, 641, 76 P. 486; Smith v. Elderton, 1911, 16 Cal.App. 424, 117 P. 563. And "in all matters connected with his trust, a trustee is bound to act in the highest good faith toward his beneficiary, and may not obtain any advantage therein over the latter by the slightest misrepresentation, concealment, threat, or adverse pressure of any kind" (Civ.Code, sec. 2228). "A trustee may not use or deal with the trust property for his own profit, or for any other purpose unconnected with the trust, in any manner" (Civ.Code, sec. 2229). "A trustee who uses or disposes of the trust property * * * may, at the option of the beneficiary, be required to account for all profits so made * * * and, if he has disposed thereof, to replace it, with its fruits, or to account for its proceeds with interest." Civ.Code, sec. 2237; Rest. Trusts, sec. 208, 210, 213; Gray v. Yarbrough, 1923, 61 Cal.App. 724, 730, 215 P. 914; Corbett v. Benioff, supra. In the Corbett case [126 Cal.App. 772, 14 P.2d 1029] the appellants likewise argued that "respondents must ratify the transaction as a whole or repudiate it as a whole. They cannot accept its benefits and reject its burdens" and the court responded: "The point which appellants endeavor to make is that the sale of the stock of the Los Angeles First National Bank and the purchase of the stock of General Motors was a single transaction, and that respondents have ratified the sale by claiming the proceeds thereof and repudiating the purchase. It is a sufficient answer to state that respondents have never ratified either the sale or the purchase. Both were unauthorized, and respondents are merly claiming the amount of the proceeds of the unauthorized sale as the measure of the liability of appellants for the breach of trust." Under the foregoing authorities, it seems clear that plaintiff was entitled to a judgment on this item against defendant for the sum of $5,868.84 with interest.

[21-24] It appears from plaintiff's testimony that she first knew of the brokerage account in January, 1938, and she then went to the broker regarding the account. We must accept this statement rather than defendant's testimony that he told her of it in 1937. What she learned from the broker at this time the record does not show, but in view of her other testimony regarding the instructions she gave defendant—instructions which this account violated—she was put upon inquiry at this time and charged with notice of all that an inquiry would have disclosed. Hence we cannot deal with the case on the assumption that she remained ignorant of the facts regarding the account after January, 1938. Defendant contends that she should at that time have closed out the account, and that, even if she may hold him for damages according to the rule above stated, she cannot recover anything on account of depreciation after that time of the stocks then in the account. We incline to the view that plaintiff should have acted without unnecessary delay after she discovered or should have discovered the facts regarding this account, allowing her, of course, a reasonable time for action after discovery, actual or imputed. She could not wait and hold defendant for subsequent decreases in value of the stocks in the account. But we find no evidence in the record regarding any such decrease in value, except perhaps the broker's letter to plaintiff of January 24, 1939, calling for an additional margin of $75 because of "the drop in the last two days in market prices." At the trial the values of the stocks in this account were stipulated, without any specification of the dates to which the values were applicable, and we have no basis for an inference that these values changed at any time. Plaintiff made a prima facie case by showing the amount received for the Consolidated Steel stock and the value of the stocks and money in the account when she should reasonably have acted in regard to it; if any change thereafter and before she did act would have affected the amount of her damages, the defendant should have offered evidence regarding it.

Defendants claim that the court erred in granting plaintiff judgment because of the conversion of 184 shares of Union Oil stock and in failing to find on the issues raised by his answer that the stock was placed in plaintiff's name "without consideration and for convenience only." His contention is that plaintiff never owned this stock and that this allegation of the answer was shown to be true.

[25-29] The findings of the court on this subject are: That Agnes Mullaney in her lifetime owned 704 shares of Union Oil stock; that prior to her death she assigned 184 shares of Union Oil stock to plaintiff and on May 6, 1936, defendant caused said shares to be recorded on the books of the Union Oil Co. in plaintiff's name and a certificate to be issued in her name therefor; that later, by the use of his power of attorney from plaintiff and without plaintiff's consent or knowledge and without authority, defendant caused these shares to be transferred to himself, sold them and converted the proceeds to his own use; and that "by reason of the conversion of said shares of stock, as aforesaid" plaintiff has been damaged in the amount of the judgment. In support of this finding there is testimony from an assistant secretary of Union Oil Company, who produced the certificates for 368 shares originally belonging to Agnes Mullaney, attached to which was an assignment of 184 shares to plaintiff and 184 shares to Marie E. Mullaney, signed by Agnes Mullaney, and who testified that a new certificate in the name of plaintiff was issued for 184 shares and mailed to defendant in May, 1936, and later receipted for by him and that in May, 1937, these shares were transferred to defendant on an assignment of the certificate signed by him as plaintiff's agent, accompanied by a power of attorney from plaintiff to defendant dated July 7, 1936, empowering him to act for her in such matters. This evidence, with the inferences to be drawn from it, is sufficient to support the findings above mentioned. Defendant claims that no valid delivery of the certificate to plaintiff is shown thereby. It is true, no manual tradition to her of the stock certificates assigned by Agnes Mullaney, or of the new certificate issued to plaintiff, is shown. But it is apparent from all the evidence above recited, that defendant, even before the execution of plaintiff's power of attorney, was acting for plaintiff, in all matters relating to the disposition and handling of their mother's property, and hence the delivery to him was a sufficient delivery to pass title to plaintiff. It is true, the defendant gave testimony from which a contrary inference could be drawn, but the trial court was not bound to believe him and evidently did not do so. Its decision in this respect is binding upon us. The court did not make an express finding on the allegation of defendant's answer that this Union Oil stock "was placed in the name of plaintiff by defendant without consideration merely for convenience." But, as we have already stated, findings are to be liberally construed in support of the judgment. The findings above mentioned, that Agnes Mullaney owned these shares of stock and assigned them to plaintiff and that defendant without authority transferred them to himself are so necessarily inconsistent with defendant's allegation as to amount to a negation thereof.

[30] Defendants urge that the part of the judgment awarding plaintiff 1666 shares of Laguna Land & Water Co. stock or its value of $149.94 is against the evidence. Defendant testified that his mother owned 5000 shares of this stock, which was transferred into his name and he still had all of said stock. His declarations in his letters to plaintiff impeach this testimony, and the court was entitled to believe the assertions that "everything was being divided three-ways," and to find that one-third of the stocks, or 1666 shares, or its proceeds, belonged to plaintiff.

[31] Defendants further urge that the court erred in granting plaintiff $1,000 for the alleged conversion of 5000 shares of Mt. Diablo stock. George testified that 6280 shares of Mt. Diablo stock were owned by his mother and that she turned over the stock to him; that he sold it for $3,000 after her death. The testimony is clear that this stock was never given to defendant as his sole and separate property; it was merely turned over to him, he sold it and pocketed the proceeds. The court properly found in accordance with George's declarations that the property was being divided three ways, and that one-third belonged to plaintiff.

[32] As to defendants' contention that the court erred in holding that Agnes Mullaney and the parties hereto agreed that during the lifetime of Agnes Mullaney the income from Parcel 1 should be divided in equal parts between Agnes Mullaney and the parties hereto, we direct attention to defendant's letter of October, 1936. This finding is not vital, but other evidence also supports this finding.

Judgment affirmed.

SHINN, Acting P. J., PARKER WOOD, J., and SHAW, J. pro tem., concur.

Hearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., dissenting.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 318

IRWINDALE CITRUS ASS'N v. SEMLER.

Civ. 14003.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 27, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 24, 1943.

Hearing Denied Oct. 25, 1943.

1. Contracts ⟹10(4)

Where co-operative marketing association's by-laws, made part of its marketing contract with member, required association to pack, ship, and sell its members' fruit to best advantage and for best interests of members, contract provision, reserving to association right to receive, pack and market all of such member's fruit whenever it found market which in its judgment justified such marketing, did not destroy "mutuality of obligation" of contract.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mutuality of Obligation".

2. Contracts ⟹10(4)

Where marketing contract between co-operative marketing association and orange grower provided that grower might terminate agreement by filing written notice with association's secretary in November of any year and association's by-laws gave any member right to resign from association by filing written resignation during first 15 days of August, contract was not invalid for lack of "mutuality of obligation" as permitting grower to withdraw therefrom at his pleasure.

3. Agriculture ⟹6

A crop grower, partially performing his obligation under marketing contract with co-operative marketing association for two seasons, cannot question due execution of contract on ground that requirements for membership in association were not complied with by either party.

4. Contracts ⟹309(1)

A positive, unqualified contract to do something possible in nature of things to be done is binding, though performance thereof is difficult or rendered impracticable or even impossible by some unforeseen cause, over which promisor had no control, but against which he might have provided in contract, unless performance was prevented by promisee's culpable negligence or other wrongful act. Civ.Code, § 1597.

5. Agriculture ⚷6

In co-operative marketing association's action against member thereof for breach of marketing contract by defendant's failure to deliver his orange crop to plaintiff for marketing, plaintiff's permission to other members to sell their fruit to others than plaintiff in previous years held no defense.

6. Appeal and error ⚷891

On appeal from judgment awarding co-operative marketing association damages for appellant's failure to deliver his orange crop to association for marketing pursuant to marketing contract, appellant's application for leave to produce certified copy of minute order, showing plea of nolo contendere entered in criminal proceeding pending in federal court against fruit growers' exchange, on ground that association could not recover, if it proposed to market appellant's fruit through such exchange in violation of federal law, must be denied, in absence of showing that association was mentioned in indictment or made party defendant in such proceeding.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter S. Gates, Judge.

Action by the Irwindale Citrus Association against George C. Semler to recover liquidated damages under a marketing agreement for defendant's failure to deliver a crop of oranges to plaintiff for marketing, in which defendant filed a counterclaim and cross-complaint for damages. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Henry O. Wackerbarth, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

R. B. Bidwell, of Glendora, and Tscharner & Miller, of Azusa, for respondent.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by defendant Semler from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, a co-operative marketing association, in an action to recover liquidated damages alleged to be due under the terms of a marketing agreement, by reason of defendant's failure to deliver his 1939 crop of Valencia oranges to plaintiff for handling and marketing, pursuant to the terms of said agreement.

Appellant also seeks a review of the order denying his motion for a new trial, and has filed in this court an application for leave to file additional evidence.

The record herein reveals that on or about April 9, 1937, respondent association and appellant executed an agreement, under the terms of which appellant agreed "to pick, haul and deliver" to the association's packing house at Irwindale, "for the purpose of packing and marketing, all the oranges now growing upon his lands, and all that may, during the term of this agreement, be grown upon his lands, or any other lands rented by him which are situated in the district served by this association * * * at such time or times and in such quantities as directed by the association.

"And the association, in consideration thereof, agrees to receive, pack and market all of said fruit whenever a market may be found for the same which in the judgment of the association and in accordance with its rules and regulations, shall justify such marketing and shipment; and to pay the grower the amount received for said oranges, less the charges which it may have against the grower, as provided by its by-laws."

It was further provided that said agreement should remain in effect "during all times that the grower is a member of the association", and also provided that the grower might terminate the agreement by filing a written notice of his desire so to do with the secretary of the association at any time during the month of November of any year during the term. The by-laws of the association were made a part of said agreement, which covered "10 acres of Valencias located at 1100 Cypress Ave., South side, East of Lark Ellen" in the Irwindale district.

The parties to the contract operated thereunder during the years 1937 and 1938. During the year 1939 a writ of attachment issued directed against the 1939 crop of oranges on the said ten acres of appellant, in the case of Ringer v. Semler, and in connection therewith appellant released the sheriff from any liability arising by reason of the sale of said crop by him (the sheriff) to the Granada Packing House.

It also appears that while said crop was under attachment, the Board of Directors of said association refused appellant's request to release the fruit, although appellant offered the equivalent number of boxes of oranges from a grove he owned across the street, the fruit there averaging one size smaller than that on the ten acres covered by the contract.

The instant action was initiated in the Municipal Court of Los Angeles seeking a judgment for $1,250, being 25¢ per box of a 5000-box crop allegedly sold outside the association. Appellant counterclaimed and crosscomplained for damages aggregating $7,696.96, whereupon the cause was transferred for trial to the Superior Court which entered judgment for respondent in the amount of $946 and costs.

Appellant lists his contentions on this appeal as follows:

"1. The Consignment contract was void for lack of mutuality of obligation.

"2. Semler never became a member of the association.

"3. Semler did not withdraw, sell or market any fruit outside the association.

"4. The association cannot recover because there is no showing that the market justified the picking of Semler's fruit.

"5. Plaintiff is not entitled to recover a penalty because it was first to breach the contract.

"6. It would be inequitable, unfair and unjust to require Semler to pay a penalty.

"7. The association never authorized the filing of this action.

"8. The court did not give proper credit on defendant's counter-claim.

"9. The court erred in denying defendant's motion for a new trial."

[1] Appellant's main contention is that the marketing contract is void for lack of mutuality of obligation for the reason that "the grower is unconditionally bound, but the association is bound only in the event it can find a market which, in its judgment, shall justify such marketing and shipment * * *."

Said marketing agreement specifically provides that the "by-laws of the association shall be and are hereby made a part of this agreement." Sub. 4, sec. 5, Art. IV of the association's by-laws provides: "4. The Board of Directors shall cause to be made all necessary provisions for the handling, packing, and shipping of the fruit of members, and shall pack, ship, and sell the same to the best advantage and for the best interests of the members." It would therefore appear that the association was bound to pack, ship and sell to the best advantage and for the best interests of its members the fruit delivered to it by the latter. And the fact that the association reserved the right "to receive, pack and market all of said fruit whenever a market may be found for the same which in the judgment of the association and in accordance with the rules and regulations, shall justify such marketing and shipment; and to pay to the grower the amount received for said oranges, less the charges which it may have against the grower as provided by its bylaws", does not destroy the mutuality of the contract. The very nature of co-operative marketing is such that the services expected of respondent association were fairly well established by the practices of the industry, and the "existence and life of the association itself depended upon its being furnished fruit to dispose of in the public market. A reduction in the amount of fruit so handled would not only tend to increase the overhead cost to the nontransgressing members, but, we may assume, to some extent affect the prestige and standing of the association as a marketing concern." Anaheim C. F. Ass'n v. Yeoman, 51 Cal.App. 759, 763, 197 P. 959, 961. See, also, Meyers v. Nolan, 18 Cal.App.2d 319, 63 P.2d 1216.

It should not be overlooked that both parties to the instant action performed under the terms of the marketing contract for the years 1937 and 1938 and that the court found: "Said contract and all provisions thereof were ratified, confirmed and acted upon by the plaintiff association and defendant Semler, during said period of time, and was and is a lawful contract binding and obligatory upon both parties thereto, was not lacking in mutuality, was performed and not breached by plaintiff, and was partially performed by defendant Semler. Said contract was acted upon and partially performed by defendant Semler until he breached same prior to the termination thereof."

[2] The cases cited by appellant of Naify v. Pacific Indemnity Co., 11 Cal.2d 5, 11, 76 P.2d 663, 115 A.L.R. 476, and Shortell v. Evans-Ferguson Co., 98 Cal. App. 650, 277 P. 519, holding that a contract which permits one party to withdraw at his pleasure is void for lack of mutuality of obligation, are not applicable to the facts presented by the instant litigation. In the Shortell case, an agreement to purchase real estate contained a provision to the effect that the owner reserved the right to return the purchase money at any time before a contract of sale for the property was signed. In the Naify case an insurance company cancelled an automobile liability insurance policy without the knowledge of the assured until after his automobile was involved in a collision.

In the instant case, the marketing agreement provided as follows: "That this agreement shall be and remain in full force and effect during all times that the grower is a member of the association; provided that the grower may terminate this agreement by filing a written notice of his desire so to terminate with the secretary of the association at any time during the month of November of any year during the term of this agreement." Section 4 of Art. II of the by-laws of the association provided: "* * * Any member shall have the right to resign from the association and terminate his membership by filing with the secretary * * * at any time during the first fifteen days of the month of August a written resignation (sometimes called notice of withdrawal), which resignation shall become effective as, of and on the close of business on November 30th of the year presented, without any action on the part of the association; and at said close of business on said November 30th, said membership shall automatically terminate and end and the certificate of membership shall be deemed cancelled; provided that no such resignation or withdrawal * * * shall be effective for any purpose if the member who gives or files such notice shall, at such time when the membership would otherwise have terminated, be indebted to the association * * *." The hereinbefore quoted provisions of the marketing contract and by-laws clearly demonstrate that, instead of being able to withdraw at his pleasure, a member was required to comply with certain terms and conditions before his withdrawal became effective. An examination of the questioned contract, together with the by-laws of the association which expressly form a part thereof, fails to sustain appellant's contention that the contract is invalid for lack of mutuality of obligation.

As was so aptly stated in the case of Anaheim C. F. Ass'n v. Yeoman, 51 Cal.App. 759, 763, 197 P. 959, 961: "The association was organized for the purpose of the better handling of citrus fruits through the co-operative and joint effort of its members. From the nature of the organization and the statement of its purposes as found in its articles and by-laws, it can be fairly and reasonably inferred that by the co-operation of its members mutual advantages would accrue to all through greater economy in handling and shipping and the securing of more advantageous marketing facilities. These results would be dependent directly upon the performance by the members of their agreement to deliver their fruit into the hands of the association for the purposes declared."

[3] Appellant urges that he never was a member of the respondent association because the requirements for membership therein were not complied with either by him or by the association, therefore, the association is precluded "from recovering a penalty for an alleged violation of the by-laws." Having partially performed his obligations under the contract for two seasons, appellant is now in no position to question the due execution thereof.

[4] Appellant contends that the attachment excused him from the obligation to deliver his fruit to the association in 1939. "Where a party has agreed, without qualification, to perform an act which is not in its nature impossible of performance, he is not excused by the difficulty of performance, or by the fact that he becomes unable to perform. If a thing is possible in itself to be done—possible in the nature of things to be done—a positive contract to do it is binding though the performance is rendered impracticable, or even impossible, by some unforeseen cause over which the promisor had no control, but against which he might have provided in his contract. * * * Except where prevention has been caused by the culpable negligence or other wrongful act of the promisee, it must be shown that the thing cannot by any means be effected. Nothing short of this will excuse nonperformance. The impossibility must consist in the nature of the thing to be done, and not in the inability of the party to do it; or, as it is sometimes said, it must be an impossibilitas rei as distinguished from an impossibilitas facti. If performance is possible, failure to perform is none the less a breach, although the obligor himself may have become wholly unable to perform. The Civil Code, § 1597, provides that 'Everything is deemed possible except that which is impossible in the nature of things.'" 6 Cal.Jur. 439, sec. 262. See, also, Klauber v. San Diego Street-Car Co., 95 Cal. 353, 358, 30 P. 555.

[5] Neither is appellant's contention that the respondent association permitted other members to sell fruit outside thereof entitled to consideration, because, as was stated in the case of California Bean Growers', etc., v. Rindge, etc., 199 Cal. 168, 178, 248 P. 658, 662, 47 A.L.R. 904: "The allegation that one of the directors 'did not deliver his 1919 crop of beans to the association,' and that 'no action has been commenced against him' does not state a ground of defense. The order in which actions may be commenced against defaulting members is immaterial." The record discloses that of the nine sales made outside of the association before appellant became a member thereof, seven were in the year 1933; that one of these members sold outside in 1934 and paid the penalty; that in 1933 the market was glutted and because of this, the association permitted the seven members to sell outside. Of the four sales made outside of the association during the time appellant was a member thereof, three were of fruit damaged by frost which was not saleable by the association. One sale was made outside after appellant severed his membership. No penalty for this infraction has as yet been collected, but neither has the time elapsed within which such penalty may be exacted of the defaulting member.

An examination of the record herein reveals ample evidence to support the findings, and also that the trial court properly denied appellant's motion for a new trial. Consequently, it is deemed unnecessary to discuss other points raised in this appeal.

[6] Appellant has made application for leave to produce a "certified copy of a minute order made in that certain criminal proceeding now pending in the United States District Court of the Southern District of California, Central Division, entitled 'United States of America, plaintiff, v. California Fruit Growers Exchange et al., defendants, No. 15167', which said minute order consists of the record of a plea of nolo contendere entered in said proceeding on behalf of the California Fruit Growers Exchange to the charges set forth in the indictment rendered in said proceeding." This application is made on the ground that such additional evidence is material and affects the substantial rights of appellant, in that respondent "association would not be entitled to recover a penalty for failure to deliver the fruit grown by Semler on his orchard during the year 1939 in the event Irwindale Citrus Association proposed to sell or market said fruit through its agent, California Fruit Growers Exchange, in violation of Federal law."

No showing has been made that respondent association was even mentioned in the indictment in said Federal action or that it was made a party defendant therein. Moreover, neither the indictment nor the plea of nolo contendere made in said action tends in any way to prove or disprove any issue involved in the instant litigation.

For the reasons stated, the application to produce additional evidence is denied; the judgment is affirmed.

DORAN and WHITE, JJ., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 421

BEARD v. MELVIN.

Civ. 6941; Sac. 5589.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 31, 1943.

1. Frauds, statute of 🔑128

Oral promise by mother to leave property to son by will, which was void under statute of frauds, could not be relied on to support allegation of implied contract between mother and son. Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6.

2. Frauds, statute of 🔑125(1)

Where proof of a promise or contract which within the statute of frauds is essential to the maintenance of an action, there can be no recovery therein unless the statute is satisfied, whatever the form of the action.

3. Executors and administrators 🔑443(5)

Where plaintiff in an action against representative of a decedent's estate merely alleges that decedent owed plaintiff a specified sum, and that plaintiff refrained from filing and presenting a claim against the estate, the law does not imply that the heirs or devisees of the decedent are obligated to plaintiff for the amount claimed.

4. Executors and administrators ⚷443(5)

Complaint, in action by son against administrator with will annexed of mother's estate, which merely alleged that mother, after death of husband, agreed orally with son that in consideration of son's not filing claims against husband's estate mother would provide for son in mother's will in an amount not less than one-fourth of mother's estate, that son filed no claim against husband's estate and received no payment of husband's indebtedness to son, but that mother failed to fulfill agreement, did not state cause of action on "quasi contract" or "implied contract". Civ.Code, § 1621; § 1624, subd. 6.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Implied Contract" and "Quasi Contract".

5. Frauds, statute of ⚷138(4)
Limitation of actions ⚷49(2)

Where continuous personal services are performed under an express agreement for compensation on termination thereof, and the agreement is unenforceable because not in writing, reasonable value of services may be recovered, and statute of limitations does not commence to run until termination of the services, which is usually on death of promisor.

6. Limitation of actions ⚷49(2)

Son's cause of action on implied contract or quasi contract with deceased mother, whereby mother agreed to leave property to son by will which was made more than 4 years before mother's death, arose, at time mother's obligation came into being, and hence action commenced after mother's death was barred by two and four year statutes of limitations. Code Civ.Proc. § 337, subd. 2; § 339, subd. 1.

7. Estoppel ⚷52

Estoppels are not favored in law.

8. Frauds, statute of ⚷144

Where complaint in action by son against administrator of mother's estate merely alleged that mother, after death of husband, agreed orally with son that, in consideration of son's not filing claims against husband's estate, mother would provide for son in mother's will in an amount not less than one-fourth of mother's estate, and that son filed no claims against husband's estate and received no payment of husband's indebtedness to son, but that mother failed to fulfill agreement, essential allegations of an "estoppel" to set up the defense of the statute of frauds were lacking. Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 6.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estoppel".

9. Frauds, statute of ⚷144

Generally, neither the mere omission to put a contract in writing, nor such an omission coupled with performance of the contract, is alone sufficient to create an "estoppel" to invoke the statute of frauds.

10. Frauds, statute of ⚷158(4)

Where statute of frauds is invoked as a defense, plaintiff must be able to show clearly such acts and conduct on defendant's part as amount to a representation that the defendant proposed to stand by his agreement and not avail himself of the statute to escape performance thereof, and that plaintiff in reliance on the representation proceeded to so far alter plaintiff's position as to incur an unjust and unconscionable injury and loss in case defendant is permitted to rely on the statute.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Clarence W. Beard against Herbert Carroll Melvin, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Alice Melvin, deceased, to recover money alleged to be due plaintiff under an implied contract with deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

George L. Popert and Busick & Busick, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

Murle C. Shreck and T. G. Negrich, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

Appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant made on plaintiff's failure to amend his second amended complaint after order sustaining defendant's demurrer thereto.

Plaintiff's second amended complaint alleges that on February 14, 1940, Alice Melvin died testate, possessed of real and personal property; that her will was duly admitted to probate and that defendant Herbert Carroll Melvin became the administrator of the will annexed of said decedent; that plaintiff is a son of said Alice Melvin and was, by her said will, given a one-third interest in certain real property described in said complaint appraised at $4,000; that said Alice Melvin was the widow of Herbert G. Melvin who died on December 16, 1917, and was the sole legatee under the will of said Herbert G. Melvin; that said estate had an appraised value of $26,660; that a decree of final distribution was made of said estate; that at the time of the death of said Herbert G. Melvin he was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $6,912.68; that thereafter plaintiff entered into an oral agreement with Alice Melvin that in consideration of plaintiff's not filing and prosecuting his claims against the estate of said Herbert G. Melvin the said Alice Melvin would make provision in her will for plaintiff, in an amount not less than one-fourth of her estate; that pursuant to said agreement, plaintiff did not file a claim against the estate of said Herbert G. Melvin and never received any payment on his said claim; that Alice Melvin failed and omitted to fulfill her agreement and did not in her will provide a legacy or bequest to plaintiff in an amount not less than one-fourth of her estate; and that by reason of her failure to perform she became indebted to plaintiff, at the time of her death, under an implied contract, for the reasonable value of the claims which plaintiff held against the estate of Herbert G. Melvin, which reasonable value plaintiff alleges to be $6,912.68. It is further alleged that plaintiff filed a claim in the estate of said Alice Melvin for the said amount, but that said claim was rejected by defendant. A copy of said claim was attached to plaintiff's complaint, and judgment was prayed for the sum of $6,912.68.

Defendant demurred generally to plaintiff's said complaint, and set up that it appeared upon the face thereof that plaintiff's claim was barred by the statute of frauds and that it was also barred by the provisions of subdivision 2 of section 337 and subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Defendant's demurrer was sustained and plaintiff was allowed ten days to amend; but, after due notice, he failed to do so, and judgment for defendant was entered.

On this appeal appellant, in effect, concedes that the alleged oral contract of Alice Melvin to provide for appellant by her will is unenforceable by reason of subdivision 6 of section 1624 of the Civil Code, except as to an asserted estoppel of defendant hereinafter discussed, but he asserts that "recovery is prayed for upon the promise which the law implies on the part of Alice Melvin to pay the reasonable value of the benefits which she received, under the terms of her express oral contract to compensate appellant by will"; that "The Estate can be held upon an implied promise to pay for the benefits which she received under the original agreement"; that "Recovery is not asked upon the original promise on the part of Alice Melvin, but recovery is requested on the implied promise which the law raises against her."

In support of his contention that his complaint states a cause of action to recover upon such an implied promise, appellant relies particularly upon the language of the court in Zellner v. Wassman, 184 Cal. 80, at page 88, 193 P. 84, at page 87, where it is stated: "Where a party has conferred upon another, with the assent of the latter, a benefit which was not intended as a gratuity, and the recipient cannot be held upon his original promise to compensate by virtue of the statute of frauds, the law implies a promise on the part of the party receiving the benefits to pay the reasonable value of whatever has been received under the contract." He also cites Demartini v. Katz, 49 Cal.App.2d 67, 120 P.2d 944, Paul v. Layne & Bowler Corporation, 9 Cal.2d 561, 71 P.2d 817, and Dondero v. Aparicio, 63 Cal.App. 373, 218 P. 608. The first two of these cases involved agreements to compensate by will for services rendered to a decedent at his request, in which the courts held that, while the oral contract could not be enforced in view of the statute of frauds, plaintiff could recover in an action at law on a quantum meruit, for the reasonable value of the services performed by plaintiff upon a contract implied by law. It was in support of its holding to that effect that the court, in the Zellner case, used the general language above quoted upon which appellant relies.

Paul v. Layne & Bowler Corporation, supra, was not a case involving an oral agreement to make a will, but was an action for damages for breach of an oral agreement to make a lease of certain property for a period of three years, plaintiff alleging that he had taken possession of the property and made certain expenditures for improvements thereon. The court held that no right of action existed for damages for the breach of the invalid oral contract, but that plaintiff's remedy was for "a return of or compensation for the benefits which the defendant has received under the plaintiff's occupancy by which the defendant has become unjustly enriched and for which it is therefore indebted to the plaintiff." [9 Cal.2d 561, 71 P.2d 820.]

In Dondero v. Aparicio, supra, plaintiffs sought to recover $1,100 alleged to be the balance due them from defendants under an oral contract for the sale by plaintiff to defendants of certain land. The court said that the action was but an ordinary action at law in assumpsit, and that therefore cases in which oral agreements for the sale of real property have, upon equitable considerations, been upheld had no application; that where a parol agreement for the sale of real property has been fully executed on the part of the seller and nothing remains to be done by the other except to pay the consideration, relief is generally afforded in law by permitting the seller to recover, not upon the contract of sale, but in assumpsit upon the promise implied by law. There the transaction had not been fully performed by plaintiffs, however, as there was no delivery of a deed and acceptance thereof, so the judgment for plaintiffs was reversed.

Appellant deduces from the foregoing decisions, and particularly from the language used in Zellner v. Wassman, above quoted, that in "all cases of oral contracts where recovery cannot be had thereon because of the requirements of the Statute of Frauds" a plaintiff can recover the reasonable value of whatever has been performed by him or has been received under the oral contract by the defaulting party; and that accordingly he is entitled to recover from the estate of Alice Melvin the amount of the claim which he had against the estate of Herbert G. Melvin because he forebore filing his said claim. While the quoted language used by the court in Zellner v. Wassman is broad in its implications, it is contended by respondent that it must be restricted in its application; and while he concedes that where personal services are performed for a decedent a recovery for the reasonable value thereof may be had on a contract implied by law, he asserts that the principle there set forth may not be extended to cover cases other than those involving personal services.

Assuming, but not deciding, that the general principle set forth in the above quoted excerpt from the opinion in Zellner v. Wassman may be extended to cover cases other than those involving services performed for a decedent under an oral contract unenforceable under the statute of frauds, or improvements to realty under contracts which cannot be enforced under the statute, if we eliminate the allegations of plaintiff's complaint regarding the oral agreement what allegations remain to show a right of appellant to recover under an implied contract? An implied contract is defined by section 1621 of the Civil Code to be one the existence and terms of which are manifested by conduct; that is, one the terms of which are not stated in words. In cases such as Zellner v. Wassman, supra, the conduct of the decedent in accepting the services rendered and in failing to make payment therefor is held sufficient to imply an obligation to pay their reasonable value. In cases such as Paul v. Layne & Bowler Corporation, supra, the conduct of the one party in receiving and retaining the benefits resulting from improvements to his real property resulting from the acts of the other party, is held to imply an obligation to pay the reasonable value thereof. Is any such conduct on the part of Alice Melvin here alleged as manifests the existence and terms of a contract to pay to appellant "the reasonable value of the claims which said plaintiff held against the estate of Herbert G. Melvin"?

[1, 2] The oral contract itself may not be relied upon to support an implied contract. It is said in 27 C.J. 315 that: "Whatever the form of the action may be, if the proof of a promise or contract within the statute is essential to maintain it, there can be no recovery unless the statute is satisfied." And in Thacher v. New York, W. & B. Ry., 153 App.Div. 186, 138 N.Y.S. 463, 466, the court said: "The whole theory of allowing a recovery upon quantum meruit where the contract is found to be void under the statute proceeds upon an elmination of the contract. There is no contract in existence to be availed of by either the plaintiff or the defendant to fix their several rights, duties, or obligations. * * * If, although the statute declared the contract to be void and incapable of enforcement, it could still be made use of to fix the respective liabilities of the parties, the statute would become a nullity."

[3, 4] The only allegations of plaintiff's amended complaint as to the conduct of the parties which can be relied upon to support an implied contract are that Herbert G. Melvin died possessed of property; that in his last will and testament he made his wife, Alice Melvin, the sole legatee and devisee thereof; that said estate had on hand for final distribution property of the net appraised valuation of $26,660; that the decree of final distribution was made and entered and has become final; that at the time of his death said Herbert G. Melvin was "indebted to plaintiff" in the sum of $6,912.68; that plaintiff did not file or prosecute his said claims against the estate of Herbert G. Melvin and has never been paid; that Alice Melvin did not provide for plaintiff in her will except to give him a one-third interest in real property appraised at $4,000; that plaintiff filed a claim against the estate of Alice Melvin, which was denied. It is not alleged that Herbert G. Melvin's will was admitted to probate nor is it alleged that his estate was distributed to Alice Melvin. Obviously, the foregoing does not allege conduct on the part of either plaintiff or Alice Melvin from which a contract of any kind can be implied. Even if it had been alleged that the estate of Herbert G. Melvin was distributed to Alice Melvin—which it is not—the fact that she succeeded to the estate of her deceased husband and accepted same could not be said to be conduct on her part from which a contract to pay plaintiff "the reasonable value of the claims" which plaintiff held against the estate of Herbert G. Melvin could be inferred. It is not alleged that plaintiff's failure to file his claim in the Estate of Herbert G. Melvin was due to a request on the part of Alice Melvin nor does it follow, from the allegations of said complaint, that Alice Melvin received any benefit from plaintiff's abstention from filing his alleged claim. The court cannot assume that said claim was valid and enforceable and that if it had been filed it would have been paid. Same may have been barred by the statute of limitations or unenforceable for other reasons. Its value for this reason is not subject to be ascertained, determined or measured. Russell v. Agar, 121 Cal. 396, 398, 53 P. 926, 66 Am.St.Rep. 35. For the same reasons no quasi contract or obligation created by law for reasons of justice arises from the facts alleged. Where, as here, plaintiff merely alleges that A owed him a specified sum and that he refrained from filing and prosecuting a claim against the estate of said A, the law does not imply that the heirs or devisees of such decedent who succeed to his estate become obligated to such claimant for the amount of his said claim. If this were true, the statute requiring the filing of claims against the estates of decedents would be superfluous. We conclude that plaintiff's complaint does not state a cause of action, upon a quasi contract or an implied contract.

However, even if we were to hold that plaintiff has stated a cause of action not dependent upon the alleged oral agreement, we would be constrained to hold that it was barred by the statute of limitations. Appellant contends that the statute did not begin to run until the death of Alice Melvin; that it began to run only when she "failed to carry out in her will her express oral agreement," thus relying upon the oral agreement. In support of this contention appellant cites Zellner v. Wassman, supra, Burr v. Floyd, 137 Cal.App. 692, 31 P.2d 402, Morrison v. Land, 169 Cal. 580, 147 P. 259, and Bacon v. Kessel, 31 Cal. App.2d 245, 87 P.2d 857. In the Zellner case the question of the statute of limitations did not arise. Burr v. Floyd, supra, was also an action to recover the value of personal services rendered to a decedent on an oral contract to compensate by will. There the court did say that "under such circumstances, the law will imply a promise to pay the reasonable value of the services rendered when the express promise to compensate by will has failed of fulfillment." [137 Cal.App. 692, 31 P.2d 404.] But it was not said in connection with whether the statute of limitations did or did not bar recovery. The word "when" as used by the court obviously did not refer to time, but meant "in a case where" the express promise to compensate by will has failed of fulfillment. In Morrison v. Land, supra, where it was sought to secure specific enforcement of a contract to compensate for services by will, plaintiff did not allege that he had filed a claim against the estate of decedent, and the language at page 585 of 169 Cal., 147 P. 259, relied upon by appellant, was used in connection with the court's discussion of the necessity for the filing of such a claim. The effect of the statute of limitations was not considered in the case.

Bacon v. Kessel, supra, did not involve a contract within the statute of frauds, but a contract by appellant, one of the beneficiaries under a will, that if respondent would not contest said will she would see that he got one-eighth share of her portion thereof. When the estate was distributed she repudiated her agreement, whereupon this action was commenced to enforce the contract. The court said that the action was one for damages for breach of an oral contract and that the statute of limitations did not bar the action which was begun within two years after the distribution of the estate. The case is not comparable to the one before us. Here appellant is suing, not on the oral contract but upon what he contends is a contract implied by law; and he cannot rely upon the oral contract to toll the statute of limitations.

[5] The question of when the statute of limitations begins to run in cases where services have been rendered to a decedent under an oral contract to compensate by will, such as Long v. Rumsey, 12 Cal.2d 334, 84 P.2d 146, Demartini v. Katz, supra, and Winder v. Winder, 18 Cal.2d 123, 114 P.2d 347, has apparently been one causing considerable difference of opinion in the courts of this state. In most of these cases the services were rendered up to the time of the death of the promisor, and in such cases it has been held that the statute did not begin to run until the termination of the services, or, as it was sometimes stated, until the promise to compensate by will has failed of fulfillment. When the death of the promisor and the termination of the services coincided the effect was the same whichever was said to start the running of the statute. But in Long v. Rumsey, 12 Cal.2d 334, 84 P.2d 146, the last services rendered by the plaintiff to decedent terminated some sixteen years before the latter's death, wherefore it became necessary to decide whether the termination of the services or the death of the decedent was to be the starting point. In its first opinion in the case, 77 P.2d 1064, the Supreme Court adopted the opinion of the District Court of Appeal and held that the date of the death of the promisor governed. Two justices dissented, and on rehearing, 12 Cal.2d 334, page 343, 84 P.2d 146, page 149, a different opinion was rendered, wherein, though it did not base its decision upon the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitations, the court said, after citing cases including Zellner v. Wassman, and Burr v. Floyd, supra, that: "It may be taken as established by these cases that ordinarily a promise to pay the value of such services is implied by law at the termination thereof, and that the statute of limitations then begins to run." And in the later case of Winder v. Winder, 18 Cal.2d 123, page 127, 114 P.2d 347, page 350, it said: "It is the settled law of this state that when continuous personal services are performed under an express agreement for compensation upon termination thereof, which agreement is unenforceable because not in writing (§ 1624, Civ.Code; § 1973, Code Civ.Proc.), the reasonable value of the services may be recovered, and that the statute of limitations does not commence to run until the termination of the services, which, in such cases, is usually upon the death of the promisor. Long v. Rumsey, 12 Cal.2d 334, 84 P.2d 146; Zellner v. Wassman, 184 Cal. 80, 193 P. 84; Morrison v. Land, 169 Cal. 580, 147 P. 259; [In re] Estate of Rohrer, 160 Cal. 574, 117 P. 672, Ann.Cas.1913A, 479; De Mattos v. McGovern, 25 Cal.App.2d 429, 77 P.2d 522; Burr v. Floyd, 137 Cal.App. 692, 696, 31 P.2d 402; Warder v. Hutchison, 69 Cal. App. 291, 231 P. 563; Mayborne v. Citizens' T. & S. Bank, 46 Cal.App. 178, 188 P. 1034."

[6] We conclude from the foregoing that if, under the allegations of plaintiff's complaint herein, any cause of action on an implied or quasi contract arose, the obligation of Alice Melvin, if any such resulted, commenced at the time when her obligation came into being, if it ever did, and not upon her death, and that same was barred by the statute of limitations.

[7, 8] Coming now to the matter of estoppel, appellant alleged in his brief that: "Under the rule laid down in Keller v. Gerber, 49 Cal.App. 515, 522, and 193 P. 809, where a verbal contract has been so far performed by one of the parties relying upon the good faith of the other, that he could have no adequate remedy except by complete performance, Courts of equity will decree its execution upon the grounds that the refusal to execute the same under such circumstances was a fraud." He then asserts that in the case at bar, defendant is estopped to assert the statute because plaintiff relied upon the good faith of Alice Melvin to perform her oral agreement, that she became unjustly enriched, and her failure to perform under such circumstances amounted to a fraud upon plaintiff. In this connection appellant apparently overlooks the fact that elsewhere in his brief he expressly declares that his action is not one for specific performance of the oral contract but one "upon the promise which the law implied * * * when decedent failed to carry out in her will her express oral agreement." But regardless of this inconsistency, appellant's contention that defendant is estopped cannot be sustained. Estoppels are not favored in law (10 Cal.Jur. 613), and in plaintiff's complaint the allegations of essential elements of an estoppel are entirely lacking.

[9, 10] Furthermore, one of the very cases relied upon by appellant on this appeal holds contrary to his contention. In Zellner v. Wassman, supra, 184 Cal. at pages 86, 87, 193 P. at page 87, it was said: "As a general rule neither the mere omission to put a contract in writing nor such omission coupled with performance is alone sufficient to create an estoppel. 'A plaintiff * * * must be able to show clearly * * * such acts and conduct of the defendant as the court would hold to amount to a representation that he proposed to stand by his agreement, and not avail himself of the statute to escape his performance, and also that the plaintiff, in reliance on this representation, proceeded, either in performance or pursuance of his contract, to so far alter his position as to incur "an unjust and unconscientious injury and loss, in case the defendant is permitted after all to rely upon the statutory defense."' 5 Browne on Statute of Frauds, p. 585. Plaintiff's services to decedent's mother were apparently rendered upon the basis of friendship, in the absence of contract and without expectation of charge. The performance relied upon by plaintiff consisted in waiving administrator's fees and refraining from presenting a claim against the mother's estate, in addition to certain personal services, in consideration of an oral promise to leave plaintiff $5,000 by will. There was therefore no such change of conditions and relations in reliance upon the contract that a refusal of the other party to perform would amount to fraud, as was the case in Barry v. Beamer, 8 Cal.App. 200, 96 P. 373, cited by counsel for plaintiff. There was no representation on the part of decedent that he would reduce the promise to writing as was the case in Seymour v. Oelrichs, supra [156 Cal. 782, 106 P. 88, 134 Am.St.Rep. 154]. The words and conduct on the part of decedent in making the oral promise and accepting plaintiff's performance did not amount to an inducement to plaintiff to, in effect, waive a written instrument in reliance upon a representation that decedent would stand by his agreement and not avail himself of the statute of frauds. There is therefore an absence of the element of fraud which is requisite to an estoppel. It is a case in which the consequences of the failure to comply with the statute must be borne by the party who seeks to enforce the agreement, and it follows that plaintiff has no cause of action upon the contract." Also see Paul v. Layne & Bowler Corporation, supra, 9 Cal.2d at page 565, 71 P.2d 817, and Trout v. Ogilvie, 41 Cal.App. 167, 174, 182 P. 333.

Plaintiff's complaint contains no allegation of fraud on the part of Alice Melvin, and, as hereinbefore pointed out, appellant asserts that his complaint is not for enforcement of the contract but for the value of his claim against the estate of Herbert G. Melvin.

As we are of the opinion that plaintiff's complaint does not state a cause of action and that defendant's demurrer thereto was properly sustained, the judgment is affirmed.

PEEK and THOMPSON, JJ., concur.

60 Cal.App.2d 335

PEOPLE v. TIBBITS.

Cr. 3713.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 28, 1943.

1. Criminal law 🔑1001

A defendant, until he has been apprehended, cannot be committed into the "custody" of the proper officer within statute providing that where probation has been terminated and judgment pronounced defendant must be committed to the custody of the proper officer and be detained until the judgment be complied with. Pen.Code, § 1215.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Custody".

2. Criminal law ⚷1001

That defendant was absent when his probation was revoked, because he had violated the terms thereof, did not render the revocation order invalid.

3. Criminal law ⚷161

Where defendant's parole upon conviction of second-degree burglary was revoked and a bench warrant was issued for his apprehension and he was thereafter convicted of burglary and was paroled from the state prison and the second-degree burglary sentence was ordered into effect after he was apprehended, the procedure did not constitute prohibited "double jeopardy", because the constitutional guaranty does not apply to service of a sentence, but applies only to twice being put upon trial for the same offense. Pen.Code, §§ 1215, 1216; Const. art. 1, § 13.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Double Jeopardy".

4. Pardon ⚷4

Where defendant's probation upon conviction of second-degree burglary was revoked and he was thereafter convicted of burglary and was paroled from state prison, and the second-degree burglary sentence was ordered into effect, whatever time was to be deducted for defendant's previous incarcerations was for the Board of Prison Terms and Paroles, and not for the court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W. Fricke, Judge.

Charles Paul Tibbits was convicted upon a plea of guilty of second-degree burglary, and the judgment was ordered into execution after a revocation of probation, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Morris Lavine, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Elizabeth Palmer, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment ordered into execution after a revocation of probation.

By an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, appellant was charged in Count I thereof with the crime of forgery, committed on or about January 2, 1932, and in Count II with the crime of burglary, connected in its commission with the charge set forth in Count I. Appellant entered a plea of "not guilty" to both counts, and when the case came on for hearing on November 16, 1933, by leave of court appellant withdrew his plea of "not guilty" and entered a plea of "guilty" to the offense charged in Count II of the information, which was stipulated to be burglary in the second degree, and orally applied for probation.

Thereafter, on December 14, 1933, appellant was sentenced to state prison for the term prescribed by law, the execution of sentence was suspended, and probation was granted for a period of two years under the following conditions: "* * * defendant shall serve six full months less eighty-five days of his probationary period at the county road camp. Defendant must make full restitution through Probation Department." Count I of the information was dismissed.

On September 27, 1934, the court issued a bench warrant for appellant and revoked and terminated his probation in the absence of appellant, the court having found that appellant had violated the terms of his probation in that he was "a deserter from the probation office and had failed to make any restitution."

In the meantime, in August of 1939, appellant was convicted of burglary at Modesto, California, was sentenced to state prison and was thereafter paroled.

On March 1, 1943, the court ordered the sentence of December 14, 1933, committing appellant to the state prison for the term prescribed by law, to be placed in full force and effect, and appellant was remanded to the sheriff.

Appellant here urges that: "The order of March 1, 1943, was null and void; the defendant having been ordered committed on September 27, 1934, and having thereafter been delivered to the warden of the state prison at San Quentin for the term prescribed by law (for the Modesto burglary) was entitled to have his time run on that commitment from the date on which he was originally committed to San Quentin, and the trial court on March 1, 1943, was without jurisdiction * * * after defendant was released from San Quentin to bring him back here again and recommit him. Such procedure in effect constitutes double punishment, and therefore is within the prohibition of the double jeopardy section of the Constitution of California, Art. I, section 13."

[1] While section 1215 of the Penal Code provides, as pointed out by appellant, that where "probation has been terminated * * * and the suspension of the sentence, or of the execution revoked, and the judgment pronounced, the defendant must forthwith be committed to the custody of the proper officer and be detained until the judgment be complied with"; there is nothing in the record to indicate that the judgment of December 14, 1933, which was suspended and ordered into effect on September 27, 1934, could have been complied with until March 1, 1943. In other words, a defendant cannot be so committed into the custody of the proper officer until he has been apprehended.

[2] Section 1216 of the Penal Code provides that: "If the judgment is for imprisonment in the state prison, the sheriff of the county must, upon receipt of a certified copy thereof, take and deliver the defendant to the warden of the state prison. He must also deliver to the warden the certified copy of the judgment, and take from the warden a receipt for the defendant." In the instant prosecution, appellant was delivered to the warden of the state prison and served his sentence therein, until paroled, in reparation for the crime he committed in Modesto, but he has not paid his debt to society for the commission of the burglary in Los Angeles County, on account of which he was granted probation and his sentence suspended. It is clear from the record that on September 27, 1934, the court in the absence of appellant revoked his probation because he had violated the terms thereof, whereupon the court issued a bench warrant for appellant's apprehension. It must be assumed that appellant was not apprehended until March 1, 1943, when the trial court in the presence of appellant ordered the sentence of December 14, 1933, to be in full force and effect. Incidentally, the fact that appellant was absent at the time his probation was revoked, does not render the order revoking probation invalid. People v. Hunter, 42 Cal.App.2d 87, 91, 108 P.2d 472.

[3] Appellant's contention that the procedure herein constitutes double jeopardy within the meaning of section 13, Article I of the Constitution of California, providing "No person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense", cannot be sustained, because the constitutional guaranty relating to once in jeopardy "has no application to the service of a sentence, but applies only to twice being put upon trial for the same offense." In re Wilson, 196 Cal. 515, 524, 238 P. 359, 362.

[4] Whatever time is to be deducted for previous incarcerations of appellant in the county jail or in San Quentin is a matter to be determined by the Board of Prison Terms and Paroles, and not by the court.

For the reasons stated, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

DORAN and WHITE, JJ., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 303

SHOTWELL et ux. v. BLOOM et al.

Civ. 12390.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.
Aug. 27, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 25, 1943.
Hearing Denied Oct. 25, 1943.

1. Landlord and tenant 🔑169(2)

Until employees knew whether lessees had been warned of defective flue in leased premises, lessees were "necessary parties" to action for loss of personal effects of employees in fire resulting from defective flue and were properly joined with owners as parties defendant, though complaint in one count predicated liability on fraud and concealment by owners. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 379–379c.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Necessary Party".

2. Action 🔑50(6)

Cause of action against owners and lessees for loss of personal effects of lessees' employees, wherein liability was predicated on failure to warn of defective flue in leased premises was properly joined with cause of action against same parties and for the same relief on ground that owners were guilty of fraud and concealment with respect to defective flue. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 379–379c, 427, subd. 8.

3. Action ⚿50(1)

Amendments to Code of Civil Procedure broadening rules as to joinder of parties defendant enlarged old rules of joinder of causes of action so that causes may be joined when they meet the tests of amended provisions as to joinder of parties, and all such causes need not affect all parties to the action. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 379–379c, 427, subd. 8.

4. Fraud ⚿41

Complaint alleging that failure of owners having actual knowledge of defective flue to warn lessees or lessees' employees thereof amounted to a concealment of the defect stated the indispensable elements of a cause of action predicating on fraud liability for loss of employees' personal effects in a fire resulting from defective flue.

5. Landlord and tenant ⚿166(2, 10), 167(9)

Under the doctrine of "caveat emptor", landlord is not liable for injuries to personal property of tenant or his invitees resulting from defects in leased premises unless defects were hidden and not apparent to tenant but known to landlord at the time of the demise and landlord failed to warn tenant thereof.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Caveat Emptor".

6. Landlord and tenant ⚿164(6, 7), 167(8)

Though landlord has no duty of inspecting premises to be leased with the object of locating latent defects or repairing patent defects, he is bound to inform tenant of hidden defects known to landlord which are not apparent to tenant and failure to do so renders landlord liable for injuries to tenant or his invitees arising therefrom.

7. Landlord and tenant ⚿164(1)

Except as to public or semipublic building, landlord is liable to one who enters leased premises in the right of the tenant for injuries resulting from pre-existing defects to the same extent as if the tenant had been injured.

8. Landlord and tenant ⚿167(8)

One who, upon express or implied invitation of tenant, enters or is proceeding to enter upon leased premises is an "invitee" and as such stands in the shoes of the tenant and may recover against landlord only if tenant could recover.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Invitee".

9. Landlord and tenant ⚿167(8)

Landlord having warned tenant of hidden defects in leased premises is not liable for injuries suffered as a result thereof by tenant's invitee whom tenant failed to warn of defects, and tenant having failed to give such warning is alone liable.

10. Landlord and tenant ⚿169(7)

In action against owners of leased premises for loss of personal property of lessees' employees, evidence that there were loose bricks and a crack in the back of a fireplace in the house and that fire started behind the fireplace warranted inference that fire started as a result of defective fireplace.

11. Landlord and tenant ⚿169(11)

In action against owners for loss of personal property in fire that destroyed premises leased by employers for plaintiffs' use, conflicting evidence as to whether owners had actual knowledge of defects in fireplace from which fire resulted was for jury.

12. Trial ⚿140(2)

The sufficiency of defendant's attempt to explain a statement detrimental to his interests made before trial and his credibility as a witness were for the jury.

13. Landlord and tenant ⚿169(7)

In action against owners for loss of personal property in a fire that destroyed premises leased by employers for plaintiffs' use, conflicting evidence sustained implied finding that owners had actual knowledge of hidden defects in fireplace which resulted in the fire.

14. Landlord and tenant ⚿164(7), 167(8)

Landlord is not liable to tenant or tenant's invitee for injuries resulting from a defect in leased premises of which tenant or his invitee knew or by the exercise of reasonable care should have known, though landlord had actual knowledge of defect and did not warn tenant thereof.

15. Appeal and error ⚿930(4)

Where it was established that fire which destroyed personal effects of lessees' employees resulted from defects in fireplace of which owners had actual knowledge and did not warn lessees, it must be assumed in support of verdict for employees that jury found that employees by the exercise of due care would not have discovered such defects, unless the contrary appears as a matter of law.

16. Landlord and tenant ⚷169(11)

Whether loose bricks and a crack in the back of fireplace were latent defects or so patent that occupants by exercise of reasonable care should have discovered them before using fireplace the day they moved into leased premises was for jury, where day was very dark, electricity had not been turned on, back of fireplace was covered with soot, and fireplace itself was filled with rubbish.

17. Evidence ⚷474(19)

Owners of personal property destroyed in a fire were competent to testify as to its value, though they had just moved with the property from another state, their alleged lack of knowledge of value of the property in locality where it was destroyed going to the weight and not to admissibility of their testimony.

18. Evidence ⚷474(16)

Owner is a qualified witness as to the value of property owned by him regardless of whether he is generally familiar with such value.

19. New trial ⚷89

Where record disclosed that from the time of the opening statement to end of trial of action for loss of personal property of occupants of leased premises owners knew that it was plaintiffs' theory that allegations of complaint relating to a defective flue as the cause of fire referred to loose bricks and crack in the back of fireplace itself and evidence showed and jury impliedly found that owners had knowledge of such defects several years before fire, there was no such "fatal variance" or surprise as would warrant granting a new trial, and denial of motion therefor rested in the discretion of trial court.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Fatal Variance".

20. Costs ⚷18

The purpose of statutes prohibiting recovery of costs when judgment is one that could have been rendered by an inferior court within the same county or city is to force plaintiffs to bring cases in an inferior court whenever possible and to penalize them for failure to do so. Code Civ.Proc. § 1032.

21. Costs ⚷18

Plaintiffs having commenced action in superior court and having recovered judgment for less than the maximum amount within jurisdiction of the Class A Justices' Court located in the county were not entitled to costs, though judgment also denied defendants any relief on their cross-complaint for $10,000. Code Civ.Proc. § 1032.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Action by Lee Shotwell and wife against V. J. Bloom, Mrs. V. J. Bloom, and others to recover for loss of personal effects burned in a fire wherein named defendants filed a cross-complaint. From a verdict and judgment for plaintiffs and against named defendants, the named defendants appeal, and from an order striking their cost bill from the files, plaintiffs appeal.

Judgment and order affirmed.

George H. Harlan, of San Rafael, for defendants, appellants and respondents.

Jordan L. Martinelli and Samuel W. Gardiner, both of San Rafael, for respondents and appellants.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Mr. and Mrs. Shotwell brought this action against the Blooms and others to recover for the value of their personal effects which were burned up in a fire which destroyed the premises in which they were living, and which were owned by the Blooms. The Blooms cross complained asking for $10,000 damages for the loss of the house, alleging that the fire was caused by the negligence of the Shotwells. The jury rendered a verdict of $850 in favor of the Shotwells, and against the Blooms. The Blooms appeal from the judgment entered on that verdict. The Shotwells appeal from an order of the trial court striking their cost bill from the files.

The facts are as follows: In October of 1941 the Blooms, who owned a farm in Marin County, leased it to a partnership known as Roberts Dairy. On the property was a house which had, prior to 1925, been the family residence of the Blooms. Between 1925 and October of 1941 the property, including the house, had been leased to successive tenants. When the property was leased by Roberts Dairy, the Blooms knew that the dairy intended to use the house on the premises for the purpose of housing an employee of the dairy and his family. In November of 1941 the Shotwells were hired by the dairy to look after and operate the premises, the employment to commence in December of 1941. Mr. Shotwell was to receive a salary, plus use of the house in question, and food as his compensation. The Shotwells were living in Oregon in November of 1941 when their contract with the dairy was entered into. On December 1, 1941, they arrived at Roberts Dairy. They were traveling by automobile and had two trailers containing their household furniture and effects. It was a rainy day and their furniture and other effects were very damp. Mr. Turney, one of the partners of the dairy, told the Shotwells to go out to the farm and to take possession of the house. They drove out to the house and moved in their furniture during the afternoon of that day. The day was gloomy and the electricity had not been turned on. The only way to heat the house was by a kitchen stove and two fireplaces, one of which was located in the living room. The Shotwells started fires in the two fireplaces late in the afternoon, and these fires were kept lighted until they retired sometime before 10 p. m. The fires were put out before they retired. Shortly thereafter a fire occurred which resulted in the house burning down and a considerable portion of the furniture of the Shotwells being destroyed. There is no serious dispute but that the fire started in the partition behind the fireplace in the living room. At the trial it was the theory of the Shotwells that there was a crack and loose bricks in the back of the fireplace; that the Blooms knew of the existence of these defects; that these were latent defects; that the Blooms failed to notify Roberts Dairy, or them, of the existence of these latent defects, and that the fire was proximately caused by these defects.

The first amended complaint is in two counts. It names the Blooms, Roberts Dairy and its partners as joint defendants. The first count alleged a renting of the house to the Shotwells by the Blooms and the dairy jointly; that the house was in a dangerous and defective condition in that the only method of heating the house was by means of a fireplace which had a dangerous and defective flue; that defendants knew of this defect and the Shotwells did not; and that defendants failed to warn the Shotwells of this known defect. It will be noted that in this count there is no allegation of fraud or concealment.

The second count, in general, repeated the allegations of the first with the following differences: The allegations concerning the renting by the dairy and the knowledge of its partners were dropped. This count alleged that the Blooms had leased the property to the dairy, and that the Shotwells were the employees of the dairy; that the Blooms were guilty of fraud and concealment with respect to the defects in the fireplace; that this fraud was against both the Blooms and the dairy. The Blooms' demurrer to this complaint was overruled. Early in the trial, on motion of the Shotwells, the dairy and its partners were dismissed as defendants.

On this appeal the Blooms make three main contentions: (1) The demurrer to the complaint was improperly overruled; (2) the facts do not support the judgment, and (3) their motion for a new trial should have been granted.

In support of their contention that their demurrer should have been sustained, the Blooms contend that the cause of action contained in the first count is based upon neglect of the duty to repair by the Blooms and the dairy, whereas the second count is based upon the alleged fraud of the Blooms alone. They therefore contend that the causes of action alleged in the complaint did not arise out of the same tort, did not affect all the parties to the action, and that there was an improper joinder of parties and causes of action. These contentions are without merit. There was no improper joinder of either parties defendant or of causes of action.

[1] So far as the parties are concerned, the Shotwells first alleged that both sets of defendants knew of the dangerous condition, and that both sets of defendants failed to warn them of the latent defect. The second count was based on the theory that the Blooms were guilty of a fraud both on the tenant and on them as employees of the defendant in failing to warn either the tenant or them of the hidden defect. The rules on joinder of parties defendant, since the 1927 amendments to the Code of Civil Procedure, have been greatly broadened over those theretofore existing. Section 379 now provides that any person may be joined as a defendant "who is a necessary party to a complete determination or settlement of the question involved." Until the Shotwells knew whether Roberts Dairy had been warned of the defects, the presence of that defendant was indispensable to a settlement of the controversy. Section 379a permits the joinder of all defendants "against whom the right to any relief is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative." Section 379b provides that "It shall not be necessary that each defendant shall be interested as to all relief prayed for, or as to every cause of action included in any proceeding against him," while § 379c provides that "Where the plaintiff is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to redress, he may join two or more defendants, with the intent that the question as to which, if any, of the defendants is liable, and to what extent, may be determined between the parties." The present case falls within several of these sections. The two sets of defendants were, therefore, properly joined.

[2, 3] So far as the joinder of causes of action are concerned, Sub. 8 of § 427 of the Code of Civil Procedure permits the joinder of causes of action where they arise out of "Claims arising out of the same transaction, or transactions connected with the same subject of action." The present case falls squarely within the letter and spirit of that subdivision. Moreover, it has been held that the liberal amended statutes on joinder of parties referred to above enlarged the old rules of joinder of causes of action, so that causes now may be joined when they meet the tests of the sections on joinder of parties, and that all such causes do not have to affect all parties to the action. Joerger v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 207 Cal. 8, 276 P. 1017; Teeter v. City of Los Angeles, 209 Cal. 685, 290 P. 11; Peters v. Bigelow, 137 Cal.App. 135, 30 P.2d 450; Kane v. Mendenhall, 5 Cal.2d 749, 56 P.2d 498; see, also, 23 Cal. L.Rev. 325; 7 Sou.Cal.L.Rev. 469.

[4] The Blooms also contend that the second cause of action, upon which the Shotwells relied at the trial, is predicated on fraud, and urge that the facts constituting the alleged fraud were not properly pleaded. It is obvious that the Shotwells did not plead nor rely upon any active fraud of the Blooms except in so far as the failure to warn of the known defects constituted a fraud upon the tenant or his invitees. The theory of the complaint was that the Blooms had actual knowledge of the defects in the fireplace; that they failed to warn their lessee, the Roberts Dairy, or the employees of the lessee; that this amounted to a concealment of the defects. The indispensable elements of the cause of action forming the basis of the complaint were properly alleged.

The main contentions of the Blooms are that the trial court did not properly instruct the jury on the law applicable to the liability of a landlord to the employees of the tenant for injuries caused by hidden defects; that even if the instructions were correct the evidence does not show that they had actual knowledge of the defects; and that the defects, if any, were patent and not latent.

[5, 6] The law applicable to the problem here presented is reasonably well settled. The general rule is that the landlord is not liable for injuries to the person or property of the tenant or his invitees caused by defects in the leased premises. This general rule of non-liability is an application of the doctrine of caveat emptor. In general, the lessee takes the premises as they are. There is no duty on the landlord to inspect with the object of locating latent defects nor to repair patent defects. Ellis v. McNeese, 109 Cal.App. 667, 293 P. 854; Nelson v. Myers, 94 Cal. App. 66, 270 P. 719; 1 Tiffany, Landlord and Tenant, p. 556, § 86, Sub. (a); see cases collected 15 Cal.Jur. p. 704, § 114; 7 Cal.Jur.Supp. p. 440, § 114; 32 Am.Jur. p. 526, § 662.

To this general rule there is a well-settled exception. This exception, supported by cases from many states, is stated in 1 Tiffany, Landlord and Tenant, p. 562, § 86, Sub. d, as follows: "The rule above stated, that the lessor is under no obligation to the lessee as regards the condition of the premises at the time of the demise, is subject to an exception to the effect that, if there is some hidden defect in the premises, or danger thereon, which is known to the lessor at the time of making the lease, but which is not apparent to the intending lessee, the lessor is bound to inform the latter thereof, and failing so to do, he is liable for injuries to the tenant arising therefrom." This is the rule announced by the Restatement of Law of Torts, Vol. 2, p. 969, § 358, and has been frequently declared in this state. Stanley v. Lander, 3 Cal.App.2d 284, 39 P.2d 225; Hassell v. Denning, 84 Cal.App. 479, 258 P. 426; Ellis v. McNeese, 109 Cal.App. 667, 293 P. 854; Ayres v. Wright, 103 Cal.App. 610, 284 P. 1077; Nelson v. Myers, 94 Cal.App. 66, 270 P. 719; see cases cited 15 Cal.Jur. p. 705, § 115; 7 Cal.Jur.Supp. p. 442, § 115.

[7, 8] The exception above mentioned applies not only in favor of the tenant but also in favor of those who enter in the right of the tenant, that is, in favor of members of the tenant's family (Moore v. Parker, 63 Kan. 52, 64 P. 975. 53 L.R.A. 778; Coke v. Gutkese, 80 Ky. 598, 44 Am. Rep. 499; Davis v. Smith, 26 R.I. 129, 58 A. 630, 66 L.R.A. 478, 106 Am.St.Rep. 691; Cutter v. Hamlen, 147 Mass. 471, 18 N.E. 397, 1 L.R.A. 429), his employees (Godley v. Hagerty, 20 Pa. 387, 59 Am.Dec. 731; Anderson v. Hayes, 101 Wis. 538, 77 N.W. 891, 70 Am.St.Rep. 930), sub-tenants (Guenther v. Jackson, 73 Ind.App. 162, 126 N.E. 873), or other invitee (Cristadoro v. Von Behren's Heirs, 119 La. 1025, 44 So. 852, 17 L.R.A.,N.S., 1161; Van Avery v. Platte Valley Land & Investment Co., 133 Neb. 314, 275 N.W. 288). As to such invitees of the tenant (except as to the lease of public or semi-public buildings), the landlord is liable to the same extent as he would have been had the tenant been injured. Stated another way, the landlord's liability, except in the case of public and semi-public buildings where his liability is greater (see King v. New Masonic Temple Ass'n, 51 Cal.App.2d 512, 125 P.2d 559), is no greater to the invitee of the tenant than it would be to the tenant himself. 1 Tiffany, Landlord and Tenant, p. 649, § 96, Subs. (a) and (b); see cases collected, Harris v. Lewistown Trust Co., 326 Pa. 145, 191 A. 34, 110 A.L.R. 749; 15 Cal.Jur. p. 742, § 155; 32 Am.Jur. p. 529, § 665, p. 538, § 671; 84 Univ. of Pa.Law Rev. 473. This is also the rule of the Restatement of the Law of Torts (Vol. 2, p. 969, § 358). In Runyon v. City of Los Angeles, 40 Cal.App. 383, 392, 180 P. 837, 841, the court stated that "one who, upon the express or implied invitation of the tenant, enters or is proceeding to enter upon the leased premises, is an invitee, and as such stands in the shoes of the tenant" and may recover against the landlord only if the tenant could recover. See, also, Angevine v. Knox-Goodrich, 3 Cal.Unrep. 648, 31 P. 529, 18 L.R.A. 264.

[9] Under this rule the landlord (except in the case of the leasing of public or semi-public buildings) discharges his full liability if he informs his tenant of the defect. If the tenant fails to inform his invitee of such known defect the tenant and not the landlord is liable. Tiffany says of this proposition: "The lessee's knowledge is in effect imputed to the person injured, or rather, perhaps, it is the lessee's duty, not the lessor's, to inform persons, entering on the premises by the former's invitation or permission, of the dangerous condition. A different rule, requiring the lessor to give such information to every person whom the lessee may allow upon the premises, would impose on the lessor the duties of an occupant while divested of the benefits, and would in effect prevent the leasing of any premises in which there is a concealed source of danger to persons who might enter thereon." 1 Tiffany, Landlord and Tenant, § 96(b) at page 653.

The trial court fully instructed the jury in exact accordance with the rules above stated. There was no error in these instructions.

It is next contended that the evidence does not support the implied findings of the jury that the fire was caused by latent defects of which the Blooms had actual knowledge. It is admitted that the Blooms did not warn the Roberts Dairy or the Shotwells of the existence of the defects in the chimney, and the uncontradicted evidence is that neither the tenant nor the Shotwells discovered the defects, but it is contended that there is no legally sufficient evidence to show that the Blooms had knowledge of the defects, if any in fact existed.

[10] The evidence shows that there were loose bricks in the back of the fireplace and that there was a crack in the back of the fireplace extending diagonally from one corner near the floor of the fireplace upwards into the chimney. A Mrs. Rothwell, who leased and lived in the house in question during the period 1926–1934, testified that she had considerable trouble with the fireplace while she lived there; that there were loose bricks in the back of the fireplace that were constantly falling out and that there was a diagonal crack about half an inch wide across the back of the fireplace; that the crack was as deep as you could see; that as a result of these defects she discontinued the use of the fireplace during her tenancy. The son-in-law of Mrs. Rothwell, Thomas Greer, corroborated her statement as to the existence of the loose bricks and crack. Both of the Shotwells, as well as several other witnesses, testified that after the fire the crack could be clearly seen in the back of the fireplace. Mr. Shotwell made a detailed examination of the chimney and fireplace after the fire, and described the crack and the loose bricks. He testified that the crack penetrated the back of the fireplace and that you could see light through the crack. That the fire started as a result of the crack and loose bricks is a reasonable, if not inevitable, inference from the evidence. The evidence is overwhelming that the fire started in back of the fireplace and did not start from the roof. This was testified to not only by the Shotwells and Frank Lintz, who was living with the Shotwells on the day of the fire, but also by several firemen who unsuccessfully tried to put the fire out.

[11] The only other question involved is whether the Blooms had actual knowledge of the existence of the defects in the fireplace. The Blooms categorically denied that they knew of the defects or that any one had ever informed them of the defects. Mrs. Rothwell who, as already pointed out, leased the premises from the Blooms from 1926 to 1934, testified that sometime during 1927 Mr. Bloom called at the house, and that while he was standing with her in front of the fireplace she told him that it was unsafe, and called his attention particularly to the loose bricks. Bloom replied she should be careful and not build too big a fire. Her husband unsuccessfully attempted to repair the defects, and, when Bloom failed to do so, she discontinued the use of the fireplace. Thomas Greer testified that sometime in 1927 he and a hired man by the name of Kinney were cleaning the chimney when Mr. Bloom came into the yard; that Kinney told Bloom that the fireplace was dangerous because of the crack and the loose bricks, and that Bloom said "it couldn't be very bad." Thus, there was positive evidence that as early as 1927 Bloom had actual knowledge of the defects. Although Bloom denied these conversations, such conflicts were for the jury. This testimony alone supports the implied finding that Mr. Bloom had actual knowledge of the defects.

[12, 13] It should also be mentioned that there is other evidence in the record which, while not as direct as that of Mrs. Rothwell and Greer, supports an inference that the Blooms were suspicious of the chimney and had knowledge that something was wrong. Both the Blooms testified that after the property was leased to Roberts Dairy in 1941, they visited the property and conducted a smoke test on the chimney in question, as well as on the chimney of another fireplace in the house; that they plugged the top of the chimney here involved and burned some burlap in the fireplace; that they looked in back of the fireplace but found no cracks or loose bricks, and no smoke coming out. They stated that they had no suspicions of the fireplace when they made this test, and had no special reason for making it. Mrs. Rothwell, the former tenant above mentioned, testified that Mr. Bloom called on her in June of 1942, after the fire, for the purpose of having her testify for him at the trial; that at that time she asked him about all the loose bricks in the back of the fireplace; that Bloom then stated to her that "he had warned everyone not to build too big a fire in the fireplace," and that he had had the fireplace repaired after the Rothwells left the premises. Bloom positively denied these conversations. His credibility was, of course, for the jury. Several witnesses testified that Bloom had stated to them that, had he known the Shotwells were going to move in, he would have warned them against building too big a fire. Bloom tried to explain this statement by contending that he was afraid that too big a fire would start a roof fire. The sufficiency and credibility of the explanation were, of course, for the jury. One witness testified that after the fire Bloom agreed that the fire started through the crack in the chimney. Another testified that after the fire he offered to show Bloom the crack in the chimney but that Bloom refused to accompany the witness to the chimney. From this brief summary, it is obvious that the implied finding of actual knowledge is amply supported.

[14-16] It is next argued that the defects here found to exist were patent and not latent, and should have been discovered by the Shotwells or by Roberts Dairy. It is clear that if the tenant or his invitee knows, or by the exercise of reasonable care should have known, of the defects that no liability attaches to the landlord even where the landlord has actual knowledge of the defects causing the injury. The trial judge so instructed the jury in this case. In support of the verdict we must assume that the jury found that the Shotwells, by the exercise of due care, would not have discovered the defects. That implied finding can be upset only if, as a matter of law, it can be said that the Shotwells, in the exercise of reasonable care, should have discovered the defects. The defects here found to exist consisted of loose bricks and a crack in the back of the fireplace. The day was very dark, it was raining and the electricity had not been turned on. The back of the fireplace was covered with soot, and the fireplace itself was filled with rubbish. Certainly, it cannot be said that the Shotwells, as a matter of law, were required to make a careful inspection of the fireplace before using it. Whether they exercised due care and whether the defects were patent or latent were obviously questions for the jury. Its determination, under the facts, is conclusive.

[17, 18] The Blooms next urge that for several different reasons their motion for a new trial should have been granted. They first contend that there was no legally admissible evidence of the value of the property destroyed. The only witnesses as to the value of the destroyed furniture were the Shotwells, and it is urged that, although they were the owners of the property, they were not competent to testify as to value because they had just moved here from Oregon and, therefore, had no knowledge of the value of the property in Marin County. The contention is without merit. It goes to the weight, not to the admissibility, of the evidence. An owner is a qualified witness as to the value of property owned by him whether generally familiar with such values or not. See cases collected 10 Cal.Jur. p. 1023, § 278.

[19] It is next urged that the motion should have been granted on the ground of surprise and newly discovered evidence. This contention is predicated upon the fact that the complaint alleges that the defects causing the fire were in the fireplace "flue," while the evidence showed they were in the back of the fireplace. It is contended that this constituted a fatal variance between the pleading and proof, and that it took the Blooms by surprise at the trial, and that, had they known that the defects charged were in the back of the fireplace and not in the flue, other witnesses would have been produced who would have testified that there were no cracks in the back of the fireplace. Affidavits of these proposed witnesses were produced on the hearing of the motion. These contentions are without merit. In the first place, the Blooms were not taken by surprise late in the trial by this alleged change in theory, as contended by them. Counsel for the Shotwells in his opening statement clearly and unequivocally stated that he intended to prove that the fire started "through these openings in the fireplace itself." Mr. Bloom was called as the first witness and he was asked if he had any knowledge of cracks in the fireplace. He was also asked concerning an alleged conversation with Mrs. Shotwell and Greer concerning the crack and loose bricks in the back of the fireplace. Mrs. Rothwell was the third witness called, and Greer was the fourth. They testified in detail concerning the loose bricks and the crack in the back of the fireplace, and no objection was made to their testimony. No objection on the ground of variance was made to the other testimony in the record concerning the condition of the back of the fireplace. A reading of the record discloses that from the time of the opening statement to the end of the trial the Blooms knew that it was the theory of the Shotwells that the allegations of the complaint relating to the defective "flue" referred to loose bricks and the crack in the back of the fireplace. The evidence shows, and the jury impliedly found, that Mr. Bloom had knowledge of the condition as early as 1927. Under such circumstances there was no fatal variance, nor surprise, warranting the granting of a new trial. To say the least, the denial of the motion under these facts rested in the discretion of the trial court.

Objection is also made to several of the instructions. At the request of the Shotwells, instructions were given embodying the rules of law above set forth relating to the landlord's liability to the employees of his tenant for injuries caused by latent defects. These instructions were not only in accord with the proper rules of law already discussed, but were practically identical with several instructions given at the request of the Blooms. There was no error in any of the instructions. Other points of a minor nature are urged. They have been considered, and all found to be without merit.

From what has been said, there was no error in the judgment against the Blooms.

The Shotwells appeal from an order of the trial court striking their cost bill from the files. After the entry of judgment, the Shotwells filed a cost bill for $133. The Blooms moved to strike the cost bill on the ground that the judgment for $850 was less than $1,000, which is the jurisdiction of the Class A Justices' Court located in the county in which the action was tried. Section 1032 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in part as follows:

"In the superior court except as otherwise expressly provided, costs are allowed of course:

"(a) To plaintiff upon a judgment in his favor: * * * in an action for the recovery of money or damages * * *.

"Provided, that the plaintiff shall not recover costs when the judgment is one which could have been rendered by a municipal or inferior court within the same county or city and county."

Based on this section, the trial court struck the cost bill from the files. The Shotwells concede, as they must, that under the above section, so far as the judgment granted them $850, no costs could be recovered because the judgment was less than $1,000. But they urge that, since the judgment also denied the Blooms any relief on their cross complaint for $10,000, the judgment actually rendered was not one "which could have been rendered" by a Class A Justices' Court. There seems to be no case directly in point although there is one case under old sections 1022 and 1024 of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to denial of costs in the Superior Court when the judgment was below $300, which seems to support the action of the trial court in the present case. Benson v. Braun, 134 Cal. 41, 66 P. 1. The case is not decisive, however, because of some differences in language between these old sections and the present § 1032 here involved.

[20, 21] The purpose of statutes such as § 1032 is clear. It is to force plaintiffs to bring their cases in the inferior courts wherever possible, and to penalize them if they do not do so. Here, without reference to the cross complaint, the Shotwells brought their action in the wrong court and were subject to the penalty. It is hard to see why this defect was cured by the filing of the cross complaint by the Blooms. The tendency of the courts has been to look only to the amount given in the judgment in determining whether, under § 1032, the successful party is entitled to costs. In other words, the courts have consistently applied the principle that costs are not recoverable if the actual recovery is less than the jurisdictional amount. Handy v. Samaha, 117 Cal.App. 286, 3 P.2d 602; Shaw v. Imperial Mut. L. & B. Ass'n, 4 Cal.App.2d 534, 41 P.2d 574. Thus, in Hollinger v. Medina, 46 Cal.App.2d 542, 116 P.2d 166, it was held in an action in the Superior Court where the jury determined that the plaintiff was damaged to the extent of $10,000, but under the comparative negligence doctrine there applicable defendant was only responsible for one-tenth of the damage or $1,000, and judgment was rendered for that amount, that costs were not recoverable.

Of course, had the plaintiff not sued for more than $1,000, and had he filed his complaint in the inferior court, and then had the defendant cross complained for $10,000, the case would have been transferred to the Superior Court. Had judgment then been rendered for plaintiff for $850, as was here done, it might be argued that plaintiff, not having invoked the Superior Court jurisdiction, would be entitled to costs. But that is not the situation here involved. Here, the plaintiff invoked the Superior Court jurisdiction. As it turned out, he received judgment for less than $1,000. No recovery at all was allowed on the cross complaint. Had the issues presented by the complaint and answer been tried alone, no costs could be recovered by plaintiff, because the inferior court could have granted a judgment for $850. The inferior court could likewise have entered a judgment denying any relief on the cross complaint. Under such circumstances, we believe the letter and spirit of the statute requires that costs be denied the Shotwells.

The appeal by the Blooms from the judgment is affirmed. The appeal by the Shotwells from the order of the trial court striking their cost bill is also affirmed.

KNIGHT and WARD, JJ., concur.

22 Cal.2d 742

MacNICOL v. EAST COALINGA OIL FIELDS CORPORATION et al.

Sac. 5475.

Supreme Court of California.
Aug. 27, 1943.

1. Boundaries 🔑20(1)

The statute providing that an owner of land bounded by a road is presumed to own to the center of the way and that a transfer of land bounded by a highway passes title to the soil of the bounding highway to the center thereof, unless a different intention appears from the grant, relates to streets and highways which have an actual or prospective existence for use of the abutting land. Civ.Code, §§ 831, 1112.

2. Boundaries 🔑20(2)

Where purpose of recorded map showing subdivision of mining tract in lots and blocks was to provide a convenient method of fixing each lot owner's right to participate in the proceeds from sale of oil produced from the tract and there was no intention to open proposed roads, there were no "lots" in the tract "bounded by a road or street" or "bounded by a highway" within statute relating to ownership to center of ways and title to conveyed lots did not extend to center line of roads depicted on map. Civ.Code, §§ 831, 1112.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Lot Bounded by a Highway" and "Lot Bounded by a Road or Street".

3. Mines and minerals 🔑54(2)

Where deed conveying subdivision lots and drilling contract entered into in connection with conveyance were part of one transaction, they were construed together to ascertain the parties' intent on question whether grantor's fee title to proposed road on which lot was located governed its rights in oil and gas produced therefrom. Civ. Code, § 1642.

4. Mines and minerals 🔑54(2)

Where deed conveying subdivision lots and drilling contract between grantor and grantee disclosed that grantor's reserved right for 50 years to drill for oil "upon said quarter section" and the parties' respective shares in the profits were interdependent, the respective rights of participation in net profits during the period extended to any well drilled in any part of the tract, including grantor's proposed roads on which lots were located and were not limited to wells drilled on conveyed lots.

5. Mines and minerals 🔑55(5)

Where drilling contract and deed of subdivision lots reserved to grantor 20 per cent. of "net production" from wells drilled upon the subdivision, a proportionate share of the proceeds from the sale of gas and other hydro-carbon substances was excepted from the grant in addition to oil, notwithstanding that reservation referred expressly to oil drilling rights and gas was not expressly mentioned. Civ.Code, § 1069.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Net Production".

6. Mines and minerals 🔑55(8)

Evidence was insufficient to show that oil company, which reserved exclusive right to drill for oil on certain premises for 50 years and reserved right to participate in profits, perpetually waived anything more than its drilling rights by consenting to the execution of an oil and gas lease.

7. Mines and minerals 🔑55(4)

Estate reserved by oil company of right to drill for oil on certain premises for 50 years was not an "estate in perpetuity" but an "estate for years".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estate for Years" and "Estate in Perpetuity".

TRAYNOR, and EDMONDS, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; H. S. Schaffer, Judge.

Action by Lee Alex MacNicol against the East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation and others to quiet title and for declaratory relief. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals.

Judgment modified and, as modified, affirmed.

For prior opinion, see 122 P.2d 661.

L. A. MacNicol, of Merced, in pro. per. for appellant.

C. Ray Robinson and W. Eugene Craven, both of Merced, for respondents.

SHENK, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant in an action to quiet title and for declaratory relief.

The case was presented to the trial court on an agreed statement of facts supplemented by documentary and oral evidence introduced during the course of the trial. There is no dispute as to the facts.

In 1919 George Schwinn and Mattie Kearns owned an irregular quarter section of land containing approximately 183 acres located in Fresno County. The land is about twelve miles from the town of Coalinga. Its surface is barren and unimproved, with no roads or streets surrounding it. The only substantial value of the land is in its oil and gas potentialities. The owners commenced preparations looking to its development for oil prospect and production. A subdivision map was filed showing the tract divided into twenty blocks of one hundred twenty lots, each lot being twenty-five feet in width. The map shows 2,160 single lots of 2,500 square feet and 240 double lots of 5,000 square feet each, an equivalent of a total of 2,640 single lots. The lots are shown on the map as fronting on eleven county roads forty feet in width, running east and west, and three roads running north and south. On the map 151.5151 acres are contained within the blocks, and 31.94 acres within the roads. No offer of dedication of the roads as public highways appears on the map, but the county board of supervisors caused to be endorsed thereon an acceptance of an assumed dedication arising from the filing of the map. No such roads were ever constructed.

The defendant, East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation, was organized to facilitate the furtherance of the project. The corporation was first authorized to act as sales agent for the sale of the lots. Subsequently, title to the tract was conveyed to the corporation. On the theory that the interests to be sold were securities, a permit was obtained from the Commissioner of Corporations which required that seventy per cent of the purchase price of $110 for single lots and $220 for double lots be paid to the owners, and thirty per cent be paid into a fund to insure drilling operations within the tract.

The defendant entered upon the campaign for the sale of the lots. Each purchaser executed a drilling contract with the defendant which described the land to be purchased by lot and block, and provided that the 183 acre tract of land "is believed to be oil bearing and not otherwise productive, and the subdivision is made for mining purposes only. It is further understood that the grantee is an independent purchaser of a parcel of land in fee simple, having as an incident thereto a right to receive a portion of the net proceeds from the sale of any oil produced from any wells drilled upon said tract, by the East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation, its successors or assigns." The contract also provided that upon the payment in full of the purchase price the corporation would execute a deed to the purchaser which should provide that the grantee "shall receive a proportionate share of eighty per cent (80%) of all the net profits arising from the sale of oil derived from any oil well or wells which the East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation may drill on any part of the above quarter section, and in the proportion that the number of lots conveyed by said deed bears to the total number of lots in said quarter section subdivision, and the East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation shall retain twenty per cent (20%) of the said net profits, as its share and proportion of the net production of said well or wells, which is hereby reserved, together with the exclusive right to drill for oil on said quarter section." It was also provided in the drilling contract that the lots containing 5,000 square feet should be computed as double lots both as to price and participation of profits. Upon payment of the purchase price each purchaser received a grant deed executed by the corporation. The deed described the real property conveyed by lot and block number with special reference to the recorded map. The deed reserved "unto said East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation, for a period of fifty years from the date hereof, the exclusive right to drill for oil upon said described quarter section." By the deed the purchaser was also granted the right to "a proportionate share of eighty per cent (80%) of all of the net profits derived from the sale of oil from any oil well or wells which the undersigned, the Corporation, drills on any part or parts of said subdivision, of which the within described property is a portion, in the proportion that the number of lots conveyed by this deed bears to the total number of lots in said entire tract, as specified in that certain drilling contract executed by the parties hereto concerning the within particularly described property."

By such a deed, dated February 1, 1922, J. P. Cackler became the owner of lots 58 and 59 in Block 4 of the map of the subdivision. He executed the drilling contract with the corporation. The plaintiff, Lee Alex MacNicol, is his successor in interest as to those lots.

In April, 1921, the defendant commenced the drilling of an oil well in the tract. Drilling continued to a depth of about 4,780 feet, when, in May, 1923, the drilling fund became exhausted, the equipment was lost by foreclosure, and operations were abandoned. In 1938 oil was discovered in paying quantities in the general vicinity of the tract, and efforts to finance drilling operations were resumed. In July of that year numerous owners, including the plaintiff, as lessors, entered into counterpart leases constituting a community oil and gas lease with Zeb A. Terry as lessee, whereby the latter was authorized to drill for and produce oil, gas, and other hydro-carbon substances on the leased premises, and pay to the lessors as royalty "a sum equal to one-eighth of the market price of all oil produced and sold by it" from wells drilled by the lessee or its assigns on said premises. The lease also provided for payment to the lessors of one-eighth of the proceeds from the sale of gas or water produced from the leased premises after deduction of the cost of production, transport and sale. The defendant consented in writing to the execution by lot owners of the counterparts of the so-called Terry community lease. Various assignments of that lease were executed by the lessee. Subsequently, as the result of drilling operations under the Terry lease, oil was produced in paying quantities.

A controversy arose between the lessors and the defendant over the division of royalties received from operations under the Terry lease. The defendant claimed that it was entitled to twenty per cent of the royalties received by the lessors under the lease; that the leased premises were confined to the lot boundaries as shown on the map and did not extend to any part of the so-called roads; that it was the owner of all land designated on the map as roads and therefore of all oil and gas produced therefrom. The lessors contended that the defendant waived all right to a share of the royalties by the execution in writing of its consent to the community lease and that their title extended to the center of the roads depicted on the map as contiguous to their lots. Conflicting claims to proceeds from the sale of gas produced from the drilling operations under the lease also arose. The plaintiff thereupon commenced the present action.

The trial court found and concluded that there had been no dedication to public use of any land designated on the map as roads; that the plaintiff owned only the 2,500 square feet in each lot described in the deed; and that the defendant was the owner of the 31.94 acres included within the subdivision designated on the map as roads. The decree quieted the title of the plaintiff to the 2,500 square feet represented by each of the lots, subject to the exclusive right of the defendant for a period of fifty years to drill for oil, gas and other hydro-carbon substances. It decreed that the defendant was the owner in fee of the 31.94 acres contained within the boundaries of the roads depicted on the map.

The plaintiff assigns error in the foregoing conclusions. He invokes sections 831 and 1112 of the Civil Code providing respectively that "an owner of land bounded by a road or street is presumed to own to the center of the way; but the contrary may be shown," and "a transfer of land, bounded by a highway, passes the title of the person whose estate is transferred to the soil of the highway in front to the center thereof, unless a different intent appears from the grant." He also relies on Allan v. City and County of San Francisco, 7 Cal.2d 642, 646, 61 P.2d 1175, where it was said that a transfer of land by lot and block number carries the title of the grantee to the center of the street in front of the land conveyed.

[1, 2] It is an undisputed fact in this case, however, that the roads as depicted on the recorded map did not exist in fact. The cases relied on by the plaintiff involved streets or highways which had an actual existence, and it is obvious that the provisions of the code sections relate to streets and highways which have an actual or prospective existence for the use of the abutting land. See Elliott v. McIntosh, 41 Cal.App. 763, 183 P. 692; 4 Cal.Jur. 380. It cannot seriously be contended that the roads shown on the map had such an existence. Public rights are not involved, nor is anyone in this action seeking to establish any rights in behalf of the public. In fact it was stipulated that there was no intention to improve any part of the 31.94 acres as roads or streets for subdivision purposes, but that the entire area, including the 31.94 acres, was intended to be used for mining purposes only, and none thereof for residential purposes. It becomes apparent from the stipulated facts and the documentary evidence that the purpose of the recorded map showing a subdivision in lots and blocks was to provide a convenient method of fixing the extent of each lot owner's right to participate in the proceeds from sale of oil produced from the tract. There was therefore never any intention to open any such roads. Consequently there never was any land or any "lots" in the tract "bounded by a road or street" or "bounded by a highway," as contemplated by said sections 831 or 1112. There is therefore no occasion to apply the rules laid down in those sections to the facts of this case. The conclusion of the trial court that each of the lots conveyed to the plaintiff's predecessor in interest was 2,500 square feet in area and that title did not extend to the center line of the roads depicted on the map, is therefore sustained by the record.

The court also decreed the parties' respective rights in oil and gas. It determined that the plaintiff was entitled to eighty per cent and that the defendant was entitled to twenty per cent of the net profits from the sale of oil produced on the 151.5151 acres contained within the blocks as shown on the map; that the defendant was entitled to the proceeds from the sale of all oil, gas and other hydro-carbon substances produced from the 31.94 acres, and to the proceeds of all gas produced from the 151.5151 acres; and that the defendant did not relinquish any of its rights to twenty per cent of the royalties payable under the community lease by its consent to the execution thereof by the owners of lots. The plaintiff also questions the correctness of those conclusions of the trial court.

[3] Apparently the trial court was of the view that the defendant's fee title in the 31.94 acres governed its rights in the oil and gas produced therefrom. Had there been nothing more involved in this case than the grants of lots to the various purchasers, there might have been some foundation for such an assumption. But here the participation rights do not flow alone from the grants of land. The deeds qualified the grants by a reservation of the drilling rights for a stated period, and by a transfer of participation benefits therein to the grantees; and co-incidentally a drilling contract was entered into by the grantor with each prospective lot owner. Those instruments—the deed and the drilling contract—were part of one transaction and must be construed together. Sec. 1642, Civ.Code.

Undoubtedly the defendant had reserved from the grant to the plaintiff the exclusive right to drill "on said quarter section," including the plaintiff's lots, for a period of fifty years. It had reserved a similar right as to all the land sold in the tract. It might not exercise its right to drill on every lot sold, and neither the purchaser nor the defendant intended that it should do so. But in order to share in the actual drilling operations in the tract and to procure capital to finance the operations, each purchaser furnished funds and pooled his interests with all the other purchasers in return for a proportion of the net profits from oil produced thereby. By the language of the instruments the scheme connoted a proportionate share to every lot owner in every well drilled anywhere in the tract under the drilling contract. Drilling was the only intended use of any of the land in the tract. At the outset the sale of lots in the tract was the only source of capital. Respective participation benefits in the net profits from the operations so financed were therefore proportioned, eighty per cent to the grantee-investors and twenty per cent to the corporation.

[4] From the language of the deed and the drilling contract it becomes obvious that the reserved right to drill for oil "upon said quarter section," and the parties' respective shares in the profits were co-relative and interdependent. They were created to exist for a period of fifty years. The respective rights of participation in net profits during that period extended to any well drilled in any part of the tract, and were not limited to wells drilled on the lots conveyed to the various purchasers. All of the land in the tract was put into the fifty year oil development "pool," and not merely the acreage contained within the lots as depicted on the recorded map. To say, as the trial court said, that the plaintiff is entitled to 2/2640ths of eighty per cent of the net profits from oil produced on the 151.5151 acres, and that the defendant is entitled to all the oil, gas and other hydro-carbon substances produced from the 31.94 acres, is to add language to the contract which the parties obviously did not include.

[5] It also appears that the trial court erred in concluding that the defendant was entitled to all the gas from the entire tract. The provisions of the grant and of the drilling contract must likewise be deemed to govern the rights of the parties with reference to participation of proceeds from the sale of gas. Those provisions must be considered in the light of the fact that gas and oil in place are inseparable and both are brought to the surface in drilling operations. It is true, as stipulated by the parties, that at the time the deed and drilling contract were executed, gas was not considered of any value and was not expressly mentioned in those instruments. Nevertheless the participation rights of the corporation under the drilling contract was twenty per cent "as its share and proportion of the net production of said well or wells." The expression "net production of said well or wells" is all inclusive. The language of reservation in each instrument referred expressly to oil drilling rights, but inasmuch as it also reserved twenty per cent of the "net production" from the wells, we must conclude that the language of reservation excepted also from the grant a proportionate share of the proceeds from the sale of gas and other hydro-carbon substances in addition to oil; and that all else passed to the grantee. Sec. 1069, Civ.Code. The proportionate shares of the parties in the sale of the proceeds from gas under the drilling contract and deed, as so read together, are therefore the same as in the case of the proceeds from oil.

[6, 7] The evidence sufficiently supports the trial court's conclusion that the corporation by its consent to the execution of the community lease, did not waive any of its rights to participate in the royalties payable under the lease to the extent of twenty per cent. The estate reserved by the defendant was not an estate in perpetuity, but was an estate created for a term of years. Dabney-Johnston Oil Corp. v. Walden, 4 Cal.2d 637, 52 P.2d 237. The defendant granted to the lot owners a similar estate in the lands in the tract which were owned by it. By the express language of the drilling contract, the purchaser's right to participate in profits was considered by the parties as a covenant running with the land. The co-existent rights of the parties—plaintiff to receive and the defendant to retain a share in the proceeds from the wells drilled in the tract—were therefore inseparable from the land for the duration of the limited estates. The trial court was therefore justified in concluding that the purpose of the community lease was to effect a more satisfactory arrangement for compensating drilling operations when sufficient capital was not procurable from sale of lots; and that there was no waiver by the defendant of any right to participate in royalties or profits received therefrom.

From the foregoing it follows that the judgment should be and it is hereby modified to provide as to the participation rights of the parties (1) that the plaintiff is entitled, for a period of fifty years from February 1, 1922, to that proportion of eighty per cent of the profits or royalties received from sale of oil and gas produced from wells drilled in any part of said tract under the drilling contract or the community lease which the lots owned by the plaintiff bear to the total number of lots in the tract, namely 2/2640ths of said percentage; and (2) that defendant is entitled to retain the remaining twenty per cent of the profits or royalties from sale of oil and gas produced from wells drilled in said tract under the drilling contract or the community lease for the same period.

As so modified the judgment is affirmed, neither party to recover costs on appeal.

GIBSON, C. J., and CURTIS, CARTER, and SCHAUER, JJ., concurred.

TRAYNOR, Justice (dissenting).

It is my opinion that when the defendant consented to the Terry lease it relinquished its right to participate in the profits from operations under that lease. The lease provides explicitly for the disposition of profits from the wells, permitting Terry to retain seven-eighths of the price for oil produced, and requiring him to pay one-eighth to the lessors. Having consented to this lease and reserved only its rights "in, on, or to any lot or lots not leased to Zeb A. Terry," defendant was bound by the terms of distribution provided in the lease. Moreover, under its contract with plaintiff, defendant had no more than the right to 20 per cent of the net profits arising "from the sale of oil derived from any well or wells which the East Coalinga Oil Fields Corporation may drill." Nowhere in this language is there a basis for the reservation of a right to profit from wells drilled by others after defendant waived its exclusive right to drill.

Nor can I agree with the majority opinion that Civil Code sections 831 and 1112 relate only to streets and highways that have "an actual or prospective existence for the use of the abutting land." It has been the established law of this state that a conveyance describing the property by reference to a recorded map that shows the property bounded by a street, passes the grantor's title up to the center of the street even though the dedication of the street was never accepted, or the street was never opened or improved (Brown v. Bachelder, 214 Cal. 753, 7 P.2d 1027), or it was abandoned before the conveyance was made. Anderson v. Citizen's Savings & T. Co., 185 Cal. 386, 393, 197 P. 113. See also Allan v. City and County of San Francisco, 7 Cal.2d 642, 649, 61 P.2d 1175; Gramer v. City of Sacramento, 2 Cal.2d 432, 438, 41 P.2d 543; Machado v. Title Guarantee & T. Co., 15 Cal.2d 180, 185, 99 P.2d 245; Tiffany, Real Property, (3rd ed. 1939) 106, 107. This court expressly withheld approval of dictum to the contrary in Elliott v. McIntosh, 41 Cal.App. 763, 769, 183 P. 692, relied upon in the majority opinion.

EDMONDS, J., concurred.

---

22 Cal.2d 725

MOORE et al. v. CALIFORNIA OREGON POWER CO.

Sac. 5338.

Supreme Court of California.

Aug. 27, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 23, 1943.

1. Appeal and error 🔑934(1)

On appeal from judgment for defendants notwithstanding the verdict for plaintiffs, conflicts in evidence would be resolved in favor of plaintiffs.

2. Waters and water courses 🔑46

The use of waters of a stream in their passage through land of a riparian owner to generate electric power is within his rights.

3. Waters and water courses 🔑47

The electric energy generated by riparian owner at power plant using waters of a stream may be conveyed for use on nonriparian lands.

4. Waters and water courses 🔑46

A riparian owner has no right to erect machinery requiring for its propulsion more water than stream furnishes at its ordinary stages and operate such machinery by accumulating the water.

5. Waters and water courses 🔑47, 138

Seasonal storage of water for power purposes is not a proper "riparian use", but constitutes an "appropriation", so that, if it continues for time prescribed by statute of limitations, it will ripen into a "prescriptive right".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Appropriation", "Prescriptive Right" and "Riparian Use".

6. Waters and water courses 🔑46

Evidence as to manner in which upper riparian owner stored and released waters of stream at one of its two power plants established that use of water at such plant was a proper "riparian use" of water.

7. Waters and water courses 🔑47

The use of waters of a stream by riparian owner upon nonriparian lands is a "nonriparian use", and in such a case the riparian owner is a "trespasser" on rights of lower riparian owner from inception of such use.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Nonriparian Use" and "Trespasser".

8. Waters and water courses 🔑47

Evidence that upper riparian owner, in operation of one of its two power plants, stored water during dry season, discharging it in unusual quantities, established that owner's use was a "nonriparian use" and was adverse to right of lower riparian owners.

9. Waters and water courses 🔑42

In "seasonal storage" by riparian owner, waters of a stream are stored during times when water in stream is abundant and discharged at that time of year when there is a scarcity of water, and often to advantage of lower owners.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Seasonal Storage".

10. Waters and water courses 🔑277

Evidence established that nonriparian use of waters of stream by riparian owner in operating of one of its two power plants continued for a period of five years openly, continuously and under a claim of right, so as to give owner a right by prescription to waters to the extent of such use.

11. Waters and water courses ⚿127

An upper riparian owner may acquire a prescriptive right to waters of a stream as against a lower riparian owner by an adverse use of waters for the prescriptive period.

12. Waters and water courses ⚿143

The prescriptive rights to use of waters of a stream are "stricti juris", and should not be extended beyond the actual user.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Stricti Juris".

13. Waters and water courses ⚿277

Where riparian owner, after completion of its dam for use in generating electricity, used water in such a manner as not to interfere with lower riparian owners' use of waters during daytime with certain exceptions for statutory period, prescriptive right acquired by owner was limited by extent of use which conferred the title and could not be extended beyond the actual user.

14. Waters and water courses ⚿129

Any person may obtain the exclusive right to water flowing in stream by grant or prescription, as against either riparian owners on the stream or the prior appropriation of water by other parties.

15. Waters and water courses ⚿144

The right to use of waters of a stream acquired by prescription is only commensurate with right enjoyed, and extent of the enjoyment measures the right.

16. Limitation of actions ⚿55(7)

Where riparian owner acquired prescriptive right to use of waters of stream for operation of power plant, but injury to lower riparian owners' rights to use of waters during daytime did not begin until some two years before lower riparian owners' action against owner operating power plants for alleged violation of their riparian rights was begun, the action was not barred by statute of limitations.

17. Waters and water courses ⚿49

Damages cannot be awarded a riparian owner for an interference with his riparian rights without proof on his part that he has actually been damaged by reason of such interference.

18. Waters and water courses ⚿144

Where riparian owner used waters of river up until 1931 so as not to interfere with use by lower riparian owner, prescriptive rights of upper riparian owner were limited by those of lower riparian owner.

19. Waters and water courses ⚿282

Where riparian owner acquired prescriptive right to use of waters of stream for operation of power plants, subject to rights of lower riparian owners to sufficient water during daytime to properly irrigate their riparian lands, evidence presented question for jury as to whether any change in facilities of owner operating power plant or in its method of operation damaging rights of lower riparian owners occurred.

20. Waters and water courses ⚿49

Evidence failed to establish that taking of water rights belonging to plaintiffs' land occurred prior to plaintiffs' acquisition of land, so as to preclude their recovery for damages for alleged violation of their riparian rights, where damages for which plaintiffs instituted action were based upon taking of their daytime riparian rights to waters of stream at time after plaintiffs had entered into possession of land, and not upon the taking of waters by defendant when its dam was completed some years prior to acquisition of any interest in lands by plaintiffs.

◆

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; Arthur Coats, Judge Assigned.

Action by C. F. Moore and another against the California Oregon Power Company for damages for alleged violation of riparian rights. From a judgment for defendant, notwithstanding the verdict for plaintiffs, the plaintiffs appeal.

Judgment reversed with direction.

For prior opinion, see 122 P.2d 628.

Carter, Barrett & Carlton, Daniel S. Carlton, and Oliver J. Carter, all of Redding, for appellants.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CURTIS, Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment notwithstanding the verdict entered for defendant in an action brought by plaintiffs upon a complaint setting forth two causes of action. Upon the first cause of action the plaintiffs asked for an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with plaintiffs' riparian rights to the waters flowing in the Klamath River. Upon the second, the plaintiffs asked for damages alleged to have been sustained by them by reason of the acts of defendant in depriving them of their riparian rights to the waters of said river. The plaintiffs abandoned their action for an injunction as the defendant had, prior to the commencement of said action, devoted the waters of the river to a public use.

Plaintiffs are the owners of lands which are admittedly riparian to Klamath River situated in the county of Siskiyou. Some years prior to the commencement of this action, the predecessors of the defendant built a dam at Copco in the bed of the river about ten miles above the lands of the plaintiffs. The dam was completed in 1917, and the waters of the river were by means of this dam impounded and used for furnishing power to operate a power plant constructed at Copco. This plant was built and operated for the generation of electric power to be sold, and which was sold, to the public in the various localities in the vicinity of said plant. The dam thus constructed in 1917 was raised in 1922 to a height of 126 feet and a second unit of the plant was placed in operation. The plant at Copco will be referred to as Copco No. 1.

The reservoir back of the dam at Copco has been kept full, and though it has a capacity of 85,000 acre feet of water, only the upper 5,000 acre feet is available for use in the operation of the plants. The dam is what is known as the highhead type, the outlet being located near the top of the dam. Normally only the upper five feet of the water in the reservoir is used. Since the completion of the dam and the generating plant at Copco, and in the year 1925, a second plant known as Copco No. 2 was installed downstream from Copco No. 1, in which the waters of the river after their release at Copco No. 1 have been utilized for the operation of Copco No. 2. The dam at Copco No. 2, however, does not detain or impound the water, but simply allows it to pass through the plant and then down the river. Since the construction of these plants they have been used continuously by the defendant for the purpose for which they were constructed. They are all located on riparian lands belonging to defendant. The plaintiffs admit that defendant has gained a prescriptive right to use the waters of the river during the nighttime and during holidays and Sundays of each week, but contend that up to the year 1931, they received ample water for all riparian purposes in a constant and regular flow during the daytime. This action was begun in 1933.

The defendant in its answer, while making certain denials of the various allegations of plaintiffs' complaint, pleads the statute of limitations and contends that it has gained by prescription the right to the entire flow of the river at its Copco plants, having used the same openly, continuously and under a claim of right for over five years prior to the commencement of this action. Practically the sole question before us is whether plaintiffs' cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations. It is conceded the five year period of limitation applies in this case.

The evidence shows without substantial conflict that following the construction of the dam at Copco, and up to the irrigating season of 1931, there was at all times except during the nighttime and on Sundays and holidays, a uniform and ample supply of water flowing in the river at the head of plaintiffs' ditch to supply all the water needed for the irrigation of plaintiffs' lands. However, there was evidence which tended to show that commencing with the irrigating season in 1931 and during that and the subsequent years, plaintiffs were not able to use the waters of the stream upon their lands. The inability of plaintiffs to so use the waters of the river during that year was due, so the plaintiffs contend, solely to the manner in which defendant retained and released water from its reservoir at its Copco No. 1 plant. The year 1931 was an exceedingly dry year and the waters of the stream were unusually low. However, the defendant released all the waters impounded by it in its reservoir during that year, and the waters so released flowed down to and along plaintiffs' lands. There is no evidence that defendant diverted any of the waters of the stream from the river bed except by means of its reservoir, and as we have seen, the waters so diverted and impounded in its reservoir were released downstream to plaintiffs' lands. This statement also applies to the release of waters from the reservoir after said year. Following the year 1931 were years of ordinary rainfall. There is no claim of any unusual water shortage in the river after 1931, but the evidence shows that while the defendant released all the waters flowing in the stream after they had been stored in its reservoir, the manner in which it released the waters caused the stream below its plants to so fluctuate that plaintiffs' diversion works were continually washed away, with the result that plaintiffs were unable to use practically any of said waters upon their lands. The plaintiffs made repeated attempts to repair and even to reconstruct their diversion works, but they were washed away the following day, or in at least a few days thereafter, by the unusually large flow of water discharged at intervals by defendant from its reservoir into the river above the intake of plaintiffs' ditch. This occurred in 1931 as well as in the years following 1931.

On one occasion occurring in 1931, the plaintiff, Charles F. Moore, testified as follows:

"I built a dam out at the head of the ditch and plowed and scraped channels at the head of the ditch and tried to pick up more water.

"Q. And did you get any from that method? A. No, sir, the next day after we completed the first ditch, the dam washed away and the ditch filled up.

"Q. That is, by this big head of water that came down? A. Yes, sir."

This condition prevailed during the irrigating season following the year 1931.

[1] It is this fluctuation of the stream caused by the manner in which the defendant has, beginning with the year 1931, discharged the water from its reservoir, that has deprived the plaintiffs of the use of necessary water for the irrigation of their riparian lands, and for which they were awarded damages by the verdict of the jury in this case. Defendant contends that it has operated its plant since 1931 in the same manner in which the plant was operated prior to that year, and that it has released the water from its reservoir for that purpose in the same manner and in the same regular quantities as in previous years. The evidence in support of that contention only creates a conflict with that of the plaintiffs, to the contrary effect. This conflict must be resolved in favor of the plaintiffs in view of the verdict of the jury. It is not seriously contested by defendant that such an injury to plaintiffs' riparian rights would entitle them to damages unless the defendant had, prior to the year 1931, gained a right by prescription to so discharge and use the waters of the river in the manner and to the extent shown above.

It might be well at this time to give further details respecting the manner in which the defendant operated its Copco No. 1 plant. The defendant only released water from these plants when there was a demand for power by its customers. According to the statement of its vice-president: "The plant would begin to pick up load as soon as the customers begin to throw switches and the industries pick up load in the morning * * * from 6 o'clock until 8 in the morning, and increased from then on until our normal peak is reached about 11 or 11:30 in the morning; sometimes a little earlier, 10:30 to 11:30. * * * During the noon hour, it usually drops and then picks up again in the afternoon, not as high a peak as in the morning, and it continues until 4 or 5 o'clock in the afternoon. Then there is another drop-off in the load in the late afternoon which is picked up in the evening, and continues until 9 or 9:30 in the evening, when it begins to drop off very rapidly until midnight, and then there is a minimum interval between midnight and 6 o'clock in the morning. * * * Saturday afternoons and Sundays and holidays are normally considered off peak; * * * the Copco No. 1 [plant] is operated with an automatic governor."

[2] The use of the waters of a stream in their passage through the land of a riparian owner to operate a power plant thereon to generate electric power is as clearly within his rights as is his right to operate a mill thereon to grind grain, or to operate any other machinery than which there is no more ancient or well-established feature of riparian rights. Mentone Irr. Co. v. Redlands, etc. Co., 155 Cal. 323, 327, 100 P. 1082, 1083, 22 L.R.A.,N.S., 382, 17 Ann.Cas. 1222; Fall River Valley Irr. Dist. v. Mt. Shasta P. Corp., 202 Cal. 56, 70, 259 P. 444, 56 A.L.R. 264; Seneca Consol. Gold Mines Co. v. Great Western Power Co., 209 Cal. 206, 215, 287 P. 93, 70 A.L.R. 210.

[3] The electric energy thus generated may be conveyed for use on nonriparian lands. Mentone Irr. Co. v. Redlands, etc., Co., supra.

[4] However a riparian owner has no right to erect machinery requiring for its propulsion more water than the stream furnishes at its ordinary stages and operate such machinery by accumulating the water. Clinton v. Myers, 46 N.Y. 511, 7 Am.Rep. 373; Seneca Consol. Gold Mines Co. v. Great Western Power Co., 209 Cal. at page 217, 287 P. 93, 70 A.L.R. 210, cited above. Nor may he gather waters of the stream into a reservoir for future use, when it may best suit his convenience, and thus deprive another riparian owner of the use of the waters and service of the stream in their natural condition. Still v. Palouse Irr. & Power Co., 64 Wash. 606, 117 P. 466, 467; Seneca Consol. Gold Mines Co. v. Great Western Power Co., supra, 209 Cal. at page 209, 287 P. 93, 70 A.L.R. 210.

[5] Under the law as announced in these decisions it has been held that the seasonal storage of water in a reservoir—that is, the storage of water during the wet season to be used during the dry season of the year—is not a proper exercise of riparian rights. In the language of the decision last cited where the defendant, a riparian owner, was making such a use of the stream, it was stated (209 Cal. at page 217, 287 P. at page 97, 70 A.L.R. 210): "It is plain, therefore, that the use of the stream by defendant was adverse and not in the exercise merely of a riparian right. The use was as much adverse and could have been as readily enjoined as if the diversion had been to another watershed for use on nonriparian lands." To the same effect is Colorado Power Co. v. Pacific G. & E. Co., 218 Cal. 559, 564, 24 P.2d 495, and many other cases decided by this court. In the Colorado Power Co. case the court emphatically stated (218 Cal. at page 564, 24 P.2d at page 497): "Seasonal storage of water for power purposes is not a proper riparian use, but constitutes an appropriation, so that, if it continued for the time prescribed by the statute of limitations, it will ripen into a prescriptive right."

There is no contention that the storage of the waters of Klamath River by the defendant at its Copco plant is a seasonal storage of said waters. As shown above by the statement of facts in this case, the waters of the river are stored by the defendant in its dam at Copco and used by defendant as needed in the operation of its plants located at that point in the river. They are released by the defendant from its reservoir only when it is operating its plant at Copco Plant No. 1. The condition produced by the operation of the plant at Copco No. 1 is probably best described by the plaintiff C. F. Moore as follows:

"Q. By the way Mr. Moore, are you familiar with the operation of the Copco No. 1 power plant? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How many years have you been familiar with the operation of that power plant? A. Since 1921.

"Q. And just tell the jury what you have observed; that is, your own experience in going there and watching the operation of the plant? A. Well, the operator is notified by a telephone to pick-up load, or drop load. When they pick-up load, that means to turn the water loose and let it go downstream and when they drop load, they shut up and stop the water.

"Q. Have you been actually present when that operation was taking place? A. I have right in the plants.

"Q. On many occasions? A. On numerous occasions, yes, sir; not of late years, but previous years.

"Q. Now, in 1931 when the river was dry or practically dry at the head of your ditch, to which you have heretofore testified, did you make any investigation of the conditions existing between this Copco No. 1 Dam? A. I have.

"Q. What did you do? A. I visited a number of times with the operators, and saw water backed up above the dam numerous times.

"Q. How near was it to the top of the dam? A. Well, within a few feet.

"Q. Of the top of the dam at Copco No. 1? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What did you observe with reference to water being backed up above that dam? A. Well, the lake was almost full.

"Q. For what distance could you see water in this lake above the Copco dam? A. I would say two miles and a half or three miles.

"Q. And that was during 1931? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Were you also there in 1932? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Was that during the irrigation season? A. It was.

"Q. And what did you observe in regard to conditions existing then with reference to the reservoir or lake being full of water? A. It was full of water.

"Q. At those times what was the condition down at your place with reference to being water in the river at the head of your ditch? A. We had no water.

"Q. Was the channel dry? A. The channel at the head of the ditch was absolutely dry. I drove around the lake when the water was nearly in the road on the north side of the lake.

"Q. And was that during the daytime, Mr. Moore? A. Yes.

"Q. Now, you say you drove around the lake when the water was nearly in the road. Is there a road around that lake. A. Yes, sir; it crosses at the head of the lake.

"Q. And the road follows close to the water did it. A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And when did you do that? A. I did that in 1931 and 1932 both.

"Q. When; during the summer time? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And what was the condition with reference of there being water in the river at the head of your ditch at that time? A. There wasn't any.

"Q. That is, the river was dry? A. The channel that went by the head of the ditch was dry. There was some water in the east channel."

While this evidence relates particularly to the years 1931 and 1932, the condition under which the defendant released the waters from its reservoir before that date was not materially different from that prevailing during those two years. The record shows that from the time the plant No. 1 at Copco was completed in 1922, the defendant assumed the right to use the entire flow of the stream in the operation of its plant, and under this claim it actually stored and thereafter released all the waters of the stream in the operation of its plants at such times and in such manner as best suited its convenience and its needs.

[6] The manner in which the defendant stored and released the waters of the river at its Copco Plant No. 2 was admittedly a proper riparian use of said waters. Mentone Irr. Co. v. Redlands, etc., Co., supra, and other cases cited. But the storage, retention and use of the waters of the river at Copco No. 1 was radically different from that at Copco No. 2. As we have seen, the waters at Copco No. 1 were retained for an indefinite period of time, and at times when the bed of the river below its plant at Copco No. 1 was dry. Moreover, no water in any substantial quantities was released during the nighttime, nor on Sundays or holidays. As we have seen, it was released to meet the convenience and needs of the defendant in the operation of its plants. Such a use of the waters of a stream deprives the lower riparian owners of their rights to the usual, natural and ordinary flow of the stream.

[7] A riparian owner "has no right to erect machinery, requiring for its operation more water than the stream furnishes at an ordinary stage, and operate such machinery by [accumulating the water and] discharging [it] upon those below in unusual quantities * * *." Clinton v. Myers, 46 N.Y. 511, 7 Am.Rep. 373. This case is approved in United P. B. Co. v. Iroquois P. & P. Co., 226 N.Y. 38, 45, 123 N.E. 200, and in Seneca Consol. Gold Mines Co. v. Great Western Power Co., supra, 209 Cal. at page 216, 287 P. 93, 70 A.L.R. 210. Water may never be thus gathered in a reservoir for future use when it may best suit the convenience and use of one riparian owner, and thus deprive other riparian owners of their use and service of the stream in its natural condition, unless such right is exercised by a valid prior appropriation. Still v. Palouse Irr. & Power Co., supra. That case is also approved by the Seneca case, supra, in which the court concludes (209 Cal. at page 217, 287 P. at page 97, 70 A.L.R. 210) that such a "use of the stream by defendant [an upper riparian proprietor] was adverse and not in the exercise merely of a riparian right. The use was as much adverse and could have been as readily enjoined as if the diversion had been to another watershed for use on nonriparian lands." The use of the waters of a stream by a riparian owner upon nonriparian lands is a nonriparian use. In such a case the riparian owner was held to be a trespasser on the rights of the lower riparian owner from the inception of such use. Anaheim Union Water Co. v. Fuller, 150 Cal. 327, 334, 88 P. 978, 11 L.R.A.,N.S., 1062.

[8] From the foregoing statements of the law we see no escape from the conclusion that the defendant in the storage and use of the waters of Klamath River at its Copco No. 1 plant was not within its rights as a riparian owner; that such use was a nonriparian use and was adverse to the right of riparian owners. 25 Cal.Jur. 1191, sec. 203.

[9] It has repeatedly been held that the seasonal storage of water is a nonriparian use thereof; that it is not within the rights of the riparian owner and is adverse to the rights of the lower owner on the stream. While there is no contention that the storage of the waters at the Copco dam comes within the definition of that term, the effect of such storage as is made by the defendant at Copco No. 1 plant upon the rights of lower owners on the stream is similar in practically all respects to that sustained through seasonal storage, and differs only in immaterial respects. The storage by defendant, which is sometimes referred to as periodic storage is often more damaging to the rights of the lower owners than seasonal storage. In seasonal storage, the waters of the stream are stored during times when the water in the stream is abundant and discharged in that part of the year when there is a scarcity of water and often to the advantage of the lower owners. The storage by defendant occurs during the dry season of the year when there is a scarcity of water and when lower proprietors are in greatest need for the waters for use upon their lands. To hold that storage which results on occasions when the bed of the river is dry during the daytime and prevents lower riparian owners of any use of the waters during the nighttime and on Sundays and holidays is a proper riparian use of the stream, while seasonal storage is not, seems both illogical and unreasonable, and contrary to long established principles of law governing the respective rights of owners of water upon a stream.

[10] As the use by the defendant of the waters of the river after its completion of its Copco dam was a nonriparian use of said waters, it was adverse to the rights of the lower riparian owners. This use had its inception at the time the Copco plant was completed and the water was used in the operation by defendant of its power plant located at that point in the year 1922. Such a use of the waters of the stream, when continued for a period of five years openly, continuously and under a claim of right so to do, gave the defendant a right by prescription to the waters of the river to the extent of such use. There is no contention but that the defendant has operated its plant for the required period of time and to the extent and in the manner required by the laws of this state to give it such right.

[11] The law is so well-established in this state as to require no extended citation of authorities that an upper riparian owner may acquire a prescriptive right to the waters of a stream as against a lower riparian owner by an adverse use of said waters for the prescriptive period. Pabst v. Finmand, 190 Cal. 124, 128-130, 211 P. 11; Miller & Lux v. Enterprise C., etc., Co., 169 Cal. 415, 422, 147 P. 567; Mt. Shasta Power Corp. v. McArthur, 109 Cal.App. 171, 292 P. 549.

[12] It is equally well-established that prescriptive rights are stricti juris and should not be extended beyond the actual user. North Fork Water Co. v. Edwards, 121 Cal. 662, 666, 54 P. 69; Strong v. Baldwin, 137 Cal. 432, 440, 70 P. 288; Scott v. Fruit Growers' Supply Co., 202 Cal. 47, 53, 258 P. 1095.

In the case of North Fork Water Co. v. Edwards, supra, the plaintiff had acquired the right to maintain a ditch over and across the lands of the defendant for the purpose of conveying water to a large number of families for domestic and other uses. The course of the ditch was along a hillside. Long after the construction of the ditch plaintiff constructed aprons for the purpose of carrying the storm waters over the ditch and onto defendants' lands upon which the defendants had planted fruit trees. Defendants in order to protect their lands from the storm waters diverted upon their lands by means of those aprons, erected dams below the aprons thus throwing the storm waters into plaintiff's ditch. The action was brought to enjoin the defendants from maintaining said dams, the plaintiff claiming it had acquired a right by prescription to maintain said ditch over and on defendants' lands, and that the right so acquired included the right to construct aprons over their ditch to protect against storm waters flowing from the high lands above. The trial court gave judgment for the defendants, and in affirming the judgment this court held (121 Cal. at page 665, 54 P. at page 70) "The necessity for these aprons is of recent origin, in no wise connected with the origin of the easement. * * * The burden of the dominant tenement cannot be enlarged to the manifest injury of the servient estate by any alteration in the mode of enjoying the former. * * * Rights by prescription are stricti juris, and should not be extended beyond the user * * * they [the aprons] were in the nature of changes in the mode of enjoyment, and, while they might be made if not harmful to the servient estate, they cannot be made to its material injury." (Italics ours.)

The principle announced in that case was applied to the prescriptive right to the use of waters of a stream, in the case of Scott v. Fruit Growers' Supply Co., supra, 202 Cal. at page 53, 258 P. at page 1097, where it was stated: "Prescriptive rights are stricti juris and should not be extended beyond the actual user. North Fork Water Co. v. Edwards, 121 Cal. 662, 54 P. 69. Since the prescriptive right is limited by the extent of the use which conferred the title, the place of use cannot be changed, where to do so would interfere with the rights of others."

[13] In the present case the defendant after the completion of its Copco dam in 1922, used the waters of the river to operate its plant in such a manner as not to interfere with plaintiffs' use of the waters of the river during the daytime, with certain exceptions. Having so used the waters of the stream for the statutory period of five years, it acquired the right to such use as against the plaintiffs. However this right to so use the waters of the stream must be "limited by the extent of the use which conferred the title" and cannot "be extended beyond the actual user" where such change results in injury to others.

[14, 15] In two decisions of the Circuit Court, we find it stated: "Any person may obtain exclusive rights to water flowing in a stream or river by grant or prescription as against either riparian owners on the stream or the prior appropriation of the water by other parties. But the right acquired by prescription is only commensurate with the right enjoyed. The extent of the enjoyment measures the right." Union Mill & Mining Co. v. Dangberg, 81 F. 73, 91; Anderson v. Bassman, 140 F. 14, 26. Other decisions of this court are in line with those just cited. Northern California Power Co. v. Flood, 186 Cal. 301, 306, 199 P. 315; Pabst v. Finmand, 190 Cal. 124, 134, 211 P. 11; Bazet v. Nugget Bar Placers, Inc., 211 Cal. 607, 616, 296 P. 616; see, also, 25 Cal.Jur. 1178.

In the case of Northern California Power Co. v. Flood, supra, 186 Cal. at page 304, 199 P. at page 316, we find this significant language: "The right to the use of waters of a stream may be acquired, as against others entitled thereto, by taking and beneficially using the same adversely and continuously under a claim of right for a period of five years. But in such a case the right, with respect to the quantity of water therein, extends only to the quantity actually put to a beneficial use. * * * In order to gain a right to the water the diverter must actually use it, and the quantity used measures the extent of his right." (Italics ours.)

[16] While the defendant after the completion of its Copco dam used all the waters of the river in the operation of its plants, its use of said waters was such that ample water for irrigation purposes ran down to plaintiffs' lands until the year 1931. The quantity of the water used during that period of time may have been the same as that subsequently used, and of course it was, as in all years the defendant used all the waters of the river, but the manner of its use was not the same as before 1931. This change in the manner of use resulted in as great an injury to plaintiffs' rights as if the whole quantity of water had been diverted from the stream, as, under the conditions prevailing in 1931 and thereafter, plaintiffs were unable to use any of the waters of the river for irrigation purposes. As the injury to plaintiffs' rights to the use of the waters during the daytime did not begin until the year 1931, some two years before this action was begun, plaintiffs' action therefore was not barred by the statute of limitations.

Before concluding this opinion, however, we deem it proper to answer some of the main contentions of the defendant in support of the judgment.

Defendant's first contention that its prescriptive right was perfected in 1927, five years after the completion of its Copco No. 1 plant in 1922, has virtually been answered by what we have already stated. It is true it gained certain prescriptive rights by the use to which it put the waters of the stream for the five year period just prior to 1927. But, as we have seen, these prescriptive rights did not include the right to change the conditions under which it acquired those prescriptive rights. There is substantial evidence in the record that up to that year the plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest received sufficient water from the stream and under conditions which enabled them to properly irrigate their riparian lands. This right as we have shown continued up to the year 1931, some two years prior to the commencement of this action. Defendant has not shown any prescriptive right to use the waters of the river under the conditions which the evidence shows that it has used them beginning with the year 1931.

[17] The next contention is that the use of the waters of a stream is adverse to the rights of a lower riparian owner's rights whether or not he is damaged. A number of authorities are cited in support of this contention. The cases cited are all in actions in which injunctive relief was asked and we are in thorough accord with the rulings contained therein. But our attention has not been called to any authority holding that damages may be awarded a riparian owner of lands for an interference with his riparian rights without proof on his part that he has actually been damaged by reason of such interference.

In the case of Collier v. Merced Irrigation District, 213 Cal. 554, 2 P.2d 790, a lower riparian owner on the stream asked for an injunction against defendant restraining it from diverting the waters of the stream. The court held that the defendant had devoted the waters continuously to a public use and denied an injunction. Plaintiff then contended that as the defendant had taken his property for a public use, that is, had interfered with his riparian right, he was entitled to damages in the difference between the market value of his property with and without this property right. In mitigation of damages the defendant stipulated and agreed to provide plaintiff and make available for his land such amount of water as would be reasonably required by plaintiff for irrigation purposes and to make such stipulation a part of the decree of the court in that action. The question of damages was tried by a jury under proper instructions by the court. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant. The judgment based upon the verdict was affirmed. In that case the riparian rights of the plaintiff were decidedly interfered with. In fact they were practically lost to him. Yet this court held that he had sustained no damage as he was receiving all the waters of the river required for the irrigation of his lands. In the present action the plaintiffs, or at least their predecessors in interest, could have maintained an action for damages, if brought within the required period of time after the completion of the Copco dam in 1917, sustained by them for the loss of the use of the waters of the river during nighttime and on Sundays and holidays, if the waters were needed for irrigation purposes on their riparian lands. They could not in such action have recovered damages for loss of any further injury as they were then receiving all the water during the daytime required for the irrigation of their riparian lands. It was not until the year 1931 when the defendant so operated its plant as to interfere with plaintiffs' use of the waters of the river during the daytime that plaintiffs were damaged by reason of this loss of the service of the water during the daytime. As we have before stated our attention has not been called to any case or other authority wherein it was held that a lower owner of the stream in an action for damages only was entitled to recover for any act of an upper user of the stream in the absence of proof that he had actually been injured by such acts of the upper user.

The next contention of the defendant is included in its discussion of the "Extent of Defendant's Prescriptive Right."

[18] Defendant takes the position that, having gained a prescriptive right to use the waters of the river for the operation of its Copco plant, this right extends to the entire flow of the stream and is not limited by any rights of lower owners. In other words, it contends that having gained the right to use and regulate the stream in the operation of its plant for a period of five years or more, during which time it permitted sufficient water to run down the stream to properly irrigate the lands of the plaintiffs, it may, after the lapse of said period of limitations, so change the extent and manner of its use of said waters as to deprive the plaintiffs of all waters used by it previous to said change. In our opinion the position of defendant is untenable. Previous to the year 1931 the defendant's use of the waters of the river did not interfere with the plaintiffs' use of the stream for the purpose of irrigating their lands during the daytime. As we have shown, rights by prescription are strictly construed against the claimant and should not be extended beyond the actual user, and they are limited by the use which conferred the title. A person claiming title by prescription gains no title to the property claimed beyond his actual use of the property. The extent of the enjoyment measures the right. (See authorities previously cited above). In the present case as shown above the defendant so used the waters of the river up to the year 1931 as not to interfere with the plaintiffs' use thereof for the irrigation of their lands during the daytime. Therefore its prescriptive right to the waters of the stream was limited by that of the plaintiffs as herein set forth. There is nothing in the case of Crum v. Mt. Shasta Power Corp., 220 Cal. 295, 310, 30 P.2d 30, contrary to this conclusion. In that case it was held that a public utility could not place any limitation upon its use of the waters of a stream, which had been theretofore devoted to a public use without the consent and approval of the railroad commission. The defendant in the instant action never acquired the right to the entire use of the stream until the year 1931. Before that year its rights in the stream were subject to plaintiffs' right to the use of the stream for daytime irrigation. No limitation was ever placed on defendant's original right by holding it subject to plaintiffs' right, for the reason that defendant's use of the stream was from its inception subject to certain rights of the plaintiffs until their loss in 1931. While plaintiffs could not restrain that use, their action for damages for the loss of their rights would not be barred until the expiration of at least five years thereafter. Nor do we find anything inconsistent with our conclusion in the case of Seneca Consol. Gold Mines Co. v. Great Western Power Co., 209 Cal. 206, 287 P. 93, 70 A.L.R. 210, heretofore cited. In that case it was held reading from one of the head notes [7] "The diversion of the whole stream during the time of the influx of tributaries below the dam of the defendant and above plaintiff's land, in such a case, would not injure plaintiff where its quota of water was not disturbed * * *."

[19] Defendant makes the further contention that there is no evidence of any change in its facilities or method of operation in 1931 and subsequent years and that any damage to plaintiffs' property was due not to any act of defendant, but to the water shortage especially in the year 1931. It may be true that there is no direct evidence showing that there was any change in defendant's facilities used in the operation of its plant in 1931 and subsequent years, from those employed in previous years. There must have been however, some radical change in its method of operation beginning with the year 1931, as there is substantial evidence to support the implied finding of the jury that, prior to that year, the irrigation rights of plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest, except during the nighttime and on Sundays and holidays, were to no material extent interfered with by the operation of defendant's plant, but that, beginning with the year 1931, and continuing during subsequent years, plaintiffs were unable to obtain practically any water from the river to irrigate their lands. We think the evidence shows that this result during the year 1931 was largely due to the extremely light rainfall during that year and the corresponding shortage of water in the river. Yet there is evidence that during the year 1931 as well as in subsequent years there were substantial fluctuations in the water as it reached plaintiffs' property which materially contributed to plaintiffs' inability to secure the necessary amount of water for use upon their lands. These questions were all given consideration in a previous part of this opinion and we think need not be further discussed.

[20] Finally, defendant contends that the taking of the water right belonging to the lands of plaintiffs occurred prior to plaintiffs' acquisition of said lands. This contention is based upon the assumption that the taking of the waters of the river by the defendant, a public utility, was when the Copco dam was completed in 1922, some years prior to the acquisition of any interest in said lands by the plaintiffs. This contention to some extent we think has been sufficiently answered by what has been said in the previous parts of this opinion. The damages for which plaintiffs instituted this action to recover were based upon the taking in 1931 of the daytime riparian right to the waters of the stream. The evidence shows that while plaintiff, C. F. Moore, entered into possession of said lands under a contract to purchase the same some years prior to 1931, the deed given in pursuance to the terms of the contract was delivered to him on June 10, 1931. This was practically at the beginning of the irrigating season of that year. Defendant does not seriously contend that plaintiffs had not acquired the property in 1931, nor that they were not the owners thereof in subsequent years. Plaintiffs were therefore the owners of the lands at the time of the "taking of the water right" which occurred during their ownership.

The judgment is reversed with direction to the trial court to enter judgment for the plaintiffs upon the verdict of the jury.

GIBSON, C. J., SHENK, EDMONDS, TRAYNOR, and SCHAUER, JJ., and SPENCE, Justice pro tem., concurred.

Rehearing denied; CARTER, J., not participating.

22 Cal.2d 713

MATHER v. MATHER et al.

L. A. 17608.

Supreme Court of California.

Aug. 27, 1943.

1. Judgment 🔑326

Where trial court had made findings that defendant was entitled to but a one-half interest in a certain claim, the entry of judgment "nunc pro tunc" adjudging defendant to be the owner of the whole of the claim was erroneous and not authorized under court's statutory power to amend or change conclusions of law. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Nunc Pro Tunc".

2. Judgment 🔑273(8)

Where notice of defendant's motion for entry of final judgment nunc pro tunc was given by mail and only ten days intervened between day fixed for hearing and day notice was mailed in Los Angeles to plaintiff's counsel in San Francisco, the notice was insufficient and court was without authority to act upon the motion. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 473, 1013.

3. Judgment 🔑273(8)

A ruling directing entry of a judgment nunc pro tunc pursuant to motion became of no effect where the court, in rendering the judgment, simply dated judgment as of the day filed. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

4. Judgment 🔑273(1)

There was no basis for a "nunc pro tunc" entry of judgment where the antedating was not for the preservation of the fruits of the litigation which would otherwise be lost to the prevailing party, or for the correction of a deficiency in recordation of a previous decision. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

5. Judgment 🔑271

The entry of a final judgment, after findings on two counts and after decision on appeal from order sustaining demurrer to third count, to complete judgment roll in effectively disposing of all issues by a single pronouncement as to the entire case, should be rendered by the judge who tried the cause, if available.

6. Appeal and error 🔑82(1)

An order granting entry of judgment nunc pro tunc, being an intermediate ruling of the court, is not appealable.

7. Appeal and error 🔑113(2)

An appeal will not lie from order denying motion to vacate nunc pro tunc judgment on grounds existing before entry thereof and available on appeal therefrom.

8. Appeal and error 🔑113(2)

Appellants' attempt to appeal from order refusing vacation of the judgment merely constituted a repetition of appeal from the judgment.

◆

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clarence M. Hanson, Judge.

On rehearing.

Judgment reversed and appeals from order dismissed.

For prior opinion, see 134 P.2d 795.

Marcel E. Cerf, Robinson & Leland, and Roger A. Bramy, all of San Francisco, for plaintiff and appellant.

Gavin McNab, Schmulowitz, Aikins & Wyman, of San Francisco, for defendants and appellants.

Don Lake and James R. Jaffray, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

Plaintiff and certain defendants appeal from a final judgment, from an order granting a motion for entry thereof nunc pro tunc, and from an order denying a motion to set aside such judgment and the order granting entry thereof.

The facts necessary to a correct understanding of the respective positions of the parties involved may be chronologically recorded as follows:

On August 3, 1934, the plaintiff commenced this action for rescission of a certain property settlement made between himself and his former wife, the defendant Anna Inez Mather. The complaint contained three counts for the relief sought: the first two were based upon fraud and misrepresentation, and the third rested upon the alleged invalidity of the property settlement because of its having been made in the Territory of Hawaii at a time when, according to plaintiff's pleading, the laws of that jurisdiction did not permit a married woman to contract with her husband. The other defendants here appealing were joined in the action as administrators of the estate of Louis R. Greenfield, deceased, against which it was alleged plaintiff held an approved claim with an unpaid balance of $38,699, together with accrued interest. Part of the property transferred to the defendant Anna Inez Mather under the aforesaid settlement was a one-half interest in this claim. These defendant administrators filed an answer to the complaint herein to the effect that they held on account of the claim in question, and for whom it might concern, the sum of $12,549.60; and that various assignments and notices of assignment had been served upon them affecting the said fund, the defendant Anna Inez Mather, also known as Dorothy Devore Mather, being among the claimants thereto. The defendant administrators then averred in their answer that they were holding the said sum subject to the order and direction of the court, and they asked that they might be dismissed with their costs and released from all further liability toward the parties to the action and toward all claimants to the fund. This answer was in the nature of an interpleader.

Successive demurrers were effectively interposed to the third count of the complaint, and finally on December 24, 1934, after it had been thrice restated, a demurrer was sustained without leave to amend further. On January 4, 1935, and before trial of the other counts, a purported judgment was entered to the effect that the plaintiff take nothing by his third amended third cause of action. On February 7, 1935, plaintiff filed a notice of appeal from this purported judgment.

On February 18, 1935, the cause as to the first and second counts proceeded to trial, and at the termination thereof the court made findings against the plaintiff and in favor of the defendant Anna Inez Mather. Among other facts, the court found that the plaintiff assigned and transferred to the defendant Anna Inez Mather a one-half interest in his title to the approved claim against the above mentioned Greenfield estate. As its conclusions of law the court decreed that plaintiff should take nothing by reason of his complaint, that the answering defendants should have their costs, and that a temporary injunction theretofore allowed in the action should be and was dissolved. This injunction had served to restrain the estate in question and the administrators thereof from paying any further moneys to the defendant Anna Inez Mather under the assignment made by plaintiff of the one-half interest in his claim against the said estate. The findings of fact and conclusions of law were filed March 12, 1935. Judgment was then entered on March 14, 1935. However, this last document omits any reference to the previous disposition of the third count upon demurrer and on its face purports to be merely a judgment entered upon the findings and conclusions of the court at the close of the trial of the first and second counts of the complaint. Notice of appeal from this purported judgment was filed by the plaintiff on March 15, 1935.

The record discloses that the appeal from the "judgment" on the first and second counts of the complaint was dismissed by this court on September 10, 1935, "for failure to file a transcript within the required time"; and that the "purported" appeal from the "judgment" on the third count was dismissed by this court on March 17, 1936, "on the ground that the judgment was not final, and therefore not appealable." Mather v. Mather, 5 Cal.2d 617, 55 P.2d 1174. On December 7, 1939, defendants Anna Inez Mather and Lessie G. Williams (an interested party under the aforementioned property settlement) made a motion for entry of a final judgment nunc pro tunc as of March 14, 1935, which motion was granted and such a judgment was so entered on December 12, 1939. It is from this judgment that the appeal herein is taken, as well as from the order granting the motion to enter such judgment and from the order denying the motion to set said judgment aside.

A basic point to be noted in consideration of the procedural history of this litigation is the status of the two 1935 "judgments" as declared by this court in prior opinions: Mather v. Mather, supra, and Greenfield v. Mather, 14 Cal.2d 228, 93 P.2d 100. Both decisions held in substance that the entry of such successive separate judgments constituted but piecemeal disposition of a single and unseverable cause, that the judgments in question were partial not final, and were nonappealable. The case of Greenfield v. Mather, supra, was an action in interpleader commenced by the estate of Greenfield to try the issue as to the respective rights of A. W. Mather, appellant herein, and his former wife, sued therein as Dorothy Devore Mather, respondent on this appeal, to the aforementioned sum of $12,549.60. In that proceeding said husband and wife joined issue by cross-complaints and answers. Under their respective pleadings the validity of the property settlement as executed in Hawaii, a point involved in the present action, became the determinative factor. Specifically illustrative of this court's viewpoint that no final judgment was ever entered in the present action, though, according to the record, the trial court had made disposition of the issues, including the matter raised upon demurrer, by responsive rulings and findings, is the discussion of the situation as presented in the interpleader proceeding. In reversing therein by decision of August 21, 1939, the judgment entered in favor of the wife's claim to the fund involved upon the theory that the matter in issue was res judicata by virtue of the entry of the judgment of March 14, 1935, in the present action, this court stated at page 233, 14 Cal.2d, at page 103 of 93 P.2d of its opinion:

"Obviously that judgment [March 14, 1935] was in no better position than the judgment of January 4th. It disposed of the first two counts of the complaint, whereas the latter judgment disposed of the third count thereof. The reasoning which this court employed in determining the character of the one judgment (Mather v. Mather, supra) is equally applicable to fix the character of the other.

"The fact that the judgment of March 14th was the second judgment to be entered did not cloak it with finality because it did not purport to embrace a final disposition of the entire cause. By express terms it was confined to only counts 1 and 2, and erroneously failed to include a recital with respect to the disposition of count 3. It did not affect count 3. The appeal from the purported judgment on that count was pending; that purported judgment, being void, was in effect no judgment. Therefore, if count 3 in fact stated a cause of action, that cause remained pending in the trial court after the entry of the judgment on counts 1 and 2."

Appellants' challenge of the propriety of the "final judgment" rests principally upon two grounds: Its change of the findings and conclusions previously rendered by another trial judge, and its entry upon insufficient notice. The record indubitably sustains appellants' claims as to both propositions, and accordingly the discussion of other points raised by the parties in connection with the appeal from the assailed judgment becomes unnecessary.

[1] By the judgment in question, entered in this action on December 12, 1939, it was adjudged that plaintiff take nothing by his complaint or any of the counts thereof; that the injunction theretofore issued should be dissolved as of February 27, 1935; that the answering defendants Anna Inez Mather and Lessie G. Williams have their costs; and that the Greenfield estate and its administrators pay to Anna Inez Mather the sum of $12,549.60, admittedly in their hands subject to the order and direction of the court. To the extent of the latter provision, this judgment is clearly at variance with the combined rulings of the trial court upon the order sustaining the demurrer to the third count and the findings of fact made upon the first two counts. While, as heretofore indicated, the "judgment" of March 14, 1935, rendered at the conclusion of the trial on counts one and two of plaintiff's complaint, did not contain any express direction that the Greenfield estate pay the money held by it on account of the claim in question and previously deposited in court, it was explicitly found by the court at that time that Anna Inez Mather had but a one-half interest in said claim. In contrast to this plain finding, the judgment here on appeal purports to award her the entire amount of the claim. While "where findings are filed, which constitutes the rendition of judgment, it has been repeatedly held that the court retains power to amend or change the conclusions of law so as to point to a different judgment, and to enter a judgment different from that first announced, and that this power continues until the entry of the judgment, and such change may be made by a judge other than the one who tried the cause" (14 Cal.Jur. 938, and cases there cited; italics ours), such authorized amendment or change obviously is not involved here. The judgment, being based upon a finding that Anna Inez Mather was the owner of one-half of the claim against the Greenfield estate, is erroneous in adjudging her to be the owner of the whole of said claim. Such condition of the record precludes affirmance of the judgment as a proper termination of this litigation.

[2] Moreover, an appropriate disposition of this entire cause would require that the two purported judgments of 1935 be expunged from the record "on motion of either party after notice to the other party." Code Civ.Proc. sec. 473; Mather v. Mather, supra; Greenfield v. Mather, supra. Appellants' objection to respondents' disregard of this preliminary procedural step in effecting the entry of the "final judgment" in this case is predicated upon the following facts: Appellants' respective counsel reside in and maintain offices in the city of San Francisco, while respondents' counsel reside in and have their office in the city of Los Angeles. Notice of respondents' motion for entry of the judgment was given by mail, and only ten days intervened between the date the notice was mailed to opposing counsel and the day fixed for the hearing of the motion. It is apparent that the notice was insufficient. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 1013. Consequently, the trial court was without authority to act upon respondents' motion.

In view of the foregoing discussion it becomes immaterial that the judgment here in question, intended to be presently operative according to its express terms rather than to have an anterior effect, was not entered in conformity to the trial court's direction but "nunc pro tunc as of March 14, 1935."

[3-5] However, in clarification of the apparent confusion of the parties as to the status of the record in this connection, it might be said that while, as above recited, respondents had applied for a nunc pro tunc judgment and the trial court had so ordered pursuant to their motion, such ruling became of no effect in view of the court's subsequent action in rendering a judgment dated simply "Dec. 11, 1939." Nor would there appear here to be any basis for a nunc pro tunc entry of the judgment—the only grounds for such antedating being the preservation of the legitimate fruits of the litigation which would otherwise be lost to the prevailing party or the correction of a deficiency in the recordation of a previous decision so as to express the true intention of the court as of the earlier date and thus conform to verity. Freeman on Judgments, fifth ed., vol. 1, §§ 122–124, pp. 222-229; ibid, § 145, et seq., p. 281, et seq.; 14 Cal.Jur. §§ 40, 41, pp. 931–935; Osmont v. All Persons, 165 Cal. 587, 133 P. 480. In the present case, as indicated by the above quotation from the opinion in the related interpleader proceeding, Greenfield v. Mather, supra, the entry of a judgment properly responsive to the prior rulings of the trial court herein—the findings made at the conclusion of the trial on the first two counts and the order sustaining the demurrer to the third count of the complaint—would simply serve to complete the judgment roll in effectively disposing of all the issues in controversy by a single pronouncement of decision as to the entire case. It might further be added that, while not required, the rendition of such judgment by the judge who tried the cause—providing that he is available at the desired time to so act—would be more consistent with sound legal practice.

[6-8] The remaining points to be considered require but brief comment. The order granting entry of judgment nunc pro tunc, being an intermediate ruling of the court, is not appealable. As to the order denying the motion to vacate the judgment, under the settled law of this state an appeal will not lie from such order if the grounds upon which the moving party sought to have the judgment vacated existed before the entry of the judgment and were available on appeal therefrom. Lawson v. Guild, 215 Cal. 378, 381, 10 P.2d 459; Barry v. Learner, 113 Cal.App. 651, 653, 299 P. 82; Barker v. Ackers, 29 Cal.App.2d 162, 176, 84 P.2d 264; 2 Cal.Jur. 164. It is obvious that appellants' attempt to appeal from the order refusing vacation of the judgment merely constitutes a repetition of their appeal from the judgment.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the attempted appeals from the two orders hereinabove considered are dismissed.

CARTER, Justice.

I concur in the judgment of reversal but I cannot refrain from calling attention to the fact that the somewhat muddled situation in this case is due to the obviously erroneous decision of this court in the case of Greenfield v. Mather, 14 Cal.2d 228, 93 P.2d 100, where it was held that the judgment rendered by the Superior Court of Los Angeles County on March 14, 1935, in the case of Mather v. Mather was void. In my opinion said judgment was not void, but was a valid final judgment and not subject to collateral attack. However, the decision of this court in the case of Greenfield v. Mather, supra, is now final, and said decision, even though erroneous, is res judicata as to the invalidity of said judgment, and is binding upon the parties to this appeal. 3 Am.Jur. 700. This being so, there is no escape from the conclusion reached in the majority opinion in the case at bar.

A review of the litigation between the parties to this action reveals that prior to 1934, Mr. and Mrs. Mather entered into an agreement while in Hawaii under which property possessed by them was transferred to Mrs. Mather. Thereafter Mr. Mather commenced an action in California against Mrs. Mather for the return of the property. The action was stated in three counts or causes of action, but all demanding the same relief, to-wit: restoration of the property, money judgment and cancellation of assignment. By counts one and two, Mr. Mather sought rescission of the agreement and return of the property because of misrepresentation, conspiracy and fraud; the third count pleaded the invalidity of the agreement under the law of Hawaii. Greenfield v. Mather, 14 Cal.2d 228, 230, 93 P.2d 100. Mrs. Mather's demurrer to the third count was sustained without leave to amend, and on January 4, 1935, a judgment (hereinafter referred to as first 1935 judgment) was entered to the effect that plaintiff take nothing by the third cause of action. An appeal was timely taken from that judgment. The action was thereafter tried on the first and second causes of action resulting in a judgment on March 14, 1935 (hereinafter referred to as second 1935 judgment), to the effect "that plaintiff (Mr. Mather) take nothing by his complaint, or by first and second counts thereof." Mather v. Mather, 5 Cal.2d 617, 618, 55 P.2d 1174. Mr. Mather appealed from that judgment and the appeal was pending when the action, which was the basis of the 1938 judgment (hereinafter referred to) was commenced, but was apparently dismissed before trial. That appeal was dismissed in September, 1935, for failure to file a transcript. Greenfield v. Mather, 14 Cal.2d 228, 231, 93 P.2d 100. The remittitur was later amended to read that the appeal from the judgment on the first and second counts was dismissed. The appeal from the first 1935 judgment was dismissed on March 17, 1936, on the ground it was not a final judgment and hence was not appealable. Mather v. Mather, 5 Cal.2d 617, 55 P.2d 1174. The court stated in the cited case that: "It is at once apparent that no final judgment was entered in the action until March 14, 1935." (Italics ours.) This carries the clear implication that the judgment of March 14, 1935, was a final judgment. It was held to be dictum however, in Greenfield v. Mather, 14 Cal.2d 228, 231, 93 P.2d 100.

The Greenfield estate being confronted with conflicting demands for an interest therein by both Mr. and Mrs. Mather, commenced an action in interpleader against them. Mrs. Mather claimed the property of the estate by virtue of the agreement considered in the first and second 1935 judgments. Mr. Mather asserted the agreement was not binding because a husband and wife could not so contract in Hawaii (the issue raised in the third count in the first 1935 judgment) and asked for a cancellation to which Mrs. Mather countered by pleading the first and second 1935 judgments as res judicata on the validity of the agreement. The trial court held the second 1935 judgment to be res judicata. (Greenfield v. Mather, 14 Cal.2d 228, 230, 93 P.2d 100, 101), and gave judgment for Mrs. Mather (hereinafter referred to as 1938 judgment). On Mr. Mather's appeal this court reversed that judgment stating that: "Admittedly that action (the 1935 action) presented the identical issue raised by the pleadings herein with respect to the validity of the * * * agreement." It proceeded upon the theory that the first 1935 judgment was void and that therefore the second 1935 judgment was also void. That would leave the action resulting in the 1935 judgments still pending. Whether this court might have reached the same result by proceeding upon the theory that the first judgment was not a judgment at all on the third count and the second judgment was limited to the first and second counts which were based on fraud, and hence, the issue as to the validity of the agreement by reason of the Hawaii law (the third count) had never been adjudicated, will be discussed later herein.

After the foregoing events had transpired, and on December 7, 1939, defendant, Mrs. Mather, made a motion in the action which was the basis of the 1935 judgments, for entry of a final judgment nunc pro tunc therein as of March 14, 1935. The motion was granted, and the instant appeal by plaintiff, Mr. Mather, was taken therefrom. The majority opinion reverses that judgment on the ground that the findings which were the basis of the second 1935 judgment were changed upon a motion made without sufficient notice thereof. This leaves the 1935 action still open and with no judgment having been entered therein.

The decision of this court in Greenfield v. Mather, 14 Cal.2d 228, 93 P.2d 100, viewed as holding that both the 1935 judgments were void, is not correct. At most those judgments were merely irregular.

The first judgment being irregular because prematurely rendered and the second because it failed to adjudicate the third cause of action, hence, splitting plaintiff's action. Generally, a premature judgment is not void, it is merely erroneous. In re Newman, 75 Cal. 213, 16 P. 887, 7 Am.St.Rep. 146; see Haley v. Amestoy, 44 Cal. 132; McGrath v. Langford, 35 Cal.App. 215, 169 P. 424; California C. C. Co. v. Crescent City etc. Co., 30 Cal.App. 619, 621, 159 P. 209; May v. Hatcher, 130 Cal. 627, 63 P. 33; Gray v. Hall, 203 Cal. 306, 265 P. 246. And such judgment is not subject to collateral attack. Estate of Hancock, 156 Cal. 804, 106 P. 58, 134 Am.St.Rep. 177; Alderson v. Bell, 9 Cal. 315; Whitwell v. Barbier, 7 Cal. 54. The cases of De Vally v. Kendall de Vally etc. Co., Ltd., 220 Cal. 742, 32 P.2d 638; Gunder v. Gunder, 208 Cal. 559, 282 P. 794; and Potvin v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, Inc., 130 Cal.App. 510, 20 P.2d 129, cited in the Greenfield case do not hold that the judgment is void.

An attack on a judgment when it is pleaded as res judicata is a collateral attack and a judgment is res judicata even though erroneous. 15 Cal.Jur. 104. The attack on the 1935 judgments in the 1938 action was therefore collateral and not effective unless the judgment was void. But even assuming that the first 1935 judgment was a nullity, it cannot be said that the second 1935 judgment was also a nullity or that it was not final. The most that could be said of it is that it failed to dispose of all the issues; that is, the effect of the order sustaining the demurrer to the third count without leave to amend, or that it was a disposal of litigation piecemeal. A judgment may be erroneous where it fails to dispose of all of the issues, but it is final, and res judicata, and is not void or subject to collateral attack, which as we have seen was the nature of the attack in the 1938 action. Stark v. Coker, 20 Cal.2d 839, 129 P.2d 390. Splitting of actions is not jurisdictional and may be waived; if the defendant does not object, the judgment is binding upon him. 1 Cal.Jur. 370. If plaintiff has several grounds for the cancellation of an agreement and urges only one, a judgment against him is res judicata as to the others. Rest. Judgments, sec. 63. Hence, if in the 1935 action Mr. Mather had not raised the ground for cancellation of the agreement specified in his third count, the judgment would have been res judicata upon it. He is no better off by having raised it coupled with an order sustaining the demurrer to it without leave to amend. Assuming the judgment entered on that order was a nullity, still he could have asserted error in the order sustaining the demurrer on his appeal from the second 1935 judgment. 2 Cal.Jur. 823, 824.

Viewing Greenfield v. Mather, supra, as holding that there was no final judgment in the 1935 action rather than that the judgments were void, the result should be the same. As we have seen, a judgment need not necessarily dispose of all of the issues to be final. But that would leave the issue on the third cause of action in the 1935 action still pending. It cannot, however, be said that it was not passed upon inasmuch as the order was made sustaining the demurrer thereto. While it is true that ruling could have been changed by the trial court, it did not do so. The preferable view is that the two 1935 judgments were in effect one judgment which became effective when the second judgment was entered.

This case presents a regrettable situation affecting both parties to this litigation. After approximately ten years of litigation the parties appear to be no closer to a final determination of their controversy than when the action was commenced. The merits of the controversy have not yet been passed upon by an appellate court. The case now goes back to the trial court to correct mere procedural errors which obviously could have been corrected on appeal from the judgment of March 14, 1935. That judgment became final upon the dismissal of the appeal therefrom for failure to file a transcript, and should have been upheld as res judicata in the case of Greenfield v. Mather, 14 Cal.2d 228, 93 P.2d 100. The clearly erroneous decision of this court in holding to the contrary in the last cited case is the cause of this travesty on justice, but as stated at the beginning of this opinion, the decision of this court in that case is now final, and is res judicata on the issues determined thereby even though erroneous. 15 Cal.Jur. 104.

BEELER v. AMERICAN TRUST CO.

Sac. 5386.

Supreme Court of California.

Aug. 27, 1943.

Rehearing Granted Sept. 23, 1943.

1. Mortgages 🔑38(2)

Though a deed purporting to convey land absolutely in fee simple may be shown by parol evidence to be a mortgage, clear and convincing evidence is required to establish such fact.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)

Whether evidence offered is sufficiently clear and convincing to warrant holding that a deed purporting to convey land absolutely in fee simple was intended to be a mortgage is a question for trial court, whose determination in such respect upon conflicting evidence is not open to review on appeal.

3. Mortgages 🔑38(1)

In grantor's action to have a deed absolute in form declared an equitable mortgage, evidence was sufficiently clear and convincing to sustain finding that deed was intended to be a mere mortgage to secure an antecedent debt.

4. Mortgages 🔑38(1)

Evidence that land conveyed to mortgagee in satisfaction of mortgage debt which had been reduced to $60,000 was actually worth $135,000 was a strong circumstance tending to show that deed was intended to operate as a mortgage and not as an absolute conveyance.

5. Mortgages 🔑38(1)

That lease and option to repurchase land purportedly conveyed to mortgagee in satisfaction of mortgage debt provided for annual rental of $3,000, which was equivalent to interest on mortgage debt at rate of five per cent per annum, whereas annual rental value of property was more than $7,500, was a strong circumstance tending to show that purported rental was in reality an interest payment and consistent with the character of transaction as a loan.

6. Mortgages 🔑38(5)

That mortgagee retained possession of notes secured by trust deed after recordation of deed by which mortgagor's grantee purportedly conveyed land to mortgagee in satisfaction of mortgage debt tended to show that deed to mortgagee was intended to operate as a mortgage and not as an absolute conveyance, though notes bore endorsement to effect that mortgagee had acquired title by deed and that notes were cancelled.

7. Mortgages 🔑38(1)

Where mortgagee retained possession of notes secured by trust deed after recordation of deed by which mortgagor's grantee purportedly conveyed land to mortgagee in satisfaction of debt, mortgagee's bookkeeping entries designed to show full payment of debt and indorsements on notes to effect that mortgagee had acquired title by deed and notes were canceled were of no effect in determining whether deed to mortgagee was intended as an absolute conveyance or as a mortgage.

8. Mortgages 🔑38(1)

That mortgagor's grantee, after purportedly conveying land to mortgagee in satisfaction of mortgage debt and while in possession under lease and option to repurchase which required him to make ordinary repairs, expended $3,000 in replacing permanent improvements destroyed by a flood following conveyance, sold trees from land with mortgagee's approval, retained proceeds without objection, and executed two leases of portions of land and assigned them to mortgagee in payment of rental and tax installments, tended to show that deed to mortgagee was intended as a mortgage and not as an absolute conveyance.

9. Mortgages 🔑32(2, 3)

In determining whether a deed absolute in form conveys fee-simple title absolutely or operates as a mortgage, the intention of the parties must govern, and, if deed is made to secure the payment of a debt, it is a "mortgage" no matter how strong the language of deed or of any instrument accompanying it may be.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mortgage".

10. Mortgages 🔑37(2)

Grantor's affidavit that contemporaneously executed deed was an absolute conveyance and not intended as a mortgage did not preclude proof that deed was intended as a mortgage to secure an antecedent debt.

11. Mortgages 🔑32(3)

Every conveyance of realty made as security for the performance of an obligation is in equity a "mortgage" regardless of the form in which it is made.

12. Mortgages ⚷32(2)

In determining whether a deed was intended as an absolute conveyance or a mortgage, equity in order to prevent fraud will consider all the facts of transaction, conduct of parties thereto, their declarations against interest, and their relations to one another and to the subject matter and will carry out the true intent of the parties. Civ.Code, §§ 2924, 2925.

13. Mortgages ⚷297

Though mortgagee may become purchaser of the equity, the relations of the parties are such that transaction, by which mortgagor purportedly conveys mortgaged realty absolutely to mortgagee, will be carefully scrutinized to prevent effectuation of a device whereby debtor under the force of necessitous circumstances is deprived of his right of redemption. Civ.Code, §§ 2924, 2925, 2889.

14. Appeal and error ⚷173(6)

Where lack of consideration for agreement to reduce mortgage debt was not pleaded in action to have a deed absolute in form declared an equitable mortgage and case was tried on other issues, the question of lack of consideration could not be raised for the first time on appeal.

15. Interest ⚷50

Where equitable mortgagor in possession of mortgaged premises under lease and option to repurchase, which required him to pay taxes thereon, in good faith and with ability to perform offered in June, 1939, to pay delinquent first installment of 1937–1938 taxes and mortgagee rejected offer, mortgagee, though entitled to reimbursement to extent of payment of first installment of taxes, was not entitled to interest thereon after such offer. Civ. Code, § 1485.

16. Compromise and settlement ⚷23(3)

In action to have deed absolute in form declared an equitable mortgage, conflicting evidence sustained finding that mortgagor's assignment of a lease of part of mortgaged premises was accepted by mortgagee, not as security for, but in full payment of interest on mortgage debt and second installment of taxes on mortgaged premises and discharged mortgagor's liability therefor.

17. Appeal and error ⚷1122(2)

Where trial court, in action to have deed absolute in form declared an equitable mortgage, inadvertently failed to make a finding with respect to mortgagee's right to reimbursement for taxes paid on mortgaged premises and there was no question as to validity of mortgagee's claim for reimbursement, Supreme Court had jurisdiction to supply omitted finding and modify other findings and conclusions of law. Code Civ.Proc. § 956a.

18. Interest ⚷50

Where equitable mortgagor in good faith offered to pay mortgage debt before maturity and was ready and able to pay, mortgagee's refusal to negotiate with mortgagor, though not objecting to form of tender or questioning mortgagor's ability to perform, suspended the running of interest upon indebtedness from date of offer. Civ.Code, §§ 1496, 1501, 1504.

TRAYNOR and EDMONDS, JJ., dissenting.

◆

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; Herbert S. Gans, Judge.

Action by C. W. Beeler against American Trust Company to have a deed absolute in form declared an equitable mortgage, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Judgment modified and, as modified, affirmed.

For prior opinion, see 129 P.2d 13.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison and M. B. Plant, all of San Francisco, and Carr & Kennedy, of Redding, for appellant.

McGregor, McGregor & McGregor, of Santa Barbara, McGregor & McGregor and H. S. Clewett, all of Paradise, and Carter, Barrett, Finley & Carlton, Daniel S. Carlton, and Oliver J. Carter, all of Redding, for respondent.

CURTIS, Justice.

The defendant, American Trust Company, appeals from an adverse judgment holding that a deed absolute in form was in fact an equitable mortgage. The principal contention presented by the defendant bank as a basis for a reversal of the judgment is the familiar claim that the evidence is insufficient to justify the conclusion of the trial court. As a related consideration, it is particularly urged that a verified affidavit of the grantor declaring the contemporaneously executed deed to be an absolute conveyance of the property, and not intended as a mortgage, is a conclusive expression of the understanding between the parties and precludes the admissibility of parol evidence to the contrary.

The facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction out of which this controversy arose appear to be substantially as follows: Prior to July 28, 1937, Henry Weiss owned a large tract of land in Tehama County subject to a deed of trust dated March 21, 1933, running in favor of the American Trust Company to secure two promissory notes for the aggregate sum of $74,400 and bearing interest at the rate of 5½ per cent per annum. Weiss was unable to make the stipulated payments and on October 5, 1936, he was served with a notice of default announcing the bank's election to proceed with the sale of this ranch property. At the request of Weiss the foreclosure proceedings were delayed to give him an opportunity to try to find a purchaser. In June, 1937, Weiss introduced C. W. Beeler to the officers of the bank interested in this matter, and the parties thereupon discussed various propositions looking toward a discount of the debt and its reduction to a satisfactory figure incident to Beeler's purchase of the property. Finally, Mr. Hammond, an assistant vice-president of the bank, agreed to accept $55,000 in cash if that sum were paid within the next few weeks. On July 28, 1937, Weiss conveyed the ranch to Beeler, and it was expressly provided in the terms of the transfer that Beeler assumed and agreed to pay the indebtedness secured by the deed of trust. At the same time Weiss executed and delivered to Beeler a bill of sale of certain personal property on the ranch.

The financial arrangement contemplated by Beeler as the basis for his negotiations with the bank for the early discharge of the debt on the property at the discounted figure did not materialize, and as of September 1, 1937, no part of the $55,000 had been paid. Accordingly, on this last-mentioned date the bank served upon both Beeler and Weiss a second notice of default. The indebtedness on its original scale had then increased to the aggregate sum of $81,000.

Subsequent to said notice and on September 22, 1937, Beeler visited the bank for the purpose of negotiating with its officers some refinancing plan whereby he might continue to retain the ranch and have an extension of time for the payment of the debt as theretofore reduced. The bank's officers refused to carry this property transaction any longer on the records as a security arrangement, and they therefore proposed the following course of procedure: Beeler would deed the property to the bank and in return the bank would execute to Beeler a lease of the premises for the period of one year at a rental of $3,000 per annum, Beeler to pay all taxes and maintenance expense on the ranch and to have an option to purchase the land at any time during the term of the lease for the sum of $60,000. Beeler accepted this proposition and by an absolute deed dated September 27, 1937, he conveyed the property to the bank. As an accompanying instrument, Beeler executed and delivered to the bank his verified affidavit, in which he stated that said deed "is intended to be and is an absolute conveyance of the title to said premises to the grantee named therein, and was not and is not now intended as a mortgage, trust conveyance or security of any kind; that it was the intention of affiant as grantor in said deed to convey, and by said deed this affiant did convey to the grantee therein all his right, title and interest absolutely in and to said premises; that possession of said premises has been surrendered to the grantee; that in the execution and delivery of said deed affiant was not acting under any misapprehension as to the effect thereof, and acted freely and voluntarily and was not acting under coercion or duress; that the consideration for said deed was and is the full cancellation of all debts, obligations, costs and charges secured by that certain deed of trust heretofore existing on said property * * * and the reconveyance of said property under said deed of trust; * * * This affidavit is made for the protection and benefit of the grantee in said deed, its successors and assigns * * * and particularly for the benefit of the Title Insurance and Guaranty Company, which is about to insure the title to said property in reliance thereon * * *." Pursuant to the terms of this affidavit, the bank executed a reconveyance under its trust deed reciting that the indebtedness thereby secured had been fully paid. On November 5, 1937, both the deed from Beeler and the reconveyance were duly recorded.

As of May 16, 1938, neither installment of the 1937-1938 taxes on the ranch had been fully paid, and on said mentioned day the bank served upon Beeler a notice to pay the taxes or quit the premises for failure to comply with the terms of the lease. The parties were unable to settle their differences on this score and in July, 1938, the bank brought suit in unlawful detainer seeking Beeler's eviction from the property. In the ensuing trial Beeler successfully maintained his defense on the ground that the notice of breach given him was defective, and judgment was rendered accordingly in his favor.

On October 19, 1938, Beeler commenced this action against the American Trust Company to have his deed of conveyance to the defendant bank declared a mortgage to secure the antecedent debt. In his complaint plaintiff alleged that the bank agreed to reduce the outstanding indebtedness against the property in the sum of $60,000 to be paid, together with interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, within the period of one year as provided by the terms of the lease, and that the bank accepted the deed of conveyance as a mortgage to secure that debt. To this complaint the defendant bank filed an answer and cross-complaint, denying the material averments of the plaintiff's pleading and asserting that the parties intended the deed to be an absolute transfer of title to the property as it in form purported to be, and not a mortgage or other security arrangement. With the principal controversial issue thus defined, the action proceeded to trial, and at the conclusion thereof the court adopted findings favorable to the plaintiff. Judgment was rendered accordingly against the defendant bank, determining the plaintiff, C. W. Beeler, to be the owner in fee of the property in question subject to a mortgage lien as security for the payment of the following sums: (1) The agreed indebtedness of $60,000 together with interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, according to the terms expressed in the lease and option agreement; and (2) the first installment of the 1937-1938 taxes, $477.88, with interest from the date of the entry of the decree herein. It was further ordered that on receipt of these sums within the time limitation specified by the court, the defendant bank should reconvey the property to the plaintiff and execute and deliver to him a release and satisfaction of the lien thus adjudicated. From this judgment the defendant, American Trust Company, prosecutes this appeal.

[1, 2] It is without doubt the law, as repeatedly declared in our decisions, that clear and convincing evidence is required to justify a court in finding that a deed which purports to convey land absolutely in fee simple was intended to be a mortgage. "That a deed purporting on its face to convey the title absolutely may be shown by parol evidence to be something else—namely, a mortgage—is a striking exception to the general rule, and it has been universally held that the character of the instrument cannot be thus changed except upon clear and convincing evidence." Woods v. Jensen, 130 Cal. 200, 203, 62 P. 473; see, also, Mahoney v. Bostwick, 96 Cal. 53, 30 P. 1020, 31 Am.St.Rep. 175; Sheehan v. Sullivan, 126 Cal. 189, 58 P. 543; Emery v. Lowe, 140 Cal. 379, 73 P. 981; Wadleigh v. Phelps, 149 Cal. 627, 87 P. 93; Couts v. Winston, 153 Cal. 686, 96 P. 357; Todd v. Todd, 164 Cal. 255, 128 P. 413; Kohn v. Parent, 174 Cal. 570, 163 P. 1008; Lockhart v. J. H. McDougall Co., 190 Cal. 308, 212 P. 1; Carlson v. Robinson, 7 Cal.2d 235, 60 P.2d 426. But whether or not the evidence offered to change the ostensible character of the instrument is clear and convincing is a question for the trial court to decide. Mahoney v. Bostwick, supra; Todd v. Todd, supra; Lockhart v. J. H. McDougall Co., supra; 17 Cal.Jur. 757, sec. 59. In such case, as in others, the determination of that court in favor of either party upon conflicting or contradictory evidence is not open to review on appeal. Sherman v. Sandell, 106 Cal. 373, 39 P. 797; Locke v. Moulton, 132 Cal. 145, 64 P. 87; Beckman v. Waters, 161 Cal. 581, 119 P. 922; 17 Cal.Jur. 758, sec. 60. As was said in this regard in Wadleigh v. Phelps, supra, 149 Cal. at page 637, 87 P. at page 98, "the appellate court * * * will not disturb the finding of the trial court to the effect that the deed is a mortgage, where there is substantial evidence warranting a clear and satisfactory conviction to that effect. All questions as to preponderance and conflict of evidence are for the trial court."

[3] A review of the record in the light of these rules does not establish that the finding declaring the deed in question to be a mortgage is without sufficient evidentiary support.

In construing the disputed financial arrangement concededly made as the result of the understanding reached between the plaintiff and certain officers of the defendant bank at the aforementioned conference of September 22, 1937, regard must be had at the outset for the parties' course of negotiations at that meeting relative to some appropriate disposition of the indebtedness secured by the property here involved under the outstanding deed of trust. In this connection the plaintiff's testimony shows that incident to his purchase of the ranch on July 28, 1937, and his assumption of his grantor's obligation to discharge the existing debt thereon, he had been attempting for some months to work out some feasible plan with the bank for a reduction of the loan; that the financial backing on which he relied to meet the terms of the bank's $55,000 cash discount proposition of June, 1937, did not materialize within the time scheduled; that in response to the bank's notice of default and election to sell under its deed of trust, served upon him on September 1, 1937, he visited the bank on September 22, 1937, to "make some other arrangement than the present arrangement of paying the indebtedness off in 55,000 dollars cash"; that he discussed his problem of carrying the loan and continuing with the ranch, with several officers of the bank, but principally with Mr. Kennedy, the vice-president in the real estate loan department, who offered as the only alternative to immediate foreclosure a refinancing scheme whereby the bank "could write off the loan on the books" by taking a deed of the property and giving plaintiff a one-year lease with the option to purchase the ranch at any time during that period; that plaintiff did not want the transaction handled that way, but the bank's officers insisted on this form of procedure as plaintiff's only recourse; that the indebtedness was thereupon fixed at $60,000 instead of the previous discount figure of $55,000 because of the time extension commensurate with the option provision, and the rental was set at an amount equivalent to 5 per cent interest per annum on the aforesaid $60,000, or $3,000, payable semi-annually; that as security for his payment of said interest and the taxes on the property for the ensuing year, plaintiff agreed to give the bank a chattel mortgage on certain equipment on the ranch, with the understanding that such mortgage would be returned to him upon his assigning to the bank a lease which he was then negotiating with respect to a portion of the ranch property; that plaintiff had a tract of land in Paradise, California, which he wanted the bank to consider as a basis for a reduction of the indebtedness in question; that Mr. Kennedy agreed to have an appraisal of the Paradise property made some time during the course of the year and according to the valuation so established, the bank would "take it in" either "to reduce the debt" or "as additional security." Corroborative of the plaintiff's recital of the parties' negotiations as concerned only with the effectuation of some new security arrangement which the plaintiff could handle successfully is the testimony of a Mr. Brown, plaintiff's banker, who was present during most of the conference on September 22, 1937. This witness, when asked to give his recollection of what occurred at the meeting, testified as follows: "Well, it appeared that Mr. Beeler had acquired a piece of property on which the American Trust Company held a deed of trust. The American Trust Company had filed notice of breach and Mr. Beeler was there for the purpose of endeavoring to refinance it, get an extension or something of that sort, and all the time I was there it centered around this deed of trust."

A few days following this meeting between the parties, the bank forwarded to plaintiff for his execution a deed of conveyance, a bill of sale of certain personal property on the ranch in lieu of the chattel mortgage theretofore specified, and a lease and option agreement—all documents which the parties had discussed in their previous negotiations, and which the plaintiff admittedly signed without question. However, with these papers the bank also sent to the plaintiff for signature an affidavit certifying, according to the pertinent provisions thereof above quoted, the nature of the transaction as an absolute conveyance of title to property in complete satisfaction and cancellation of an existing indebtedness thereon. Nothing had previously been said by any of the bank officials indicating that the bank would ask for, or would require any such affidavit. The plaintiff testified that before signing this affidavit he telephoned to the bank and discussed the document with Mr. McIntyre, an assistant vice-president, who had prepared the necessary papers for the closing of the transaction, as follows: "I asked him what the meaning of the affidavit was, that there was nothing said about it before. He said, 'We have to have that to clear up the title, so it is all right and we can put it in the real estate department. The bank always takes those.' I didn't think anything about it. I said, 'If you have to have it, that is O.K. I will sign it.' So I did." At the trial upon both direct and cross-examination with respect to this matter, Mr. McIntyre admitted that he told the plaintiff at the time in question that the affidavit was needed to satisfy a requirement of the title company before it would issue a title policy upon the property free of exceptions and that the bank was acting only as "an intermediary in the matter." On its face the affidavit in part sustains this statement as to its purpose, for it expressly provides: "This affidavit is made * * * particularly for the benefit of the Title Insurance and Guaranty Company, which is about to insure the title to said property in reliance thereon."

Also bearing on this matter is the following testimony of the plaintiff as to a conversation he had with Mr. McGlynn, an officer of the title company, before the transaction was finally closed: "We discussed, I told him rather, that this land was clear and so on, that I was deeding it all to the bank to refinance the loan, the way they wanted to do it. He said, 'You have given this affidavit. That takes you out, doesn't it?' I said, 'Why, no, I have a lease and an option and it is a form of refinancing.' He asked, 'What about this revenue stamp on the deed, where you are giving them the deed to the property?' I said, 'There is no need of any revenue stamp on it at all, because it is just given to refinance the thing.' He said, 'You refuse to put the revenue stamp on?' I said, 'Certainly I do.' He said, 'I will have to take that up with the bank.' He said, 'You have your lease and option. I don't want to see them.' I said, 'Why?' He said, 'We can't write a policy of title insurance if you aren't moving off the place and giving possession and turning that place over to them, if you aren't selling it to them.' I said, 'I am not selling it to them.' He said, 'Then I will have to write to our attorneys in San Francisco and advise them to make an exception to the property.' I said, 'Well, that is the story. I am not moving off the property.' He said, 'Are they paying you any money for it?' I said, 'Absolutely not a cent. They don't have to because I am just doing it to refinance.'" Consistent with the tenor of this conversation the title company thereafter issued its policy expressly excepting "any rights of C. W. Beeler, who is in possession"—significantly without reference to his occupancy of the property as a lessee—and the bank accepted the policy in this form, although it had previously indicated it wanted the title certificate free of such exception.

[4-7] Other matters of some relevancy in considering the status of the parties as the result of their consummation of the presently disputed transaction appear from the record: While the testimony relative to the value of the property is in direct conflict, the estimate of the plaintiff and his witnesses supports the trial court's finding that the ranch was worth "in excess of $135,000." This accredited evidence indicating the extent of the inequality between the worth of the property and the consideration stated in the conveyance, to-wit, $60,000, the amount claimed by the bank to accord with its appraisal figure, is a "strong circumstance" tending to show that the deed was intended to operate as a mortgage. Husheon v. Husheon, 71 Cal. 407, 12 P. 410; Emery v. Lowe, 140 Cal. 379, 73 P. 981; Lockhart v. J. H. McDougall Co., 190 Cal. 308, 212 P. 1; Reynolds v. Hook, 109 Cal.App. 226, 292 P. 1000; see, also, annotation in 90 A.L.R. 953-963; 17 Cal.Jur. 788, sec. 88. Moreover, the yearly rental value of the property stands uncontroverted in the record as "in excess of $7,500" and the trial court so found, yet under the terms of the plaintiff's lease with the bank the sum denominated rental for the premises was but $3,000 per year—a disparity of some significance, particularly in view of the further evidence that such sum was fixed by the bank at an amount equivalent to the interest rate of 5 per cent per annum on the indebtedness at the reduced figure of $60,000 and payable semi-annually. This, too, constitutes a "strong circumstance" tending to show that the "rent" under the lease agreement was in reality an interest payment consistent with the character of the transaction as a loan. Couts v. Winston, 153 Cal. 686, 96 P. 357; 17 Cal.Jur. 786, sec. 86. Still another matter to be here noted is the fact that after the recordation of the deed from the plaintiff, the instrument purportedly given in extinguishment of the existing indebtedness, the bank continued to retain in its possession the two promissory notes—one for $60,000 and the other for $14,400—evidencing the debt secured by the aforementioned trust deed made by the plaintiff's grantor and expressly assumed by the plaintiff in the terms of his purchase of the property. While it appears that following said recordation the bank made certain entries and transfers on its records designed to indicate full payment of the debt, endorsed on the back of the $60,000 note "We have acquired title by deed. Note cancelled" and "wrote off" the $14,400 note as a loss, such bookkeeping procedure of itself is no more effectual to establish the discharge of the debt than would be the act of the payee in writing the word "Paid" across the face of the note, without relinquishment thereof to the maker. There being no delivery of the notes either to Mr. Weiss, the plaintiff's grantor, or to the plaintiff himself, the mentioned notations of the bank in this regard have no force or effect here. Wittman v. Pickens, 33 Colo. 484, 81 P. 299; Hanna v. McCrory, 19 N.M. 183, 141 P. 996; First State Bank of Hilger v. Lang, 55 Mont. 146, 174 P. 597, 9 A.L.R. 1139.

[8] As to the parties' conduct subsequent to the financial arrangement in question, the following evidence is pertinent: In December, 1937, a great flood occurred in the Sacramento River, as the result of which many permanent improvements on the property here involved were damaged or destroyed. The plaintiff testified that he communicated the magnitude of his loss to certain officers of the bank, that he asked them for a loan—not a contribution—of money to defray the expense of repair and reconstruction, that they declined to give him the financial assistance he requested, and that he expended approximately the sum of $3,000 in making the necessary structural replacements on the ranch. While the terms of the lease required the plaintiff during the term thereof to make ordinary repairs on the property, his undertaking a program of improvements on the scale intimated by the mentioned outlay of expense is a factor substantiating his claim of continued occupancy of the property as owner. The plaintiff further testified that in the course of one of his conversations with the officers of the bank relative to the flood damage, he mentioned that he contemplated selling some 276 walnut trees growing on the ranch; that they agreed with him that the removal of such trees would improve the property and that he should keep the proceeds from such sale; that he consummated the sale for the sum of $1,800, which amount he retained without objection from the bank. This arrangement as detailed by the plaintiff was not contradicted by the bank, and it, too, reflects the plaintiff's exercise of the rights of an owner in relation to the ranch property. Also to be noted here is the fact that some few months after the negotiations of the parties on September 22, 1937, resulting in the financial plan now in controversy, the plaintiff made two leases of different portions of the property—one for $2,750 and the other for $4,500—the latter, in accordance with the parties' understanding on the date mentioned, being assigned by the plaintiff to the bank in payment of his aforesaid yearly rental charge of $3,000 and the second installment of the 1937-1938 taxes on the ranch. The plaintiff discussed both of these lease propositions with the officers of the bank at the meeting of September 22, 1937, and as ultimately concluded, they both were executed as leases, not as subleases of a tenant in possession of property.

[9] While much of the foregoing recital is based upon evidence introduced on behalf of the plaintiff and in some important respects is flatly contradicted by witnesses for the defendant bank—particularly in regard to the purpose of the financial arrangement made by the parties at the conference of September 22, 1937, as a cancellation of the existing indebtedness on the ranch rather than another loan transaction—it must be remembered that all questions of preponderance and conflict of evidence are for the trial court. That court had the right to accept the plaintiff's version of this controversial matter as true, and apparently did so. Thus accepted, it was plainly sufficient to justify the finding that the deed in question was intended as a mortgage to secure the antecedent debt as discounted by the bank in formulating the refinancing plan with the plaintiff. In view of this accredited evidence relative to a continuing, subsisting loan, the following language from the case of Chapman v. Hicks, 41 Cal.App. 158, 162, 163, 182 P. 336, 338, is pertinent: "The test of a mortgage is whether the relation of debtor and creditor continues so that there is a subsisting debt after the conveyance [citing cases]; and where a deed, absolute on its face, is given to secure a debt, it will be held to be a mortgage even though the parties stipulate it shall be an absolute conveyance (Hodgkins v. Wright, 127 Cal. 688, 60 P. 431; * * *). The intention of the parties must govern, and it matters not what particular form the transaction may take. If the deed is made for the purpose of securing the payment of a debt, it is a mortgage, 'no matter how strong the language of the deed, or any instrument accompanying it might be.' Woods v. Jensen, 130 Cal. 200, 62 P. 473."

[10-12] Nor is a different principle applicable here because the plaintiff executed contemporaneously with his deed an affidavit declaring the transaction to be an absolute conveyance and not intended as a mortgage. While the authorities in this country are divided with reference to the question whether a deed and an accompanying memorandum of agreement, or option of resale to the grantor, may be shown by parol evidence to be a mortgage where the terms of the memorandum unambiguously negative the existence of an indebtedness (see elaborate annotation of cases on the subject in 111 A.L.R. 448), it is the settled law of this state not to hold such writing a conclusive criterion of the character of the transaction. In Vance v. Anderson, 113 Cal. 532, 538, 45 P. 816, 818, this court set forth the basic doctrine as follows: "A deed absolute on its face may be shown by parol to be intended as a mortgage. It may be stated, as a general proposition, that in this state, at least, every conveyance of real property made as security for the performance of an obligation is in equity a mortgage, irrespective of the form in which it is made. Equity looks beyond the mere form in which the transaction is clothed, and shapes its relief in such way as to carry out the true intent of the parties to the agreement; and to this end all the facts and circumstances of the transaction, the conduct of the parties thereto, and their declarations against their own interests, their relations to one another and to the subject matter, are subjects for consideration. [Citing cases.]" In thus regarding "all the facts and circumstances of the transaction" so as to execute the real intention of the parties, the rule prevents either of the parties to the disputed instrument committing a fraud on the other by claiming it as an absolute conveyance, notwithstanding it was given and accepted as security. "To insist on what was really a mortgage, as a sale, is in equity a fraud, which cannot be successfully practiced under the shelter of any written papers, however precise and complete they may appear to be." (Italics added.) Peninsular Trading & Fishing Co. v. Pacific Steam Whaling Co., 123 Cal. 689, 694, 56 P. 604, 606.

The defendant bank's citation of the early case of People ex rel. Ford v. Irwin, 1861, 18 Cal. 117, in support of its argument that in this jurisdiction parol evidence may not be received to vary or dispute the terms of a written instrument concerning the purpose of executing a deed, is of no avail here. That case involved a deed absolute and a contract to reconvey. One Arnold owed the plaintiff, Ford, the sum of $8,600. Arnold conveyed the real property in question by grant, bargain and sale deed to Ford, who at the same time delivered to Arnold a written agreement to reconvey the property, in which it was stipulated: "This shall only be treated as a contract to convey, and not as an acknowledgment that said conveyance from Arnold and wife to myself was intended as a mortgage." The opinion does not refer to any ruling upon the admission or exclusion of parol evidence, but discusses the problem as one of the proper construction of the instruments in the light of the evidence which had been received. Thus, it was held that evidence that the actual consideration for the deed was a pre-existing indebtedness equal in amount to the sum required to be paid upon a reconveyance of the property was sufficient to impress upon the deed the character of a mortgage "unless controlled by the clause referred to in the contract" (that is, the stipulation above quoted); that the object of the clause was to "repel" any and all presumptions which the law would otherwise have indulged in relation to the deed, and that there was "no doubt that the parties could, by a provision for that purpose, exclude all extraneous circumstances" affecting the character of the transaction; that such clause in the contract did not take away or interfere in any respect with the efficacy of the contract, but simply repelled "any presumption from outside facts, giving to it an operation different from that intended by the parties."

[13] To the extent that the discussion in the Ford case would limit the court to the consideration of only the deed and the accompanying written instrument, without regard for other evidence in the case, in determining the real nature of the disputed transaction, it is inconsistent with the import of the subsequently adopted code provision on the subject and cannot be approved. Section 2924 of the Civil Code from the date of its original enactment in 1872 has provided that every transfer of an interest in property, other than in trust, made only as a security for the performance of another act, is to be deemed a mortgage. In accord with the implication of this statutory pronouncement, it was properly recognized in Vance v. Anderson, 1896, supra, that a collateral written agreement declaring that a contemporaneously executed deed should be treated as an absolute conveyance, and not as a mortgage, was not conclusive but only one of the facts and circumstances of the transaction worthy of consideration in determining the real intention of the parties. If by a separate writing the parties expressly agree, at the same time an absolute deed is executed, that it is what it purports to be, that is, an absolute sale, that would be no more than what the deed itself says. Therefore, if they could thus avoid its real effect as a mortgage, the true nature of such a transaction could never be shown, and the policy of the law never to permit a security to be converted by any contemporaneous agreement into a sale could be constantly evaded. Civ.Code, secs. 2924, 2925; Pierce v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 116; Wehle v. Price, 202 Cal. 394, 260 P. 878; Carlson v. Robinson, 7 Cal.2d 235, 60 P.2d 426. The right of a mortgagee to become the purchaser of the equity is unquestioned, but the relations of the parties are such that the transaction will be carefully scrutinized to prevent the effectuation of some device whereby the debtor under the force of necessitous circumstances is deprived of his right of redemption. Civ. Code, sec. 2889; Russell v. Southard, 12 How. 139, 53 U.S. 139, 13 L.Ed. 927; Peugh v. Davis, 96 U.S. 332, 24 L.Ed. 775; Bradbury v. Davenport, 114 Cal. 593 [46 P. 1062, 55 Am.St.Rep. 92]; Jones on Mortgages, secs. 251, 1045.) The rule in such a case is said to be substantially the same as that prevailing when the deed of a beneficiary to his trustee is questioned. Villa v. Rodriguez, 12 Wall. 323, 79 U.S. 323, 20 L.Ed. 406; Bradbury v. Davenport, supra.

A situation presenting considerations strikingly akin to those here involved was recently before the appellate court in the second decision in Davis v. Stewart, 53 Cal.App.2d 439, 127 P.2d 1014, and adjudicated in accordance with the views hereinabove expressed. There, as here, a deed absolute on its face was claimed to be only a mortgage. As a part of the transaction in which the deed was given, the grantor and grantee entered into an elaborate written agreement, which among other things provided: "It is understood and agreed that first party shall become, upon execution and delivery of said deed the absolute owner of said property, together with all improvements thereon and that this transaction does not constitute a mortgage, subject only however to said option for said five year period." See recital in Davis v. Stewart, 31 Cal.App.2d 574, 576, 88 P.2d 734, 735. Over objection, the trial court admitted oral testimony to the effect that notwithstanding the declarations of the contemporaneous writing, the deed was in fact intended as security for the payment of a debt. Thereafter findings were made in accordance with the oral evidence, and the judgment establishing the deed as a mortgage was affirmed. The defendant bank argues that the situation in the Davis case is distinguishable because the written agreement there did not expressly provide, as does the affidavit here, that the deed "was not and is not now intended * * * as security of any kind * * *" and hence evidence extrinsic to the writing was properly received to remove the uncertainty as to whether or not the disputed instrument was given in satisfaction of the antecedent indebtedness. That is but a tenuous distinction and will not bear close scrutiny. In both cases the import of the contemporaneous writing is the same—the negation of a security arrangement incident to the subsistence of the debt—and whether one writing amplifies by detailed recitals the purported purpose of the parties to execute an absolute transfer of title to the property involved is an immaterial consideration. Certainly, in neither instance is the language of the accompanying instrument so obscure as to require extrinsic evidence for its explanation or understanding. And, in one case as in the other, the declaration of the writing would not be held controlling unless it should appear upon complete evidence that it was in harmony with "all the facts and circumstances of the transaction." Vance v. Anderson, supra.

In concluding the discussion of this phase of the present appeal, it is sufficient to state that the circumstances of the whole case, as reflected by the evidence accredited in the trial court, are entirely consistent with the view that the defendant bank, while in fact agreeing on a loan to be secured by mortgage, was desirous, for reasons of certain interdepartmental requirements connected with its routine bookkeeping procedure, of giving the transaction a different appearance by recording it as an absolute transfer of title. Such cases cited by the defendant bank as Henley v. Hotaling, 41 Cal. 22; Farmer v. Grose, 42 Cal. 169; Woods v. Jensen, 130 Cal. 200, 62 P. 473; Wehle v. Price, 202 Cal. 394, 260 P. 878; and Goodfellow v. Goodfellow, 219 Cal. 548, 27 P.2d 898 wherein an absolute deed was sustained as such in the face of the claim that it was intended by the parties as a mortgage, merely rest upon an affirmance of the trial court's judgment as based upon substantial evidence and thus do not conflict with the fundamental premise of this opinion as to an appellate court's function in reviewing the record to determine whether challenged findings lack evidentiary support.

[14] There is no force here to the contention of the defendant bank that there was no consideration for the agreement for the reduction of the indebtedness as claimed by the plaintiff to have been made between the parties at the basic conference of September 22, 1937, as aforesaid. In the first place, the record discloses that the trial court found on substantial evidence that at said meeting the parties concluded with respect to various phases of the contemplated financial arrangement a number of reciprocal agreements, of which one concerned the understanding as to the discount of the existing debt; that as the result of these integrated negotiations the deed in question was executed and the parties have acted thereunder, though in dispute as to the real purpose of the conveyance. But regardless of this observation, the record further shows that this matter of lack of consideration was not pleaded in the trial court, that the cause was tried on other issues entirely and as if such point did not enter into the case; consequently, such objection may not properly be raised for the first time on appeal. (2 Cal.Jur. 234, 235, sec. 67; Los Angeles Inv. Co. v. Home Sav. Bank, 180 Cal. 601, 182 P. 293, 5 A.L.R. 1193.

[15] Two additional questions presented by the record require some discussion. The first of these relates to the payment of taxes on the property involved. As above stated, the lease agreement expressly placed this obligation upon the plaintiff during the one-year period therein specified—October 1, 1937, to September 30, 1938. With regard to the first installment of the 1937-1938 taxes, the record discloses that the plaintiff on November 30, 1937, received from the bank a letter enclosing the bill for the taxes covering the real property and stating that the bill covering a separate assessment with respect to certain personal property on the ranch had been forwarded to the plaintiff's grantor, Mr. Weiss, who was responsible therefor; that on December 3, 1937, the plaintiff gave the tax collector his check for the amount of the real property taxes; that subsequently the tax collector notified the bank as to the receipt of the plaintiff's check, but stated that such segregable amount of the entire tax bill could not be accepted until payment of the personal property assessment was made; that the bank suggested to the plaintiff by letter that he pay the balance of the tax bill and deduct that amount from a certain sum he then owed to Mr. Weiss in connection with the purchase of the ranch; that the plaintiff did nothing further in the matter and on April 25, 1938, his check for the real property taxes was returned to him by the tax collector; that the bank on May 16, 1938, served on the plaintiff a notice to quit the premises for breach of his lease, and subsequently commenced unlawful detainer proceedings. The plaintiff testified that in June, 1938, he called at the defendant bank and offered to pay the delinquent taxes, including those on the personal property in question, if the bank would not prosecute the eviction proceedings; that he then had sufficient money in his bank account to substantiate his offer of payment; and that the officers of the defendant bank refused to accept his proposition. As previously noted, the unlawful detainer action resulted in a judgment in favor of the plaintiff herein because of the defect in the notice of breach with respect to the amount of his tax liability. In view of this evidence the trial court properly concluded that the defendant bank should be reimbursed to the extent of its payment of the first installment of the real property taxes, $477.88, but that the running of interest on such sum was stopped by virtue of the plaintiff's offer of payment made in good faith and with ability to perform. Civ.Code, sec. 1485.

[16] As to the second installment of the 1937-1938 taxes, there arises the question of the effect of the plaintiff's assignment of a certain lease to the bank in discharge of this obligation. The plaintiff testified that at the aforesaid conference of September 22, 1937, he agreed to assign to the bank "to pay the interest [rent] and the taxes" a lease he was then negotiating with respect to a portion of the ranch; that such assignment was accordingly made "to pay up all of the three thousand dollars and the second half of the taxes in full"; that following the bank's acceptance of the assignment he was given a "receipt for all the payments, the interest payments" that he owed it. While certain witnesses for the defendant bank stated at the trial that the assignment was taken only as security for the amount of the rental charge and the specified tax installment, the instrument itself purports to be absolute on its face and apparently the court so construed it in accordance with the plaintiff's positive testimony in the matter. Accordingly, the trial court's finding to the effect that the assignment was in full payment of the aforesaid second installment of taxes, as well as for the rental charge of $3,000 under the terms of the lease agreement, is binding on this appeal, and the defendant bank's claim that the plaintiff is indebted to it in the amount of said tax installment cannot be sustained.

[17] However, the record further establishes, and the plaintiff so concedes, that pending the trial of this action the defendant bank paid the first installment of the 1938-1939 taxes amounting to $430 on the real property here involved. Apparently the trial court inadvertently failed to make any finding as to this matter. Since there is no question as to the validity of the bank's claim for reimbursement for this expenditure, we are authorized under section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure to supply the missing finding. We, therefore, find "That the defendant in the year 1939, paid the first installment of said real property taxes for said year amounting to the sum of $430, and under the said agreement of September 1937, and the said lease, it was the duty of the said plaintiff to pay said first installment, and said defendant should be reimbursed for its payment thereof; that there is now due and owing from plaintiff to defendant, American Trust Company, the said sum of $430, but without interest thereon because of its refusal of the offer of payment by said plaintiff above stated, and further because of its refusal of the offer of payment hereinafter in these findings referred to."

The defendant having paid the sum of $430 on account of the taxes due for the year 1938-1939, as well as the sum of $477.88 on account of the taxes for the previous year, is entitled to be reimbursed in the sum of $907.88, the aggregate of these two amounts.

For the purpose of making the findings harmonize, it is further necessary to modify Finding XXXIV by striking out subdivision 2 thereof, and inserting in its place, the following: "2. The sum of $907.88, being the amount of taxes on said real property for the years of 1937-1938, and 1938-1939, paid by the said defendant American Trust Company, together with legal interest upon said amount from the date of entry of the decree in this action."

The conclusions of law are also modified so as to meet these changes in the findings of fact.

The second and final point presented for determination relates to the proper allowance of interest to be made to the defendant bank with reference to the adjudicated mortgage indebtedness of $60,000. It is claimed by the plaintiff and found by the trial court that a tender of this amount was made to the defendant bank some few months before due under the parties' agreement and that because of such tender and refusal thereof, the bank is not entitled to interest from that date. Civ.Code, sec. 1504. The defendant bank contends that the tender, if in fact made, was insufficient to stop the running of interest.

The finding of the trial court upon the matter of tender is substantially as follows: That on June 20, 1938, at the defendant bank the plaintiff offered to pay his indebtedness in good faith, and was ready, willing and able to do so; that prior to that date plaintiff had entered into an arrangement with one MacArthur whereby the latter had agreed to advance to plaintiff the amount of money necessary to pay the indebtedness; that said MacArthur was financially able to make the requisite advancement, and was ready and willing to do so; that this offer was made to Mr. Kennedy, vice-president of the bank; that said Kennedy refused that offer without specifying any objection to its form, and refused to deal with the plaintiff in the matter in any way, but demanded that the plaintiff vacate the property within thirty days; that by virtue of its said officer's actions the defendant bank waived objection to the mode of the offer and waived tender or other offer; that such offer of performance suspended the running of interest upon the indebtedness.

This finding is in strict accord with the plaintiff's evidence on the subject. In regard to his interview with Mr. Kennedy on the day mentioned, the plaintiff testified as follows: "Well, I went into the bank. He [Kennedy] was sitting at his desk. * * * He apparently—well, he was sore because I came in. He told me before he didn't want to deal with me. I said, 'I will come in. I have a man by the name of Roderick McArthur that will give me enough money that I can liquidate this indebtedness and I want to talk to you about it and see what we can do to get it closed up.' He said, 'I don't want to talk to you. You get out of this bank. We have had nothing but trouble with you and all these leases and everything and I don't want to talk to you at all. We want you to get off of that ranch and if you are not off in thirty days we will put you off.' I tried too talk further. I tried to say something, and he walked off and said, 'I don't want to talk to you. You get out of here.'" Mr. MacArthur corroborated the plaintiff's statement with respect to their prior arrangement for the necessary advance of money, and added that he was financially able to discharge the indebtedness at the time he so agreed to assist the plaintiff. While Mr. Kennedy on behalf of the bank gave an entirely different account of the conversation had with the plaintiff on the day in question, the trial court in its findings expressly denied credence to the substance of his testimony. Since, as aforestated, the credibility of witnesses is a matter wholly within the province of the trial court, its discretion as here exercised will not be disturbed on appeal.

[18] The evidence accredited by the trial court supports not only its finding as to the fact of the offer of payment, but also its sufficiency to prevent the running of interest on the plaintiff's obligation. Thus, it appears that Mr. Kennedy as representative of the defendant bank declined absolutely to negotiate with the plaintiff in the matter and, without making any objection as to the form of the tender or questioning the plaintiff's ability to perform his offer, he simply refused to consider the proposition that the plaintiff had the right to protect his interest in the property involved. Upon this basis the trial court was warranted in concluding that any further action by the plaintiff in this respect would have met with like rebuff by the bank, and that a valid offer having once been made and refused, the indebtedness ceased to bear interest as of that date. Civ.Code secs. 1496, 1501, 1504; Lockhart v. J. H. McDougall Co., 190 Cal. 308, 212 P. 1.

In accordance with the views above expressed, the judgment is modified by striking therefrom the figures, $477.88, and inserting in their place the figures, $907.88, and as so modified, the judgment is affirmed. Neither party to recover costs on appeal.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK and SCHAUER, JJ., concurred.

CARTER, J., did not participate.

TRAYNOR, Justice (dissenting).

The evidence in this case is insufficient, in my opinion, to uphold plaintiff's contention and the trial court's finding that defendant, with a deed of trust on real property worth over $135,000 securing an indebtedness of $81,232.90, entered into an agreement to reduce the indebtedness to $60,000 and accept an inarticulated mortgage in place of its deed of trust. It was incumbent upon plaintiff to support his contention by evidence "clear, satisfactory and convincing; explicit, unequivocal and indisputable." Wehle v. Price, 202 Cal. 394, 397, 260 P. 878, 879; Goodfellow v. Goodfellow, 219 Cal. 548, 554, 27 P.2d 898; Woods v. Jensen, 130 Cal. 200, 203, 62 P. 473. One searches the record in vain for such evidence. The only agreement about which there was any evidence is the one set forth in the writings, which according to plaintiff's own testimony, the parties had previously made orally. Plaintiff testified that he was told that defendant would not reduce the indebtedness and continue to carry a loan and that when defendant took the deed the indebtedness would be "wiped out." Plaintiff's affidavit was likewise unequivocal, providing that the consideration of the deed was to be "the full cancellation of all debts, obligations, costs and charges secured by that certain deed of trust. * * *."

Plaintiff concedes that the evidence plainly indicates that he understood the Weiss indebtedness was to be satisfied, but contends that his assumption agreement with Weiss created "an independent contract obligation" that was to continue. The only liability that he agreed to assume, however, was the indebtedness represented by Weiss's promissory notes and secured by the deed of trust. There was but one indebtedness, and while plaintiff became primarily liable and Weiss secondarily liable therefor under the assumption agreement, its satisfaction would necessarily end both liabilities. Plaintiff does not contend that Weiss was to be released from liability for an indebtedness that was to continue; his own testimony was that the indebtedness was to be satisfied. It is clear that he understood the transaction in this light, for he alleged in his answer to a suit brought by Weiss that he "did fulfill and carry out the terms of his agreement regarding the payment of said obligation against said property, and did procure the same to be released and satisfied in full." What the trial court found, moreover, was not that the deed was taken as security for some independent obligation arising from the assumption agreement, but that it was executed pursuant to an agreement that the "trust deed indebtedness and interest" i. e., the Weiss indebtedness, should be reduced and the deed taken as security for the reduced indebtedness. The contention that the Weiss indebtedness was to be satisfied and the deed taken as security for some independent obligation of plaintiff does not support the finding but impeaches it.

Plaintiff's contention rests upon inferences that he seeks to elicit from evidence relative to the circumstances under which the deed was delivered and to the subsequent conduct of the parties. This evidence does not warrant plaintiff's inferences. It is described in the majority opinion as "entirely consistent with the view that defendant bank, while in fact agreeing on a loan to be secured by mortgage, was desirous, for reasons of certain interdepartmental requirements connected with its routine bookkeeping procedure, of giving the transaction a different appearance by recording it as an absolute transfer of title." It is not enough for the evidence merely to be consistent with plaintiff's contention, however, for it is wholly consistent with the agreement set forth in the writings. The burden was on plaintiff to prove that it was highly probable that the deed was not what it purported to be. He did not sustain this burden by evidence that at best is simply consistent with the deed's being something else, but which is just as consistent with its being what it purports to be. Goodfellow v. Goodfellow, supra; Wehle v. Price, supra; Woods v. Jensen, supra.

Plaintiff infers from the fact that the $3,000 rental specified in the lease was equivalent to 5 per cent of the option price of $60,000, that the rental was actually interest, and the option price actually an indebtedness. Such a rental is bound to be a percentage of the option price and is apt to fall within the normal range of interest returns on investments equivalent to that price. It would be as arbitrary, however, to transmute a rental into an interest charge because it produced the same return as to transmute a dividend from stock into interest from a bond. There is nothing in the mathematical relation between the two figures that gives any clue to what they represent; the substance of the relationship is not found in the sums. It is to the terms of a transaction that one must look, and not to the sums involved, since transactions may differ widely in nature, however alike may be the sums they involve.

Plaintiff contends that Mr. Kennedy, the bank's representative, agreed to have an appraisal made of a tract of land that plaintiff owned in Paradise, California, to guide the bank in taking it in either "to reduce the debt" or "as additional security," and infers that if the security was "additional" the deed in question was a mortgage. By plaintiff's own testimony, however, the conversations regarding the Paradise property were concerned with the possibility of defendant's taking it as part of the option price. In the negotiations of September 22 he asked if defendant would take the Paradise property to reduce the indebtedness. Kennedy replied that the bank could not do so, but that if plaintiff gave the bank the deed and took back a lease and option, the latter would examine the property to determine whether it would be acceptable as part payment of the option price or as additional security for a part thereof. This suggestion obviously contemplated the possibility that the parties might later enter into an arrangement enabling plaintiff to exercise his option by paying only part of the price in cash. Following Elberg's visit to the property Kennedy told the plaintiff that the bank could not take it outright, but might take it as additional security. It cannot reasonably be inferred even from plaintiff's own testimony that defendant regarded the indebtedness as subsisting and contemplated the Paradise property as additional security for that indebtedness rather than for the option price. Plaintiff relies upon the testimony of his banker, Mr. Brown, for support for his contention. Brown merely testified, however, that he was present during the first part of the conversation of September 22nd, but left before its conclusion; that respondent asked for another extension of time; that Kennedy replied that back-interest would have to be paid up "before any discussion of that sort"; that there was some discussion as to whether the deed of trust covered all of the property to which plaintiff had title, and that "just as I left they had sent for the certificate or for the deed of trust." There is nothing in this testimony to suggest that defendant agreed to reduce the indebtedness and accept the deed as security for the lower amount.

The exception in the title policy of "any rights of C. W. Beeler who is in possession" is invoked to uphold the contention that the deed was simply a mortgage. It was defendant's lease and option, however, that necessitated this exception. Before the transaction was closed, defendant was advised by Mr. McGlyn, an officer of the Tehama County Title Company, that plaintiff's affidavit put an end to his interest in the property. Plaintiff replied that he had an option. McGlyn later advised the Title Insurance and Guarantee Company by telephone that defendant had a lease and option and would remain in possession of the property, and that company thereupon obtained defendant's confirmation of these facts and its consent to the exception in the title policy.

There is no support for plaintiff's contention in the discussion regarding the sixty-dollar internal revenue stamp. The stamp was already on the deed and the title company had been instructed to bill defendant for its cost so there is no reason why McGlyn should have asked plaintiff whether he refused to put the stamp on. In any event whatever views plaintiff may have expressed to McGlyn about the deed's being merely a means of refinancing, there is no claim that he communicated his views to defendant. See Brant v. California Dairies, Inc., 4 Cal.2d 128, 48 P.2d 13.

Plaintiff relies heavily upon the finding of the trial court that when the deed in question was executed, the property had a market value of more than $135,000, and a rental value of more than $7,500, figures that substantially exceeded the option price and the rental fixed in the lease. Such an excess in conjunction with other circumstances is often indicative of a security transaction, for the greater the valuation in relation to the indebtedness, the more unlikely the owner is to sell the property to cancel the indebtedness. In this case, however, the parties themselves, whose valuations alone are pertinent (Tetenman v. Epstein, 66 Cal.App. 745, 226 P. 966), did not attach so high a value to the property. Even if they had, it is inconceivable that the bank would voluntarily have reduced an indebtedness so amply secured, and relinquished, to its own disadvantage, a deed of trust for such a mortgage. See Robinson v. Barnard, 5 Cal.App.2d 396, 400, 42 P.2d 711.

The inference that the bank intended to keep the indebtedness alive when it neglected to surrender the cancelled notes is not reasonable, for the bank not only marked the large note cancelled and entered payment on its books, and wrote off the smaller note as a loss, but insisted upon and received plaintiff's affidavit that the deed was executed in full satisfaction of the indebtedness, and recorded the reconveyance reciting full satisfaction of the indebtedness. Once these steps were taken the bank was powerless to enforce payment of the notes.

There is nothing in the evidence of conduct subsequent to the transaction to establish that the deed was taken as security rather than in satisfaction of the indebtedness, or that plaintiff had anything more than a lease and an option. Plaintiff's repair of the fences and removal of the walnut trees following the flood of the Sacramento River in 1937 do not signify that the bank regarded him as the owner of the property. He was bound by the terms of his lease to repair the fences, and he removed the walnut trees only after obtaining defendant's consent. Even if the improvements were more extensive than the lease required they do not signify ownership, for they would redound to the advantage of the plaintiff if he exercised the option. The evidence of the leases by the plaintiff likewise fails to establish him as the owner of the property, for his lease from the bank permitted him to make subleases, and it was a matter of indifference to the bank whether the instruments executed by the plaintiff and his lessees took the form of leases rather than subleases.

Even if one assumes that the deed was given as security there is no basis for the holding that the amount of the indebtedness secured was $60,000 and not $81,232.90, the amount due when the deed was executed. The supposed agreement to release defendant from a liability of over $21,000 was clearly without consideration and is unenforceable. Scheeline v. Moshier, 172 Cal. 565, 158 P. 222; see 6 Cal.Jur. 179. If the deed was given merely as security it represented less than defendant already had. The deed of trust contained the usual power of sale and other provisions for defendant's protection and was not subject to the 1933 amendments restricting the right to judgment for a deficiency. Cal.Civ. Code, sec. 2924½; Cal.Code Civ.Proc. sec. 580a. Regarded as security, the deed was less advantageous to defendant, less burdensome to plaintiff. It conferred no power of sale and would have to be foreclosed by court proceedings, thereby leaving plaintiff with a right to redeem. It contained no provisions for defendant's protection and was subject to the 1933 amendments. As security, therefore, the deed, far from being of advantage to the defendant was of advantage to plaintiff. Since the alleged agreement was oral, and it appeared upon the face of the complaint that there was no consideration, a special plea by defendant of lack of consideration was unnecessary. Acheson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 Cal. 641, 31 P. 583; see 2 Cal.Jur. 257.

EDMONDS, J., concurred.

Rehearing granted; CARTER, J., not participating.

22 Cal.2d 642

PEOPLE v. DAIL et al.

Cr. 4360.

Supreme Court of California.

Aug. 3, 1943.

1. Criminal law ⇨1144(13)

On appeal from judgment of conviction, reviewing court must view evidence in light most favorable to the state.

2. Conspiracy ⇨47

Evidence held sufficient to support convictions of conspiracy to commit assaults and extortion by use of force and fear in connection with activities of a labor union.

3. Criminal law ⇨1186(4)

In a close case, where evidence is sharply conflicting, substantial and serious errors which were vital to defendant and may have resulted in miscarriage of justice must be regarded as prejudicial and grounds for reversal of conviction. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

4. Assault and battery ⇨96(1)
Conspiracy ⇨48
Threats ⇨8

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit assaults and extortion and commission of such offenses in connection with labor union's activities, instructions on picketing and conspiracy were erroneous as advising jury that all concerted activities by combination of workmen are illegal.

5. Constitutional law ⇨90

The right to picket peacefully and truthfully is guaranteed by Constitution as incident of "freedom of speech".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Freedom of Speech".

6. Criminal law ⇨1172(1)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit and commission of assaults and extortion in connection with labor union's activities, erroneous instructions, advising jury that all concerted activities by combination of workmen are illegal, were not without prejudice to defendants as unrelated to facts developed at trial and hence without influence on jury, in view of evidence of strikes and picketing in connection with union's efforts to obtain new members.

7. Criminal law ⇨780(3)

An instruction to jury that fact that accomplice witness for state had entered plea of guilty to one count of indictment should not discredit his testimony was erroneous. Code Civ.Proc. § 2051.

8. Witnesses ⇨345(1)

A plea of guilty of felony is equivalent to proof of "conviction" thereof within statute authorizing impeachment of witness by showing his prior conviction of felony. Code Civ.Proc. § 2051.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Conviction".

9. Criminal law 🔑780(3)

An instruction that credibility of accomplice witness for state must be judged by same standard as that of other witnesses was erroneous as contrary to statutory provision that accomplice's testimony should be viewed with distrust. Code Civ.Proc. § 2061, subd. 4.

10. Criminal law 🔑823(12)

Error in instruction that accomplice witness' credibility must be judged by same standard as that of other witnesses was not cured by giving of instruction stating statutory rule that accomplice's testimony should be viewed with distrust, as second instruction created serious conflict. Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 4.

11. Criminal law 🔑508(9)

The fact that witness for state was defendant's accomplice in commission of crime charged goes to such witness' credibility and weight of his testimony.

12. Criminal law 🔑732
Trial 🔑183

The statute authorizing trial court to instruct jury that accomplice's testimony should be viewed with distrust is not unconstitutional as authorizing charge to jury on matters of fact, especially in view of validity of statute requiring corroboration of accomplices' testimony. Code Civ.Proc. § 2061, subd. 4; Pen.Code, § 1111; Const. art. 6, § 19.

13. Criminal law 🔑780(3)

In case involving accomplice's testimony, defendant is entitled to cautionary instruction to view such testimony with distrust, particularly as statute directs giving of such instruction. Code Civ.Proc. § 2061, subd. 4.

14. Criminal law 🔑660

An erroneous instruction on law, given jury by trial court while commenting on evidence, is subject to challenge on same grounds as if included among formal instructions, and it cannot be deemed justifiable comment on evidence and witness' credibility.

15. Criminal law 🔑656(1)

While trial court is not required to comment on all evidence, its comment thereon should be temperately and fairly made.

16. Criminal law 🔑656(1)

Trial courts should be cautious in exercise of their power to comment on evidence, with view to protecting defendant's rights.

17. Criminal law 🔑656(5)

A trial court's comments that accomplices' testimony for state was given in calm and dispassionate manner, that their answers were well considered, and that there was no evidence of animosity toward defendant on face of accomplices' testimony or in their demeanor on witness stand, held improper as accentuating and emphasizing error in instructions that fact that one of such witnesses entered plea of guilty to one count of indictment should not discredit his testimony and that accomplices' credibility must be judged by same standard as that of other witnesses. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 2051, 2061, subd. 4.

18. Criminal law 🔑762(3)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit assaults and extortion in connection with labor union's activities, trial court's statement to jury that one defendant's admission on witness stand of his control of union's affairs and consequent responsibility for such activities warranted his conviction, if other defendants' activities amounted to criminal offenses, was erroneous as incorrect statement of fact.

19. Conspiracy 🔑48

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit assaults and extortion in connection with labor union's activities, trial court's statement to jury that it was warranted in finding one defendant, who admitted his control of union's affairs, guilty of criminal offenses committed by other defendants, was improper as amounting to erroneous instruction to find such defendant guilty if jury found any of other defendants guilty on any of several charges in indictment, even if jury failed to find conspiracy between him and any other defendants to commit assaults.

20. Criminal law 🔑762(3)

The trial court, under guise of comments on evidence, may not properly control jury's verdicts by direction either directly or impliedly.

21. Criminal law 🔑1186(4)

In considering effect of constitutional provision barring reversal of conviction for errors not resulting in miscarriage of justice, Supreme Court is not substituted for jury and cannot determine as original inquiry question of defendant's guilt or innocence. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

22. Criminal law 🔑1186(4)

Whether error resulted in miscarriage of justice, as required to warrant reversal of conviction, presents law question on record before Supreme Court, which must declare, as matter of law, whether error affected substantial rights of parties complaining thereof and cannot determine evidentiary value of testimony or where preponderance of evidence lies. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

23. Criminal law 🔑1070

All proceedings in criminal cause permanently abated as to a defendant who died pending his appeal from conviction, so as to require dismissal of such appeal.

EDMONDS, J., dissenting in part; CURTIS and SHENK, JJ., dissenting.

◆

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clement D. Nye, Judge.

Harry W. Dail and Dexter L. Lewis were convicted of conspiracy to commit assaults and extortion in connection with a labor union's activities, and one Belanger and one Copelan were convicted of simple assault in connection with such activities, and they appeal.

Appeal of defendant Dail dismissed and judgments reversed as to the other appellants.

Prior opinion, Cal.App., 111 P.2d 723.

Paul Blackwood, Frank Sturgis, Frank Desimone, and Otto Christensen, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., Eugene M. Elson and Frank Richards, Deputies Atty. Gen., and Buron Fitts, Dist. Atty., and John Barnes, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

In an indictment containing seven counts, the defendants were charged with offenses connected with the activities of a labor union in and about the city of Los Angeles.

Count one charged conspiracy to commit assaults by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury and to commit extortion by obtaining property of persons with their consent induced by the wrongful use of force and fear. Five other counts charged certain defendants with having assaulted persons by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury, and the remaining count charged defendants with the crime of extortion.

Defendant Burris became a witness for the State and all charges against him were dismissed. At the commencement of the trial, defendant McKnight changed his plea of not guilty to guilty to count one. The other charges against him were dismissed and he became a witness for the State. Defendants Dail and Lewis were acquitted on all counts except the first, charging conspiracy. Defendants Belanger and Copelan were acquitted on all counts except two and three, under which they were convicted of simple assault, a misdemeanor. The remaining defendants were acquitted on all counts. Dail, Lewis, Copelan and Belanger appealed from the judgments and orders denying a new trial. Dail has since died and his appeal must therefore be dismissed.

Appellants contend that the verdicts and judgments are without support in the evidence and are based on accomplice testimony which was impeached. They also contend that the court committed prejudicial error in giving and refusing instructions and in commenting on the evidence at the conclusion of the trial.

During the period involved here, rival unions representing the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations were engaged in a struggle to organize truck drivers on the Pacific Coast and bring them within their respective unions. The campaign for membership was hotly contested by the opposing groups and in many instances places of business employing members of a rival union were picketed. At this time Lewis was acting president of Local 208 of the Teamsters' Union (an affiliate of the A. F. of L.) in Los Angeles. Dail was a national officer of the union, assigned to advise and assist local unions in Southern California. As part of a program to strengthen the union and increase its membership, Local 208 employed men to work as "checkers" and "organizers" whose duties were to collect dues and obtain new members. They received their instructions from Lewis and reported back to him.

The charges in this case are related to the organizational activities of Local 208 and were based on assaults alleged to have been authorized by Lewis and committed by the defendant checkers and organizers, among whom were Belanger, Copelan, McKnight and Burris. As before stated, although five charges of assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury were listed in the indictment, the jury found only two instances (counts two and three) of the commission of simple assault by Copelan and Belanger. The evidence relating to those two counts will be discussed later.

In support of the conspiracy charge upon which Lewis was convicted the prosecution called as witnesses the defendants McKnight and Burris and two other men, Williams and Johnson, all of whom were designated as accomplices by the trial court in its instructions. McKnight, against whom a criminal charge (not connected with union activities) was then pending in the superior court, testified that Lewis told him his duties were to try to get nonunion men to join the union and if they "got tough" to use his own judgment. He testified further that he aided in "dumping" or "beating up" several persons, and that on one occasion Lewis criticized him for not having taken part in a fight between another checker and a truck driver who had been asked to join the union. He also testified that he had seen certain other defendants, including Belanger and Copelan, engaged in fighting nonunion truck drivers and members of the C.I.O. In his testimony Lewis denied that he ever advocated or authorized the use of force and stated that he instructed the checkers and organizers working for Local 208 not to use violence at any time. He testified that the only altercation of which he had personal knowledge was the Calkins-Copelan incident (hereafter referred to) and that the only reports he received of fights were in connection with occasions when "the C.I.O. had attacked some of these defendants." Other witnesses corroborated the testimony of Lewis that he had warned members of the union against the use of violence.

McKnight, who was dismissed from the union on charges preferred by Lewis, admitted on cross-examination that he had been "mad at him since." Shortly after the indictment, McKnight was questioned, and answered as follows:

"Q. So you didn't talk to * * * Lewis * * * at all about any of these fights at any time? A. No.

"Q. In other words, all of your fights resulted from some particular occasion at the particular time? A. That is right. * * *

"Q. You weren't out looking for a fight? A. That is right. * * *

"Q. You were not under orders to go out and beat anybody up? A. No."

It was also brought out on cross-examination of McKnight that he left Los Angeles at approximately the time the other defendants were arrested. He was apprehended in Kansas City and admitted that while he was there he had sent a telegram to a Los Angeles newspaper in which he stated, "* * * Would you be interested in a story that would convict Harry Dail and Dexter L. Lewis and others, and if so what price for same? Must be reimbursed for same because I will be a fugitive from justice tomorrow morning at 9:30." McKnight further admitted sending a postal card to Lewis in which he said, "I am afraid you are going to be sorry for not accepting those telephone charges. * * * You have made a rat out of me. I will make just as good a rat as I did a union man."

The accomplice Burris testified for the prosecution that on several occasions he had received orders from Lewis to "go out and beat people up"; that in November, 1937, he made a trip to Delano in an automobile with the acquitted defendants King and O'Brien; that later that night they followed the automobile of a man who had spoken at a meeting in Delano and when they passed the other car he, Burris, threw a five-pound rock through its windshield. King and O'Brien denied that any such incident ever took place. Burris was also dismissed from the union on charges preferred by Lewis and shortly thereafter wrote letters to union members and officials which revealed a feeling of bitterness and animosity towards Lewis. There was also testimony that Burris had stated he had "engineered the break between the Teamsters Union in Wilmington and Local 208" and that it "was his ambition to become head of Local 208. * * *"

The two accomplices, Williams and Johnson, testified they had received instructions from Lewis that "there were men that had to be 'dumped' * * * men who went through picket lines, C.I.O.'s and nonunion men," and that they had participated in altercations and had struck persons while working as organizers for the Teamsters' Union. Lewis testified that these men were never employed by Local 208, and denied that he ever gave them instructions. It appears they had done some work for other locals and that they were frequently around Local 208.

In addition to the testimony of accomplices the prosecution introduced documentary evidence consisting of teletype messages and memoranda exchanged between Lewis and Dail with reference to the business of the union and labor conditions generally in the Los Angeles area. These messages and memoranda contained no reference to acts of violence and were apparently introduced in evidence for the purpose of showing the relationship between Dail and Lewis and Local 208. There was also introduced in evidence an expense item filed by one of the employees covering meals for members of a "goon squad." It appears that a check was issued by Lewis covering this item. In this connection Lewis stated, and his testimony was corroborated by other witnesses, that all expense items were first submitted to the treasurer for approval and the checks were then made out by a clerk and were presented to Lewis for signature without any accompanying memoranda, and that the original expense slips and office vouchers were not attached to the checks until they were canceled and returned to the office.

The evidence on which Copelan and Belanger were convicted of simple assault is also conflicting. As to count two, the evidence shows that the prosecuting witness Calkins, a member of Local 208, had been in arrears in his dues for several months prior to October 29, 1937, and that contrary to union regulations he had been driving a truck for a company operating as a union shop. Complaint also had been made that he had attempted to compel truck drivers to patronize a cafe owned by his wife. On the day of the assault alleged in count two, Copelan, Belanger and Lewis were at the Evans Freight Lines in Los Angeles where Calkins was employed. Calkins testified that while he was talking to Lewis he was struck by Copelan, and that in the scuffle that followed Belanger joined Copelan in attacking him. Other prosecution witnesses testified to having seen Copelan and Belanger fighting or scuffling with Calkins. Copelan claimed he and Calkins had an argument about the latter being in arrears in his dues and that Calkins threatened to strike him, whereupon they exchanged blows. Belanger claimed he did not enter the affray until Calkins picked up a dating stamp and raised it above his head and that he then struck Calkins to cause him to let go of the stamp. Other defense witnesses corroborated the testimony of Copelan and Belanger. Lewis testified he had left the loading dock prior to the affray, and that when it was called to his attention he ordered Belanger to stop the fight.

As to count three, the evidence shows that on November 3, 1937, the prosecuting witness Norman Smith was seated in a truck near the loading platform of the Arrowhead Freight Lines, where he was employed. Belanger asked Smith to let him see his union card. Smith said he had none because he owned his own truck, and he invited Belanger to check the registration certificate on the steering wheel. According to Smith, Belanger then opened the door of the truck and hit him, and he put his feet in Belanger's stomach and pushed him away and alighted from the truck. Smith says he was then attacked by Belanger and two or three men. Belanger testified that as he opened the truck door to look at the registration card on the steering wheel Smith kicked him in the stomach and knocked him down. According to Belanger, Smith then got out of the truck and was about to strike him again and he hit Smith in the eye. The accomplice Burris and another prosecution witness testified that Copelan struck Smith after the latter had been hit by Belanger. Copelan, on the other hand, denied taking any part in the affray, claiming he was upstairs in an office when it took place. Several witnesses testified that shortly after the fight Smith attempted to have Belanger arrested, claiming the latter had "hit him in the eye," but made no statement about having been struck by Copelan or anyone else.

[1-3] As has been shown, the evidence relating to all three counts is conflicting. The evidence as to the first count was based largely upon the testimony of accomplices who were impeached. The reviewing court is bound, however, to view the evidence in the light most favorable to the respondent, and applying this well established principle to the record in this case, we must hold that the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict. It is also true, however, that in a close case where the evidence is sharply conflicting, substantial and serious errors vital to defendant that may have resulted in a miscarriage of justice must be regarded as prejudicial and grounds for reversal. People v. Silver, 16 Cal.2d 714, 723, 108 P.2d 4.

[4-6] We turn now to a consideration of the appellants' contentions that the trial court committed prejudicial error in giving instructions and in commenting on the evidence. Some of the instructions claimed to be erroneous are as follows:

(1) "* * * an agreement by persons to picket a place of business and to use in picketing large numbers of pickets for the purpose of intimidating or threatening the employers or employees in such place of business, * * * constitutes unlawful picketing, and the same is true of a boycott carried on by such means";

(2) "* * * intimidation includes persuasion by or on behalf of a combination of persons resulting in coercion of the will by mere force of numbers";

(3) "* * * even a simple request to do or not to do a thing made by one or more of a body of persons under circumstances calculated to convey a threatening intimidation, with a design to hinder or obstruct workmen, is unlawful intimidation, and is not less obnoxious than the use of physical force for the same purpose";

(4) "* * * any action having in it the element of intimidation or coercion, or abuse, physical or verbal, or of invasion of rights of privacy, when not performed under sanctions of law or those lawfully empowered to enforce the law, is unlawful; * * *"

(5) "* * * every act of speech, of gesture, or of conduct which any fair-minded man may reasonably judge to be intended to convey insult, threat, or annoyance to another, or to work * * * abuse upon him, is unlawful, and any group of men pursuing by agreement such unlawful conduct when engaged in the pursuing of an act lawful in itself fall within the definition of a conspiracy by performing a lawful act in an unlawful manner."

These instructions erroneously advised the jury that all concerted activities by combinations of workmen are illegal. The rule stated therein is plainly erroneous and contrary to that announced by this court in Shafer v. Registered Pharmacists Union, 16 Cal.2d 379, 106 P.2d 403, and McKay v. Retail Automobile Salesmen's Local Union No. 1067, 16 Cal.2d 311, 106 P.2d 373. The right to picket peacefully and truthfully is guaranteed by the Constitution as an incident of freedom of speech. Carlson v. California, 310 U.S. 106, 60 S.Ct. 746, 84 L.Ed. 1104; Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 60 S.Ct. 736, 84 L.Ed. 1093; A. F. of L. v. Swing, 312 U.S. 321, 325, 61 S.Ct. 568, 85 L.Ed. 855; Hotel, etc., Employees' Local v. Wisconsin Rel. Board, 315 U.S. 437, 62 S.Ct. 706, 86 L.Ed. 946. It cannot be said that the instructions were unrelated to the facts developed at the trial and therefore without influence upon the jury, as urged by respondent. Count one of the indictment (under which Lewis was convicted) charged a conspiracy "to commit assaults * * * and * * * to obtain property of other persons * * * with consent of said other persons which was induced by the wrongful use of force and fear," while counts two and three (under which Copelan and Belanger were convicted) charged assaults "connected in [their] commission with Count I." Labor controversy, jurisdictional disputes and organizational activities of rival unions were the background and framework of the charges upon which the appellants were convicted.

The record contains many references to strikes and picketing in connection with the efforts of Local 208 to obtain new members and unionize truck drivers. The efforts were directly related to the offenses charged and the erroneous instructions may have misled the jury to conclude that appellants were guilty because they had engaged in activities wrongfully characterized therein as unlawful.

[7, 8] It is further urged by appellants that the court in commenting on the evidence erroneously instructed the jury on matters of law as follows: (1) that the fact that the accomplice witness McKnight pleaded guilty to one count of the indictment should not discredit his testimony; (2) that the credibility of the accomplice witnesses was to be judged by the same standard as that of other witnesses. After commenting upon the testimony of the accomplice witnesses McKnight and Burris, the court instructed the jury as follows: "And in this connection, ladies and gentlemen, the credibility of all of these witnesses is to be judged by you by the same standard as that of any other witness. The fact that the witness McKnight has entered a plea of guilty to one count of the indictment or that all charges against the witness Burris have been dismissed by the Court on motion of the District Attorney, standing alone, should not discredit these witnesses or their testimony, unless, in addition thereto, there is something about their testimony or their manner of testifying or their interest in the case, or their bias or prejudice against one or any or all of the defendants which casts suspicion upon it in your minds. In the Court's opinion the testimony of the witnesses McKnight and Burris was given in a calm and dispassionate manner; their answers were well considered, and on the face of their testimony and in their demeanor upon the witness stand, there was no evidence of animosity."

It was clearly error for the court to instruct the jury that the fact that the witness McKnight had entered a plea of guilty to one count of the indictment (a felony) should not discredit his testimony. A witness may be impeached by showing a prior conviction of felony Code Civ.Proc. § 2051. For impeachment purposes, a plea of guilty is equivalent to proof of conviction. People v. Jacobs, 73 Cal.App. 334, 351, 238 P. 770; 27 Cal.Jur. 142. The trial court in effect advised the jury that as a matter of law McKnight's plea of guilty, which was entered in the presence of the jury, was not to be regarded as tending to impeach him, and this was an incorrect statement of the law.

[9, 10] A further claim of error is that the court instructed the jury that the credibility of accomplice witnesses is to be judged by the same standard as that of other witnesses. This instruction was in direct opposition to the statutory provision that the testimony of an accomplice should be viewed with distrust. (Code Civ. Proc. sec. 2061, subd. 4). The giving of a formal instruction which stated the statutory rule did not cure the error, but instead created a serious conflict, which would normally have the effect of misleading the jury. It must be remembered that the strongest witnesses for the prosecution were the accomplices, and without their testimony the conviction could hardly have been possible. This being so, it was of the utmost importance that the jury be correctly advised as to the standards by which such testimony was to be weighed. Instead, the jury was misdirected by a clear and specific statement which in effect nullified the previous formal instruction, and no attempt was made to relate the two or explain the inconsistency. The result must inevitably have been a confusion in the jurors' minds on a matter vital to the judgment. Inconsistent instructions have frequently been held to constitute reversible error where it was impossible to tell which of the conflicting rules was followed by the jury. See for example: Wells v. Lloyd, 21 Cal.2d 452, 457, 132 P.2d 471; Jolley v. Clemens, 28 Cal.App.2d 55, 73, 82 P.2d 51; Soda v. Marriott, 118 Cal.App. 635, 643, 5 P.2d 675; 8 Cal.Jur. 633.

[11] The error was further emphasized here by reason of the fact that the erroneous instruction was given by the court in connection with its comments made on the testimony of the accomplices. The fact that a person is an accomplice in the commission of a crime goes to his credibility as a witness and to the weight of his testimony. In discussing the effect and weight of such testimony state and federal courts have on numerous occasions emphasized its questionable character. People v. Coffey, 161 Cal. 433, 119 P. 901, 39 L.R.A.,N.S., 704; People v. Braun, 31 Cal.App.2d 593, 603, 88 P.2d 728; People v. Ross, 46 Cal.App.2d 385, 397, 116 P.2d 81; Arnold v. United States, 10 Cir., 94 F.2d 499; Craig v. United States, 9 Cir., 81 F.2d 816, 827; Shields v. United States, 3 Cir., 17 F.2d 66, 68. In Crawford v. United States, 212 U.S. 183, 204, 29 S.Ct. 260, 268, 53 L.Ed. 465, the Supreme Court of the United States said with reference to the testimony of an accomplice witness that "the evidence of such a witness ought to be received with suspicion, and with the very greatest care and caution, and ought not to be passed upon by the jury under the same rules governing other and apparently credible witnesses." In 20 Am.Jur. 1087 it is said: "The facts that the testimony of accomplices is not of the most satisfactory character and that it is attended with serious infirmities are matters recognized by the decisions and are too obvious and well understood to call for exposition. Such considerations go to the credibility of the evidence, and the law requires that such testimony be closely scrutinized and accepted with caution. Indeed, it has long been the custom, both in England and in the United States, for the court not only to caution the jury as to the danger of acting upon the unsupported testimony of an accomplice, but to advise them not to convict in the absence of some corroborating evidence." In People v. Coffey, 161 Cal. 433, at page 438, 119 P. 901, at page 903, 39 L.R.A.,N.S., 704, the court said that at common law it was recognized that "evidence of an accomplice, coming from a tainted source, the witness being, first, an infamous man, from his own confession of guilt, and, second, a man usually testifying in the hope of favor or the expectation of immunity, was not entitled to the same consideration as the evidence of a clean man, free from infamy. Hence it soon became the practice of the common-law judges, in the wide latitude allowed to them in the instruction of their juries, to advise the latter that the testimony of an accomplice, for the reasons indicated, was to be viewed with care, caution, and suspicion (see Code Civ.Proc., § 2061), that the accomplice stood before them as a witness entitled to little credit and that the surest way of establishing his credit in their eyes was for them to note whether his testimony was corroborated in any material matter by independent evidence, and that if it were so corroborated they might put faith in all that the accomplice had said. * * *" Section 2061, subdivision 4, was, in its present form, a part of the Code of Civil Procedure when it was enacted in 1872, and it was apparently an attempt to codify the common law.

[12] The prosecution in support of the contention that the court here correctly stated that the credibility of accomplice witnesses was to be judged by the same standard as that of any other witness relies upon Hirshfeld v. Dana, 193 Cal. 142, 160, 223 P. 451. It was there held that subdivision 4 of section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure, authorizing the trial court to instruct the jury that "the testimony of an accomplice ought to be viewed with distrust * * *" is unconstitutional, because it charges the jury on matters of fact, contrary to the provisions of article VI, section 19, of the state Constitution (as it then read). See, also, People v. Northcott, 209 Cal. 639, 653, 289 P. 634, 70 A.L.R. 806. Several decisions of this court rendered prior to the Hirshfeld case indicate that the court was not then in accord on the question whether subdivision 4 of section 2061 was unconstitutional. See People v. Ruiz, 144 Cal. 251, 77 P. 907; People v. Moran, 144 Cal. 48, 63, 77 P. 777; People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 375, 77 P. 169; see, also, People v. Silva, 121 Cal. 668, 670, 54 P. 146. Chief Justice Beatty expressed the minority view in People v. Ruiz, supra, 144 Cal. at page 255, 77 P. at page 909, as follows: "The Legislature has the undoubted power to declare what shall not be competent evidence. In the exercise of this power, it might have excluded absolutely the evidence of an accomplice, or the evidence of verbal admissions of a party. Having the power to exclude altogether, it has the power to admit subject to conditions or qualifications; and clause 4 merely states the qualification subject to which this kind of testimony is admissible—the condition upon which it is allowed to go to the jury at all."

The requirement of section 1111 of the Penal Code that accomplice testimony must be corroborated is a convincing indication of the legislative intent and policy that such evidence is to be regarded as untrustworthy and not to be believed unless fortified by other evidence tending to connect a defendant with the commission of the offense charged. The power of the Legislature so to provide is not questioned and if it may thus stigmatize accomplice testimony and completely deny it credence unless corroborated, no valid reason exists why the Legislature may not declare, as it has done in subdivision 4 of section 2061, that the jury is to be instructed to view such accomplice testimony with distrust. The difference is merely one of degree. To require such an instruction on proper occasions is not to charge the jury upon matters of fact. It merely serves to state the legislative condition upon which the jury is permitted to hear that class of evidence.

[13] The somewhat analogous situation in People v. Lucas, 16 Cal.2d 178, 182, 105 P.2d 102, 103, 130 A.L.R. 1485, presented the question whether the defendant was entitled to a cautionary instruction in a sex case to the effect that "such a charge is easily made and difficult to disprove for which reason the testimony of the prosecuting witness should be examined with caution." This court there said, "the objection * * * to such an instruction, that it contains 'statements of fact, not of law,' would appear to have spent much of its force in view of the recent amendment to section 19 of article VI of the Constitution authorizing a trial court to comment on the facts. * * *" See, also, People v. Stangler, 18 Cal.2d 688, 694, 117 P.2d 321; People v. Roberts, 50 Cal.App.2d 558, 569, 123 P.2d 628. If in a case of that type a defendant is entitled to a cautionary instruction, by analogy he is entitled to a cautionary instruction in a case involving the testimony of an accomplice, particularly when, as here, the statute directs that such an instruction be given.

It has been suggested that the 1934 amendment to section 19 of article VI of the Constitution referred to in the Lucas case cannot validate or revive section 2061, subdivision 4, supra, if it were void when enacted. This does not, however, state the problem before us. We are not required to revive a statute previously declared unconstitutional for lack of constitutional authority. The real question is whether the statute was in fact void, as held in the Hirshfeld case. In our considered opinion the Hirshfeld case was based upon a misconception, and to the extent that it purported to make improper the ordinary cautionary instructions on doubtful evidence it must be overruled. The statute was never void, under our present view, and needs no "revival." The subject of the statute—a rule of procedure—involves no problems of retroactive effect which occasionally arise when a decision declaring unconstitutionality is overruled. (See e.g., Rottschaefer on Constitutional Law (1939) 37; (1937) 37 Col.L.Rev. 1017.) The result of our present decision is that such instructions are necessary in a proper case and the failure so to instruct may be reversible error. See, also, People v. Weitzman, 362 Ill. 11, 198 N.E. 711, 716.

[14] For these reasons, therefore, it was error for the trial court under the guise of comment to instruct the jury, contrary to the statute, that the credibility of accomplice witnesses "is to be judged * * * by the same standard as that of any other witness." An erroneous instruction on the law given to the jury by the trial court while "commenting" on the evidence is subject to challenge on the same grounds as when included among the formal instructions. As said in People v. Costello, 21 Cal.2d 760, 765, 135 P.2d 164, an erroneous instruction upon the law cannot be deemed a justifiable comment on the evidence and credibility of a witness.

[15-17] The errors in the instructions concerning the credibility of accomplice witnesses were accentuated by the comments of the trial judge concerning the testimony of accomplices McKnight and Burris. The court told the jury that in its opinion their testimony was given "in a calm and dispassionate manner"; that their answers were "well considered"; and that "on the face of their testimony and in their demeanor upon the witness stand, there was no evidence of animosity." The court made no reference to the facts that after charges were preferred by Lewis both of these witnesses were dismissed from the union, that McKnight stated under oath that he had been "mad at him since," and that there was presented in evidence a letter written by Burris containing inflammatory accusations and embittered statements against Lewis. By such one-sided comment the court drew the attention of the jury to an asserted lack of animosity toward the defendants observable in the accomplices while testifying, without mentioning the undisputed evidence that such animosity did exist. The court also in commenting upon the conflicting statements made by the accomplice McKnight, stated to the jury that "* * * the witness McKnight admits he told an entirely different story * * * in the statement he gave shortly after the indictment was returned than the story he told you from the witness stand. * * * One circumstance you are entitled to take into consideration is the fact that he testified that at the time of his (first) statement * * * he was preparing a defense to the charges, and he had no intention of pleading guilty to any of the charges, as he subsequently did." This may have served to cast doubt on the credibility of McKnight's previous statements favorable to defendants and to invest with veracity unfavorable statements made while testifying. The trial court made slight, if any, comment on the defense evidence, but it indicated that the accomplice testimony was entitled to full credence in spite of the statutory requirement that it be viewed with distrust, and despite the fact that it was thoroughly impeached. While a trial court is not necessarily required to comment on all of the evidence, nevertheless its comment should be "temperately and fairly made. * * * Trial courts should * * * be cautious in their exercise of this power (of comment) with a view to protecting the rights of defendants." People v. DeMoss, 4 Cal.2d 469, 477, 50 P.2d 1031, 1034. In the present case, however, the quoted comments standing alone would not require a reversal, but when considered in connection with the accompanying erroneous instructions relative to the credibility of accomplice witnesses they serve to accentuate and emphasize the error in those instructions.

[18-20] The trial court also stated to the jury that "The defendants Lewis and Pitts (an aquitted defendant) have admitted to you from the witness stand their activities and control of the affairs of the organization and their consequent responsibility therefor. It is therefore not necessary for you to determine that responsibility since it stands admitted, and should you find that the acts or activities of any of the other defendants constituted or amounted to criminal offenses, you would be warranted in finding the defendants Lewis and Pitts equally guilty of such offense or offenses." Lewis admitted only that by virtue of his position he had control of the affairs of the organization but not that he was responsible for the unauthorized conduct of its members. As before stated, Lewis testified that he had never advocated the use of violence and had admonished the men against its use and his testimony in this regard was corroborated by others. The admission of control of the organization and responsibility for its affairs does not, of course, constitute an admission that a conspiracy existed or that violence was advocated. It was therefore an incorrect statement of fact for the court to tell the jury that Lewis had admitted "responsibility therefor." Furthermore, the latter part of the quoted statement amounted to an erroneous instruction to the jury on the law to find Lewis guilty if it found any of the other defendants guilty on any of the several charges contained in the indictment. Under this improper instruction the jury was told it could find Lewis guilty on any of the several charges even though it should fail to find the existence of a conspiracy between him and any of the other defendants to commit assaults. Such erroneous instruction served to deprive Lewis of the right to have the jury consider his individual criminal responsibility. The trial court, under the guise of comment, may not properly control the verdicts by a direction either directly or impliedly made. People v. DeMoss, supra, 4 Cal.2d at page 477, 50 P.2d 1031; People v. Ottey, supra, 5 Cal.2d 714, 729, 56 P.2d 193. People v. Eudy, 12 Cal.2d 41, 47, 82 P.2d 359, 362, is cited by the prosecution to the effect that a trial court may express its opinion as to the guilt or innocence of a defendant. The qualification is there added, however, "provided the province of the jury is not invaded." The court here incorrectly stated the facts, erroneously declared the law and improperly invaded the province of the jury.

[21, 22] It thus appears that the court misdirected the jury on matters of vital importance to the defendants. We have heretofore pointed out that the evidence is in substantial conflict, and that any serious error could under these circumstances have a prejudicial effect. The record in this case consists of approximately 6,545 pages. Much of the evidence is immaterial since it relates to three of the counts charging assaults by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury of which defendants were acquitted. Although we have made a careful examination of the entire cause we have set forth in this opinion only so much of the evidence as appears necessary to show that it was sufficient to support the judgment, but was in substantial conflict. In considering the effect of article VI, section 4½ of the Constitution, "We are not substituted for the jury. We are not to determine, as an original inquiry, the question of the defendant's guilt or innocence." People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 55, 66, 130 P. 1042, 1046; see, also, People v. Roe, 189 Cal. 548, 561, 209 P. 560. As stated in Tupman v. Haberkern, 208 Cal. 256, 263, 280 P. 970, 973, "Whether the error found to be present 'has resulted in a miscarriage of justice' presents a question of law on the record before the court, and the purpose of the section [4½] was to require the court to declare as matter of law whether the error has affected the substantial rights of the party complaining against it, and not for the purpose of determining the evidentiary value of the testimony or where the preponderance of the evidence lies."

The conclusion is inescapable that the errors in this case resulted in a miscarriage of justice within the meaning of article VI, section 4½ of the California Constitution.

[23] All proceedings in this cause have permanently abated as to Dail by reason of his death pending appeal and the superior court is directed to enter its order to that effect. People v. St. Maurice, 166 Cal. 201, 202, 135 P. 952; People v. Alexander, 101 Cal.App. 394, 396, 281 P. 697. The judgments and orders denying new trials are, and each is, reversed as to appellants Lewis, Copelan and Belanger.

CARTER, TRAYNOR, and SCHAUER, JJ., concurred.

EDMONDS, Justice (concurring and dissenting).

It is conceded by all members of this court that the evidence before the jury was sufficient to support a verdict of guilty against the four appealing defendants. But, as I read the record, the character of the evidence supporting the convictions differs as to Dail and Lewis, who were found guilty of conspiracy, and as to Copelan and Belanger, who were found guilty of assault.

The evidence upon which the former were convicted was primarily the testimony of accomplices, whose veracity, because of evidence tending to impeach them, is open to serious question. I am satisfied that, without the testimony of these accomplices, the record discloses insufficient evidence to support the convictions of Lewis and Dail. Under these circumstances, the correctness of the instruction regarding the weight to be given accomplice testimony becomes a question of decisive materiality.

The trial court instructed the jury that the credibility of an accomplice is to be judged by the same standard as that of other witnesses. I agree with the conclusion of the Chief Justice that this instruction is squarely contrary to subdivision 4 of section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure requiring the court, on all proper occasions, to instruct the jury that "the testimony of an accomplice ought to be viewed with distrust." I also read the statute as a codification of the common-law rule, and disagree with the reasoning of Hirshfeld v. Dana, 193 Cal. 142, 223 P. 451, holding the subdivision unconstitutional. But even if the Hirshfeld case were controlling, it affords no justification for a direction by the court to the jury, as a matter of law, that the credibility of an accomplice is to be judged by the same standards as that of any other witness. The instruction was therefore prejudicially erroneous.

In the same category, so far as the conspiracy count is concerned, I place the instruction that the testimony of the accomplice McKnight was not discredited by his plea of guilty to a count in the indictment charging him with the commission of a felony. In addition, it may not be denied that the effect of these errors was aggravated by the disproportionate attention given by the trial judge, in commenting upon the evidence, to the factors strengthening the credibility of the accomplices as compared with his total disregard of the impeaching circumstances accompanying their testimony. I also agree that the trial court unjustifiably assumed a fact not supported by the evidence in telling the jury that the defendant Lewis had admitted in his testimony his responsibility for the criminal acts of any of the other defendants.

But the evidence upon which Copelan and Belanger were convicted of simple assault is of a totally different character. That they actually committed the acts complained of may not seriously be questioned. Unlike the evidence upon which the jury found Lewis and Dail guilty, witnesses other than accomplices testified to having seen acts of violence committed by Copelan and Belanger as charged in counts two and three of the indictment. And, as indicated by the opinion of the Chief Justice, although much of the evidence related to other, as well as these alleged acts, the jury obviously did not believe most of it for all defendants were acquitted upon the other three counts charging an assault. After the jury so carefully selected what it believed from what it disbelieved, and when its determination is amply supported by the direct testimony of witnesses other than accomplices, the erroneous instructions and comment as to the accomplice testimony did not, in my opinion, result in a miscarriage of justice so far as these two defendants are concerned. The instructions, which, in cumulative effect, erroneously advised the jury that all concerted activities by combinations of workers are illegal, could by no means have misled the jury in finding Copelan and Belanger guilty, for the error consisted in their condemnation of peaceful picketing. The nature of the charges upon which these two were convicted is obviously unconnected and incompatible with lawful picketing.

For these reasons I am convinced that the judgments and the orders denying new trials should be reversed as to Lewis and the case against him remanded for a new trial, but that, as to Copelan and Belanger, the judgment and order should be affirmed.

CURTIS, Justice.

I dissent. A group of eleven defendants were accused in count one of an indictment with conspiracy to commit assaults upon other persons by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury and to obtain property from other persons, with their consent, induced by the wrongful use of force and fear. In five other counts the defendants were charged with assaulting certain named persons by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury. The remaining count accused them of the crime of extortion.

The defendants Harry Dail and Dexter Lewis were convicted on count one and acquitted on all other counts. These two defendants were sentenced to the state penitentiary for the term prescribed by law, but the sentences were suspended and probation granted for a period of ten years. As a condition of the probation eighteen months of service in the county jail was imposed. The defendants David Belanger and Dewey Copelan were convicted on counts two and three of simple assault, a misdemeanor, a lesser but included offense, and acquitted on all other counts. They were sentenced to the county jail for a term of six months on both counts, sentences to run consecutively, and probation was denied. The indictment was dismissed as to defendant Walter Hart Burris. Defendant Paul McKnight pleaded guilty to count one and the remaining counts were dismissed as to him, except count two, the disposition of which does not appear in the record. The remaining five defendants were acquitted on all counts. Defendants Dail, Lewis, Belanger and Copelan all appealed from the orders denying new trials and from the judgments. As stated in the majority opinion, Dail died after taking his appeal. The remaining defendants appealing will be hereafter referred to as the appellants.

Dail was an international representative of the International Teamsters Union, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor. In 1935 he was ordered to make a general survey of the various road truck operations covering the State of California. In May, 1936, he was permanently assigned to the Los Angeles area. His duties were to organize, assist in organization, and to negotiate wage scales where such services were requested by the local unions. When Dail came to Los Angeles, Local Union 208 was under international receivership, a situation provided for by the International Brotherhood constitution. A receiver may be appointed at any time by the international when the general executive council of that body determines that the local officers are not acting in the best interests of the membership. When appointed, a receiver has complete control of the local. At his own request Dail was appointed receiver for Local 208, although by his own admission there was no section in the constitution which covered his reason for requesting receivership. Appellant Lewis became an organizer for Local 208 in November, 1936. As such organizer his duty was to contact truck drivers who were not union members and try to persuade them to join the union. In July, 1937, Lewis was made acting president of Local 208 and was later elected to that office. Appellants Belanger and Copelan were organizers and checkers for Local 208. As such their duties were to try to get new members, to check members to determine whether their dues were paid, and to collect dues. Defendant Schultz was secretary-treasurer of Local 208. The other defendants, including McKnight and Burris, were organizers, checkers and business agents.

The appellants make numerous assignments of error, the first being that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. In view of the lengthy briefs running into thousands of pages, and the hundreds thereof devoted to arguments on the evidence, it should here be stated, as it has been many times before, that the appellants are not on trial before this court. They have already been tried by a fact-finding body in a trial extending over a period of three months. During that trial over 50 witnesses testified for the prosecution, over a hundred testified for the defense, and much documentary evidence was introduced. It was inevitable that there would be a great deal of conflicting evidence. It is well settled that on appeal all conflicts must be resolved against the appellant. This fundamental principle has at times been overlooked in the briefs before us in this case.

Appellant Lewis contends that there is no evidence of a general conspiracy nor is there any evidence showing his participation in any alleged conspiracy to commit assaults upon other persons by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury or to obtain property from other persons, with their consent, induced by the wrongful use of force and fear. The existence of a criminal conspiracy, like any other question of fact, is for the jury to determine. After a careful review of the record I am of the opinion that the jury might reasonably have inferred from the evidence presented that Dail and Lewis did conspire to commit the acts alleged.

It is contended that there is no direct evidence of a conspiracy or participation therein by Dail and Lewis. However, there need be no direct evidence to establish a conspiracy, and a common design or conspiracy may be deduced from attending circumstances, viz., the nature of the acts done, the relation of the parties and the interest of the alleged conspirators. Johnstone v. Morris, 210 Cal. 580, 292 P. 970; Beeman v. Richardson, 185 Cal. 280, 196 P. 774; Revert v. Hesse, 184 Cal. 295, 193 P. 943; People v. Donnolly, 143 Cal. 394, 77 P. 177;

People v. King, 30 Cal.App.2d 185, 85 P.2d 928; People v. Yant, 26 Cal.App.2d 725, 80 P.2d 506; People v. Fitzgerald, 14 Cal.App.2d 180, 58 P.2d 718; People v. Collier, 111 Cal.App. 215, 295 P. 898; People v. Schmidt, 33 Cal.App. 426, 165 P. 555; People v. Seefeldt, 310 Ill. 441, 141 N.E. 829; Underhill's Criminal Evidence, sec. 771.

The avowed purpose of Dail and Lewis was to organize the trucking industry in Southern California. It was their duty to persuade non-union truck drivers to join the union and to persuade employers to enter into closed shop contracts with the union. A combination to do these things, within legal limits, would not of course be a criminal conspiracy. But if they conspired to commit assaults on non-union truckers to force them into the union or to commit assaults for the non-payment of dues, then such action would be a criminal conspiracy as charged in the indictment. It would add nothing to this opinion to refer specifically to the numerous acts of assault. The record is replete with actual physical altercations between union organizers and non-union drivers, delinquent members, members of other unions, and drivers who owned their own trucks. Threats of personal injury and threats to and actual destruction of property run throughout the entire record. A denial of the occurrence of these physical encounters is merely an evidentiary argument contrary to the implied findings of the jury. The claim that if any organizers struck or kicked other persons, it was done only in self-defense is also an argument on the evidence, and the jury was justified in concluding otherwise. Whether the incidents were isolated and independent or all an integral part of a general conspiracy was a question of fact for the jury to determine. People v. Kauffman, 152 Cal. 331, 92 P. 861.

Appellant Lewis admitted that he was in charge of the activities of the organizers for Local 208. Of course, he denied that he ever gave any orders to his organizers to commit assaults on non-union members or delinquent members, but there is ample evidence to the contrary. All of the accomplice witnesses testified that such orders were given. Attorneys' fees were authorized to be paid by Lewis for those who had been arrested for participation in assaults. Doctor and hospital bills were paid on Lewis' authorization for those who had been injured while engaged in physical altercations. Lewis signed checks in payment for expenses, including vouchers for "Meals for goon squad, 35 cents" and "Meals for beef trust, $1.13." A Mr. McCue, at the time general foreman for the Southern California Freight Lines, testified that Lewis told him that "he [Lewis] had gotten my job and that I was through, and I couldn't show up around the place anymore, otherwise he would send a goon squad and cause me some trouble." From the evidence referred to and the other evidence presented, the jury could reasonably have concluded that Lewis not only had knowledge of the activities of his organizers, but that he actually ordered the assaults to be committed. As the majority opinion conceded that the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict, a further review of the evidence will not be necessary, although the major parts of appellants' lengthy briefs are devoted to the discussion of the evidence and in an attack upon the verdict of the jury as lacking in evidentiary support.

Appellants rely on section 1110 of the Labor Code, St.1937, p. 213, in attacking certain instructions given by the trial court in regard to strikes, picketing, and boycotts. It is urged by appellants that because of the provisions of section 1110, no act may constitute a crime if done in the interests of labor. This section declares that no agreement between two or more persons to do or not to do an act in furtherance of a trade dispute between employers and employees is criminal, if the same act committed by one person would not be punishable as a crime. The novel proposition of appellants apparently is that merely because their activities were connected with labor disputes, they are entirely free from prosecution for criminal acts. Such proposition is untenable. The appellant Lewis was neither charged with nor convicted of a conspiracy to do any act in furtherance of a labor dispute. He was convicted of conspiracy to commit assaults and extortion. Assaults and extortions are just as much crimes when committed by those engaged in labor activities as when committed by any other persons. There has been a great advance in the recognition of the rights of labor since the time when a mere combination of employees to procure higher wages and shorter hours was considered a criminal conspiracy, but neither statutory law nor court decision completely absolves a man from prosecution for a criminal act simply because he is allegedly engaged in labor activities. Both this court and the United States Supreme Court have recently reiterated the warning that physical violence, threats of violence and physical intimidation in labor disputes will not be tolerated. See C. S. Smith Metropolitan Market Co. v. Lyons, 16 Cal.2d 389, 106 P.2d 414; McKay v. Retail Automobile Salesmen's Local Union No. 1067, 16 Cal.2d 311, 106 P.2d 373; Milk Wagon Drivers Union v. Meadowmoor Dairies, 312 U.S. 287, 61 S.Ct. 552, 85 L.Ed. 836, 132 A.L.R. 1200. If in the alleged interest of labor, a conspiracy to commit the acts of assault and extortion is entered into, the conspirators may be prosecuted and their positions in and control of the unions involved may be taken into consideration along with other evidence in determining the existence of the conspiracy. Labor leaders are not "endowed with rights which the ordinary citizen individually does not have," as urged by the appellants.

In its instructions to the jury the trial court erroneously stated that certain acts constituted unlawful picketing and amounted to intimidation which was beyond the limits of peaceful persuasion. The criticism of these instructions in the main is that the court's definitions in some cases included acts which might be done under the constitutional guarantees by those acting in behalf of the unions during a labor dispute, if their intimidation of workers was accomplished without the use of violence. These instructions were in part directly contrary to the law in this regard as it has been recently stated in Shafer v. Registered Pharmacists Union Local 1172, 16 Cal.2d 379, 106 P.2d 403 and McKay v. Retail Automobile Salesmen's Local Union No. 1067, supra.

But in view of the evidence presented against the appellants in this case, these instructions were not prejudicially erroneous. The appellants were convicted of a conspiracy to commit assaults and to obtain property by means of force. All of the acts which the witnesses testified were committed in connection with the strike involved bodily injury or the threat of bodily injury. The jury was not called upon to decide whether certain acts charged against the appellants were within the limits of peaceful picketing; all of them lay far beyond the limits of what may lawfully be done in furtherance of the demands of a union in a labor dispute. The only issue to be determined by the jury's verdict, insofar at least as the count on which appellants were convicted is concerned, was whether or not appellants had conspired to commit these illegal acts. Under the circumstances the error complained of resulted in no miscarriage of justice justifying a reversal of the judgments. Sec. 4½, art. VI, Cal. Const.

Appellants further complain of an instruction given by the court that "Business is property within the meaning of that term as used in the Penal Code and the threat of an interruption of the business which will necessarily be attendant with loss to the business, is a threat of an injury to property." Even the most ardent supporter of labor would not controvert the truth of this statement. Indeed, that is the chief purpose of the strike and boycott, and it is difficult to understand appellants' objection to it. They seem to argue that under such an instruction the jury would only have to decide that appellants conspired to call a strike or enforce a boycott in order to adjudge them guilty of conspiracy to commit extortion. This does not follow from the instruction given. The instruction did not state that every threat of interruption of business was an unlawful injury. Furthermore, as previously stated, the court had already instructed the jury that employees might strike or threaten to strike for lawful purposes. What constituted an unlawful injury was sufficiently defined in other instructions. When the trial court gave the challenged instruction, it undoubtedly had in mind incidents such as the Red Line Transfer Company affair, in which appellant Lewis threatened to pull off all the truckers to force the company to pay unearned money to a discharged employee, and there is no doubt, in view of the other relevant instructions, that the jury accepted the challenged instruction in this light.

Appellants next attack the following instruction: "You are instructed that one is responsible for what wrong flows directly from his corrupt intentions. If he set in motion the physical power of another, he is liable for its result. If he contemplated the result, he is answerable though it is produced in a manner he did not contemplate. If he awoke into action an indiscriminate power, he is responsible. If he gave directions vaguely and uncautiously and the person receiving them acted according to what he might have foreseen would be the understanding, he is responsible." Inasmuch as Belanger and Copelan were actual participants in the assaults of which they were convicted, the instruction obviously was without application to them. The case of People v. Munn, 65 Cal. 211, 3 P. 650, is cited in opposition to the challenged instruction. That case presented a factually distinguishable situation in that the instruction there involved had to do solely with the responsibility of the defendant for his own acts and did not undertake, as here, to instruct the jury with respect to the responsibility of one for the acts of another when the former sets in motion the acts of the latter. Moreover, as distinguished from the instruction in the Munn case, supra, the instruction here challenged did not make appellants answerable for every "possible" consequence, but held them accountable only for such result as was "contemplated" and for what wrong flowed "directly" from their conduct. The instruction must be read as a whole and interpreted in the light of the offenses charged and the facts as disclosed by the evidence. Appellant Lewis was prosecuted on the theory that he, as principal, ordered the acts of assault to be perpetrated. If he ordered the organizers to "persuade" non-union men to join the union and if necessary to use forceful persuasion, it is immaterial what particular method of physical force was used, i.e., whether the organizers used fists, feet, or baseball bats. If the "physical power" was set in motion by him or if he awoke an indiscriminate power in the form of orders to the organizers, he would be responsible as charged for the direct results thereof. If, on the other hand, the organizers took it upon themselves to commit murder as an independent act, the principals would not be liable for such under the instruction given.

Appellants assert that the trial court committed error in charging the jury that it might find defendants guilty of conspiracy if either conspiracy to commit assault or to extort were shown beyond a reasonable doubt. The attack on this instruction is utterly without merit, but is referred to as being illustrative of the type of argument that makes up a large portion of appellants' voluminous briefs. By section 182 of the Penal Code, conspiracy is a crime in itself. The gravamen of the offense is the agreeing or conspiring together to commit a crime. The allegations of one count may allege the object of the conspiracy to be the commission of any number of separate and distinct crimes. People v. Gilbert, 26 Cal.App.2d 1, 78 P.2d 770; People v. Welch, 89 Cal.App. 18, 264 P. 324. Because conspiracy to commit different offenses is charged in one count, it does not follow that the prosecution must prove conspiracy to commit all of the offenses alleged. Proof of conspiracy to commit any one of the offenses alleged would be sufficient, and this is precisely what the court instructed the jury.

It is urged that error was committed by the trial court in the giving of one of its instructions in regard to the sufficiency of corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice. The method of attack used by appellants is to isolate each sentence of the instruction and then attempt to point out error in the independent sentence. Instructions should be given a reasonable, not a close and technical interpretation. (8 Cal.Jur. 631). In testing the propriety of an instruction, the charge as a whole should be considered and not isolated excerpts. People v. Besold, 154 Cal. 363, 97 P. 871. The particular instruction under attack, when considered as a whole, is a proper recitation of the law applicable to the necessity of corroboration. It is not in conflict with section 1111 of the Penal Code, and all of the statements made are supported by the case of People v. Todd, 9 Cal.App.2d 237, 49 P.2d 611 and the authorities cited therein.

Many other instructions are attacked by appellants. In fact, few other than those offered by appellants escape attack. Appellants also complain of the court's refusal to give certain instructions requested by them. Nothing can be gained by treating each of the remaining specifications of error separately. I am convinced that no prejudicial error has been committed by the giving or the refusal to give the instructions referred to by appellants. As in every group of instructions, some error may possibly exist but the practical administration of justice should not be defeated by a too rigid adherence to a close and technical analysis of the instructions to the jury. People v. Schmah, 62 Cal.App. 192, 216 P. 624.

In addition to the formal instructions, the trial court exercised the privilege given it under article VI, section 19, of the Constitution of this state, to comment on the evidence and the credibility of witnesses. Appellants attack the whole of the comment and claim it was made up of statements of erroneous rules of law and was not judicial comment, but had the effect of an argument for the prosecution. The scope of trial court comment and the limitations thereon, under the above-cited constitutional provision, have been fully discussed in the recent cases of People v. Patubo, 9 Cal.

2d 537, 71 P.2d 270, 113 A.L.R. 1303; People v. Gosden, 6 Cal.2d 14, 56 P.2d 211; People v. Ottey, 5 Cal.2d 714, 56 P.2d 193; People v. De Moss, 4 Cal.2d 469, 50 P.2d 1031. Further comment and citations on the subject are found in Notes 95 A.L.R. 785 and 113 A.L.R. 1308. With such full discussion already a part of the reports of this state, it is unnecessary that there be any further general comment here. In making its comment in the instant case, the court did not overstep the bounds of fair comment, nor did it assume the role of an advocate. As shown by the case of People v. Patubo, supra, a trial court may so abuse its privilege as to necessitate a reversal, but here I find no such "severe castigation and bitter denunciation" of the defendants as was present in that case. In the instant case there is no language comparable to that in the Patubo case [9 Cal.2d 537, 71 P.2d 272, 113 A.L.R. 1303], wherein the court stated: "If ever a man by his appearance and his manner of giving testimony has shown himself to be a willful, deliberate and outright perjurer as to material facts in a case, the defendant in this case has been it." At the outset and throughout the body of its comment the court here was careful to advise the jurors that they were the triers of the facts; that the opinion of the court was not binding upon them; and that if they arrived at conclusions different than those expressed by the court, it was not only their privilege, but their duty to disregard the conclusions of the court.

Appellants complain bitterly of a statement made by the trial court in the course of its comment that it was the jury's duty to disregard the fact that the defendants were officers or members of a labor union. Far from being error, this comment was entirely proper and was made necessary by the attitude of the appellants themselves. Throughout the trial and in the briefs before this court appellants have attempted to make the issue one of capital versus labor. Such is not the issue. Appellants were charged with the commission of certain offenses. If the evidence showed they were guilty of those offenses, then it was proper that the jury bring in a verdict of conviction regardless of their association with a labor union. Prior to the excerpt complained of, the trial court pointed out that appellants were not being prosecuted because they were members of a labor union. It then referred to the crimes charged and followed with the statement that the jury should disregard appellants' affiliation with the union in deciding the truth or falsity of the charges contained in the indictment. In so doing no error was committed.

Appellants assert that the trial court's comment on the credibility of the testimony of the accomplice witnesses McKnight and Burris constituted an erroneous statement of law. The particular paragraph of comment attacked reads as follows: "And in this connection, ladies and gentlemen, the credibility of all of these witnesses is to be judged by you by the same standard as that of any other witness. The fact that the witness McKnight has entered a plea of guilty to one count of the indictment or that all charges against the witness Burris have been dismissed by the court on motion of the district attorney, standing alone, should not discredit these witnesses or their testimony, unless, in addition thereto, there is something about their testimony or their manner of testifying or their interest in the case, or their bias or prejudice against one or any or all of the defendants which casts suspicion upon it in your minds." Considering this comment in connection with the formal instructions given, the evidence adduced at the trial, and the code sections governing accomplice testimony and testimony of witnesses generally, I am of the opinion that no error of law was committed.

In its formal instructions the court had fully advised the jury as to the necessity of corroborative evidence pointing to guilt independent of the testimony of accomplices. By these instructions the requirement of section 1111 of the Penal Code was met and the evidence shows that there was sufficient corroborative evidence. There being sufficient corroboration, it was then for the jury to determine the credibility of the accomplice witnesses and the same standard was to be used as would be applied to any other witness. The presumption that a witness speaks the truth, provided for in section 1847 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is as applicable to an accomplice witness as to any other. In the case of an accomplice witness this presumption might of course be more easily repelled because of his position, but that fact standing alone should not discredit the testimony as a matter of law, as urged by appellants. There is no valid statutory requirement that the court instruct the jury that it should view the testimony of an accomplice with distrust. Subdivision 4 of section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure so provides, but that subdivision was declared unconstitutional in the case of Hirshfeld v. Dana, 193 Cal. 142, 233 P. 451. It is true that the reenactment of that subdivision might be held valid since the 1934 amendment to section 19 of article VI, of the Constitution of this state, permitting the court to comment on the facts and the credibility of witnesses, but such amendment cannot validate the section which was void when enacted. See Banaz v. Smith, 133 Cal. 102, 65 P. 309; Newberry v. United States, 256 U.S. 232, 41 S.Ct. 469, 65 L.Ed. 913. In any case appellants can have no complaint because the court in its formal instructions did inform the jury that "Under such conditions, the law attaches the qualification to the testimony of such witness that it must be corroborated as herein set forth and should be viewed with distrust, all independent of the question of guilt or innocence of the defendants."

"The defendants Lewis and Pitts have admitted to you from the witness stand their activities in the management and control of the affairs of the organization and their consequent responsibility therefor. It is therefore not necessary for you to determine that responsibility, since it stands admitted, and should you find that the acts or activities of any of the other defendants constituted or amounted to criminal offenses, you would be warranted in finding the defendants Lewis and Pitts equally guilty of such offense or offenses."

Appellants argue that the above quoted comment amounted to a directed verdict against them. I cannot agree with this contention. By this comment the court was doing no more than exercising its right to comment on the evidence. As to Lewis and Pitts, the jury was told that it would be warranted in finding them guilty of the acts charged. Both before and after this comment the court was careful to point out that all issues of fact were to be ultimately determined by the jury. The fact that Pitts was acquitted of all charges is evidence that the jury did not consider this comment as a directed verdict. If it had been so considered, Lewis would have been convicted of assault along with Belanger and Copelan.

The majority opinion specifies numerous other portions of the comment as error, but I do not deem it necessary to give them detailed consideration. What was said in conclusion in the case of People v. Ottey, supra, is equally applicable here. It was there stated at page 730 of 5 Cal.2d, at page 201 of 56 P.2d: "Although the court's comments might be said to show some lack of care in the preparation thereof, nevertheless viewing the comments as a whole in the light of the evidence and the inferences rationally to be drawn therefrom, we cannot escape the conclusion that the jury did so function as the sole and exclusive judges of the facts, the weight to be accorded the testimony, and the credibility of the witnesses, and that the verdict returned by them was their verdict exclusively. [Citing authority.] In such a case further discussion of the subject-matter or the views of the courts in other jurisdictions as applied to special classes of comments indulged under the law and the facts there involved would serve no useful purpose."

There remain to be considered appellants' numerous specifications of error of the trial court's rulings on the evidence. It is first urged that the court erred in permitting, over appellants' objections, the proceedings by which the accomplice and co-indictee McKnight changed his plea of not guilty to one of guilty on count one, to be conducted in the presence of the jury. The jury was instructed that the plea of guilty was not evidence against the other defendants, and they were specifically instructed to disregard it entirely. The authorities cited by appellants to the effect that prior confessions or pleas of guilty in subsequent trials of alleged co-conspirators or accomplices are inadmissible, are therefore not applicable. The only question is as to the alleged misconduct of the trial court in permitting the plea to be made in the presence of the jury. McKnight was one of the eleven defendants charged and all were being tried together. A day or two after the trial was under way appellants' attorney pointed out that McKnight was going to plead guilty and asked that the jury be withdrawn. In answer to this request the trial court properly pointed out that it would be a useless act because at some time throughout the trial the fact that McKnight had pleaded guilty would inevitably be disclosed to the jury. The denial of the request was simply a proper exercise of the court's discretion in conducting the trial. A similar ruling was under review in the case of Grunberg v. United States, 1 Cir., 145 F. 81, 76 C.C.A. 51. In that case the plea of guilty of one defendant was taken in the presence of the jury panel over the objection of the other defendants. The reviewing court stated at page 86 of 145 F.: "We can, however, hardly regard this as prejudicial, because it is impossible to escape the belief that the fact that Burman had pleaded would come out in the course of the trial, and, also, that it would become a matter of common knowledge about the courtroom, which the entire panel would inevitably be affected by. * * * The true answer to the whole is that this was one of the ordinary incidents of a trial which is within the discretion of the court, and which we cannot revise." See, also, Commonwealth v. Biddle, 200 Pa. 640, 50 A. 262.

It is contended by appellants that the court erred in receiving in evidence over objection as hearsay, People's Exhibits 31, 97 and 100, consisting of letters written by the accomplice witness Burris, and that such error was prejudicial because the letters consisted of remarks made against Lewis that were "derogatory in nature and liberally sprinkled with epithets and vituperation." These exhibits were introduced on redirect examination after attempted impeachment by inference on cross-examination that Burris' motive in testifying as he did on direct examination was to curry favor with the prosecution, and that such testimony on direct examination was fabricated with this motive in mind. These exhibits tended to rebut the inferred impeachment in that they showed that Burris was of the same mind prior to his visits to the district attorney's office. When a witness is charged with testifying under the influence of some motive prompting him to make a false statement, it may be shown that he made similar statements at a time when the imputed motive did not exist. People v. Kynette, 15 Cal.2d 731, 753, 104 P.2d 794; Barkly v. Copeland, 74 Cal. 1, 15 P. 307, 5 Am.St.Rep. 413; Davis v. Tanner, 88 Cal.App. 67, 262 P. 1106; Clark v. Dalziel, 3 Cal.App. 121, 84 P. 429. On cross-examination appellants had introduced their Exhibit Z, which referred to People's Exhibit 97. The latter then could be introduced as the balance of the whole on the same subject permitted by section 1854 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In regard to Exhibits 31 and 100, the jury was instructed that they were not to be taken as proof of the matters stated therein, but only for the purpose of considering whether Burris fabricated evidence after getting in touch with the district attorney's office. Even assuming that the receipt in evidence of the exhibits was erroneous, appellants have no reason to complain because although they did contain statements "derogatory in nature and liberally sprinkled with epithets and vituperation," practically the identical statements were contained in Exhibit Z introduced by appellants prior to the introduction of the questioned exhibits.

Appellants next assert that error was committed in restricting the cross-examination of the accomplice witness McKnight and in permitting the cross-examination of defense witnesses beyond the scope of direct examination. To consider each point raised under these assertions would be to extend unnecessarily this dissent beyond all reasonable lengths. I am well aware of the necessity of affording the defendants' counsel the fullest scope of cross-examination of an accomplice witness (See People v. Pantages, 212 Cal. 237, 297 P. 890; People v. Williams, 18 Cal. 187; People v. Schmitz, 7 Cal.App. 330, 94 P. 407, 419, 15 L.R.A.,N.S., 717), but I am equally aware of the necessity of permitting a liberal discretion on the part of the trial court in conducting the trial generally and in controlling the examination of witnesses. As pointed out earlier in this dissent, the defendants are not on trial before this court. An appellate court should not, and as a practical matter cannot, re-try every case on appeal. Many of the specifications of error made by appellants in regard to the cross-examination of McKnight are without merit. For example, he was asked on cross-examination if two men had not approached him at his home and asked him if he would give a statement which would help convict the defendants, and he replied that he had been so approached. Questions along this line were objected to as hearsay and not connected in any way with the case. The men referred to were not identified in any way nor were they shown to be connected with the district attorney's office. The objection was properly sustained. See People v. Achal, 125 Cal.App. 652, 14 P.2d 773. McKnight's contact with the district attorney's office was fully brought out in other portions of the testimony. The defense witness C. G. Anthony, vice-president of Pacific Freight Lines, was questioned on direct examination concerning the conduct of a picket line in front of the freight line offices. On cross-examination this witness testified that he saw men with wounds, these men being employees who had not gone out on strike; that one of his men had received a severe beating; that during the strike a rifle bullet had been fired into one of the company's gasoline tankers on the Ridge Route; and that a truck was turned over and windshields were broken.

The questions calling for the above testimony were all objected to as going beyond the scope of direct examination and as being hearsay. The overruling of such objections was obviously not error. All that was testified to took place during the time the picket line was on, and Anthony was testifying as to facts within his own knowledge. The defendants were being tried on charges of assaults, extortion and conspiracy to commit those offenses. Lewis testified that he was in charge of this strike and picket line. There can be no question that the testimony was relevant.

No further reference need be made to specific testimony or the introduction or asserted suppression of evidence generally. Some error may have been committed by the trial court, but in view of the discretion that must be placed in the hands of the trial court in controlling the examination of witnesses and the introduction of evidence, particularly in cases in which the crime of conspiracy is charged, I am convinced that no prejudicial error has resulted.

The appeal of appellant Dail should be dismissed, and the judgments and orders denying new trials as to the other appellants should be affirmed.

SHENK, J., concurred.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 358

PEOPLE v. SLATER.

Cr. 2259.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.
Aug. 30, 1943.

1. Homicide 🔑340(1), 341

In prosecution for murder, instructions given with respect to self-defense and court's refusal to give other instructions on that subject, disclosed no reversible error. Pen.Code, § 197, subd. 3.

2. Criminal law 🔑762(5)

Instructions given in prosecution for murder were not subject to criticism that they were couched in such language as conveyed to jury the impression that court was of personal opinion that accused was guilty and had presented an inadequate defense.

3. Homicide 🔑340(2), 341

Accused having admitted on cross-examination that she did not shoot decedent in self-defense, could not complain of instructions given and refusal to give other instructions relative to self-defense. Pen. Code, § 197, subd. 3.

4. Criminal law 🔑808½

Court's refusal to charge in terms of statute that homicide is justifiable when committed against one who manifestly intends and endeavors in a violent manner to enter habitation of another for the purpose of offering violence to any person therein on which accused's defense was based was error where there was evidence supporting accused's theory of shooting. Pen.Code, § 197, subd. 2.

5. Criminal law 🔑770(2)

Accused is entitled to have an instruction given on his theory of the case if there is any substantial testimony upon which to base such theory.

6. Criminal law 🔑808½

One accused of murder for shooting a neighbor while allegedly attempting to frighten him away from outside stairway to accused's apartment was entitled to instruction in terms of statute that homicide is excusable when committed by accident and misfortune in doing any lawful act by lawful means with usual and ordinary caution and without any unlawful intent. Pen.Code, § 195.

7. Criminal law 🔑785(7)

In prosecution for murder, an instruction relating to expert testimony and in accord with statutory provisions was not erroneous. Pen.Code, § 1127b.

8. Criminal law 🔑776(2)

In prosecution for murder, instructions given in usual form on the subject of character witnesses were not erroneous.

9. Criminal law 🔑829(1)

In prosecution for murder, court did not err in refusing to give requested instructions which, although they might properly have been given, were sufficiently covered by instructions given.

10. Homicide ⚷254, 347

Evidence of circumstances under which woman 68 years of age and suffering from chronic heart ailment shot occupant of first floor apartment during heated verbal altercation which began when deceased climbed back stairs and pounded on accused's door shouting for her to come out, though sufficient to establish that homicide was unlawful, did not warrant conviction of second-degree murder, and required District Court of Appeal to reduce degree of crime to manslaughter. Pen.Code, § 1181, subd. 6.

11. Homicide ⚷347

"Doubt" in mind of reviewing tribunal as to sufficiency of evidence concerning homicide to justify verdict as to degree of crime, if sufficient to require reduction of degree, should be not merely fanciful or imaginary, but should be reasonable, real and substantial. Pen.Code, § 1181, subd. 6.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Doubt".

12. Homicide ⚷39

Where mortal blow is struck upon a sudden quarrel or in heat of passion upon adequate provocation, actual intent to kill, though it may exist, is disregarded, since it is not the malicious "intent" which is an essential element in the crime of murder.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Intent".

WARD, J., dissenting.

Appeal fom Superior Court, San Francisco County; Lile T. Jacks, Judge.

Mary Slater was convicted of murder of the second degree, and from the judgment of conviction and order denying her motion for a new trial, she appeals.

Judgment modified and cause remanded with directions.

Sol A. Abrams, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Elizabeth Palmer, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice.

The appellant, Mary Slater, was accused by information of having murdered Lucien Doyen, and she was found guilty by a jury of murder of the second degree. Motions for arrest of judgment and a new trial were denied; likewise a motion that the judgment be modified by reducing the degree of crime to manslaughter. Thereupon appellant was sentenced to imprisonment for the term prescribed by law in the California Institution for Women. From the judgment of conviction and the order denying her motion for new trial she has appealed. The several grounds urged for reversal are that the verdict is contrary to law and the evidence, and that at the most the evidence establishes no greater degree of crime than manslaughter; that the trial court committed prejudicial error in giving and refusing to give certain instructions and in ruling on the admissibility of evidence; and that the assistant district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct during the course of the trial.

At the time of trial appellant was past 68 years of age, and lived with her nephew, Clifford Slater, in an upper flat at 1569 Grove Street in San Francisco. Doyen was 38 years old and lived in the lower flat with his wife, their infant child and Mrs. Doyen's two daughters by a former marriage, aged respectively 12 and 16 years. Shortly after 1 o'clock on the afternoon of July 15, 1942, during an altercation between Doyen and appellant, appellant fired a shot from a pistol, from a bedroom window in the upper flat. Doyen was standing on an open back stairway leading from the upper flat down past the door of the lower flat to the basement, and the bullet struck him in the chest, killing him almost instantly. Appellant's defense at the trial was in substance that on account of the previous altercations and quarrels that had taken place betwen them, and because of Doyen's threatening and abusive attitude toward her, and having been previously informed that Doyen was of a violent and quarrelsome disposition and was regarded by people with whom he worked as being mentally queer, she feared on this day that he was about to break into her apartment to do her violence; that she used the pistol to frighten him away, never intending to injure him; and that she did not know that she had shot him until after the police arrived. Her version of the shooting will be hereinafter set forth in greater detail.

The following are some of the essential facts as they appear from the record relating to the background of the case: Appellant had been married, but some 17 years ago had taken back her maiden name, Slater. Her nephew was 40 years old, and had been making his home with his aunt for the past 20 years. He was employed as a storekeeper at the Southern Pacific Hospital, and had been working there for 16 years. For about 16 years appellant had been suffering from a heart ailment, and off and on during that time had been under the medical care of Dr. Humber, for many years a member of the medical staff of the Southern Pacific Hospital and for 12 years the superintendent thereof; and because of such ailment she was doubtless made nervous and irritable. For more than 15 years she had been a member of the West Side Christian Church, and several members of the church testified as to her good reputation for truth, honesty and integrity, and for peace and quiet; and no rebuttal witnesses were produced by the people on that issue.

Doyen also was employed at the Southern Pacific Hospital, as a waiter. He had been working there as such for about 12 years, and the testimony relating to his character was conflicting. Some four or five employees of the hospital testified that his reputation generally was bad—that he was belligerent, disagreeable, and hard to get along with, and that at times he was violent and had engaged in altercations and fights with other employees. However, the business superintendent of the hospital, the chief roentgenologist, a former interne, and a neighbor testified as to his good reputation.

Appellant and her nephew moved into the upper flat in December, 1941, and shortly afterwards appellant's nephew learned for the first time that Doyen was the tenant of the lower flat. Later on several quarrels and altercations took place between appellant and Doyen principally over the use of the back yard, the excessive and unnecessary noises and disturbances each claimed the other was making in and about the premises to annoy the other, and about the Doyen's dog, it being claimed by appellant that it was vicious and ran after her, and was permitted to destroy the garden she had started in her portion of the back yard; and the evidence shows that during these quarrels and altercations they called each other names and indulged in hurling opprobrious epithets. Prior to April, 1942, appellant complained to the landlord, saying that if he did not do something about evicting the Doyens she would do something desperate; and in April, 1942, she gave notice she was going to move. Mrs. Doyen testified that all of the trouble was brought about by appellant's unreasonable and abusive attitude toward them and by her repeated acts in deliberately and intentionally making noises in the upper flat to disturb them, such as by pounding on the floor. At any rate appellant selected another place to live, paid a deposit on it, and packed most of their belongings to move; but on May 23, 1942, she was stricken with a heart attack and went to the hospital, where she remained for 18 days, returning to the Grove Street flat on June 9, 1942. Meanwhile the place on which she had paid the deposit was rented to another tenant, so that she was compelled to live in the upper flat until she could find some other place; and she made no effort to unpack her belongings.

The stairway on which Doyen was standing at the time he was shot was built in an open light well located on the side of the house about midway between the front and the back of the house. It ran from a small enclosed back porch adjoining appellant's kitchen down past the kitchen door of the lower flat and then on to the basement, and connected with a passageway running from the front of the house to the back yard. The kitchen of the upper flat adjoined the back porch. The door at the top of the stairway leading into the back porch was an old screen door, the panels of which were filled in with some thin material such as cardboard or plywood. The stairway was not straight. It had two spiral turns, one about half way down from the upper to the lower floor, and the other below the level of the floor of the lower flat; and the window of the bedroom from which the shot was fired opened into the lightwell opposite the porch door leading into appellant's kitchen; and any one looking out the bedroom window could see a person standing on the stairs anywhere from the top landing down to the landing opposite the door of the kitchen of the lower flat.

Doyen was born in France, and his wife in Basil, on the German border of Switzerland. She was the only eye-witness to the shooting and to the altercation that preceded it, and according to her testimony the circumstances were as follows: Shortly before it occurred she and her husband, assisted by her oldest daughter, carried the baby buggy, which was quite heavy, and the baby, which was four months old, down the back stairs into the yard, and Mrs Doyen then went back into the house to prepare the milk for the baby. The windows of the lower flat were left open and the back door was ajar, so that the draft through the house kept slamming the door. While Mrs. Doyen was preparing the milk she heard a disturbance in the upper flat that sounded "like the ceiling was coming down," the turning over of furniture, and knocking on the floor. Her husband was outside sweeping the back stairs, and he said he would go up and knock on appellant's door and tell her to stop the noise. Taking the broom with him he ascended the stairs and knocked on appellant's door with the broom handle, calling to her to come out so that he could talk to her. He then went back down the stairs and stood at the landing opposite the kitchen door of the lower flat. Almost immediately appellant opened the window of the bedroom and Mrs. Doyen saw that she had a pistol in her hand. Continuing, Mrs Doyen testified that appellant began calling them "dirty Germans, and foreigners, and dirty son of bitches"; that her husband replied, "The same goes for you." "Why don't you have some children so it would keep you busy"; that appellant then said, "I am going to kill you," and that her husband replied, "Just try it," whereupon appellant fired the shot and then closed the window; that her husband fell on the stairs, and placing his hand on his chest said, "She shot me." Mrs. Doyen screamed that her husband had been shot, and a neighbor hearing the shot and Mrs. Doyen scream phoned for the police. Shortly afterwards two police officers named Fitzgerald and Miller arrived in a radio car and another officer named Donahue came on a motorcycle. Officer Miller went to the rear of the house and up the back stairs and Officer Fitzgerald who was not in uniform went to the front door and rang the bell. It was a glass door, but curtained on the inside. There was no immediate response, but shortly appellant opened the door and came out with the pistol in her hand. Officer Fitzgerald told her he was a policeman, and took the pistol from her. She was then placed in the radio car. Meanwhile Officer Miller had gone up the back stairway and knocked on the back door, and receiving no response he pulled the screen door open by using force, and assisted by another officer succeeded in kicking in the kitchen door. Upon entering they found that appellant had left the house by way of the front door. Within a short time Police Captain McDaniel arrived and was followed by the assistant district attorney and Police Inspectors Corassa and Ahern. Appellant was brought back upstairs and questioned about the shooting, but before they had proceeded far the officers sent for a shorthand reporter and a police photographer, and thereafter the interrogation continued. After it had finished appellant was taken downstairs to the lower flat where Mrs. Doyen was interviewed in appellant's presence. Appellant was then taken in the police car to the morgue for the purpose, so the police stated, of identifying the deceased; following which she was placed in jail.

Much of the evidence introduced by the prosecution in support of its case in chief consisted of the declarations the prosecution claimed appellant had made at the scene of the shooting before the arrival of the shorthand reporter. The evident purpose of this testimony was to show that appellant knew before the arrival of the police that she had shot Doyen, that she had done so intentionally, that she was not excited and showed no remorse for having shot him, and at that time made no claim that she feared Doyen was going to break into her flat and do her violence.

Appellant denied having made the declarations so attributed to her, and her version of what happened on the afternoon of the shooting differed widely from the one given by Mrs. Doyen. In substance it was as follows: On the previous day she had suffered a heart attack and phoned to Dr. Humber, but he was out of town, and she was told that he would get in touch with her the next day. The next day she was still ill and remained home waiting to hear from the doctor. While she was dressing to go out she heard excessive noises from the flat below, consisting of pounding on the walls, slamming doors, and running and jumping through the house. It kept growing worse, so she turned on the radio and ran the vacuum cleaner over the kitchen floor to off-set the noise. Soon she she heard some one shout, "You coward. Why don't you come out? Come on out, you coward. If you haven't enough noise, I will give you some more." She then heard some one running up and down her back stairs and a "terrific" banging on her back door as though some one was trying to kick it in. Believing it was Doyen she became terrified, because she thought he was going to break in and do her bodily harm. She was in the back of the house at the time, and she rushed to the bedroom, and looking out the window saw Doyen on the back stairs running up and down "like a mad man" kicking and pounding on her back door. She thought first she would leave the house by the way of the front stairs and through the front door, but she realized that by attempting to do so she would have to pass the Doyen's front door. She then began to realize that her back door was fragile; that neither of the two kitchen doors had any locks; that one of them could be easily unlatched and the other had an insecure bolt. She then remembered that she had a .25 caliber automatic pistol under her bed which she had purchased at the Emporium some four years previously for home protection while living at another place. She went back and got the pistol and returned to the bedroom. Looking out she could see Doyen running up and down the stairs, pounding on her door, and when he observed her at the window he began calling her vile names and raised his clenched fist in a menacing manner. He called her such names as "You dirty old maid," "you dirty old prostitute," "you cannot have children," "There is nobody wants you," "you dirty old whore," "you dirty old bitch," "damn crazy Seven Day Adventist—religious fool," and kept shouting at her, "You haven't got enough, then I will give you some more." Being frightened and bewildered she opened the window a short space and held it up with her left hand (the window cord being broken) and she exhibited the pistol so that Doyen could see it, saying, "You see this. Do you see this? You stay away from my door," and she kept repeating this to him. Doyen defied her, shouting, "You go to hell, you dirty old bitch, and you crummy old woman," at the same time coming up the stairs toward her, fisted hand upraised in a menacing way, two steps at a time, like a crazy man, and shouting at her, "I will get you out, you damn coward. I will get you out of there." She was then shaking with fear and was afraid she would drop the pistol down the stairway, and during the excitement the pistol was discharged.

Continuing, she testified that she did not intend to point the pistol at Doyen; that she was thinking that if necessary she would fire a shot at the wall opposite to frighten him away; that during the excitement she must have discharged the pistol, but that she did not know she had shot him; that after the pistol was discharged she saw him turn as if to go down stairs, so she closed the window and locked it. She then went back to finish dressing, but soon she heard more kicking and pounding on her back door. She did not know that the police had been summoned, and believing that it was Doyen trying to break in she took the pistol in her hand and went down stairs, and when she opened the door she found the police; and she claimed that it was only after some questioning that she learned that the bullet had struck and killed Doyen.

Appellant was subjected to a severe and exhaustive cross-examination extending over several sessions of the court, during which it was sought to show that the testimony she had given at the trial was inconsistent with statements made by her to the officers at the flat following the shooting; and for such purpose much use was made by the prosecutor of the transcript of the interrogation and proceedings had at that time, which transcript was offered and received in evidence as part of the prosecution's case in chief. It appears therefrom, as well as from the testimony given by appellant at the trial, that almost at the beginning of the interview in the flat she stated that she ought to have an attorney, that she did not think she "ought to talk," and that she so protested several times during the interrogation. In fact Inspector Corassa admitted, on cross-examination, that "She said several times she wanted to see an attorney." Finally she went to the telephone and summoned her nephew, and he was present during part of the interview. At the completion of the interrogation the shorthand reporter was directed to read his notes aloud in appellant's presence, and she was then asked if she would sign the transcript after the notes were transcribed. She said she would if it was correct; however the transcript was not afterwards presented to her. It further appears from said transcript and her testimony at the trial that during the interrogation the prosecuting officers asked appellant to assume the posture at the window in which she claimed she was crouched at the time of the shooting, so that photographs could be taken of her in that position; and she declined to do so. An officer then assumed various positions at the window, and she was asked to designate the one she was in when the shot was fired; and she declined to do this also, protesting that she thought she ought to see an attorney.

There was considerable rebuttal testimony given by the police officers respecting these matters, and by Mrs. Doyen in contradiction of appellant's version of the circumstances of the shooting, and of her denials about indulging in offensive epithets. In fact the trial consumed a full month, the transcript of the testimony covering more than 1200 pages; and as will be seen from the foregoing the evidence is sharply conflicting on essential points. Obviously the jury accepted the version of the shooting as given by Mrs. Doyen; and in our opinion it is legally sufficient to establish that the killing was unlawful. Therefore no useful purpose could be subserved by narrating the evidence in greater detail.

[1-3] The first assignment of error relating to the instructions involves a group based on subdivision 3 of section 197 of the Penal Code, which provides that homicide is justifiable "When committed in the lawful defense of such person." After examining the instructions given and refused on that subject and considering the points made and authorities cited by appellant respecting this group, we are satisfied that no such error appears as would justify a reversal on any of the points so urged. In support of her contention that the instructions included in this group were erroneous she repeatedly cites the recent case of People v. Zuckerman, 56 Cal.App.2d 366, 132 P.2d 545. However, a comparison of the instructions here given with those there given demonstrates that the instructions here are not open to the objections relied upon and sustained in People v. Zuckerman. Appellant also complains that the instructions here were couched in such language as conveyed to the jury the impression that the court was of the personal opinion that appellant was guilty and had presented an inadequate defense. A fair analysis of all of the instructions shows, however, that such criticism is not warranted. Moreover and in any event it would seem clear that appellant is not in a position to complain of this group of instructions because at the trial she testified definitely that she made no claim that she shot Doyen in defense of her person. Her testimony in this regard, given on cross-examination, was as follows:

"Q. Did you deliberately fire the shot at Mr. Doyen to kill him in self defense? A. I did not.

"Q. You did not? A. No sir, I tried to scare him."

[4, 5] The next assignment of error is directed against a group of instructions based on subdivision 2 of said section 197, which provides that a homicide is justifiable "When committed in defense of habitation, property, or person, against one who manifestly intends or endeavors, by violence or surprise, to commit a felony, or against one who manifestly intends and endeavors, in a violent, riotous or tumultuous manner, to enter the habitation of another for the purpose of offering violence to any person therein." (Italics added.) As will be noted, the defense provided for in the portion of the section above italicized is different and distinct from the one provided for in the first portion of the section; and here appellant's defense was based on the italicized portion thereof. In furtherance of such defense the appellant offered an instruction in which the entire section was quoted, but the court refused to give it. Instead it gave one from which the portion of the section upon which appellant particularly relied in justification for the shooting was omitted. It read as follows: "Homicide is justifiable when committed in the defense of habitation, property or person, against one who manifestly intends or endeavors by violence or surprise to commit a felony, or when committed in the lawful defense of such person when there is reasonable ground to apprehend the design to commit a felony, or to do some great bodily injury, and imminent danger of such design being accomplished." We are of the opinion that the refusal to give the instruction as proposed by appellant was error. In answer to this assignment respondent says: "This [instruction as given] is a fair statement covering the evidence as produced by the appellant. There is no evidence presented by appellant or anyone else that the deceased manifestly intended to enter appellant's flat. Appellant said that the deceased several times called to her to come out and banged on the door, but not that he was coming in, or attempted to force the door." But clearly the testimony given by appellant which has been hereinabove set forth, if believed, would be legally sufficient to support the inference that Doyen's actions were such as would lead a reasonable person to believe that he did intend in a violent, riotous or tumultuous manner, to enter the habitation of appellant for the purpose of offering violence to her; and under well-settled rules a defendant is entitled to have an instruction given on his theory of the case, if there is any substantial testimony upon which to base such theory. In addition to the testimony above narrated she stated:

> "I was just paralyzed and I was frightened, because, like I said, I realized my doors were not solid or locked. I was not in any kind of a condition for anything like that.
>
> "Q. What did he do? A. He kept defying me.
>
> "Q. What was he doing? A. He was shaking his fist at me, and he told me—
>
> "Q. (Intg) What did he do, if anything? A. Well, he kept shaking his fist at me and kept repeating nasty names.
>
> "Q. Where was he at that point? A. He was on my part of the stairway.
>
> "Q. Was he moving or standing still? A. He was coming up to me. He started up again, and I kept thinking that maybe I ought to fire the gun in the air so as to scare him. And I thought about shooting into the stairway. And I kept hanging on to the gun. I was afraid I would drop it down the stairway."

She further testified that on one occasion, when her nephew was on his vacation in the east and she was alone in the flat, she heard a noise at one of her windows; that she looked and saw the lace curtains blowing, and upon going to the window she saw Doyen standing there; that he was looking from one window to the other, and that when he observed her, he turned and went down stairs. The record also shows that prior to the shooting her nephew had told her about the trouble and fights Doyen had with other people at the hospital; that he had used a knife in a quarrel with one man and thrown a plate at another; that he, the nephew, had been told to keep away from Doyen, and that at the hospital Doyen was called "crazy Lou."

It is our opinion that in view of the foregoing testimony appellant was entitled to an instruction embodying that portion of section 197 above italicized, and that the refusal to give the same was error because she was thereby deprived of the right to have the jury give proper consideration to the defense upon which she mainly relied.

[6] We are of the opinion also that under the facts related by appellant she was entitled to have an instruction given embodying the first subdivision of section 195 of the Penal Code. The entire section reads: "Homicide is excusable in the following cases: 1. When committed by accident and misfortune, in lawfully correcting a child or servant, or in doing any other lawful act by lawful means, with usual and ordinary caution, and without any unlawful intent. 2. When committed by accident and misfortune, in the heat of passion, upon any sudden and sufficient provocation, or upon a sudden combat, when no undue advantage is taken, nor any dangerous weapon used, and when the killing is not done in a cruel or unusual manner." The court gave an instruction embodying the second subdivision only, but as contended by appellant, by omitting all reference to the first subdivision the jury may have inferred that it was only in such cases as were covered by the provisions of subdivision 2, that is, when a deadly weapon is not used, that a homicide was excusable; whereas it was her claim that the homicide here was committed by accident and misfortune in lawfully defending her home by lawful means and without any unlawful intent, and therefore excusable.

[7-9] The objections to the other instructions are without merit. The one relating to expert testimony is in accord with the provisions of section 1127b of the Penal Code; and those given upon the subject of character witnesses appear to be in the usual form. Nor aside from the two instructions already discussed was there any error in refusing the other instructions proposed by appellant. Some of them might well have been given, but the subject matter thereof seems to be sufficiently covered by those given. Furthermore, we find no reversible error in the rulings on the admissibility of evidence, or in the conduct of the assistant district attorney.

[10, 11] It is our final conclusion, however, that notwithstanding the errors above pointed out, the record presents a situation calling for the application of subdivision 6 of section 1181 of the Penal Code, which authorizes a court to modify a judgment of conviction by reducing the degree of crime, without reversing the judgment. People v. Kelley, 208 Cal. 387, 281 P. 609; People v. Howard, 211 Cal. 322, 295 P. 333, 71 A.L.R. 1385; People v. La Fleur, 42 Cal.App.2d 50, 108 P.2d 99; People v. Castro, 37 Cal.App.2d 311, 99 P.2d 374. The first two of the cases just cited were tried by juries. The Kelley case was a death penalty case, and the Supreme Court reduced the degree of crime to manslaughter, the court saying that it could not bring itself to believe that there was a wilful, deliberate and premeditated killing. The court then went on to hold, however, that the evidence established a case of manslaughter; and it exercised the power conferred upon it by section 1181 by reducing the degree of the crime despite the errors occurring during the trial. In this regard the court said [208 Cal. 387, 281 P. 611]: "The errors alleged to have occurred during the trial have not escaped our attention. Were we compelled, as formerly, to either affirm the judgment or reverse the case, we would be driven to the latter course because of prejudicial errors committed." The Howard case was also a death penalty case, and the degree of crime was reduced to second degree murder. There no prejudicial error was found, but the court said [211 Cal. 322, 295 P. 336]: "We are of the view that the record now before us establishes murder of the second degree. We entertain a doubt as to its showing murder of the first degree" (italics added); and accordingly the degree of crime was reduced to second-degree murder. In each of the other two cases above cited the defendant was tried by the court without a jury, and found guilty of first-degree murder with the penalty fixed at life imprisonment. In the La Fleur case the degree of crime was reduced to second-degree murder, the court saying [42 Cal.App.2d 50, 108 P.2d 103]: "The evidence adduced at the trial of the instant cause was absolutely sufficient to justify a verdict of second degree murder, but it was hardly sufficient to support a verdict of murder of the first degree, when reviewed in the light of all the surrounding circumstances shown by the record * * *." In the Castro case the degree of crime was reduced from first-degree murder to manslaughter, and in so doing the court said [37 Cal.App.2d 311, 99 P.2d 375]: "The attending circumstances neither indicate an abandoned and malignant heart on the part of appellant, nor portray a wilful, deliberate or premeditated killing, but reveal a crime committed 'upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion', i. e., voluntary manslaughter." In People v. Wells, 10 Cal.2d 610, 76 P.2d 493, 503, the Kelley and Howard cases are cited, and in commenting on some of the language used therein the court said that "it should be made clear that the 'doubt,' if any, like that universally required of the jury on the trial of a criminal action, should be not merely fanciful or imaginary, but should be reasonable, real, and substantial."

[12] In the present case, as stated, the evidence is legally sufficient to establish an unlawful killing; but after viewing the case in the light of all the surrounding circumstances as they are shown by the evidence, and especially taking into consideration the fact that the fatal shooting occurred during a heated verbal altercation which started after the deceased went up the back stairs and pounded on appellant's door with a broom handle and shouted to her to come out; also appellant's age and the fact that she was suffering from a chronic heart ailment and the effects thereof, we are not satisfied that the evidence establishes any greater degree of crime than manslaughter. As stated in 13 Cal.Jur. 609, "When a mortal blow is struck upon a sudden quarrel or in the heat of passion, upon adequate provocation, the actual intent is disregarded. In such case, although the intent to kill may exist, it is not that malicious intent which is an essenial element in the crime of murder." And applying that doctrine to the present situation, we are not prepared to hold as a matter of law that this is not such a case.

The judgment of the trial court of second-degree murder is, therefore, modified, and the cause remanded to the trial court with directions to enter judgment against appellant finding her guilty of manslaughter, and to thereupon pronounce judgment upon her as prescribed by law.

PETERS, P. J., concurs.

WARD, Justice.

I dissent.

The provision "if the evidence shows the defendant to be not guilty of the degree of the crime of which he was convicted, but guilty of a lesser degree thereof, or of a lesser crime included therein, the court may modify the judgment accordingly without granting or ordering a new trial, and this power shall extend to any court to which the cause may be appealed", Penal Code, § 1181, Sub. 6; Stats. 1927, p. 1037, was enacted, as noted in People v. Kelley, 208 Cal. 387, at page 392, 281 P. 609, to prevent a recurrence of the action taken in People v. Nagy, 199 Cal. 235, 248 P. 906, wherein the evidence proved arson in the second degree rather than the first, which necessitated a reversal and retrial. The first case presented to the Supreme Court involving the amendment (Penal Code, § 1181, Sub. 6) in which a modification was ordered was People v. Kelley, supra. In that case at page 392 of 208 Cal., at page 611 of 281 P., the court, realizing the serious effect of applying "judicial commutation" (concurring opinion by Mr. Justice Shenk in People v. French, 12 Cal. 2d 720, at page 776, 87 P.2d 1014, at page 1042), said: "We have approached the consideration of this new duty with a great deal of hesitation, not only because the duty is one not to be assumed lightly, but also because the amendment to the Code section marks a complete departure in our criminal jurisprudence, and one which on first impression seems a startling innovation in our procedure. * * * we are convinced that, but for the miserable circumstances under which the crime was committed, and which no doubt outraged the moral sense of the people of the community in which it was committed, including the jurors, a verdict of murder would not, in all probability, have been rendered."

The majority opinion seeks to use the latter part of the quotation as authority to reduce the judgment of conviction to "a lesser crime included therein." Sec. 1181. If it was the intention of the court in the Kelley case to adopt the rule that a judgment in a criminal case should be reduced if it appeared to a reviewing court that the degree of the crime "in all probability" was fixed as a result of the "miserable circumstances" surrounding the commission of the offense then the court was trifling and toying not only with the constitutional rights of the People of the State of California but also of the defendant in that case. The court had no such intention as the decision is certain and plain in its holding that malice and premeditation in the commission of the offense were lacking and that there was no prejudicial error appearing in the record. At page 393 of 208 Cal., at page 611 of 281 P. the court said: "No express malice was shown, for there was not manifested a deliberate, or any, intention to unlawfully take the life of a fellow creature. * * * Appellant was properly found guilty, on competent evidence, of a most serious offense, and the errors complained of did not, in our judgment, prejudicially contribute toward bringing about the finding that he killed Mrs. Mellus. No miscarriage of justice, therefore, resulted, except that, as a matter of law, the jury improperly fixed the degree of the crime and imposed the penalty therefor."

In the present case if prejudicial error appears defendant is entitled to a reversal of the judgment. If there is error but not prejudicial this court is prohibited from entering an order of reversal. In People v. Cowan, 38 Cal.App.2d 231, at page 246, 101 P.2d 125, at page 134, the court held: "There are errors of law in the record. In accordance with the mandate of section 4 1/2 of article VI of the Constitution, we have studied the entire reporter's transcript and are left with the firm opinion of the guilt of the defendants and that no injustice has been done to them except in fixing the degree of their crimes. Therefore, under section 4 1/2 of article VI of the Constitution, we cannot reverse the judgment."

The majority opinion holds that certain instructions might well have been given but throughout the opinion there is not one statement that there was prejudicial error in the trial of appellant and the majority opinion expressly states, "We find no reversible error in the rulings on the admissibility of evidence, or in the conduct of the assistant district attorney."

The modification of the judgment by reduction of the offense is based upon People v. Kelley, supra (previously referred to); People v. Howard, 211 Cal. 322, 295 P. 333, 71 A.L.R. 1385; People v. La Fleur, 42 Cal. App.2d 50, 108 P.2d 99, and People v. Castro, 37 Cal.App.2d 311, 99 P.2d 374, and the statement that "in the light of all the surrounding circumstances" the evidence establishes only manslaughter.

In the Howard case [211 Cal. 322, 295 P. 336] the court entertained a doubt also "shared by the prosecution" as to proof of murder in the first degree. It must be assumed that in that case the court concluded that murder in the first degree had not been proven to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt. Certainly it was not intended to hold that a possible or imaginary doubt by a reviewing court would justify a modification. In People v. Wells, 10 Cal.2d 610, at page 627, 76 P.2d 493, at page 503, in discussing the word "doubt" as used in the Howard case, the court said, "it should be made clear that the 'doubt,' if any, like that universally required of the jury on the trial of a criminal action, should be not merely fanciful or imaginary, but should be reasonable, real, and substantial." In the Howard case at page 329 of 211 Cal., at page 336 of 295 P., 71 A.L.R. 1385, the court said, "there is a dearth of evidence tending to show the conditions as they existed at the time of the homicide, and from which it might reasonably be held that the murder was, in fact, willful, premeditated, and intentional. In this regard, the state failed to satisfy the burden of proof." In the present case there is a mass of evidence showing preparation and intent. In the La Fleur case after reviewing the record the court simply held the evidence was sufficient to support a verdict of second-degree murder but insufficient to justify a verdict in the first degree. In the Castro case the judgment was reduced to manslaughter.

Whether the evidence "falls short of the modicum required for a conviction of murder of the first degree" (People v. Castro, supra, 37 Cal.App.2d at page 315, 99 P.2d at page 375) in proof of premeditation, etc., is a question that should be approached by a reviewing court "with a great deal of hesitation." People v. Kelley, supra, 208 Cal. at page 392, 281 P. at page 611. In People v. French, supra, 12 Cal.2d at page 775, 87 P.2d at page 1042, the test is set forth as follows: "The court has no power where the defendant is convicted of murder of the first degree, in cases where the jury has exercised the discretion imposed in it, to substitute its discretion for that of the jury as to the extent of punishment to be imposed. In cases where the evidence shows that the homicide was committed with deliberation, premeditation and malice aforethought, the crime is murder of the first degree, with absolute power in the jury to determine the penalty. That there is evidence to sustain the jury's finding cannot be questioned. That being so this court is powerless to interfere with the exercise of the jury's discretion." See People v. Greig, 14 Cal.2d 548, 95 P.2d 936.

In a murder case if there is evidence to justify the finding of the jury that the accused knew what he was doing when he took the life of his fellow man the determination of the degree is a question of fact for the jury and not for a reviewing court. People v. Ross, 34 Cal.App.2d 574, 93 P.2d 1019. If the act be preceded by and be the result of a concurrence of will, deliberation and intent the crime of murder in the first degree is proved. People v. Ross, supra.

In the present case the following facts appear: The killing was not committed in the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death in an unlawful manner or without due caution and circumspection and was not the result of a sudden quarrel or heat of passion. Penal Code, § 192, Subs. 1 and 2. The subdivision relating to the lawful and unlawful act may be considered only upon the theory that appellant believed that the deceased was about to break into her apartment and inflict violence. The facts, as related in the majority opinion, demonstrate the contrary. When shot by appellant the deceased was standing down stairs without attempting approach toward appellant. The killing was not the result of a sudden quarrel or heat of passion, but rather the culmination of a series of quarrels in which sudden heat of passion played no part as demonstrated by the evidence.

The majority opinion, quoting evidence given by the defendant, or seemingly in her favor, which must have been disbelieved or discountenanced by the jury to arrive at the verdict, evidently reaches the conclusion that appellant and her witnesses were telling the truth, but frankly admits that the jury accepted the version of the shooting given by the wife of the deceased and then states that such evidence "in our opinion it is legally sufficient to establish that the killing was unlawful." If the wife's version is legally sufficient, then acceptance of appellant's version is a substitution by the reviewing court of its views and conclusion in place of the conclusion of the jury.

The majority opinion holds that in light of all the "surrounding circumstances" that the evidence establishes only the "degree of crime" of manslaughter. Accepting this view in the majority opinion that the evidence establishes that the killing was unlawful but denying that in light of all the circumstances the unlawful killing established only the offense of manslaughter, I note evidence which appears in the record positively evidencing the crime as murder of the first degree.

The killing was not the result of a sudden, but rather of repeated misunderstandings which ripened into quarrels primarily over some noise that emanated from one of the flats. Appellant occupied the upper, and decedent, with his family, the lower flat of premises on Grove Street. The backyard was divided by a fence five feet high.

Mr. Doyen was born in Paris, and his wife in Switzerland. When the Doyens, parents of an infant, found it necessary to use a washing machine appellant ran a vacuum cleaner over an uncarpeted floor. At times, when a dog barked or the baby cried, appellant turned on the radio to loud blasting sounds. Appellant threatened to kill the small cocker spaniel. Thereafter, whenever the dog disturbed appellant the Doyens removed the dog to the flat. The wash or clothes pins occasionally fell over the fence and Mr. Doyen would jump the fence to retrieve such articles. Appellant complained to the landlord that if the Doyens were not evicted "she would do something desperate." The landlord advised appellant's nephew that appellant was high strung and cranky and that she should not live near other people. At the trial witnesses were produced to prove the reputation of the Doyens for peace and quiet. Appellant, within a period of approximately four years, occupied seven houses or flats. There is evidence that in other places similar disturbances occurred particularly if the adjoining flat owners happened to be of foreign birth. Appellant's favorite appellations in addressing the Doyens was "dirty foreigners" and "sons of bitches." Appellant's conduct toward the Doyens generally was indicative of not only a malicious, but a vicious disposition.

On the day of the killing, Doyen, in the act of sweeping, slammed a door. Appellant saw Doyen from her front bedroom window. Doyen approached a door and knocked with the use of a handle of a broom. Appellant, after turning on the radio, deliberately walked approximately sixty feet, obtained a loaded deadly weapon, and returned, opened her bedroom window, and, after a short altercation with Doyen, who was down below, called Doyen a "dirty son of a bitch." "I mean you down there", and said, "I am going to kill you." Thereafter, the shot was fired that caused the death of Doyen. Appellant now claims that she shot to scare, but the aim was true at an angle of 45 degrees, the bullet passing through the right chest, going through a portion of the right lung and into the heart without a deflection. After the shooting she closed the window and dressed. From this evidence and the background of ill will of appellant toward Doyen in the face of the admission of the killing the jury was certainly justified in finding "preparation", "premeditation" and "wilful intent." People v. Wells, supra; People v. Campanella, 46 Cal.App.2d 697, 116 P.2d 633. The decision of the jury should be final. People v. Emerson, 130 Cal. 562, 62 P. 1069.

Peace officers arrived shortly after the shooting. Appellant was still holding the gun. After being disarmed, though she offered no resistance, she was asked why she used the gun. She replied: "I am not going to let anybody tell me what to do or shove me around." When informed that she had shot Doyen, she was cool and calm and evidenced no surprise. Later when asked to relate the happening she said: "Well, I shot that man that lives down stairs." Subsequently she referred to the fact that there was some "irritation"; that the Doyens kept in the alley-way a vicious dog which tore up appellant's plants. When confronted by the widow who identified appellant as the woman who shot her husband appellant commented: "So what" and subsequently when her attention was called to the fact that "You have left that poor woman in there with three children", replied, "Well, I don't care, they are not going to call me any names."

The evidence in its entirety indicates that appellant was possessed of an abandoned and malignant heart. There is no evidence of immediate provocation for the killing. Words of reproach never justify the use of a deadly weapon and do not warrant reduction from murder to manslaughter. People v. Manzo, 9 Cal.2d 594, 72 P.2d 119. The act was preceded by and was the result of a concurrence of will, deliberation and intent. Under such circumstances in amending § 1181 it is inconceivable to me that the legislature intended that a reviewing court should interfere through "judicial commutation." This view was followed in the hereinafter cited cases.

In People v. Shaver, 7 Cal.2d 586, at pages 593, 594, 595 and 596, 61 P.2d 1170, at page 1174, the court said:

"There is no principle of law making it obligatory upon the court or the jury to accept appellant's version of the circumstances leading up to the killing. This principle is so well established that citation of authorities in support thereof becomes unnecessary. Evidently the jury refused to believe appellant's statement of the reasons that prompted him to take his wife's life. This was a question exclusively within their province to decide. Having decided the question adversely to appellant, this court is bound by their decision thereof as it is in the case of any other question of fact passed upon by the jury. * * * This evidence was sufficient to justify a verdict of murder in the first degree. People v. Murphy, 1 Cal.2d 37, 32 P.2d 635; People v. McQuate, 2 Cal.2d 227, 233, 39 P.2d 408; and People v. Ottey, 5 Cal.2d 714, 56 P.2d 193, supra. However, the case is made much stronger against the appellant when we consider his own admissions that he killed his wife with his own hand, and immediately fled from the scene of the crime. The jury was perfectly justified in accepting those portions of the appellant's statement which appeal to them while rejecting those that they did not believe. People v. Murphy, 1 Cal.2d 37, 40, 32 P.2d 635, supra With this evidence before us, we are not able to bring ourselves to the conclusion that the judgment against the appellant should be reduced to murder in the second degree.

"It is not necessary for us to discuss at any length the three cases relied upon by appellant in which there was a reduction of the judgment. The case of People v. Kelley, supra, has been given consideration in our opinion in the case of People v. Murphy, supra. The language used in the opinion in the Murphy case is quite pertinent to the instant case, the two cases having many points of similarity. The other two cases relied upon by appellant are People v. Howard, supra, and People v. Connors, supra, [124 Cal.App. 216, 12 P.2d 43]. In those cases the judgments were reduced from murder in the first degree to murder in the second degree for the reason that, if the jury should reject the statement of the defendant as to the manner in which the deceased met death, then there would be a dearth of evidence tending to show the conditions as they existed at the time of the homicide from which it might be reasonably held that the murder was in fact willful, premeditated, and intentional. No such condition exists in the present case, as we have shown that, if we exclude the entire statement of the appellant, there is then sufficient evidence to show him guilty of murder in the first degree. The instant case is much like the case of People v. McQuate, supra, where the two cases of People v. Howard and People v. Connors, supra, are discussed and distinguished from the McQuate case." People v. French, supra; People v. Greig, supra; People v. Murphy, 1 Cal.2d 37, 32 P.2d 635; People v. Ross, supra; People v. Campos, 10 Cal.App.2d 310, 52 P.2d 251; People v. Chwistek, 134 Cal.App. 32, 24 P.2d 872; People v. Masters, 133 Cal.App. 167, 23 P.2d 774; People v. Green, 124 Cal.App. 709, 13 P.2d 541; People v. McQuate, 2 Cal.2d 227, 39 P.2d 408; People v. Madison, 3 Cal.2d 668, 46 P.2d 159; People v. Fleming, 218 Cal. 300, 23 P.2d 28; People v. Price, 207 Cal. 131, 277 P. 316.

This judgment should be affirmed.

In re WAITS' ESTATE.

ATCHISON, T. & S. F. RY. CO. v. LEET.

Civ. 12496.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Sept. 3, 1943.

Hearing Granted Nov. 1, 1943.

1. Courts 🔑489(9½)
Master and servant 🔑253

The Federal Employers' Liability Act gives plaintiff in action thereunder right to choose forum and bring action wherever defendant may be found in any state or federal court of competent jurisdiction. Federal Employers' Liability Act § 6, 45 U.S.C.A. § 56.

2. Death 🔑31(3)

A cause of action under Federal Employers' Liability Act for employee's death can be prosecuted only by duly appointed personal representative of deceased and not by his next of kin for whose benefit recovery is sought. Federal Employers' Liability Act § 1, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51.

3. Death ⚷32
Executors and administrators ⚷51

In death action, prosecuted by deceased's personal representative under Federal Employers' Liability Act, amount recovered, as in such action under state statute, is not strictly speaking part of deceased's "estate", as it is not subject to payment of his debts, nor distributable under laws of intestate succession or deceased's will, but recovery is made by such representative as statutory trustee solely for benefit of persons specified in such act. Code Civ.Proc. § 377; Federal Employers' Liability Act § 1, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estate".

4. Executors and administrators ⚷11

The existence of cause of action under Federal Employers' Liability Act for employee's death is sufficient to confer jurisdiction on state court to appoint administratrix of deceased's estate, though deceased was not a resident of state and left no other assets therein sufficient to confer such jurisdiction. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 377, 1913; Probate Code, §§ 301, 302; Federal Employers' Liability Act §§ 1, 6, 45 U.S.C.A. §§ 51, 56.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Frederick Albert Waits, deceased. From an order denying a motion by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company to set aside the appointment of Charlotte E. Leet as administratrix of the estate, the railway company appeals.

Affirmed.

J. C. Gibson, Leo E. Sievert, H. K. Lockwood, and L. W. Butterfield, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hildebrand, Bills & McLeod, of Oakland (Louis H. Brownstone, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

This is an appeal by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company from an order denying its motion to set aside the appointment of Charlotte E. Leet as the administratrix of the estate of Frederick Albert Waits, deceased.

Said administratrix had been appointed upon the nomination of the widow of said deceased. The motion to set aside the appointment was based upon the claim that the court was without jurisdiction to make said appointment.

This appeal is taken upon the judgment roll alone and, for the purpose of this discussion, the facts are undisputed. The deceased, a resident of Arizona, was killed in New Mexico in the course of his employment by the appellant railroad company while engaged in interstate commerce. His heirs were his widow and minor son who were residents of Arizona. The purpose of the appointment of an administratrix in this state, as alleged in the petition and found by the court in the order of appointment, was that such appointment was necessary in order to prosecute a claim for damages against the appellant railroad company under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq. It was further alleged in the petition "that under the provision of said act, such suit, although prosecuted in the name of the administratrix is for the benefit of the wife and minor son of said decedent, and any recovery in such action belongs to the wife and minor son of said decedent as his heirs at law and is not part of the estate of said decedent; that the foregoing claim for damages is the sole estate of said decedent." Certain of the allegations of the petition were in the nature of conclusions of law but the foregoing statement sufficiently presents the factual situation.

[1-3] Before considering the precise question of law presented on this appeal, it is appropriate to refer to certain legal propositions upon which the parties are agreed. It is conceded that no question of the venue of actions under the Federal Employers' Liability Act is involved here. In other words, said act gives the plaintiff in an action brought thereunder, the right to choose his forum and to bring such action wherever the defendant may be found in any state or federal court of competent jurisdiction. 45 U.S.C.A. § 56; Miles v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 315 U.S. 698, 62 S.Ct. 827, 86 L.Ed. 1129; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Kepner, 314 U.S. 44, 62 S.Ct. 6, 86 L.Ed. 28, 136 A.L.R. 1222. It is further conceded that the cause of action for death under said act can be prosecuted only by a duly appointed personal representative of the deceased and that it cannot be prosecuted by the next of kin for whose benefit the recovery is sought. 45 U.S.C.A. § 51. It is further conceded that when a cause of action for death is so prosecuted by a personal representative under the act, any recovery made in said action is not strictly speaking a part of the "estate" of the deceased, as it is not subject to the payment of the debts of the deceased and is not distributable under the laws of intestate succession or according to the terms of the will of the deceased but such recovery is made by the personal representative as a statutory trustee solely for the benefit of the persons specified in said act. Lindgren v. United States, 281 U.S. 38, 50 S.Ct. 207, 74 L.Ed. 686; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Vreeland, 227 U.S. 59, 33 S.Ct. 192, 57 L. Ed. 417, Ann.Cas.1914C, 176; In re Butler, D.C., 20 F.Supp. 995. In this respect, a recovery made by a personal representative in an action for death brought under said act has a status similar to the status of a recovery made by a personal representative in an action for death brought under section 377 of our Code of Civil Procedure. In re Estate of Riccomi, 185 Cal. 458, 197 P. 97, 14 A.L.R. 509; Ruiz v. Santa Barbara Gas, etc., Co., 164 Cal. 188, 128 P. 330; Webster v. Norwegian Mining Co., 137 Cal. 399, 70 P. 276, 92 Am.St.Rep. 181. Finally, it is conceded by appellant that if the deceased had left "estate" in the county where the administratrix was appointed, the court would have had jurisdiction to make the appointment and that the action, thereafter brought by said administratrix against appellant in the superior court of this state, would have been properly brought in said court. In fact, appellant concedes that if the administratrix had been duly appointed as such administratrix by any court having jurisdiction in any state, she could have brought said action in the superior court of this state but respondent calls attention to section 1913 of the Code of Civil Procedure which provides in part that "* * * the authority * * * of an executor or administrator, does not extend beyond the jurisdiction of the government under which he was invested with his authority."

[4] The contention of appellant on this appeal is that as it affirmatively appeared upon the face of the judgment roll that the deceased was a resident of Arizona, that he died in New Mexico, and that he left no "estate" in California or elsewhere, the order appointing an administratrix in this state was beyond the jurisdiction of the court and void. Appellant cites and relies upon section 301 of the Probate Code and the authorities above cited defining the nature of a recovery for death made by a personal representative in an action brought under either the Federal Employers' Liability Act or section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Concededly there is no authority in this state directly in point on the question before us. Respondent makes three answers to appellant's contention: First, that the existence of a cause of action for death under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, enforceable in this state, is sufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the courts of this state to appoint an administratrix; second, that when the order of the court appointing the administratrix became final, it constituted "a conclusive determination of the jurisdiction of the court" Probate Code, sec. 302; and third, that appellant had no standing to attack the order made by the court. As we believe the first answer to be sufficient, we deem it unnecessary to discuss the second and third.

While there is a conflict of authority on the subject, the weight of authority supports the view that a cause of action for death, while not constituting "estate" or "assets" of the deceased in the strict sense, does constitute "estate" or "assets" for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction to appoint a personal representative. In 21 American Jurisprudence 396, section 42, it is said: "Although there is authority to the contrary, the weight of authority, supported by the better reasoning, is that a right of action for negligent injuries causing death is an asset sufficient to warrant the granting of letters of administration in a state other than the domicile, although the proceeds of the action are not to be distributed according to the usual course. * * * The fact that the statute provides that the money recovered shall go to particular persons and shall not be general assets of the estate subject to the debts of the decedent does not affect the character of the right as assets for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction to appoint an administrator."

Likewise in 33 Corpus Juris Secundum, Executors and Administrators, p. 894, § 17 b, it is said: "The existence of a cause of action for wrongful death is usually regarded as a sufficient basis for a grant of administration in the jurisdiction where such cause of action arose, or where it may be enforced, even though decedent was a nonresident and left no other assets in the jurisdiction. This view has been maintained notwithstanding a contention that the cause of action did not accrue in decedent's lifetime, that, under the statute, no right of action arose in behalf of anyone until after an administrator had been appointed, or that the administration should properly be in the state of decedent's residence; and a statute providing that the sum recovered for decedent's death shall not be an asset in the hands of the administrator means only that it shall not be an asset subject to payment of decedent's debts." Numerous authorities are cited in support of the text and numerous authorities are likewise collected in Ann.Cas. 1917C, page 1217 et seq.

In the absence of any authority directly in point in this state, we feel impelled to follow the weight of authority as shown by the expressions of the courts of other jurisdictions. We find in the briefs some discussion of policy and of the practical aspects of the determination of the question before us as it affects both those who may desire to prosecute actions for death under the Federal Employers' Liability Act and those who may be called upon to defend such actions. See discussion in Miles v. Illinois Central R. Co., 315 U.S. 698, 62 S.Ct. 827, 832, 86 L.Ed. 1129. But Congress settled the real question of policy by determining the question of venue when it passed said act and, as above stated, no question of venue is involved here. Under the terms of said act, as pointed out by Mr. Justice Jackson in his concurring opinion in the Miles case, "* * * the injured workman or his surviving dependents may choose from the entire territory served by the railroad any place in which to sue, and in which to choose either a federal or a state court of which to ask his remedy." The only question before us is whether this court should follow the weight of authority and hold that the court had jurisdiction to appoint a personal representative or whether this court should decline to follow the weight of authority and hold that the court had no jurisdiction to appoint a personal representative upon the theory that there existed no "estate" in this state sufficient to confer such jurisdiction. In our view, the failure of the courts of this state to adopt the majority view would result in depriving the surviving dependents in this and many other cases of their right to seek their remedy in the courts of this state in the only manner permissible under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, that is, through a personal representative duly appointed and entitled to sue in the courts of this state. In fact, it is entirely conceivable that the failure of the courts of the several jurisdictions to adopt the majority view might result in depriving surviving dependents, where there was no "estate" in the strict sense, of their right to seek their remedy in any court because of their inability to obtain the appointment of a personal representative in any state. There therefore appears to be sound reason for following the weight of authority on the subject and no good reason for declining to do so.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and DOOLING, Justice pro tem., concur.

In the Matter of the ESTATE of Ivan MILLER, Deceased.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA & SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY (a Corporation), Appellant, v. Charlotte E. LEET, Administratrix of Estate of Ivan Miller, Deceased, Respondent.

Civ. 12497.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 3, 1943.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

J. C. Gibson, Leo E. Sievert, H. K. Lockwood, and L. W. Butterfield, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hilderbrand, Bills & McLeod, of Oakland (Louis H. Brownstone, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

This is a companion case to Estate of Waits, 140 P.2d 857, the opinion in which last mentioned case has been this day filed. The facts are substantially the same, the only difference being that Ivan R. Miller, deceased, and his mother, who was his heir, were both residents of New Mexico, the state in which the deceased was killed. The administratrix was appointed upon the nomination of the surviving mother.

The two cases have been submitted upon the same briefs and involve the same legal questions. The same result must follow here for the reasons stated in the opinion in Estate of Waits, 140 P.2d 857.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and DOOLING, Justice pro tem., concur.

In the Matter of the ESTATE of Patricio Carmody SAAVEDRA, Deceased.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA & SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY (a Corporation), Appellant, v. Charlotte E. LEET, Administratrix of Estate of Patricio Carmody Saavedra, Respondent.

Civ. 12534.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 3, 1943.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

J. C. Gibson, H. K. Lockwood, L. W. Butterfield, and Leo E. Sievert, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hildebrand, Bills & McLeod, of Oakland (Louis H. Brownstone, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

This is a companion case to Estate of Waits, 140 P.2d 857, the opinion in which last mentioned case has been this day filed. The facts are substantially the same, the only difference being that Patricio Carmody Saavedra, deceased, and his wife and three minor children, who were his heirs, were residents of New Mexico, the state in which the deceased was killed. The administratrix was appointed upon nomination of the surviving wife.

The two cases have been submitted upon the same briefs and involve the same legal questions. The same result must follow here for the reasons stated in the opinion in Estate of Waits, 140 P.2d 857.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and DOOLING, Justice pro tem., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 405

BONFILIO v. GANGER et al.

Civ. 12537.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 31, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 30, 1943.

Hearing Denied Oct. 28, 1943.

1. Appeal and error 🔑935(2)

On appeal from order setting aside a default and judgment by default for plaintiff, where complaint was not a part of the record, reviewing court was required to assume the correctness of special allegations of proposed answer and that defendants had a meritorious defense. Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

2. Attorney and client 🔑77

Ordinarily a litigant is charged with the negligence of his attorney.

3. Appeal and error 🔑957(1)

The discretion of the trial court in ruling on motions to vacate defaults and set aside judgments by default is seldom disturbed. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

4. Judgment 🔑163

On motion to set aside a default and judgment by default for plaintiff, trial court was authorized to accept or to reject defendants' contradicted affidavits in its discretion. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

5. Judgment 🔑143(3)

If a mistake might reasonably be held to be excusable, and relief from default will promote justice by determination of the issues upon the merits, a motion to set aside the default should be granted. Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

6. Judgment ⚷337

The statute authorizing the trial court to set aside judgments in the interest of substantial justice is "remedial" and should be liberally construed. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Remedial Statute".

7. Appeal and error ⚷957(1)

Unless the order and the record indicate a clear abuse of discretion in ruling upon motion to set aside a default, a reviewing court will not interfere, and in trial court, doubts should be resolved in favor of the motion. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

8. Judgment ⚷145(2)

Under statute authorizing trial courts in their discretion to set aside their judgments in the interests of justice, an application to answer the original action must show upon its face a good defense on the merits and therefore the proposed answer may be considered on the motion. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

9. Judgment ⚷163

On motion to set aside default judgment restraining defendants from discharging sewage upon plaintiff's land, trial court, for purpose of avoiding "multiplicity of actions", was authorized to consider that defendants' claim of an easement for a drainage ditch over plaintiff's land would result in further litigation. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Multiplicity of Actions".

10. Judgment ⚷143(10)

On motion to set aside a default, trial court was entitled to consider all questions involved, including the alleged negligence of defendants' attorney in failing to notify defendants of the threatened default. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

11. Judgment ⚷143(10)

Where plaintiff, because it was assumed that a settlement would be made by creation of a sanitary project, had not been diligent in filing or in prosecuting action to restrain defendants from discharging sewage upon plaintiff's land, record established that alleged negligence of defendants' attorney in failing to notify defendants of threatened default was excusable, and that trial court did not abuse its discretion in setting aside judgment by default for plaintiff. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

12. Appeal and error ⚷957(1)
Judgment ⚷139

The granting or denying of a motion to set aside a default is so largely a matter of discretion with the trial court that, unless it is clearly made to appear that there has been an abuse of discretion, a reviewing court will decline to set aside the trial court's order. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

13. Judgment ⚷143(10)

Default judgments may be set aside, where the default has been suffered by the excusable neglect of defaulting party's attorney. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

14. Appeal and error ⚷935(2), 948

On appeal from order setting aside a default judgment, all presumptions will be indulged in favor of the trial court's action, and the burden is upon appellant to make it appear that the trial court's judgment was abused. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Calaveras County; J. A. Smith, Judge.

Suit by Anthony Bonfilio against Sam J. Ganger and others, to enjoin defendants from discharging sewage upon plaintiff's land and to quiet title. From an order setting aside defendants' default, and judgment by default, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

See, also, Cal.App., 136 P.2d 632.

Jos. H. Huberty, of San Andreas, for appellant.

Virgil M. Airola, of San Andreas, for respondents.

WARD, Justice.

This appeal involves the setting aside and vacating of a default and judgment by default, and presents for determination the question of an alleged abuse of discretion by the trial court in granting said relief on the grounds specified in Code of Civil Procedure, sec. 473.

[1] The motion to set aside the default and judgment thereon were made upon the record and affidavits, counter-affidavits and the proposed answer to the complaint, and these now comprise for the most part the transcript on appeal. The complaint herein is not a part of the record. The answer, which accompanied the motion and the order setting aside the default judgment admits or denies allegations in certain paragraphs of the complaint and also sets up specific matters of defense. In the absence of the complaint from the record, we must assume the correctness of the special allegations of the answer. Accordingly on appeal it must be assumed that defendants have a meritorious defense.

From the affidavits, etc., it appears that the action was commenced October 31, 1939, and that service on the various defendants was completed on November 12, 1939. The purpose of the action as gleaned from the affidavits and answer seems to be to enjoin the defendants from discharging sewage upon plaintiff's land, and to quiet title. Approximately a year and a half after the filing of the complaint a demurrer was filed and subsequently overruled. During this period, except for the filing of two stipulations extending time to plead, nothing of record appears to have taken place. Notice of overruling of demurrer with the usual ten days to answer was served on July 8, 1941. It appears from an affidavit by plaintiff's attorney that on July 22, 1941, following telephone requests by him to file an answer, he advised defendants' attorney by mail that an answer must be filed within five days "to prevent the taking of a default." On July 29, 1941, the court made an order granting defendants to and including August 4, 1941, within which to answer. This order was filed July 30, 1941. On August 14, 1941, the default of the defendants was entered; judgment was entered thereon October 23, 1941, and recorded two days later. On April 14, 1942, defendants filed a motion to set aside the default, which was granted eight days later.

[2, 3] Up to this point had the court denied the motion to vacate the default and set aside the judgment, a reviewing court would probably have been forced to uphold the order, as the law ordinarily charges the litigant with the negligence of his agent, namely, his attorney, and the discretion of the trial court is seldom disturbed. If the neglect to plead was the result, in whole or in part, of the act or conduct of the opposing litigant or his attorney, then it could well be held, depending upon the circumstances of the case, that an order granting the motion would not be an abuse of discretion.

In the present case the motion to vacate was granted, and so we must proceed to determine whether the court thereby abused its discretion. It appears from an affidavit signed by defendants that some time after filing the action it was agreed between the litigants "that the plaintiff * * * would not force said action to trial or proceed further in the matter" if the citizens of the area involved, Valley Springs in Calaveras County, would organize a sanitary district and endeavor to install a sewage disposal plant that would meet with the approval of the State Department of Public Health; that this information was conveyed to defendants' attorney, and he was directed by his clients to act in accordance therewith until otherwise advised; that the sanitary district was formed at considerable expense of time and money, and approved by the State Department of Health; that the cost of the project as set forth in an application to the Works Projects Administration of the Federal Government, through which agency the major portion of the cost was to be procured, was approximately $23,000; that defendants were advised that the application was approved by the Works Projects Administration, but that they were informed and believed that further negotiations were suspended as a result of the transfer of the country's resources to projects closely related to the prosecution of the present war. The affiants further averred that no notice of any kind was given them or to the Valley Springs Sanitary District of a change of attitude on the part of plaintiff. The above facts are substantially corroborated by an affidavit by the attorney for defendants.

Plaintiff filed an affidavit denying any agreement, oral or otherwise, that he would not proceed with the action. His attorney also filed an affidavit that the prosecution of the case rested entirely with him and that he had never agreed "nor did he ever have any understanding" with any person that plaintiff would not proceed diligently with the action.

[4] From the facts and circumstances presented, the court was justified in concluding that there was an agreement to delay the prosecution of the action. At some expense defendants organized the sanitary district. Plaintiff waited a year and a half before insisting upon an appearance by defendants. Defendants' affidavits could be accepted as a true recitation of the facts or rejected. A second affidavit filed by the attorney for plaintiff as furnishing "further explanation of the attitude of plaintiff" set forth that he had talked with one of the parties interested in the formation of the sanitary district, also on divers occasions with the attorney for defendants, to whom he stated that plaintiff was willing to assist in the acquisition of a triangular piece of land and that the unsanitary condition must be corrected and controlled voluntarily or by court action, and that the former procedure "was to be preferred to the latter." Affiant further stated that he did not specifically represent that no further court proceedings would be had until further notice was given by him. Affiant also stated that when it appeared "that no government aid would be obtained for the completion of said proposed sewer project," he insisted that defendants' attorney file an appearance. As a matter of fact it does not appear that the application for federal financial aid was ever rejected. Rather, the facts are that the funds were diverted into other channels necessary to the conduct of the war.

Appellant contends that if respondents or their attorney were acting under the impression that it would not be necessary to proceed with the court action, such impression was dispelled by two letters directed to the attorney, particularly the communication dated July 22, 1941, referring to the probability of the entry of a default. Up to the receipt of the letters, it may be admitted by all concerned that the negotiations for a settlement of the matter out of court through the formation of the sanitary district, and the honest efforts of defendants to complete and operate the project, lulled defendants into a sense of security (Beard v. Beard, 16 Cal.2d 645, 107 P.2d 385), which justified them in notifying their attorney not to proceed further in the action until so directed by defendants. An order granting a motion to set aside a default would under such circumstances not be disturbed on appeal.

The action of defendants' attorney in not communicating with his clients immediately upon receipt of the letters, in view of the uncontradicted averment that the defendants had directed him not to proceed until they notified him, does not, as the record is studied, assume such importance as at first appears. Nor is the remissness, if any, of such attorney in delaying the filing of a motion to vacate the default judgment under section 473 vital to the determination of the question on appeal. Under decisions in this state, the trial court may have been correct in its conclusion, if it did so conclude, that the neglect was excusable by reason of a change in the attorney's office personnel, as averred in affidavits. The credence to be accorded to the affidavits, if in conflict, is a matter entirely within the discretion of the trial court. Savings Bank v. Schell, 142 Cal. 505, 76 P. 250.

[5] In Mitchell v. California, etc., S. S. Co., 156 Cal. 576, pages 578, 579, 105 P. 590, at page 592, wherein the mistake or neglect of an attorney's clerk in obtaining orders extending time was held to be excusable, the court said: "The tendency of this court has always been to relieve parties from their defaults and mistakes, upon proper showing, to the end that matters may be heard upon the merits." Pollitz v. Wickersham, 150 Cal. 238, 88 P. 911; Schoenfeld v. Gerson, 48 Cal.App.2d 739, 120 P.2d 674. If the mistake may reasonably be held to be excusable, and relief from the default will promote justice by the determination of the issues upon the merits, the motion should be granted. Stonesifer v. Kilburn, 94 Cal. 33, 29 P. 332; In re Mercereau, 126 Cal.App. 590, 14 P.2d 1019; Waybright v. Anderson, 200 Cal. 374, 253 P. 148.

[6, 7] In California, following the general common law rule, to modify or vacate judgments during the term, the power of courts to control their judgments is regulated by statute specifying a time limit and leaving the matter to the discretion of the court in the interest of substantial justice to set aside its judgments. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 473; Olivera v. Grace, 19 Cal.2d 570, 122 P.2d 564, 140 A.L.R. 1328; Bodin v. Webb, 17 Cal.App.2d 422, 62 P.2d 155. Section 473 is remedial and should be liberally construed and applied to the end that one who has a meritorious defense may be given an opportunity to present it. Nicoll v. Weldon, 130 Cal. 666, 667, 63 P. 63. Unless the order of the trial court, and the record, indicate a clear abuse of discretion, reviewing courts will not interfere, and in the court wherein the motion is heard doubts should be resolved in favor of the application as "The policy of the law is to have every litigated case tried upon its merits." Bodin v. Webb, supra, 17 Cal.App.2d page 425, 62 P.2d page 156; Beard v. Beard, supra; 14 Cal.Jur., 1009 et seq.

[8] There is no claim that appellant has been prejudiced as a result of the order vacating the judgment, or injured as a result of delay in the application therefor. Under the provisions of section 473 an application to answer the original action must show upon its face a good defense on the merits, and therefore the proposed answer accompanying the application may be considered on the motion. On the present appeal there is no claim that respondents do not have a meritorious defense.

As stated, the complaint herein is not a part of the record on appeal. The allegations of the answer admitting and denying certain paragraphs and parts thereof are therefore in part unintelligible, but as a separate defense it appears that all defendants appearing on the application claim an easement and right of way across the lands of plaintiff, and some of them allege in the answer under oath that on a date prior to the filing of the complaint plaintiff and defendants entered into an agreement whereby plaintiff granted and conveyed an easement and right of way in writing for the maintenance of a ditch for the purpose of conducting drainage and other waters and fluids from the premises of defendants, and defendants caused to be constructed a fence on one side of the ditch to prevent plaintiff's livestock from having access to the ditch. The answer further alleges: "That in pursuance of said agreement aforesaid and for the purpose of carrying out the terms and provisions thereof the said defendants have, at substantial cost and expense to themselves, constructed said ditch aforesaid and continuously maintained the same ever since and said plaintiff has constructed said fence aforesaid and has used and expended the said moneys paid to him by defendants for said purpose and said plaintiff and said defendants at all times since entering into said agreement aforesaid and since the execution of said agreement and conveyance in writing aforesaid have duly performed each and all of the acts and things agreed by them to be done and do now continue so to do."

[9] The judgment is in the form of a permanent injunction and makes no reference to the easement. The record does not disclose, and appellant has not on this appeal claimed, that at the hearing the trial court was informed of the existence of the easement. If the court was so informed it is reasonable to infer that the judgment would have contained a reference to respondents' right of way. If the court was not so informed, the primary reason for the order vacating the judgment is readily ascertainable. In any event the claim of an easement no doubt will result in further litigation which the trial court had a right to consider for the purpose of avoiding multiplicity of actions.

[10-12] Eliminating the question of defendants' alleged right of way, and assuming that plaintiff's complaint is based upon maintenance of a nuisance or upon some other theory, the court had before it the affidavits of the opposing parties. The conditions complained of had evidently existed for over a quarter of a century. Plaintiff had not been diligent in filing or in prosecuting the action, evidently for the reason that it was assumed the litigants would arrive at a settlement by the creation of a sanitary project which it was hoped would relieve all parties of further litigation. The trial court had a right to consider all questions involved, including the alleged negligence of defendants' attorney. We cannot say that upon the record that court could not reasonably conclude that such neglect was excusable under all the circumstances nor consequently that there was such an abuse of discretion as to require a reversal. In Brooks v. Nelson, 95 Cal.App. 144, 148, 272 P. 610, 611, the court said: "The granting or denying of a motion of this character is so largely a matter of discretion with the trial court that, unless it is clearly made to appear that there has been an abuse of this discretion, this court will decline to set aside the trial court's order. Nicoll v. Weldon, 130 Cal. 666, 63 P. 63; Staley v. O'Day, 22 Cal.App. 149, 133 P. 620; Jones v. Southern Pacific Co., 71 Cal.App. 773, 236 P. 336; Jergins v. Schenck, 162 Cal. 747, 124 P. 426; Savage v. Smith, 170 Cal. 472, 150 P. 353; Waite v. Southern Pacific Co., 192 Cal. 467, 221 P. 204; Brasher v. White, 53 Cal.App. 545, 200 P. 657; Toon v. Pickwick Stages, 66 Cal.App. 450, 226 P. 628; Rahn v. Peterson, 63 Cal.App. 199, 218 P. 464; Park v. Hillman, 67 Cal.App. 92, 224 P. 100; Sofuye v. Pieters-Wheeler Seed Co., 62 Cal.App. 198, 216 P. 990." See, also, Beard v. Beard, supra; Dunn v. Standard Acc. Ins. Co., 114 Cal.App. 208, 299 P. 575; Olivera v. Grace, supra; Mitchell v. California, etc., S. S. Co., supra; Bodin v. Webb, supra; Nicoll v. Weldon, supra and other cases cited above.

[13, 14] In Stub v. Harrison, 35 Cal. App.2d 685, 690, 96 P.2d 979, 981, the court said: "It has therefore been frequently held that default judgments may be set aside under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure where the default has been suffered by reason of the excusable neglect of the attorney. On appeal from an order granting relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure all presumptions will be indulged in favor of the correctness of the trial court's action and the burden in all cases is upon the appellant to make it appear that the court's discretion was abused in making the order."

Irrespective of the mistake of judgment of the attorney for defendants in failing to notify his clients of the threatened default, the question in this case is—did the order vacating the judgment, under all the circumstances of the case, aid or defeat the administration of justice?

The order is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concur.

60 Cal.App.2d 276

In re DUPONT'S ESTATE.

HOVANDER et al. v. LAMB et al.

Civ. 12431.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 25, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 24, 1943.

Hearing Denied Oct. 21, 1943.

1. Wills 🔑50

A testator has sufficient "testamentary capacity" to execute will, if he has sufficient mentality to understand and keep in mind the nature of his act, extent and character of his property, and persons who are natural objects of his bounty.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Testamentary Capacity".

2. Wills 🔑34

"Testamentary incapacity" because of unsoundness of mind consists of either insanity of such broad character as to establish mental incompetency generally or some specific and narrower form of insanity under which testator is victim of hallucination or delusion.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Testamentary Incapacity".

3. Wills 🔑55(3)

To invalidate will on ground that testator was victim of hallucination or delusion, evidence must establish that will was creature or product of such hallucination or delusion or that it bore directly on and influenced creation and terms of instrument.

4. Evidence 🔑568(2)

The weight of lay witnesses' opinions as to testator's mental unsoundness depends on strength or weakness of reasons given for them.

5. Wills 🔑386

A judgment refusing probate of will because of testator's mental incompetency must be affirmed on appeal, if supported by any substantial evidence.

6. Wills 🔑55(1)

Evidence held sufficient to support judgment refusing probate of will on ground of testatrix' mental incompetency at time of execution thereof.

7. Wills 🔑53(6)

While neither testator's extreme age nor physical or even mental weakness alone may be sufficient to invalidate will, such circumstances should be considered, together with facts immediately surrounding execution of will, in determining whether testator possessed testamentary capacity.

8. Wills 🔑53(2)

The critical inquiry in determining testator's mental capacity to execute will is directed to his condition of mind at very time of signing will, and evidence of his previous conduct is admissible only for light that it may throw on such condition at that precise moment.

9. Wills 🔑386

In will contest, weight and effect of evidence of testatrix' conflicting statements of amount she was worth as bearing on question of her mental capacity to understand extent and character of her property at time of executing will was for trial judge.

10. Wills ⚷386

On appeal from judgment refusing probate of will on ground of testatrix' mental incapacity, whether testatrix' statement, indicating her lack of sufficient mentality to understand extent and character of her property, was susceptible of explanation compatible with testamentary capacity cannot be considered, as appellate court can only determine whether evidence substantially supports trial court's finding and cannot reweigh evidence or draw different inferences therefrom.

11. Witnesses ⚷200

Generally, under common law, information acquired by attorney in course of interviews and negotiations looking toward his professional employment by informant is "privileged" and cannot be disclosed by such attorney as witness, though he was not actually employed by informant or was afterwards employed by informant's adversary.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Privilege".

12. Witnesses ⚷200

The statute extending witness' "privilege" to communications between attorney and client in course of professional employment is broad enough to cover preliminary statements to attorney in good faith, looking to his engagement as attorney for person making communication. Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 2.

13. Trial ⚷29(1)
Witnesses ⚷246(2)

Within reasonable limits, it is trial judge's right and duty to bring out facts clearly by questioning witnesses and admonishing counsel not to interrupt them before completion of their answers, so that important functions of judge's office may be fairly and justly performed and in that duty he may not be unreasonably hampered.

14. Witnesses ⚷379(1), 397

In will contest, testimony as to witnesses' prior inconsistent statements to beneficiaries under will was properly admitted, not as proof of any facts stated, but for limited purpose of impeaching such witnesses' credibility.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Hilliard Comstock, Judge.

Proceedings by Mrs. H. J. Lamb and others for probate of the will of Hilda Susanna Dupont, deceased, contested by Hugo Hovander and others. From a judgment refusing probate, proponents appeal.

Affirmed.

Gordon J. McKenzie, of Santa Rosa, and H. W. McGowan, of Willows, for appellants A. W. Hollingsworth, Jennie Reid and Mrs. H. J. Lamb.

Geary & Tauzer, of Santa Rosa, and A. Dal Thomson, of San Francisco, for appellants Chas. Hovander, as Special Adm'r of Estate of Arlene Hovander and Amanda Hovander.

Clarendon W. Anderson, of Santa Rosa, for respondents Hugo Hovander, Elsa Stromee, Ada Juvet, Angelo Hovander and Otis Hovander.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment refusing probate of an alleged will of Hilda Susanna Dupont, upon a finding of the court that the deceased was not of sound and disposing mind at the time the instrument was executed.

The proffered instrument was executed by the decedent on December 19, 1940. At that time the decedent was seventy-seven years of age and confined to her bed in a sanitarium, extremely weakened and seriously afflicted by the disease which caused her death on January 3, 1941.

Decedent, a native of Sweden, came to California as a young woman and lived during the rest of her life in this state. She was twice married but both of her husbands predeceased her, she had no children and at the time of her death her legal heirs consisted of a brother, Charles Eric Leaf, living in Wisconsin, and nieces and nephews, the children of a predeceased sister. Her relations with these relatives had generally been friendly up to the time of the onset of her final illness. She was apparently a prolific letter writer and many letters to certain of her nieces and nephews and their children, couched in cordial and affectionate terms, were introduced into evidence. It may fairly be said from the evidence that up to a very short time before the execution of the proffered will, the contestant Elsa Stromee had been her favorite niece. Because she lived in California Mrs. Stromee had been able to, and had visited and seen her aunt with more frequency in the last few years of her life than any of the others. Within the year decedent had taken Mrs. Stromee to the office of her attorney and stated to the attorney that Mrs. Stromee was to be the executrix of her will, and by the terms of an earlier will, unrevoked if the proffered instrument was properly denied probate, Mrs. Stromee besides being named executrix was bequeathed a substantial share of her aunt's estate.

For some days prior to November 27, 1940, decedent had been a patient in the General Hospital in Santa Rosa. On the morning of that day she left the General Hospital, because of dissatisfaction with her treatment there, and went to the home of an old friend, Mrs. H. J. Lamb. At that time she was very ill. She remained at Mrs. Lamb's home until the morning of November 30. On that morning at 4 a.m. she wakened Mrs. Lamb and asked Mrs. Lamb to call a taxi, or to call a messenger boy to send a message to Mr. Hollingsworth, her attorney, to come to see her so that she could ask him to get her some money from the bank. Mrs. Lamb explained to her that this was impossible at that early hour of the morning. Although she had only $1.00 with her, she had not previously mentioned to Mrs. Lamb that she needed any additional funds. A little after 6 o'clock Mrs. Lamb went to a neighbor's house and telephoned for a messenger. She reported to Mrs. Dupont that there would be no messenger boy on duty until 8 o'clock and Mrs. Dupont then asked her to cancel the order for the messenger and call a taxi. Mrs. Lamb, after calling the cab, helped Mrs. Dupont to dress, and when the cab arrived Mrs. Dupont was driven to the home of Mr. Hollingsworth. She arrived at Mr. Hollingsworth's home between 7 and 8 o'clock, while he was still asleep. She was wearing a bathrobe. Mr. Hollingsworth went to his office between 8 and 9 o'clock and when he returned at noon Mrs. Dupont was still in his home. He could see that she was "a pretty sick woman" and he arranged to take her to the Northside Sanitarium where she remained until her death.

The same day Mr. Hollingsworth sent a telegram to Mrs. Stromee advising her of her aunt's serious illness and Mrs. Stromee came to Santa Rosa to be with her aunt, arriving on December 2 and staying until December 5. Upon her arrival Mrs. Dupont asked Mrs. Stromee to get a cot and sleep outside her door. Mrs. Stromee replied that she was tired from her trip and needed a good night's rest. At a later time Mrs. Dupont again asked Mrs. Stromee to lie on a cot outside her door during the nights so that she could attend her if necessary. Instead Mrs. Stromee insisted on employing a night nurse for her aunt, at which the aunt became irritated and displeased. During this period the aunt procured Mr. Hollingsworth to get $100 in cash for her from her bank account. This money was left in a handbag in a drawer in Mrs. Dupont's room and without any clear ground for the accusation Mrs. Dupont conceived the idea that Mrs. Stromee had stolen most of it.

Mrs. Stromee left for home on December 5 and her aunt asked her to take her with her. Her physical condition, as hereinafter described, was such as to render a trip of several hundred miles to Mrs. Stromee's home extremely dangerous to her, if not physically impossible, but Mrs. Dupont was annoyed when Mrs. Stromee told her that she could not take her.

There is evidence from which the court could conclude that after being annoyed at and unfriendly toward Mrs. Stromee for several days following her departure Mrs. Dupont suddenly changed her attitude completely and asked Mrs. Brandborg, an attendant at the sanitarium, to telephone Mrs. Stromee and ask her to return. Mrs. Stromee returned on December 15 and entered her aunt's room with her husband, Carl, who had driven her to Santa Rosa. She said to her aunt: "Wasn't Carl a darling to bring me up here so fast?" The aunt who had always theretofore been friendly to Carl and who had never before used profanity in her niece's presence, replied: "To hell with Carl", and thereafter refused to have anything to do with him.

As suddenly as Mrs. Dupont had changed her mind and sought Mrs. Stromee's return, she again turned against her when she did come back at her request. She said to her on one occasion about December 17: "I suppose you are sending me to a crazy house". No apparent reason appears for this remark in any conduct of Mrs. Stromee, and it is not explicable on any logical ground, unless it was suggested to Mrs. Dupont by her own realization that her mind was no longer normal.

Another incident in the relation between aunt and niece seems to deserve special comment. Some years before Mrs. Stromee's mother had died after the amputation of a leg. Mrs. Stromee had previously told Mrs. Dupont that none of the children had wanted the amputation performed, but that their mother had insisted on the operation over their objection, saying: "I am boss, it is my leg, I can do what I please. The doctor told me I can live ten more years if it is performed and I will go through with it." Sometime during the period December 15 to 17, Mrs. Dupont said to Mrs. Stromee: "You have my sister's blood on your hands. * * * You are not going to kill me that way."

Turning from Mrs. Dupont's relations with her niece to her general physical and mental condition from the time of her arrival at the sanitarium, we find from the medical testimony that she was suffering from very advanced arteriosclerosis and a severe organic valvular heart lesion, the valves of the heart were involved in a degenerative process, the blood circulation as a consequence was sluggish, the blood was dammed back in the lungs and as a result she suffered a great deal of pain, developed a severe cough, her respiration and pulse were abnormally high, she could only speak with an effort because of shortness of breath and at times she suffered from Cheyne-Stokes respiration. Her condition was very advanced and serious, she was incurable and it was only a matter of time when she would die. Dr. Carlson, whose testimony is later discussed at greater length, was her attending physician at the sanitarium. He found her irrational at times and rational at others prior to December 19, the date of the execution of the will.

During her stay at the sanitarium and before the execution of the proffered will Mrs. Dupont was too weak to get out of bed unassisted although she was assisted to a commode for the first few days. She was incontinent at times and did not realize that fact. She took ice from a rubber icebag and put it in a knitted cap and put the knitted cap containing the ice on her head, insisting that she preferred it that way. She would ask to be placed on the commode when she had just used it and insist that she had not. She said that she had herself made the concrete slab on her cemetery plot. She asked to have the undertaker open her grave so that it would be ready for her when she died. She wanted the doctor sent for to spend the night with her. She wanted to take an entire bottle of medicine at one time. She tore a nightgown which the nurse wished to put on her. She screamed at night without apparent reason. She told Mrs. Brandborg that she had gone into the corridor to die and that Mrs. Brandborg "had committed a great sin by dragging her out of her grave". She asked the doctor to call the undertaker because she was going to die. She asked Mrs. Brandborg to telephone to the storage house where her furniture was stored and have them look through her furniture for a pencil sharpener because she wanted to write a letter. A large part of the time she talked irrationally and incoherently. She complained that she could not remember anything and that she could not think any more.

Specifically several witnesses called for the contestants testified that in their opinion decedent before and on the day of execution of the proffered instrument was irrational or of unsound mind. Mrs. Brandborg, who assisted in caring for Mrs. Dupont at the sanitarium, testified that during all the time she was there she was of unsound mind and gave as some of her reasons: Her speech was rambling at times; on several occasions she talked like she was in a coma; she would look at the ceiling and say she was going to heaven; "she told me that I had committed a great sin by dragging her out of the grave, she came there in the corridor to die and I was the instrument of getting her back to earth"; "she asked the doctor one time to call the undertaker because she was going to die on the occasion of the doctor's visit"; she was incontinent in the bed and didn't realize that she had been; she wanted the storage man to search through her furniture for a pencil sharpener because she wanted to write a letter.

Mr. Brandborg, also an employee of the sanitarium, likewise testified that all the time decedent was in the sanitarium she was in his opinion of unsound mind. Some of the reasons given were: Putting ice from an icebag into a knitted cap; she couldn't talk coherently; she insisted on using the commode when she had just finished using it and would insist that she had not done so; she screamed on many occasions so loudly as to disturb other patients and then denied that she had done so; she wanted the doctor called to stay with her saying she had plenty of money to pay him to stay with her all the time and was annoyed when Mr. Brandborg pointed out that the doctor had other patients and could not do that; she said that the nurse had not been in her room all night when the nurse had spent the night there; she wanted to take a whole bottle of medicine which the doctor had prescribed to be taken in doses a teaspoonful at a time; she told him that she herself had made the concrete slab on her grave.

Mrs. Nobles, a night nurse who was with Mrs. Dupont each night from December 3 to December 12, described her appearance and conduct variously as irrational at times; not mentally clear; childish and eccentric; erratic and mentally clouded.

Mr. Batt, neighbor and acquaintance of many years, visited Mrs. Dupont twice at the sanitarium. On the first visit Mrs. Batt was with him; on the second visit he was alone. The second visit was after Mrs. Stromee's return—after December 15. On the second visit Mr. Batt found Mrs. Dupont irrational. Reasons: "she didn't recognize me when I came in"; "she talked wandering like * * * she didn't know what she was talking about, just one thing and another"; "she was so much different than she was when we used to see her out there."

Mr. Churchman, a real estate agent who sold Mrs. Dupont's ranch for her during her illness, saw her successively in the General Hospital, at Mrs. Lamb's and in the Northside Sanitarium. When he saw her in the General Hospital "she was fairly strong"; at Mrs. Lamb's "I wouldn't say that she was of unsound mind but it is hard for me to say that she was of sound mind. * * * My reasons, I have known her for a good many years and she was always very keen, and at that time she wasn't normal in that respect * * * she wasn't keen." When he saw her last in the sanitarium he testified: "I don't think she was of sound mind." His reasons were based upon his observation of Mrs. Dupont for several years, the marked change that had come over her, her appearance and conversation; her failure to remember where she had put the keys to her house and her confused manner in looking in her bag for them and her saying: "I just can't think any more." "She said she couldn't think, she couldn't appear to think properly."

A few hours before the proffered will was drawn and executed, and on the same day, Mrs. Dupont wrote a letter to her brother. It was written partly in English and partly in Swedish. This letter with the Swedish words translated into English reads as follows: "Dear Brother this is my last letter to you Elsa are a rotten sister have nothing to do now with her she has killed me she has stolen all my hard earned money pretend not you receive this letter be so kind. Elsa is rotten sister to take all my money so have nothing to do with her so good bye. I not help but give all what I have to my nurse. My lawyer will see to it tend to it all—God bless you for all you have ever done for family. Good bye do not have to do with Elsa we better not have anything with Elsa. My nurse Mrs. sure done all to make me comfortable to scutt Elsa out Bye Bye Dear Brother."

At the time of the preparation of the will in her sickroom the testimony shows that Mrs. Dupont first said that she wanted her brother to have half of her estate and Mrs. Lamb to have the other half. Then she said: "I want to give something to that nurse", pointing to Mrs. Reid. When asked how much she replied "all she is worth". She was then asked: "How much is that?" Her reply was: "Well, if there is five thousand dollars give it to her, if there is five thousand dollars give it to her." The will was first drawn to leave $5,000 to Mrs. Reid, and later on the suggestion of the draftsman that that was a large sum to leave to a nurse whom she had only known for a few days, Mrs. Dupont at the prompting of the draftsman reduced the bequest to $1,000.

In evaluating this evidence certain well-settled rules are to be borne in mind.

[1-3] A testator has sufficient capacity to execute a will if he has sufficient mentality to understand and keep in mind the nature of his act, the extent and character of his property, and the persons who are the natural objects of his bounty. In re Estate of Sexton, 199 Cal. 759, 251 P. 778; In re Estate of Finkler, 3 Cal.2d 584, 46 P.2d 149; In re Estate of Arnold, 16 Cal.2d 573, 107 P.2d 25. Testamentary incapacity because of unsoundness of mind is of two classes, "either insanity of such broad character as to establish mental incompetency generally, or some specific and narrower form of insanity, under which the testator is the victim of some hallucination or delusion. And even in the latter class of cases * * * the evidence must

* * * establish that the will itself was the creature or product of such hallucination or delusion, or, in other words, that the hallucination or delusion bore directly upon and influenced the creation and terms of the testamentary instrument." In re Estate of Chevallier, 159 Cal. 161, 168, 113 P. 130, 133.

[4] The opinions of lay witnesses as to the mental unsoundness of the testator are no stronger than the reasons given for them and must stand or fall on the strength or weakness of the reasons given. In re Estate of Nolan, 25 Cal.App.2d 738, 78 P.2d 456; In re Estate of Finkler, 3 Cal.2d 584, 46 P.2d 149.

[5] Subject to these rules the function of the appellate court is no different on an appeal from a judgment refusing probate to a will because of mental incompetency than in any other case. If there is any substantial evidence to support the judgment it must be affirmed on appeal. In re Estate of Pessagno, 58 Cal.App.2d 457, and cases cited at page 459, 136 P.2d 644.

[6] Tested by these rules we are satisfied that the judgment must be affirmed. We may concede, without expressly so deciding, that the evidence is not sufficient to support a finding that the proffered will was the product of an insane delusion or hallucination of the decedent concerning her niece Elsa Stromee. We may likewise concede that the evidence as to all that occurred prior to the time immediately concurrent with the purported execution of the proffered will might not be sufficient to support a finding of general testamentary incapacity. But that evidence furnishes an illuminating background for the scene that was enacted in Mrs. Dupont's sick room on December 19, at the time that the purported will was actually drafted and signed.

[7] While neither extreme age nor physical or even mental weakness standing alone may be sufficient to invalidate a will, they are circumstances which should be considered together with the facts immediately surrounding the execution of the will in determining whether the testator possessed testamentary capacity. In re Estate of Alexander, 111 Cal.App. 1, 6, 295 P. 53; In re Estate of Miller, 16 Cal.App.2d 154, 164, 60 P.2d 498.

The evidence presents a picture of a woman seventy-seven years old, always theretofore mentally alert and self-reliant, who, under the ravages of a fatal illness, commencing on November 27, when she wakened her friend at 4 a.m. to call a cab or a messenger boy immediately so that she could at once arrange to get some money, thereafter engaged in conduct bizarre, eccentric, extravagant and out of all character with her previous demeanor and way of life. Culminating these marked extravagances, and within a few hours of the drafting and signing of the proffered will, this slowly dying woman who has exhibited so many of the pitiful vagaries of a failing mind, writes a letter to her brother which, measured by the standards of her earlier correspondence in the record, is ill-constructed, labored, repetitious and confused. In addition to a rambling and unjustifiably bitter complaint against Elsa Stromee, it contains the statement: "I not help but give all what I have to my nurse." It is noteworthy, in this connection, that Mrs. Dupont had met this nurse for the first time on the night of December 12, that she apparently did not know her name, that the nurse had been on duty with her at that time during only four nights and two and one-half days, and by her own testimony had never engaged in any conversation with Mrs. Dupont except such as was necessary in the performance of her duties for her patient.

[8] Thus the stage is set for the events immediately surrounding the preparation and signing of the purported will. It is axiomatic that the critical inquiry in determining the mental capacity of a person to execute a will is directed to his condition of mind at the very time of its signing. Evidence of his previous conduct is only admissible for the light that it may throw on his condition of mind at that precise moment. In re Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 235 P. 45; In re Estate of Peterkin, 23 Cal.App.2d 597, 73 P.2d 897; In re Estate of Miller, 16 Cal.App.2d 154, 60 P.2d 498. From proponent's own witnesses it appears that when the will was being drafted in Mrs. Dupont's sick room she first stated that she had $19,000 in the Exchange Bank and a smaller amount in Postal Savings (which was the fact) and as a part of the same conversation she stated that she wanted to leave "all she is worth * * * to that nurse" (pointing to her) and on being pressed to state the amount she replied: "if there is $5000 give it to her, if there is $5000 give it to her."

[9] The weight and effect of this evidence was for the trial judge. From it he could reasonably find that Mrs. Dupont at that time was so mentally deranged or confused that she did not realize that $19,000 was more than $5,000. If this was so it is clear that Mrs. Dupont at the time of the will's execution did not have sufficient mentality to understand the extent and character of her property. The finding that Mrs. Dupont was not of sound and disposing mind finds sufficient support in this one incident, particularly when viewed against the background of failing mentality portrayed by the other evidence.

[10] The argument that Mrs. Dupont's statement: "if there is $5000 give it to her" is susceptible of explanation compatible with testamentary capacity cannot avail appellants in an appellate court. Our inquiry ends when we determine that it furnishes substantial support for the trial court's finding, and we cannot reweigh the evidence or draw different inferences from it on appeal.

Appellants emphasize the evidence of Dr. Carlson, Mrs. Dupont's attending physician, that in his opinion she was of sound mind on December 19. A reading of Dr. Carlson's testimony shows that he had no independent recollection of the condition of mind of Mrs. Dupont on December 19. He concluded from a conversation that he had with her on December 20 that on December 19 she was of sound mind, but on cross-examination it was developed that he did not discuss with her the terms of her will or ascertain whether she remembered or understood them. He based his conclusion entirely on a statement by her that she had made a will the day before and was satisfied with it, and he further testified, as hereinbefore noticed, that prior to December 19 she had been at times rational and at others irrational. Under the circumstances the trial judge was not bound to accept his opinion of the condition of his patient's mind at the moment of the will's execution.

To appellants' argument based on such cases as In re Estate of Casarotti, 184 Cal. 73, 78, 192 P. 1085, that the testimony of proponents' witnesses must be taken into account in weighing the sufficiency of contestants' evidence it is sufficient to point out that the precise evidence of Mrs. Dupont's conduct and statements immediately preceding the execution of the will, which we have held sufficiently supported the trial court's finding, came from proponents' witnesses including the draftsman and the attesting witnesses of the document itself.

After Mrs. Dupont's death Mrs. Stromee consulted Mr. Tauzer, an attorney-at-law, with a view to employing him as her attorney to contest the will. At the close of the interview Mr. Tauzer refused the employment. It was sought to prove by Mr. Tauzer that during this interview Mrs. Stromee made statements to Mr. Tauzer inconsistent with her testimony. The trial court sustained an objection on the ground of privilege. It is claimed that this was error. In this connection appellants point to the language of Code Civ. Proc., sec. 1881, subd. 2 which extends the privilege to communications between attorney and client "in the course of professional employment" and argue that since Mr. Tauzer refused the employment the situation falls without the language of the section. They also rely on People v. Heart, 1 Cal.App. 166, 169, 81 P. 1018.

[11] It is the almost universal rule in common-law jurisdictions that "Where a person consults an attorney with a view to employing him professionally, any information acquired by the attorney in the course of interviews or negotiations looking toward such employment is privileged and cannot be disclosed, even though no actual employment of the attorney as such follows, and notwithstanding the attorney may be afterward employed by the adversary of the person who made such communication." 70 C.J. 406; 8 Wigmore on Evidence, 3d Ed. (1940) sec. 2304, pp. 587, 588; 5 Chamberlayne, Modern Law of Evidence (1916) sec. 3682, p. 5266; cases collected in notes in 21 Ann.Cas. 217; Ann. Cas. 1913A, 30; and 34 L.R.A.,N.S., 578, 579.

The Supreme Court of Colorado in Denver Tramway Co. v. Owens, 20 Colo. 107, 36 P. 848, was called upon to apply a statute identical in language to our own to facts similar to those presented here. That court said at page 855 of 36 P.: "If a person in respect to his business affairs, or troubles of any kind, consults with an attorney in his professional capacity, with the view to obtaining professional advice or assistance, and the attorney voluntarily permits or acquiesces in such consultation, then the professional employment must be regarded as established, and the communication made by the client, or advice given by the attorney, under such circumstances is privileged. An attorney is employed—that is, he is engaged in his professional capacity as a lawyer or counselor—when he is listening to his client's preliminary statement of his case, or when he is giving advice thereon, just as truly as when he is drawing his client's pleadings, or advocating his client's cause in open court. It is the consultation between attorney and client which is privileged, and which must ever remain so, even though the attorney, after hearing the preliminary statement, should decline to be retained further in the cause, or the client, after hearing the attorney's advice, should decline to further employ him."

As has been pointed out in other cases, no person could ever safely consult an attorney for the first time with a view to his employment if the privilege depended on the chance of whether the attorney after hearing his statement of the facts decided to accept the employment or decline it.

[12] We are satisfied that the language of Code Civ. Proc. sec. 1881, subd. 2 is broad enough to extend the privilege to preliminary statements to an attorney in good faith looking to his engagement, and that to give it the construction contended for by appellants would unduly restrict its scope and largely destroy the protection to persons consulting lawyers which is its policy and purpose.

The case of People v. Heart, supra, in so far as it may lend support to appellants' argument on this point is supported by no citation of authority. The facts were distinguishable. There a wife sought to employ an attorney to defend her husband and after hearing her statement he declined the employment. He was called to impeach the wife not the husband. The court said [1 Cal.App. 166, 81 P. 1019]: "The inhibition does not extend to communications between the attorney and persons having social or business relations with the client, certainly not when the statement did not purport to be conveyed to the attorney from the client, but, on the contrary, was the representation of a witness as to her knowledge of the transaction."

We are not here called upon to apply the law to a situation such as there disclosed and discussed. The court did state in one sentence of the opinion: "There is no claim that Appel was ever employed or retained." If the court by that single sentence may be said to have held that communications by a party to an attorney whom he is seeking to engage are not privileged it was dictum on the facts of that case, and a dictum which we expressly refuse to follow for the reasons herein stated.

[13] Counsel for appellants, Hollingsworth, Reid and Lamb, claim that the trial judge committed prejudicial error in questioning various witnesses, and in admonishing counsel not to interrupt witnesses before their answers were complete. In this specification counsel for the other appellants expressly refused to join. A reading of the entire record satisfies us that the case was fairly tried, and that the trial judge did not exceed the proper bounds either in seeking to elicit the facts or in maintaining the orderly procedure of the trial. It apparently cannot be repeated too often for the guidance of a part of the legal profession that a judge is not a mere umpire presiding over a contest of wits between professional opponents, but a judicial officer entrusted with the grave task of determining where justice lies under the law and the facts between the parties who have sought the protection of our courts. Within reasonable limits, it is not only the right but the duty of a trial judge to clearly bring out the facts so that the important functions of his office may be fairly and justly performed. People v. Mendez, 193 Cal. 39, 45, 46, 223 P. 65; People v. Butterfield, 40 Cal.App.2d 725, 731, 105 P.2d 628; People v. Salas, 17 Cal.App.2d 75, 79, 61 P.2d 771; Gerson v. Kelsey, 4 Cal.App.2d 158, 163, 40 P.2d 543, 43 P.2d 266; People v. Ottey, 5 Cal.2d 714, 721, 56 P.2d 193. For the same reason the trial judge is not to be unduly or unreasonably hampered in his control and conduct of the trial. Commercial U. A. Co. v. Pacific G. & E. Co., 220 Cal. 515, 525, 31 P.2d 793.

[14] Complaint is made of alleged errors in the admission and rejection of evidence. An examination of the record fails to support any of these specifications. As to certain of the witnesses who were beneficiaries under the proffered will testimony of prior inconsistent statements was admitted by way of impeachment. It is claimed that this violated the rule which excludes evidence of admissions of one beneficiary. (10 Cal.Jur. 1070.) The court showed a clear comprehension of this rule and consistently followed it. The evidence complained of was admitted for impeachment only, not as proof of any facts stated but for the limited purpose of their effect on the credibility of the witnesses making them. (27 Cal.Jur. 169.) In this there was clearly no error. The other specifications are either without support in the record or too trivial to require comment.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concur.

WATSON v. COMMON COUNCIL OF CITY OF MARYSVILLE et al.

Civ. 6974.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 31, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 27, 1943.

Hearing Granted Oct. 30, 1943.

1. Municipal corporations 🔑155

Where city charter was silent on question of removal of mayor from office and common council elected petitioner as mayor "for the ensuing year", petitioner did not occupy an office the term of which had been declared by "law" so as not to be subject to removal but held his position during the pleasure of the appointing authority notwithstanding mention of petitioner's removal and the expiration date of his term in nomination of his successor. Const. art. 20, § 16.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Law".

2. Officers 🔑7

Under constitutional provision authorizing terms of officers to be declared by law when such terms are not provided for in the Constitution, and providing that if not so declared such officer shall hold his position during the pleasure of the appointing authority, etc., the only way in which the power of removal can be limited is by fixing the duration of time of office and then providing the mode, by which the officer may be removed during the term. Const. art. 20, § 16.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑155

As respects city common council's power to remove the mayor from office, generally where the power of appointment is conferred in general terms, the power of removal at the discretion of the appointing power is implied unless limited by some positive provision of law.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑155

Under parliamentary law, a legislative body having the power to choose its own presiding officer from among its own members has the inherent power to remove such officer at will unless prohibited by some constitutional or statutory provision.

5. Municipal corporations 🔑155

Where city charter was silent on question of removal of mayor from office and charter and ordinances did not impose duties upon mayor other than the customary duties of a presiding officer of the common council, mayor held office at pleasure of the common council in absence of statute and constitutional prohibition.

ADAMS, P. J., dissenting.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; Arthur Coats, Judge.

Petition by John W. Watson against the Common Council of the City of Marysville, County of Yuba, State of California, and others as members thereof for a writ of mandamus praying that an alternative writ issue compelling respondents to show cause why petitioner should not be declared mayor of the city of Marysville. From a judgment issuing the writ, respondents appeal.

Reversed.

F. E. Carlin, City Atty., of Marysville, for appellant.

Manwell & Manwell, of Marysville, for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

The Common Council of the City of Marysville, represented by a majority of its members, appeals from an order granting a peremptory writ of mandate ordering said Common Council to declare John W. Watson, Mayor of the City of Marysville, and to permit him to exercise the duties of that office.

On the first day of February, 1943, the Common Council met in regular monthly session. After the transaction of routine affairs a motion to adjourn sine die was unanimously carried. Immediately following said motion the city clerk called the meeting to order for the acknowledged purpose of electing a Mayor. The petitioner herein was thereupon nominated and elected Mayor of the City of Marysville for the "ensuing year", and immediately assumed the duties of the office. The meeting was uneventful until the Mayor announced his committee appointments which, in the language of the clerk's minutes "caused considerable discussion". That this was not an understatement is evidenced by the fact that the following day a special meeting of the Council was called by a majority of the members, and the Mayor was unseated. Notices of the special meeting were served on all members but only those calling the meeting were in attendance. Immediately after calling the meeting to order a motion was made, seconded and carried that "Mayor John W. Watson be removed as Mayor of the City of Marysville, and that the office of Mayor be declared vacant". Thereafter a motion was made, seconded and carried "that Councilman A. Wallace Fetrow be elected to the office of Mayor of the City of Marysville to fill the unexpired term of former Mayor of John W. Watson, who was removed, which term expires on the first Monday of February, 1944".

Thereafter on the 15th day of February, petitioner John W. Watson filed his petition for a writ of mandamus praying that an alternative writ issue compelling respondents to show cause why petitioner should not be declared Mayor. After argument the petition was taken under submission by the court. On March 1, 1943, the court made its findings that John W. Watson was the duly elected Mayor of Marysville, that he was not lawfully removed, and thereupon entered judgment and issued its writ as previously mentioned.

The provisions of the Charter of the City of Marysville relative to the election of Councilmen and Mayor are found in Section 2 of Article II, wherein it is provided that "the Common Council * * * shall consist of five councilmen who shall be elected by the qualified electors of said city * * *", and Section 3 of Article II, which provides that "the Common Council shall elect one of its members as Mayor of the City to serve for such term as the Council shall direct, provided that the Council shall not have power to extend the office of such Mayor beyond the term for which he was elected Councilman."

An examination of the Charter has disclosed only one other provision relative to the office of Mayor, Section 15 of Article II, wherein it is provided that he "shall appoint the various Committees" to be provided for by ordinances. On the question of removal from office the Charter is silent. No further provision is made in the Charter relative to the selection or removal of the Mayor. The Constitution, however, does make specific provision for the situation as presented in this appeal. Section 16 of Article XX thereof provides in part as follows: "When the term of any officer or commissioner is not provided for in this Constitution, the term of such officer or commissioner may be declared by law; and, if not so declared, such officer or commissioner shall hold his position as such officer or commissioner during the pleasure of the authority making the appointment; but in no case shall such term exceed four years; provided, however, that in the case of any officer or employee of any municipality governed under a legally adopted charter, the provisions of such charter with reference to the tenure of office or the dismissal from office of any such officer or employee shall control."

Appellants herein contend that where a term of office is not set by Charter, ordinance or other law the majority members of the Council have the power to remove at will and without cause, and that this would be true whether the Mayor was considered as an officer of the city or only the presiding officer of the Council.

We are entirely in accord with appellants' first contention that the action of the Council in electing petitioner for "the ensuing year" was not such a declaration or fixing of the term of Mayor as is contemplated by said Section 16, Article XX, and therefore he could be removed at the pleasure of the Council.

[1] The sole purpose and intent of the regular meeting of February 1, and of the special meeting of February 2, was to elect a Mayor. Neither meeting was for the purpose of fixing a specific term for the office. The mere fact that in the motion nominating petitioner as Mayor is found the words "for the ensuing year" does not make the motion a declaration by law of a definite term as contemplated by the Constitution. To place any other construction on the motion would be to read into it something which obviously was not intended. Likewise the wording of the nomination of Mr. Fetrow on the following day "to fill the unexpired term of former Mayor, John W. Watson, who was removed, which term expires on the first Monday of February, 1944", is of no assistance to petitioner. The mention of the removal of Watson and the expiration date of his term is purely surplusage. Were it otherwise, respondent's contention would authenticate as law the Council's redundancy. Something which, without a doubt, was not within the contemplation of the majority members. The petitioner's term had already expired at the will of the majority. The phraseology used in the motion nominating Mr. Fetrow could not be transmuted by some strange metamorphosis into a declaration by law of a definite term as provided for in Section 16, Article XX, supra.

The cases cited by respondent are not in point as they refer to term appointments wherein removal can be only for cause (People v. Jewett, 6 Cal. 291) or specific Charter provisions setting out mandatory procedure to be followed on removal (Boyd v. Pendegast, 57 Cal.App. 504, 507, 207 P. 713) or as in the case of MacAlister v. Baker, 139 Cal.App. 183, 33 P.2d 469, wherein the provisions of the Charter specifically relating to balloting were at issue as well as the executive acts of a Council and rules of parliamentary procedure thereto; and a further point, although not raised in that appeal, of a definite term appointment.

[2, 3] In the present case the Charter of the City of Marysville contains no provision relative to the tenure of office of the Mayor, hence the petitioner held his position at the pleasure of the Council with no limitation as to his removal. Section 16, Article XX, Constitution. Therefore, the power of removal could be exercised at any time in the same manner and subject only to the same provisions as any other motion or resolution by a majority vote of the Council. Section 13, Article II of the Charter. "The only way in which this power of removal can be limited is by first fixing the duration of time of office, and then providing the mode, if deemed necessary, by which the officer may be removed during the term." Decker v. Board of Health Commissioners, 6 Cal.App.2d 334, 44 P.2d 636, 637. McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, 2d Ed. Rev. Vol. II, page 455, Sec. 582, in referring to a case such as is herein presented, states: "In such case the power of removal is regarded as incident to the power of appointment or election. Thus as it has otherwise been expressed, the general rule is that where the power of appointment is conferred in general terms, the power of removal at the discretion and at the will of the appointing power is implied, and always exists unless limited or restricted by some positive provision of the law. In brief the power to appoint carries with it the power to discharge or to remove."

We are also in accord with appellants' second contention. There is nothing in the Charter indicative of an intention to confer powers or impose duties upon the Mayor as an officer of the city other than those belonging, under common parliamentary law, to the presiding officer of a legislative body. The sole purpose of the Charter provisions cited was merely to regulate the time when and the manner in which the Council should meet, organize, and elect their presiding officer. Nor is there anything indicating an intention to create a city office distinct from that of the councilman. The Mayor must be a councilman, and when he ceases to be councilman he necessarily ceases to be Mayor whether he has occupied that position one day, one month or one year, but the termination of his office of Mayor in no way affects his status as councilman. The distinction is readily apparent, one is at the will of the Council, the other is at the will of the people, with the first being completely dependent upon a continuity of the latter.

[4, 5] The historical rule of parliamentary law always has been that a legislative body having the power to choose its own presiding officer from among its own members has also the inherent power to remove such officer at its will or pleasure unless prohibited by some constitutional or statutory provision. Here we find no such prohibition. The Mayor, as such presiding officer, being freely elected by other members of the Council, is removable by them at their pleasure in the same manner. (Cushing's Law and Practice of Legislative Assembly, Section 299.)

"A city council is a local legislative body, and in creating it the legislature, by implication, within the limits prescribed, conferred upon it all the powers and privileges in the manner of conducting their own proceedings usually recognized by parliamentary law as belonging to such bodies; and it would require a clear and explicit expression of legislative intention to that effect to justify the conclusion that it was the design to deprive this city council of the universally recognized parliamentary right of control over their own presiding officer." State of Minn. v. Kiichli, 53 Minn. 147, 54 N.W. 1069, 1070, 19 L.R.A. 779.

It is a basic fundamental of a democratic society and its institutions that the will of the majority shall prevail unless by virtue of the enactment of laws and constitutional provisions the majority, by its own act, has qualified this inherent right.

Under the authorities herein cited we must conclude that petitioner was not the occupant of an office, the term of which had been declared by law, but that he held "his position * * * during the pleasure of the authority making the appointment", Section 16, Article XX, Constitution, and secondly, we find nothing in the Charter or ordinances of the City imposing duties upon the Mayor other than the customary and usual duties of a presiding officer of the local legislative body, in this instance the Common Council, and as such he held office at the pleasure of that body.

The judgment is reversed.

THOMPSON, J., concurs.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

I dissent. Section 16 of Article XX of the Constitution expressly provides that in the case of any officer or employee of any municipality governed under a legally adopted charter, the provisions of such charter with reference to the tenure of office or the dismissal from office of any such officer or employee shall control.

The charter of the City of Marysville provides that "The Common Council shall elect one of its members as Mayor of the City to serve for such term as the Council shall direct." (Italics added.) Pursuant to this authority, petitioner was duly elected by the Council as Mayor of the City, to serve for the ensuing year. The Council thereby exercised its power and fixed a term. Petitioner thereafter held his office for such term and not at the pleasure of the Council. The charter contains no provisions regarding the dismissal from office of any of its officials nor does it authorize the Council to dismiss the Mayor without cause or without notice or hearing. Therefore, petitioner was not subject to dismissal by the Council without cause and without such notice or hearing. Boyd v. Pendegast, 57 Cal.App. 504, 507, 207 P. 713; Legault v. Board of Trustees, 161 Cal. 197, 118 P. 706, 39 L.R.A.,N.S., 519.

That petitioner was elected for a term appears not only from the minutes of the meeting at which he was elected, but from the minutes of the meeting of the following day when the Council purported to remove him and to elect his successor, which minutes recite that a motion was made, seconded and carried that Councilman Fetrow be elected "to the office of Mayor * * * to fill the unexpired term of former Mayor John W. Watson, who was removed, which term expires on the first Monday of February, 1944." (Italics added.)

As to the contention of respondents that the Mayor of Marysville is not an officer of the city, it may be noted that the Council itself refers to the position as an office, that Article 2 of the charter provides that the legislative power of the city is vested in the Mayor and Common Council, and that Article 3 of the charter provides that "The following salaries shall be paid to the several officers of the City, to wit: 1. The Mayor and each member of the Common Council * * *."

The judgment of the trial court should be affirmed.

Rehearing denied; ADAMS, P. J., dissenting.

60 Cal.App.2d 432

BARTELL v. JOHNSON.

Civ. 3304.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 7, 1943.

Hearing Denied Nov. 4, 1943.

1. Judgment ⚿460(1), 570(5)

A judgment of nonsuit, based on plaintiff's contributory negligence as matter of law, is "res judicata" and bar to subsequent action between same parties on same cause of action, so that complaint, alleging such fact, in suit to set aside default judgment for such plaintiff in subsequent action against same defendant on same cause, states cause of action.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Judicata".

2. Judgment ⚿456(1)

The lapse of over six months after entry of default judgment, without filing of motion to vacate default because defendant lacked notice thereof, did not preclude defendant from bringing independent action in equity to set aside judgment on ground of his mistake of fact in believing that matter involved was closed by affirmance of judgment of nonsuit in previous action against him by same plaintiff for same relief. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

3. Appeal and error ⚿1040(3)

In action to set aside default judgment, whether plaintiff was entitled to equitable relief because of his mistake of fact in believing that matter involved was closed by affirmance of judgment of nonsuit in previous action against him by same plaintiff for same relief was fact question for lower court, so as to require reversal of judgment based on order sustaining general demurrer to complaint.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; L. N. Turrentine, Judge.

Action by Ernest W. Bartell against J. H. Johnson to set aside a default judgment. From a judgment based on an order sustaining a general demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

J. Dean LaMotte, of Oceanside, for appellant.

J. H. Johnson, pro se.

GRIFFIN, Acting Presiding Justice.

The trial court sustained defendant's general demurrer to plaintiff's complaint without leave to amend. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment based thereon. The complaint alleges generally that on July 17, 1941, defendant herein, J. H. Johnson, filed a complaint in the municipal court of San Diego County where plaintiff here, Ernest W. Bartell, was a defendant therein; that the complaint there filed purported to allege a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff therein and against the defendant therein for and on account of personal injuries sustained by that plaintiff (Johnson), who is the defendant here, while he was on board of a certain fishing boat known as the "Sportsman", owned and operated by plaintiff Bartell; that a copy of the summons and complaint in that action was allegedly served upon Bartell on March 21, 1942; that on April 1st, 1942, a request for a default of the defendant was filed by Johnson with the clerk of that court; that thereafter, on April 2, 1942, judgment by default was made by the court and entered in plaintiff's favor and against the defendant Bartell in the sum of $770; that Bartell, by reason of accident, mistake, inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect and fraud, failed to appear and answer the complaint within the time allowed by law; that plaintiff herein had, at the time of the entry of the default and judgment, and still has, a good and sufficient defense to the action; that an unfair advantage was practised by Johnson upon the court in those proceedings; that previously, about October 14, 1940, a complaint was filed in the municipal court in San Diego wherein Johnson was plaintiff and Bartell was defendant; that the complaint purported to allege and set forth a cause of action in favor of Johnson and against Bartell for damages allegedly sustained by Johnson as the result of personal injuries sustained on board the fishing boat which was operated by Bartell. A copy of the complaint and summons was served upon Bartell in that action. He filed his verified answer thereto denying the allegations of the complaint, and in addition thereto set up a separate affirmative defense of contributory negligence on the part of Johnson. The issues raised by the complaint and answer were duly heard before the municipal court without a jury and at the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence the court granted a nonsuit. On a motion to vacate the order granting the nonsuit the municipal court judge prepared a memorandum decision which is annexed to the complaint on file herein. A copy of the written judgment entered upon the nonsuit was by reference made a part of the complaint filed herein. The complaint further alleges that on September 12, 1941, Johnson filed a notice of appeal to the appellate department of the superior court from the judgment of nonsuit; that later the appeal was duly and regularly presented, argued and heard before said appellate department and a judgment of nonsuit was affirmed. A copy of the opinion of the appellate department of the superior court was annexed to plaintiff's complaint on file herein. The complaint then alleges that notwithstanding the judgment first made and entered in the first action was denominated judgment of nonsuit, that said judgment was, nevertheless, in truth and in fact, a judgment for the defendant based upon the contributory negligence of the plaintiff; that said trial was a full and complete trial, hearing and judicial determination on the merits, and that the judgment entered thereon was and is res judicata and was a bar to any subsequent action between the same parties and involving the same identical issues and subject matter; that the reason the plaintiff Bartell failed and neglected to appear and interpose his good and sufficient defense to the second alleged cause of action after the copy of the complaint and summons in said second cause of action was served upon him on March 21, 1942, was because he was in receipt of a communication in writing from his attorney of record in the first cause of action informing him as follows: "November 25, 1941. Dear Mr. and Mrs. Bartell: I won in your case on appeal. The matter is now finally closed. Kind regards."

The complaint further alleges that plaintiff herein relied upon said communication from his attorney and was inadvertently misled thereby; that he had the utmost faith and confidence in his said attorney and by reason thereof failed to appear and answer the complaint which was served upon him, and that he was ignorant of his legal rights and procedure and for this reason was rendered unable to interpose his good and sufficient defense that existed then and still exists in his favor; that the plaintiff Johnson is an attorney at law and was well read and learned in the law, and used his knowledge to perfect an unfair and inequitable advantage of the plaintiff; that plaintiff had no notice, directly or indirectly of the entry of his default on April 1st, 1942, or of the judgment by default on April 2, 1942; that the first intimation or knowledge that this plaintiff had of said default judgment was on October 28, 1942, at which time Johnson, plaintiff in the second cause of action, caused an execution which had theretofore been issued, to be levied upon the wages and earnings of the defendant; that immediately upon ascertaining said facts the plaintiff herein proceeded to take steps to set aside that judgment; that he has been denied his legal remedy of pursuing a motion to vacate the default pursuant to section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the reason that more than six months had elapsed from the time of the entry of the default and receipt of notice of the same by the plaintiff. Plaintiff then prays that the judgment be declared to be null and void; that defendant Johnson be enjoined forever from enforcing the same; that the default of Bartell and the judgment entered by the municipal court on April 2, 1942, be set aside and vacated and that plaintiff be permitted to appear and interpose his defense to that action, and for general relief. The memorandum decision of the municipal court given on the hearing of the motion to vacate the order granting a nonsuit shows that the nonsuit was granted for the reason that the plaintiff's own evidence showed that he was guilty of contributory negligence. The written judgment of nonsuit recites that it was granted for the reason that "* * * plaintiff had failed to prove a sufficient case for the court." The written opinion of the superior court, sitting as a court of appeals, shows that a perusal of the evidence "convinces us that it sufficiently appears that there was adequate warning to plaintiff before he fell, of the condition of the deck * * *" and held that the nonsuit was proper.

[1] Respondent argues that a judgment of nonsuit is never a bar to a subsequent cause of action, and cites many cases in support thereof. Appellant concedes the general rule where the motion is granted on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, but contends such is not the rule in those cases like the one at bar, where contributory negligence is pleaded as a separate affirmative defense and is one of the issues presented and where the nonsuit was based upon the ground that the evidence introduced shows affirmatively as a matter of law that the plaintiff was not entitled to recovery. The exception above noted was referred to in Eulenberg v. Torley's, Inc., 56 Cal.App.2d 653, 133 P.2d 15, 17, where we said: "Cases are cited wherein it has been held that judgments of nonsuit based upon the insufficiency of the evidence are not a bar to subsequent suits on the same causes of action for the reason that they are not judgment on the merits. This is not the rule, however, when a nonsuit is based upon the ground that the evidence introduced shows affirmatively, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover." See also Williams v. MacDonald, 180 Cal. 546, 547, 182 P. 29, and cases cited.

Under the authorities cited it appears from the allegations of the complaint that if the judgment of nonsuit in the former action was based upon the contributory negligence of the plaintiff as a matter of law, it is res judicata and would be a bar to any subsequent action between the same parties and upon the same cause of action. If these allegations are true, plaintiff's complaint does state a cause of action.

[2, 3] The only other question presented is whether, in view of the terms of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, where more than six months elapse from the time of entry of the default judgment one might be precluded from seeking relief, plaintiff may now, through an independent action in equity, such as this one, obtain the relief prayed for in the complaint. This same question was thoroughly discussed in the late case of Hallett v. Slaughter, 22 Cal.2d 552, 140 P.2d 3. The majority opinion there held that such an action might be maintained under facts quite similar to the ones here pleaded. Appellant argues that the "dissenting minority opinion expressed the general and dominant law." The Hallett case was an action in equity seeking to set aside and vacate a judgment by default secured against Hallett in a municipal court of Los Angeles County, in which case Slaughter was awarded a money judgment against Hallett for certain sums which Slaughter collected from her by means of levies upon her salary under the municipal court judgment. Enforcement of the municipal court judgment was enjoined and the municipal court was ordered to permit Hallett to file her answer in that court within ten days after judgment in the superior court became final. The judgment of the trial court was affirmed. In that case Hallett was served with a copy of the summons and complaint in the municipal court action. She forthwith employed an attorney to represent her in the action. Her answer to the complaint was prepared by her attorney and verified by her, and was deposited in the mail accompanied by the requisite filing fee, directed to the clerk of the municipal court. On the same day a copy of the answer was mailed to the attorney for the plaintiff in the municipal court action. Neither the original nor the copy of the answer was received by the respective addressees nor returned to Hallett's attorney, but both were lost. The default of Hallett was entered in the municipal court action and judgment by default was taken against her. Execution was levied upon her salary. This was the first knowledge she had that her answer had not reached the clerk of the court and that judgment had been taken against her. The trial court found that plaintiff Hallett had a meritorious defense to the municipal court action but that by the accidental loss of her answer and the mistaken belief on her part and on the part of her attorney that the answer was on file she was prevented from setting up such defense; that the loss of the answer and the mistaken belief that it was on file were due "not to any fault or neglect of hers or her attorney"; that she was diligent in bringing the present suit and not guilty of laches; that Slaughter wilfully and with the intent to lull Hallett into a false sense of security, refrained from proceeding in that action until Hallett's rights under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure were barred by lapse of time. Soule v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 495, 89 P. 324, 325, is there quoted with approval as follows: "There are many cases holding that the party may have relief in equity from the consequences of his mistake of fact, although he was somewhat negligent in making the mistake, if his negligence in no way prejudiced the opposing party. * * * At most, it was a question of fact for the court below to determine whether or not the lack of vigilance on the part of the plaintiff was such as would not have occurred with a man of ordinary care and prudence, under the same circumstances. That court has decided the question in favor of the plaintiff, and we are satisfied with its conclusion." It then held that the plaintiff in the Hallett case was prevented by extrinsic accident and mistake of fact from presenting her defense in the municipal court action, and that such accident and mistake furnished a ground for equitable intervention under the circumstances of the case, citing many cases. We are convinced that the quoted portion from Soule v. Bacon, supra, is equally applicable to the facts pleaded in this case, and that the question whether the plaintiff in the instant action is entitled to relief in equity as a consequence of his mistake of fact is a question of fact for the court below to determine, and the majority holding in Hallett v. Slaughter, supra, is controlling in the instant case.

Judgment reversed.

MARKS, J., concurs.

Hearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and CARTER and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

WEST KEY NUMBER SYSTEM

60 Cal.App.2d 395

CITY OF CORONADO v. CITY OF SAN DIEGO et al.

Civ. 2899.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 30, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 28, 1943.

1. Waters and water courses 🔑200(1)

Where 1912 contract obligating San Diego, without limitation as to time, to sell water required by company supplying Coronado, provided that all waters covered should be delivered at so-called Coronado "Y" at a point below the lower Otay dam, and that the only changes to be made were as to the compensation for such water, and referred in provision for proration in event of a shortage to waters impounded "in the reservoirs", and did not mention any particular streams, dams, or reservoirs, contract did not cover waters later developed and saved by San Diego in the Otay system, where contract did not compel San Diego to increase its system or to develop more water.

2. Waters and water courses 🔑200(1)

Where 1912 contract obligating San Diego to sell water required by company supplying Coronado covered certain waters then being impounded by the Morena and Otay dams, other waters subsequently developed from those rivers and other watersheds would not become subject to the contract merely because a part of the water system affected by the contract was used as a conduit for the new waters.

3. Appeal and error 🔑1152

Where part of judgment awarding "a portion of the waters" to specified parties may have been intended to relate only to the portion of those waters covered by their contract or may have covered an interest in all waters subsequently developed and not covered by the contract, judgment was modified to clarify such question by making judgment relate only to the waters covered by contract.

4. Waters and water courses 🔑200(1)

Where 1912 contract obligating San Diego to sell water required by company supplying Coronado provided that covered water should be delivered at so-called Coronado "Y" and made no reference to delivery of water at foot of Market Street, San Diego began delivering some water at foot of street in 1907, and some waters were delivered at that point each year since 1907, with the exception of two years, and 1936 settlement agreement required San Diego to continue sale of water at both points, evidence established that San Diego had duty to deliver specified monthly and yearly maximums of water at foot of street.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; L. N. Turrentine, Judge.

Action by the City of Coronado, a municipal corporation, on behalf of itself and all other water consumers similarly affected and located within the territorial limits of such city, against the City of San Diego, and the California Water & Telephone Company, for declaratory relief and to fix and establish certain water rights. From a judgment, defendant City of San Diego appeals.

Judgment modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

Jean F. DuPaul, City Atty., Bertrand L. Comparet, Deputy City Atty., and Phil D. Swing, all of San Diego, for appellant.

John R. Goodbody, City Atty., and Lindley & Higgins, all of San Diego, Bacigalupi, Elkus & Salinger, of San Francisco, and Philip Storer Thacher, of San Diego, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an action for declaratory relief and to fix and establish certain water rights. Most of the facts are stated in our decision on a former appeal (City of Coronado v. City of San Diego, 48 Cal.App.2d 160, 119 P.2d 359), and need not be here repeated. We there reversed the judgment and remanded the cause for appropriate action in the trial court, with the suggestion that a new trial was unnecessary unless the parties desired to retry the issues as to their water rights apart from the contract of 1912, and as to the exact amounts of water which the city of San Diego might be compelled to furnish through a submarine pipe line.

Following that reversal a new hearing or trial was had. No attempt was made to establish any water rights independently of the contract of February 6, 1912, and no further evidence was introduced relating to that issue. The only thing that occurred in this connection was that the city of Coronado was permitted, over the objection of the city of San Diego, to amend the prayer of its complaint by substituting in two places the words "such of the waters of the Otay system" for the words "such of the waters of the Dulzura and Otay Rivers." We agree with the trial court that this amendment was unimportant, and it may be observed that other portions of the prayer and many allegations of the complaint, under which the claims of the city of Coronado were confined to the waters of the Dulzura and Otay Rivers, were not amended or changed. Some additional evidence was received on the other issue relating to the submarine pipe line.

The court then made findings and entered a new judgment, both of which largely follow the findings and judgment made and entered at the first trial but with two important changes which are material here. The court found, and entered judgment accordingly, that a portion of the waters of the Otay and Dulzura Rivers either as impounded by the Otay dam and reservoir or otherwise, and of the waters of Pine Creek River as impounded by the Barrett dam and reservoir and the waters of the Cottonwood River as impounded by the Morena dam and reservoir have been dedicated forever to the use of the city of Coronado and its inhabitants, that the rights arising by such dedication and use of said waters were recognized, confirmed and defined in the contract of February 6, 1912, and that as a result thereof there is vested in the city of Coronado the beneficial right to the use of the required quantity of said water, together with other consumers of the California Water & Telephone Company, all as set forth in the contract of February 6, 1912, subject only to the limitation contained in said contract providing for a prorating in the event of a shortage of water. It was also found and decreed that the city of San Diego was under certain obligations with respect to furnishing water through the submarine pipe line, which will be later referred to and considered. From the judgment thus entered the city of San Diego has appealed.

It is first contended that the judgment is erroneous in that it awards to the respondents, subject to the agreement for prorating in the event of a shortage, the right to a portion not only of the waters of the Otay and Dulzura Rivers, whether impounded by the Otay dam or not, but also a portion of the waters of Pine Creek as impounded by the Barrett dam and of the Cottonwood River as impounded by the Morena dam, if and when any or all of these waters may be needed to fill the requirements of the respondents, with the result that the respondents are given the right to share in the waters which were developed and saved by the appellant after the contract of February 6, 1912, was executed and after the appellant purchased the Southern California Mountain Water Company's rights and water system and assumed its burden under that contract. It is argued that our prior decision limited the respondents to an interest or share in the waters of the Otay and Dulzura Rivers and excluded them from any interest in the waters of Pine Creek and the Cottonwood River, and in all waters later developed and saved by the appellant, that this limitation has become the law of the case, and that in any event the respondents are not entitled to any of such additional waters under the terms of the contract of February 6, 1912.

On the first appeal this court pointed out that there was nothing to sustain the finding or conclusion of any particular dedication of waters to the respondents independently of and apart from the contract of February 6, 1912, and that if it was desired to adjudicate any such rights further evidence and findings were necessary. Upon the rehearing no attempt was made to establish any such rights and the respondents now expressly rely upon, and concede that their rights are to be determined in accordance with, the provisions of the contract of February 6, 1912. The main question on the former appeal was as to whether the respondents had lost the rights given them under that contract by failing to purchase and take all of the water necessary to fill their requirements. Among other questions presented was one as to whether the trial court had erred in finding and decreeing to the effect that these respondents had a prior right to all or so much as might be necessary for their requirements of the waters of the Otay and Dulzura Rivers and to the waters of Pine Creek as impounded by Barrett dam and of Cottonwood River as impounded by Morena dam. This court held that while there had been no breach of the contract of February 6, 1912, the court's finding and decree upon the other issue mentioned was neither supported by the pleadings nor by the evidence, and was opposed to established principles of law. The first judgment was reversed because it gave to the respondents water to which they were not entitled and also because it gave them, with reference to waters to which they were entitled, a prior and exclusive right in disregard of the contract which provided for prorating in case of shortage. To a certain extent, an interpretation of the contract of February 6, 1912, which was then before us, was involved in that decision. However, the matter of the interpretation of that contract, with respect to the exact waters to which it related, was not very fully presented in that case and we doubt that our former decision became the law of the case in that regard, except to the extent that we held that the respondents were not entitled to all of the waters in question and possibly in that we held that the awarding of subsequently developed water to the respondents was not supported by the evidence. While a part of our former opinion may have a bearing on the problem now before us, as for instance the statement or inference that the evidence would not support a finding that these respondents were entitled to share in the new water developed by the appellant, it is unnecessary to base our decision on this appeal upon the doctrine of the law of the case. Our present views of the meaning that must be ascribed to the provisions of the contract of February 6, 1912, coincide with those we held at the time of the former appeal.

The respondents now rest their claims to water from this general source entirely on the contract of February 6, 1912, and the question is now more definitely presented as to what waters they are entitled to share in under the provisions of that contract. The appellant contends that the respondents are limited both by that contract and our former decision to a right to share in the waters of the Otay and Dulzura Rivers, as impounded by the Otay dam. The respondent city, the real beneficiary of any water in question, contends that it has the right to share in the waters impounded and taken into the "Otay system" as that system existed on February 6, 1912. It is argued that the Morena dam was then in existence and that although the Barrett dam was not constructed until 1922, all of the waters of Pine Creek were, prior to February 6, 1912, taken through what was known as Dulzura conduit and dumped into the lower Otay basin, and that it follows that there are no newly developed waters which need be considered. This is obviously incorrect as the height of the Morena dam was increased by the appellant after 1912 and the Barrett dam was erected by it in 1922. While some of the water of Cottonwood Creek or river was, prior to 1912, impounded by Morena dam and thence taken to the reservoir formed by the lower Otay dam, and while some part of the water of Pine Creek may theretofore have been taken through the Dulzura conduit to be then impounded by the Otay dam, it clearly appears that not all of the waters now impounded by the Morena and Barrett dams were taken to the lower Otay reservoir prior to 1912, and the trial court found that the appellant, by constructing the Barrett dam and raising the height of the Morena dam and by other improvements, has increased the net safe yield of the "Otay water system" by 8.35 million gallons daily over the safe net yield of that system at the time it was acquired by the appellant. The respondent water company contends that under the 1912 contract the respondents are entitled to share in all the waters impounded by the so-called Otay water system, including the present Morena and Barrett dams, with all improvements that have been made by the appellant and also including any improvements or additions that may be made by the appellant in the future.

[1] The respondents argue that the sale by the California Mountain Water Company to the city of San Diego covered not only its dams and reservoirs but also its potential water rights and that it follows that San Diego took all of these potential rights subject to the contract of 1912. It appears that the city of San Diego had certain water rights on these streams before this purchase was made. The question here is not as to what was transferred in this sale but as to what was covered in the 1912 contract, to which the sale was subject. That contract does not mention any particular streams, dams or reservoirs. It provides that the water furnished under its terms shall be delivered at a point below the lower Otay dam, which point is known as the Coronado "Y". It provides that it is to be a continuing contract for the purpose of supplying those entitled thereto, including future consumers in the city of Coronado, "with water from the system of water works of the said party of the first part, without any limitation as to the time when such obligation to so furnish water shall cease, and that the only changes to be made" are as to the compensation for such water. And in the paragraph providing for proration in the event of a shortage the contract refers to the waters impounded "in the reservoirs." At that time the water company's system consisted of the upper and lower Otay dams and reservoir, and the Morena dam and reservoir, and the Dulzura conduit. It seems reasonable that, in thus speaking of the water company's system of water works and of prorating the water "in the reservoir", the parties were speaking of that water system as it then existed and especially when it was definitely provided that no changes were to be made with respect to this obligation to furnish water except as to the price to be paid. If the parties had intended the contract to cover not only the water system as it then existed but also future installations and developments it would have been a simple matter to have so stated. Not only was such an intention not expressed in the contract but we think it does not inferentially appear therein. There was nothing in the contract compelling the first party to increase its system in the future or to develop more water, and at the time the contract was executed it neither intended nor was expected to do so. While the city of San Diego took over that water system subject to the burden of this contract this burden was limited by the provisions of the contract itself. It would be unreasonable to interpret the contract as extending to and covering any other water system which the purchaser of that system might own, and it would be equally unreasonable to extend it by implication to the additions which San Diego subsequently made at a cost of more than $4,000,000.

This view of the intention of the parties and the meaning of the contract is confirmed by the circumstances surrounding the execution of the contract, and by the subsequent actions of the parties. The Coronado Water Company had had certain rights in Otay River water and had formerly taken water from its wells a few miles below the site where the lower Otay dam was constructed. While that dam would or might interfere with its rights and its wells it had consented to the erection of the dam because of an oral agreement under which the Southern California Mountain Water Company agreed to furnish it water from the reservoir thus created. Water was so furnished for a number of years. In 1912, both parties knew of the proposed sale of the Southern California Mountain Water Company's system to the city of San Diego and this contract of February 6, 1912, was entered into, and the sale to San Diego was made subject to it, for the purpose of continuing the arrangement which had previously been carried out under the oral agreement. The parties contracted with reference to a definite water system which then existed, knowing that this system was about to be sold and that it would not be developed or increased in any way by its then owner. The matter was not questioned for some thirty years, during which period the city of San Diego has continued to take and use all newly developed water. When this action was started by the city of Coronado the pleadings and the prayer of the complaint set forth a claim of rights only in the waters of the Otay and Dulzura rivers. Neither by pleading nor evidence did it make any other claim until the hearing after a reversal of the former judgment. In its brief, on the former appeal, the respondent water company said: "This respondent concedes that appellant is entitled to the use of new water 'developed' after purchasing the system." And again, "there is no party to the litigation contesting appellant's claim, so called, to 'new water' ". However, they are now claiming a right to share in these new waters although the evidence is exactly the same as that held by this court to be insufficient to support such a claim.

[2] This contract may reasonably be supposed to cover certain waters of Pine Creek and of Cottonwood river only because a portion of those waters were then being impounded by the Morena and Otay dams. Other waters, subsequently developed, from these rivers and other watersheds would not become subject to that contract merely because a part of the water system which had been affected by the contract was used as a conduit for these new waters. L. Mini Estate Co. v. Walsh, 4 Cal.2d 249, 48 P.2d 666. We think that the only reasonable interpretation of this contract of February 6, 1912, which determines the rights of the respondents, is that it was limited to this water system as it then existed and that it was not intended to, and did not, cover any future additions by which new water was developed.

[3] The part of the judgment which we are now considering is somewhat ambiguous in that it awards "a portion of the waters" referred to therein to the respondents. While this may have been intended to relate only to a portion of those waters which we have held to be covered by the 1912 contract, it also might be interpreted as covering an interest in all the water subsequently developed and impounded by any of the named dams. This should be clarified and the judgment accordingly modified.

The only other point requiring consideration is with reference to the duty of the city of San Diego to continue some service of water through the submarine pipe line which connects with that city's water system at the foot of Market Street. On the prior appeal this court pointed out that some water had been delivered through this submarine pipe line during most of the years since 1907 and then said: "The only evidence in this connection is that this submarine pipe line has been maintained for emergency purposes and that water was taken through it only at such times as pressure was reduced to a low stage at the northerly borders of the city of Coronado." It was then pointed out that such delivery of water had never been made pursuant to the contract of February 6, 1912, but that in a compromise agreement in 1936 it was agreed that such a service would be continued. We then held that "the only reasonable effect of this agreement in this connection would be that the respondents would have a right to have the delivery of water at the foot of Market Street continued to the extent such deliveries had been made in the past." That part of the judgment was reversed on the ground that it was too broad in that it might be interpreted as giving the city of Coronado a right to compel the delivery of all waters furnished under the 1912 contract at the foot of Market Street rather than at the Coronado "Y". While it was held that the right to such service of water was limited to the extent such deliveries had been made through the submarine pipe line in the past it was suggested that on a retrial the parties, if they so desired, might seek an adjudication of the exact amount of water for which delivery in that manner could be compelled.

On the retrial further evidence was produced on this issue, including evidence as to the maximum daily, monthly and yearly amounts of such deliveries in the past.

[4] In Paragraph VII of the judgment which was entered, the court decreed that the city of San Diego is also legally obligated to sell and deliver water at the foot of Market Street in accordance with the supplemental agreement of 1936 "to the extent such deliveries had been made in the past and as set forth in Finding of Fact No. XX." In Finding XX it was found that long prior to the supplemental contract of 1936 the city of San Diego had supplied practically continuously such amounts of water as were required by the respondent water company, as the conditions of pressure and other circumstances made desirable; that at times the amount of water thus taken has been as much as 500,000 gallons daily and 2,319,300 cubic feet per month; that said submarine line has been left open continuously by San Diego on its side of the same; and that the amount of water thus taken through the years "has been regulated and determined wholly by said California Water and Telephone Company and its predecessor in interest." It was also found in Paragraph XIX of the findings that the maximum amount of water thus delivered in any one year was 15,902,300 cubic feet. The evidence on this issue upon the retrial is precisely similar, in effect, to that of the first trial with the exception of the new evidence as to maximum quantities of water which had thus been furnished in the past. The finding that this submarine pipe line had been continuously left open by San Diego is not supported by the evidence. While there is evidence that it had usually been left open it appears without contradiction that at times it had been closed on the San Diego side, and there is no evidence which would support a finding that the respondents have a right to have the line left open on the San Diego side at all times. The evidence is wholly insufficient to support the finding to the effect that the respondent water company could take water from this source at any time and for any purpose it desired to do so, and that the amount of water thus taken has been through the years regulated and determined wholly by that company and its predecessor. The evidence is exactly to the contrary. The form of this part of the judgment is as unfortunate as it is unnecessary and unjustified. However, it may easily be so modified as to conform to the real issues presented, to the holding of this court and to all of the evidence, including that produced upon the retrial.

Paragraph I of the judgment is modified by striking therefrom the first subparagraph thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "That a portion of the waters of the Otay and Dulzura Rivers in San Diego County, as impounded by the Otay Dam and Reservoir, and of the waters of the Pine Creek River and of the Cottonwood River, being that portion and to the extent that such waters were impounded by the Otay Water System on February 6, 1912, have been dedicated forever to the use of the City of Coronado and its inhabitants, and that the rights arising by such dedication and use of said waters were recognized, confirmed and defined in the contract of February 6, 1912, executed by and between the Coronado Water Company and the Southern California Mountain Water Company and, as a result thereof, there is vested in said The City of Coronado and its inhabitants, the beneficial right to the use of the required quantity of said water, together with the consumers of the California Water & Telephone Company, as set forth in the said contract of February 6, 1912, subject to any control and regulation thereby of the State of California and the California Railroad Commission, and subject to the limitation contained in said contract of February 6, 1912, in the following words:" Also, Paragraph VII is modified by striking therefrom the last clause thereof which reads: "to the extent such deliveries have been made in the past and as set forth in Finding of Fact No. XX," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "to the extent such deliveries have been made in the past and with a maximum amount of 2,319,300 cubic feet in any one month and 15,902,300 cubic feet in any one year."

As so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

GRIFFIN, J., concurs.

60 Cal.App.2d 326

KYNE v. KYNE

Civ. 12351.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.
Aug. 28, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 27, 1943.

See 141 P.2d 221.

1. Bastards 🔑94

In statutory action against father for support of illegitimate child, allowance of attorney's fee is predicated on theory that attorney's services are part of child's right to support. Civ.Code, § 196a.

2. Bastards 🔑78, 94

In statutory action by illegitimate child against child's alleged father to establish child's paternity, wherein child prevailed, it was duty of court to award an amount sufficient for child's support within father's means including an allowance for attorney fees. Civ.Code, § 196a.

3. Bastards 🔑94
Contracts 🔑108(2)

Contingent fee contract entered into between illegitimate child and child's counsel before commencement of trial of action against child's alleged father to establish child's paternity was void as against "public policy", and did not preclude trial court from making allowance for attorney's fees and costs after child had prevailed. Civ.Code § 196a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Public Policy".

4. Appeal and error 🔑856(1)

Where trial court, in deciding issues, specifically stated that court was not determining any other issues except a specified issue and refused to pass on any other issues, reviewing court could not affirm trial court's order on any of the other issues involved, where determination of other issues depended on conflicting evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Francisco County; I. L. Harris, Judge.

Action by Tom Kyne, Jr., a minor, etc., against Tom Kyne to establish plaintiff's paternity, and to obtain support, costs and counsel fees. Judgment establishing defendant as the father of plaintiff and ordering defendant to make certain payments, was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal, 100 P.2d 806. On an order to show cause why defendant should not be punished as for contempt of court for failure to pay the judgment and why defendant should not pay reasonable attorneys' fees and costs rendered and expended since the original judgment, the trial court made an adverse order, from which plaintiff appeals.

Order reversed.

Allen Spivock, Philander B. Beadle, and Samuel Hauser, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

John Elliott Cook, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from an order denying appellant's application for further attorneys' fees and costs. In order to properly understand the issues involved upon this appeal it is necessary to review briefly the history of this litigation.

In November, 1935, plaintiff, Tom Kyne, Jr., brought this action against defendant and respondent, Tom Kyne, to establish his paternity and obtain support, costs and counsel fees under § 196a of the Civil Code. Before trial, in August, 1936, plaintiff, through his guardian, employed Allen Spivock to act as his attorney under a written contract approved by the Superior Court, which contract provided for a forty-five percent contingent fee for prosecuting said action and for procuring all necessary court costs. On December 16, 1937, after three jury trials, judgment was entered establishing respondent as the father of appellant child. The judgment ordered respondent to pay $100 per month from the date of birth to January 15, 1938, and the sum of $60 monthly thereafter for the support of said child. The judgment provided further for the payment of $150 for medical expenses, $3,500 as attorneys' fees and $1,064.20 as costs of suit. This judgment was affirmed by this court on March 22, 1940. Kyne v. Kyne, 38 Cal.App.2d 122, 100 P.2d 806.

In seeking enforcement of the original judgment various proceedings were undertaken, all of which involved legal services and expenses. In one of these, under an execution, the sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco seized the sum of $7,659.36 in the hands of respondent. Third party claims were filed and after hearing the Superior Court upheld said third party claims. Upon appeal from such order it was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal but a hearing was granted by the Supreme Court and the order allowing the third party claims was reversed. Kyne v. Kyne, 16 Cal.2d 436, 106 P.2d 620.

The present proceeding was commenced by an order to show cause why respondent should not be punished for contempt of court for failure to pay the judgment and why he should not pay reasonable attorneys' fees and costs rendered and expended since the original judgment. Upon the hearing respondent contended that, because a contingent fee agreement was entered into between plaintiff and his counsel prior to the commencement of the trials, the court was prevented from awarding fees and costs as against the respondent father. Respondent also contended that plaintiff was not entitled to further fees and expenses because of misconduct and bad faith on the part of his counsel. The trial judge first made a minute order allowing $3,250 attorneys' fees and $786 costs, but later set this order aside, stating that he had intended it only as a memorandum opinion, and made an order denying the application for payment of these further and additional fees and costs. The trial judge, throughout the course of the proceeding below, insisted that his order was based solely on the theory that, by reason of the contingent fee contract, the plaintiff was foreclosed from obtaining further attorneys' fees and costs from respondent, and in its order denying attorneys' fees, costs and expenses the trial court stated that "it appearing to the court that the services performed and costs and expenses incurred herein on behalf of plaintiff were rendered and incurred pursuant to a contingent fee contract made in August, 1936, and that therefore this court is thereby precluded from awarding attorney fees, costs or expenses against defendant.

"Now, therefore, It is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed that neither plaintiff nor his attorneys, or any thereof, is or are entitled to recovery whatever against this defendant for attorneys' fees, * * *."

The only point raised by appellant is that the trial court erred in holding that the execution of the contingent fee agreement precluded the court from awarding counsel fees and costs, and that the order appealed from must therefore be reversed.

[1] It must be taken as settled law in California that, as stated by this court in Kyne v. Kyne, 38 Cal.App.2d 122, at page 132, 100 P.2d 806, at page 811, "In cases under section 196a of the Civil Code the allowance of attorney's fee is predicated upon the theory that such legal services are part of the child's right to support." The child is not only entitled to be awarded an amount necessary for his support, but he is also entitled under our decisions to an allowance of attorneys' fees and costs.

Appellant argues that the contingent fee agreement which sought to assigr forty-five percent of all sums allowed for the support of the child was invalid and against public policy. He argues further that when it was determined to be the law in California that the child in an action to establish his paternity is entitled to the allowance of attorneys' fees as part of his right to support, the invalidity of the contingent contract was likewise determined.

[2] We believe that it must be held that the contingent fee contract here involved was against public policy and therefore void. It was the duty of the court to award for the support of the child, whose paternity has been established, an amount sufficient for his support, within the means of the father, and it was likewise the duty of the court as part of the "child's right to support" to make an allowance of attorneys' fees. The amount necessary for the child's support may not be reduced by permitting the deduction therefrom or the assignment of a part of said support money for the payment of attorneys' fees, when it is likewise the duty of the court to make an allowance for attorneys' fees as a part of the child's right to support. It cannot be argued reasonably that the contract may be upheld upon the theory that it was necessary to enable the child to establish his paternity in the face of the decisions in Arais v. Kalensnikoff, 10 Cal.2d 428, 74 P.2d 1043, 115 A.L.R. 163, and Kyne v. Kyne, 38 Cal.App.2d 122, 100 P.2d 806, in which the allowance of attorney's fees were held to be part of the child's right of support. It is true that these decisions had not been rendered when the contingent fee agreement was entered into, but this does not, in our opinion, alter the legal situation or render said agreement less contrary to public policy.

We are not aware of any decision where the precise question here presented was involved. But in the case of Lynde v. Lynde, 64 N.J.Eq. 736, 52 A. 694, 58 L.R.A. 471, 97 Am.St.Rep. 692, the Supreme Court of New Jersey held a contract made by a divorced wife with an attorney, under the terms of which he was to bring suit to recover unpaid support money and was to receive one-half thereof for his services was contrary to public policy and therefore void. In that case a large sum had been recovered and the Court of Chancery, which has jurisdiction of divorce matters in the State of New Jersey, had made an allowance of $1,000 as attorney's fees. The attorney collected a large amount of money for back support and deducted therefrom the proportion that he claimed was due him under the contingent fee contract and remitted the remainder to the wife. She refused to accept it and brought proceedings against the attorney to recover from him the amount he had deducted. In holding the contract void as against public policy and that the wife was entitled to recover back from the attorney the amount he had deducted under the contract, the court, speaking through Justice Pitney, later a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, said:

"But there is another question inherent in the admitted facts of this case; and that is whether the subject-matter of the supposed contract between Westervelt and Mrs. Lynde—to wit, her claim for allowance of alimony against her husband—was of such a nature as to admit of being subjected to an engagement of the kind referred to. It is obvious that if her claim was in its essence not assignable, if it was not property, nor a future interest in property, such as could be passed under an equitable assignment, the supposed contract cannot be sustained even if made, and made under such circumstances as otherwise would entitle it to recognition and enforcement; for, if her claim was in its nature not assignable, it could not be subjected to an equitable lien by any contract between the parties; and if any principle of public policy prohibits its assignment, the same result follows. [Page 750 of 64 N.J.Eq., page 699 of 52 A.] * * *

"It follows, as a necessary consequence of what has been said, that a wife's claim for an allowance of alimony is a purely personal right, and not in any sense a property right. It is in its nature not susceptible of assignment by the wife to another, nor capable of enjoyment by her in anticipation. And this result is fully sustained by the authorities. [Page 754 of 64 N.J.Eq., page 701 of 52 A.] * * *

"Not only does it follow, from the very nature of alimony, that it cannot be subjected in advance to a charge in favor of the solicitor through whose services it is awarded, but a like result follows from the plainest principles of public policy. [Page 757 of 64 N.J.Eq., page 702 of 52 A.]"

It should be noted that the case just cited was not a case in which the agreement was entered into before the divorce proceedings were commenced but was an agreement entered into after the divorce had been granted, so that the decision of the court that the agreement was against public policy was not, in any sense, based upon the ground that it might encourage or promote the granting of a divorce or prevent a reconciliation, which was the chief ground upon which the contract in Newman v. Freitas, 129 Cal. 283, 61 P. 907, 50 L.R.A. 548, was declared void. However, in Newman v. Freitas, 129 Cal. at page 292, 61 P. at page 910, the court also said: "Contracts for contingent fees paid attorneys were not tolerated at all at common law, but in this and perhaps most of the states such contracts are allowed, if not favored. This is on the ground that otherwise a party without the means to employ an attorney and pay his fee certain, and having a meritorious cause of action or defense, would find himself powerless to protect his rights. In divorce cases, however, the law has taken care that the wife shall not be without assistance, in proper cases, either to prosecute or defend such actions. The court, in its discretion, may require the husband to pay as alimony any money necessary to enable the wife not only to support herself, but also to prosecute or defend the action, and is given ample power to enforce such order. The reason or necessity, therefore, does not exist in such cases, as in the others, for allowing contingent attorney's fees, and, where the reason ceases, the rule or law also ceases."

In 1 Cal.Jur. p. 951, it is stated: "It appears to be a general rule among the courts of this country that a periodical allowance of alimony, whether temporary or permanent, is not susceptible of assignment by the wife to another or capable of enjoyment by her in anticipation of its accrual."

[3] We conclude, therefore, that the contingent fee agreement was void as against public policy because its effect, if carried out, would be to deprive the child of the money necessary for his support and would defeat the very purpose of the statute, which was designed and intended to provide support for an illegitimate child whose paternity had been established. Holding this view we must conclude also that the trial court erred in holding that the execution of said agreement precluded the court from making any allowance for attorneys' fees and costs.

In what we have heretofore said we do not wish to be understood as intimating that the contingent fee agreement, even if valid, would preclude the court from making an allowance for attorneys' fees. The attorneys for appellant have never sought to recover any fees under said agreement and have, at all stages of the proceedings since the order of the trial court awarding attorneys' fees following the verdict of the jury establishing respondent as the father of the child, disclaimed any intention so to do and renounced any rights under said contract. But in view of our conclusion that said agreement was void it is unnecessary to discuss its effect if valid.

[4] The greater part of respondent's brief is devoted to criticism of the methods employed by appellant's counsel and in accusations and imputations of fraud by appellant's counsel upon the trial court and unclean hands. Respondent asserts that appellant's counsel did not disclose to Judge Parker the existence of the contingent fee agreement at the time the order allowing counsel fees was made and also that one of the counsel for appellant sought to obtain the sum of $1,000 for providing a bond of $1,000 to hold the money levied upon under the execution hereinbefore referred to pending the appeal from the order of the Superior Court upholding the third party claim to said money. Respondent cites authorities to support his contention that a court may deny attorney fees where the attorney is guilty of professional misconduct. It is only fair to state that the evidence in this matter is conflicting and that the evidence of any misconduct on the part of appellant's counsel is by no means conclusive. But it is quite clear from the record that the trial judge in denying the application for supplemental counsel fees and costs did so upon the sole ground that the contingent fee agreement precluded the allowance of counsel fees and costs. While it is ordinarily true, as argued by respondent, that the appellate court need not concern itself with the reasons which impelled the trial court to act, as it is the judicial action and not the judicial reasoning or argument which is the subject of review, yet where, as here, the trial court specifically stated that it was not determining, but refused to pass on all other issues except the existence of the contingent fee agreement, an appellate court is not justified in holding that the order may be supported on any of the other issues involved where the determination of those issues depends upon conflicting evidence. If the court had merely made an order denying the application without specifically stating that it did so on the sole ground of the existence of the contingent fee agreement, the argument of respondent upon this point might be upheld.

In Mathews v. Mathews, 49 Cal.App. 497, at page 500, 193 P. 586, at page 587, the court said:

"Respondent urges that, because of the fact that his motion sought relief on the further ground that the financial circumstances of the parties had changed, we should uphold the ruling of the lower court. We are cited to numerous authorities holding that, in the event of a ruling by the lower court on a demurrer or motion for new trial, the respondent is not limited to the reason assigned by the trial court for its action, but may urge all the grounds specified in his demurrer or notice of motion. Burke v. Maguire, 154 Cal. [456], 461, 98 P. 21; Morgan v. Robinson [Co.], 157 Cal. 348, 107 P. 695. The soundness of these decisions cannot be questioned, but they are not applicable to the present case.

"This appeal is prosecuted from the special order of the trial court above quoted. The proceeding was instituted by defendant's motion. The court did not grant such motion, but made an order which shows by its very terms that it was based upon the proposition that a provision for the payment of alimony in an interlocutory judgment of divorce cannot be enforced unless it is carried into the final decree. Such is not the law. The trial court's order was erroneously made, and is reversed."

In Taylor v. Talbert, 134 Cal.App. 595, at page 597, 25 P.2d 888, the court said:

"Respondent argues that, notwithstanding this ruling we should affirm the judgment because of the equities supporting it, basing her argument on the evidence that, without legal advice, she was induced to part with her separate property through the creation of the joint tenancy. It may be that the transactions were a fraud upon the wife under the terms of section 2235, Civil Code, as interpreted in McKay v. McKay, 184 Cal. 742, 195 P. 385, but that issue was not tried because the trial court limited respondent to the theory of the original Siberell decision [Siberell v. Siberell, Cal.App., 295 P. 385]. Hence the record does not present a case where this court could affirm the judgment upon the evidence before us; it is one where the issue should be fully tried in the trial court.

"The judgment is reversed."

We hold, therefore, that in view of the fact that the trial court specifically stated it was not passing upon the issues of fraud, unclean hands and misconduct injected into the proceeding by respondent, on all of which issues the evidence was conflicting, but was basing its decision entirely upon the view that the existence of the contingent fee agreement precluded the allowance of attorneys' fees and costs, the order must be upheld, if at all, upon the correctness of that view. An appellate tribunal should not support the order upon the ground that counsel may have been guilty of fraud or misconduct when the trial court specifically declined to do so. Issues of fact are properly tried and determined in the trial court.

In our opinion the trial court erred in its view that it was precluded by the contingent fee agreement from making an allowance to appellant for supplemental attorneys' fees and costs and the order must therefore be reversed. Upon a new hearing all issues involved may be heard and determined.

The order is reversed.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concur.

60 Cal.App.2d 379

EARL RANCH, Limited, v. Dale MARCHUS et al.

Civ. 13886.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Aug. 30, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 16, 1943.

Hearing Denied Oct. 28, 1943.

1. Landlord and tenant 🔑200(1)

Where lease of alfalfa farm provided base minimum rental of $2,000 a year with an increase of rent of $200 a year for each additional dollar per ton of hay over $10, the words "provided as follows" preceding a schedule showing various prices up to $15 per ton and $3,000 rent, in absence of words indicating that schedule was illustrative, indicated intent that $3,000 should be maximum rental.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Provided as Follows".

2. Landlord and tenant 🔑37, 200(1)

In construing a lease court must give effect to each provision if it can, and must therefore attribute to parties a purpose in setting out a schedule of rents fixed on a sliding scale.

3. Landlord and tenant 🔑200(1)

Where rent schedule in lease was unambiguous as to sliding scale up to rental of $3,000 per year, but implication that rent might take a higher rate must be found in language uncertain and ambiguous, implication could not be sustained. Civ.Code, § 1654; Code Civ.Proc. § 1864.

4. Landlord and tenant 🔑182

Under statute providing that language of contract shall be interpreted most strongly against party who caused uncertainty and that promisor is presumed to be such party ordinarily tenant, with reference to obligation to pay rent under original lease, is "promisor". Civ.Code, § 1654.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Promisor".

5. Landlord and tenant 🔑33

Where clear provisions of agreement modifying lease indicated that agreement was in favor of tenants, landlord was "promisor" within meaning of statute declaring that language of contract shall be interpreted most strongly against party who caused uncertainty to exist and that promisor is presumed to be such party. Civ.Code, § 1654.

6. Landlord and tenant 🔑37

Leases are to be construed as are other contracts and, so far as uncertainties are concerned, according to nature of specific obligation under consideration.

7. Landlord and tenant 🔑37

In construing a lease, intention of parties is to be ascertained from consideration of entire instrument, but nature of each covenant must be examined when it is necessary to determine which party is promisor or obligor thereunder. Civ.Code, § 1654.

8. Landlord and tenant 🔑200(2)

Where landlord agrees to abatement of rent which has been already fixed by lease, he is the "promisor" in a simple promise in favor of tenant, and ambiguities in agreement must be resolved in favor of tenant under presumption that authorship of ambiguity is with landlord. Civ.Code, § 1654.

9. Landlord and tenant 🔑213(2)

Where lease provided that tenant should receive credit on rent due for repairs on engine on premises upon presentation to landlord of receipted bill, and year's rental under lease was payable one-half on July 1 of following year, in absence of any time specified within which repair bill should be paid and approved, landlord suffered no prejudice by judgment allowing tenant credit for repairs if he paid therefor before July 1.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Peirson M. Hall, Judge.

Action by Earl Ranch, Limited, against Dale Marchus and Chris Marchus for declaratory relief involving construction of rights of parties under a lease of agricultural land. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

William Katz, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frederick M. Kraft of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHINN, Acting Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff in an action for declaratory relief involving the construction of the rights of plaintiff landlord and defendant tenants under a lease of agricultural land, the questions in issue being related to rentals to be paid by the tenants and certain credits to be given by the landlord. The principal controversy is over the construction to be given to a written modification of the lease with respect to the payment of cash rentals. The subject of the lease was an alfalfa ranch of some 640 acres and the farming equipment thereon. The lease was entered into February 1, 1940, and was for a term of six years at an annual cash rental of $3,000, payable in stated installments. In November, 1940, the parties executed a modification agreement, the pertinent provisions of which read as follows:

"Therefore, it is understood and willingly agreed that the rental as provided in the main Lease as above referred to, shall and will, on and after January 1, 1941, be as follows and not otherwise. The date and time of payment as provided in the main Lease shall remain as set forth in said Lease. The base minimum rental fixed herein shall be $2000.00 per annum, same to be paid in three equal installments as provided in the main Lease as referred to herein. A graduate scale of rental to be paid over and above and in addition to the $2000.00 rental as herein stated shall be as follows: For each additional Dollar per ton for hay, over and above $10.00 per ton shall provide that the Lessee, Dale Marcus, shall pay $200.00 per year, provided as follows:

"When hay is $11.00 per ton, rental to be $2200.00.

"When hay is $12.00 per ton, rental to be $2400.00.

"When hay is $13.00 per ton, rental to be $2600.00.

"When hay is $14.00 per ton, rental to be $2800.00.

"When hay is $15.00 per ton, rental to be $3000.00.

In arriving at the average price per ton for hay and wherein fractions of the Dollar per ton is arrived at, all fractions of the Dollar shall bear its just proportion to each ton the same as if there were no fractions involved. It is provided further that all additional payments over and above the $2000.00 as mentioned herein, shall be paid in three equal installments and at the same time as the annual installments are made as provided in the main Lease."

There were further provisions for the averaging of the prices of two different grades of hay and for the deduction from the average price of the sum of $2 per ton for hauling, these provisions having the effect of reducing by $2 per ton the prices which would govern the rental to be paid as stated in the agreement. Between the date of this agreement and the commencement of the action, the price of hay through different periods, commencing April 1, 1941, ranged between $17 and $23 per ton.

It is the contention of plaintiff that rental under the modification agreement was increased at the rate of $200 per year with each increase of $1 per ton above as well as below the price of $15. Defendants contended, and the trial court held, that the maximum rental under the agreement was $3,000 per year, which it would be under the agreement at a price of $15 per ton, and that any increase above that price gave the landlord no additional rental. We favor the construction of the lease which was given it by the trial court. Each of the parties insisted upon the trial that the agreement is unambiguous. Plaintiff, at one stage of the case, sought to prove the substance of a conversation between plaintiff's president and one of the defendants during the negotiation of the agreement. Defendants' objection to the evidence was sustained and, as we read the record, plaintiff acquiesced in the ruling, stating in part: "If Your Honor please, I was going to say that in my opinion I think the objection might be well taken, but still, on this proposition I want it put up before the Court and have a ruling on it, and that is when a contract is reduced to writing, the intention of the parties is to be ascertained from the writing alone, if possible, and my thought is that the intention of the parties can be ascertained from the writing alone." The trial court reached its conclusion as to the meaning of the agreement without resort to extrinsic evidence, and upon the appeal there is no contention on either side that it is ambiguous.

From our analysis of the agreement we are of the opinion that it is open to the construction which the trial court gave it and that such construction can properly be given without resort to the rules which pertain where ambiguity and uncertainty exist. We are further of the opinion that when it is attempted to apply the sliding scale of rental to prices above $15 per ton the agreement becomes ambiguous and subject to rules of interpretation that would not otherwise obtain.

[1, 2] Disregarding for the moment the question of ambiguity, we see that the agreement called for an increase of $200 per year above the base rental of $2,000 for every dollar per ton in the price of hay above $10 and that the price schedule was preceded by the words "provided as follows." Without this qualifying clause there would have been no ceiling upon the rental to be paid, and yet if we adopt this construction we will have ignored the proviso and will have held that it is superfluous and means nothing. But under familiar rules of construction we must give effect to each provision of the agreement if we can and must therefore attribute to the parties a purpose in setting out the schedule to express their understanding with relation to the matters embraced therein. It definitely covers prices between $10 and $15 per ton and it ends at the higher figure. Plaintiff contends that the scale was added merely by way of illustration as to how the increases would operate, but why such an illustration would have been necessary, in view of the clear provisions that preceded it, is not at all clear. We deem it more reasonable to conclude that the parties did not have in mind and did not intend to contract especially with reference to prices of hay in excess of $15 per ton. It is significant, we think, that the schedule ended at the price which would give the lessor the rate of rental stipulated in the original lease. If it had been intended that the rent should go higher, that could have been easily expressed by adding to the schedule "et cetera" or an equivalent expression. The failure of the lessor to have such words incorporated appears to us to be a sufficient answer to the contention that it would not have consented to a lower rental when hay was cheap unless it had intended to recoup the loss when hay went above $15 per ton. The trial court was therefore warranted in construing the schedule as a modification of the preceding general provision for increased rentals based upon varying prices of hay, and in concluding that the maximum rate would be one which would return an annual rental of $3,000.

[3-5] If, under the construction urged by plaintiff, the agreement would be ambiguous, pertinent rules for the interpretation of ambiguities fortify the conclusion reached by the trial court. We have seen that the rental schedule is quite clear insofar as it runs in favor of the lessees, that is to say, as to all prices of $15 per ton and under, but we find no clearly expressed intention that the lessees should pay at a higher rate than $3,000 per year. If there is any implication that the rent might take a higher rate, it must be found in language which is uncertain and ambiguous. Certain rules of construction which we shall note forbid us to resolve ambiguities in favor of plaintiff to establish the implied obligation for which it contends. Section 1654 of the Civil Code provides that in cases of uncertainty not removed under other rules, the language of a contract shall be interpreted most strongly against the party who caused the uncertainty to exist, and that the promisor is presumed to be such party. Under the rule stated in section 1864 of the Code of Civil Procedure, where the parties do not agree in their understanding of a contract and different constructions are equally proper, the one is to be taken which is more favorable to the party in whose favor the provision in question was made. It would be helpful to know which party was responsible for the ambiguity which led to the dispute, but the record does not show the authorship of the agreement or any part thereof. Under the cited code sections it is necessary to determine which party was the promisor under the modification agreement, for if the new basis of rental was in favor of the tenants, they would have the benefit of the stated rules of construction. It must be conceded that if we were considering the tenants' obligation to pay rent under the original lease, they would be the promisors and presumptively, under the circumstances, responsible for the ambiguity. Simen v. Sam Aftergut Co., 1915, 26 Cal.App. 361, 147 P. 1058. But we think the reverse is true as to the modification agreement which we construe, so far as its clear provisions go, as one in favor of the tenants. There is nothing in the evidence as to the price of hay on or before the date of the agreement nor for about five months thereafter. But if it was not a fact that the price was less than $15 a ton, the parties evidently expected it to become a fact and the rent was lowered to meet either that existing or expected situation, as otherwise the agreement would have been without purpose. The promise of the landlord was essentially one to accept a rental as low as $2,000 per year. Whatever the range might be between $2,000 and $3,000 per year, the tenants were under no obligation to bring the total up to the higher figure. They were released from their obligation to pay a flat $3,000 per year, which was certainly to their advantage. It would be indeed difficult to doubt that the rental obligation was modified because the flat rental would be unduly heavy at prices below $15 per ton. It would not be so clear, of course, that the tenants were the beneficiaries of the agreement if they were required to pay at rates above $3,000 per year, but we need not consider that situation because we cannot give the contract such a construction. Its failure to provide for higher rates except through a construction which would resolve ambiguities in favor of the landlord leaves it, so far as construction is concerned, as one strictly in favor of the tenants.

[6, 7] Respondents make the broad assertion that leases of real property are to be construed against the landlord and that all uncertainties therein are to be resolved in favor of the tenant. The cases they cite on this proposition do not support it and it is clear that there is no such general rule. Leases are to be construed as are other contracts and, so far as uncertainties are concerned, according to the nature of the specific obligation under consideration. The code sections already referred to are all sufficient for the purposes of the present case. Executory contracts as a rule specify reciprocal executory obligations. In a lease, uncertainty as to the obligations of the landlord or as to those of the tenant may result from erroneous or incomplete expression. While it is to be borne in mind that the intentions of the parties are to be ascertained from a consideration of the entire instrument, it is nevertheless true that the nature of each covenant must be examined when it is necessary to know which party is the promisor or obligor thereunder. Such a one may be found to be the lessee, as in Simen v. Sam Aftergut Co., supra, 26 Cal.App. 361, 146 P. 1058, where the original rental obligation was involved, or it may be found to be the lessor, as was the case in Edward Barron Estate Co. v. Waterman, 1916, 32 Cal.App. 171, 162 P. 410, and Butt v. Maier & Zobelein Brewery, 1907, 6 Cal. App. 581, 92 P. 652, where questions were involved as to the length of the term of leases.

[8] It seems entirely clear that if a landlord agrees to an abatement or reduction of rent which has been already fixed by contract, he is making a simple promise in favor of his tenant. If the agreement is ambiguous the doubts must be resolved in favor of the tenant where, as is true here, authorship of the ambiguity is presumed to be with the landlord as the promisor. We must give effect to this rule of construction even though the trial court believed the agreement to be unambiguous. It is ambiguous only under plaintiff's interpretation.

On November 28, 1940, another agreement was made respecting the terms of the lease and providing as follows: "5. Lessees agree to repair and house that certain Venn Severin Diesel Engine located on the leased premises and that the cost thereof, estimated at approximately one thousand dollars ($1,000.00), shall be credited on account of rent due from Lessees to Lessor for the year 1941 upon presentation by Lessees of an itemized paid bill for said repairs and approval thereof by Lessor. 6. Lessees will pay to Western States Life Insurance Company as and when due for and on account of Lessor all interest for the year 1941 on the note executed by Lessor to Western States Life Insurance Company and secured by deed of trust on the leased premises, which said interest payments shall be credited on account of rent due from Lessees to Lessor under the Lease, as amended, and any balance due as and for rent after crediting said interest payments, as well as the cost of repair of the Venn Severin Diesel Engine in the preceding paragraph mentioned, shall be deferred to 1942 and such balance shall be paid in two equal installments, the first of which installments shall be payable on the first rent day and the second installment on the next succeeding rent day in the year 1942 and shall be in addition to the rentals due from Lessees to Lessor for the year 1942."

[9] The lessees repaired the engine at a cost, as found by the court, of $2,495.11. Defendants were allowed for these repairs a credit of $1,070.42 on account of rent due for the year 1941. Defendants were also allowed a credit of $373.28 on 1941 rent for money paid under the provisions of said paragraph 6 to Western States Life Insurance Company. These credits, totaling $1,443.70, were to be allowed, under the judgment, only in the event that defendants paid $2,495.11 for repairs to the motor before July 1, 1942. It was found that the rental under the lease for 1941 amounted to $3,000 and that after deducting the credits of $1,070.42 and $373.28, there remained a balance of $1,556.30. This the court determined was payable one-half July 1, 1942, and one-half October 1, 1942, the same to be in addition to the 1942 rentals. The judgment was dated April 29, 1942, or some two months before the first payment of deferred rental in the amount of $778.15 fell due. Plaintiff's contention seems to be that the court erred in giving defendants until July 1, 1942, within which to pay for the repairs to the engine and still obtain a credit of $1,070.42 upon the 1941 rent. It is claimed that the failure of defendants to pay the cost of the repairs and to procure the lesssor's approval of the itemized bill in 1941 was a waiver of the right to receive any credit on account of the repairs. No time was specified within which the repair bill should be paid and approved. Deferring it until July 1, 1942, did not affect the amount of the rent to be received by plaintiff, nor did it extend defendants' time, as stated in the agreement, to pay the balance of the 1941 rent in two installments during 1942. It is not clear how plaintiff could have been prejudiced by the court's construction of this provision of the agreement, which we deem to be a reasonable one as between the parties. There was no requirement that the credit be established prior to the time when it was to be applied on the rental account, namely, when the first installment of the balance of the rent fell due.

There are no other points urged by appellant which require discussion. We are of the opinion that the case was decided correctly in all material respects and that there is no reason for disturbing the judgment. The judgment is affirmed.

PARKER WOOD, J., concurs.

SHAW, Justice pro tem., concurs in the judgment.

Hearing denied; TRAYNOR, J., dissenting.

60 Cal.App.2d 413

BARE v. RICHMAN & SAMUELS, Inc., OF NEW YORK et al.

Civ. 6780.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 31, 1943.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Sept. 29, 1943.

Hearing Denied Oct. 28, 1943.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1039(9)
Pleading 🔑369(1)

Where first cause of action was in assumpsit on contract to market grapes and second was for conversion of grapes, trial court properly reserved ruling on motion to require plaintiff to elect until after introduction of evidence, and inadvertent failure to pass upon motion was harmless, where court assumed that both causes were founded on assumpsit and depended upon same set of facts, and only one judgment was rendered for market value of grapes.

2. Factors 🔑5

Written contract, by which vineyard operator appointed corporate distributor his agent with exclusive right to market 15 cars of grapes to be delivered to distributor during designated season, established relationship of "principal and factor" between vineyard operator and distributor.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Principal and Factor".

3. Factors 🔑23

In the absence of specific agreement to contrary, it is duty of a factor to obey directions of his principal to sell fruit for a price not less than specified sum per ton, though factor has made advances on the crop. Civ. Code, § 2027.

4. Factors 🔑23

Grower's oral instructions to corporate distributor's local agent to sell grapes for cash market value f.o.b. distributor's packing shed or not at all was not an attempt to modify written marketing contract obligating distributor to sell grapes at best possible price, and distributor having been notified of instructions was liable to grower for loss resulting from sale of grapes at less than such market value, though distributor had loaned money to grower on security of crop mortgage. Civ.Code, § 2027.

5. Contracts 🔑238(2)
Principal and agent 🔑175(2)

A written contract may be modified or replaced by subsequently executed oral agreement between the parties, or by such agreement with agent of a party, when such agreement is accepted or ratified by the principal. Civ.Code, §§ 1698, 2307.

6. Factors 🔑43

Grower's action for unpaid portion of market value of grapes sold by factor in violation of instructions for less than market value was in effect an action in assumpsit for damages for breach of an agreement to pay the market value of grapes, and, where market value at designated point on the respective dates grapes were delivered and accepted for shipment was established, grower was entitled to interest on such unpaid portion of market value. Civ.Code, §§ 2027, 3287.

7. Factors 🔑43

An action for breach of agreement to pay the market value of produce f.o.b. a designated point may be based on either express or implied contract where it appears that terms of agreement have been fully performed with the exception of paying the stipulated sum thereunder.

8. Factors 🔑43

In action for breach of agreement to pay the market value of produce f.o.b. a designated point, mere fact that proof is required to determine the market value of produce on a designated date does not prevent allowance of interest thereon under statute providing for recovery of interest on damages certain or capable of being made certain by calculation. Civ.Code, § 3287.

9. Factors 🔑23

Where factor to whom grapes were consigned for sale under written marketing agreement had loaned money to grower on security of crop mortgage, crop mortgage and marketing agreement must be construed together.

10. Factors 🔑43

Where sale of grapes at public auction was necessary to prevent loss from deterioration after shipment to New York and refusal of proposed buyer to accept delivery and was authorized under crop mortgage to factor, factor was not liable to grower for breach of marketing agreement to sell at not less than market value f.o.b. factor's packing shed in California. Civ. Code, § 2027.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; G. B. Hjelm, Judge.

On rehearing.

Former opinion reversed and judgment below modified and as modified affirmed.

Prior opinion, 138 P.2d 372.

Frank C. Lerrigo, of Fresno, and Sanford Solarz, of New York City, for appellant.

Edward T. Taylor, of Modesto, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice.

This case is determined on a rehearing. It appears that the defendant, Richman & Samuels, Inc., a produce marketing corporation of New York, has appealed from a judgment for $2,224.10 and interest, which was rendered against it in a suit in assumpsit for the unpaid portion of the proceeds from sales of fifteen carloads of grapes, pursuant to the terms of an agreement consigning the grapes to the corporation for sale. The plaintiff orally directed the corporation to sell the grapes for market value f.o.b. Turlock, which was shown to be $27.50 per ton. A portion of the grapes was sold at auction, contrary to instructions, for much less than that price. Judgment was rendered on the basis of $27.50 per ton, less stipulated commissions and costs of marketing. From that judgment the corporation has appealed.

The defendant, Richman & Samuels, Inc., is a marketing corporation having its home office in New York City. It operated a fruit packing shed at Turlock, California, which was in charge of its local managing agent, Frank C. Belier. The plaintiff owned and operated a vineyard in Stanislaus County. July 3, 1935, Frank C. Belier, as agent for said marketing corporation, executed on behalf of the distributor a written contract with the plaintiff, by the terms of which the plaintiff "appoints the distributor his agent with exclusive right to market fifteen cars of Alicante Buschet grapes * * * to be delivered to the distributor during the season of 1935." The contract is silent with respect to the price for which the grapes were to be sold. It provided that the grapes were to be delivered at a shipping point "to be designated by the distributor;" that the grower would pay the distributor "a reasonable packing and loading charge;" together with commissions for the sale of said grapes in the sum of "seven per cent of the gross sales on all auction and delivered sales and ten per cent on all f.o.b. sales." The contract also made the distributor "sole judge of the quality of the fruit furnished," and provided that "The distributor agrees to use his best efforts to sell said grapes at the best possible price."

Incident to the foregoing contract, the plaintiff also executed a crop mortgage on the grapes produced on his Stanislaus County farm to secure advances which were paid to him by the distributor. The sum of $1,500 was advanced on that mortgage.

The plaintiff orally instructed the agent, Belier, to sell all of the grapes for market value f.o.b. Turlock, and not otherwise. The agent notified the corporation of that fact. The corporation acknowledged receipt of that notice. All grapes were delivered to the defendants at the packing house in Turlock with that understanding. There is substantial evidence that the market value of the grapes at Turlock was $27.50 per ton. Six carloads of grapes were delivered between the dates of October 8 and 14, 1935, and sold for $27.50 per ton. Nine other carloads were delivered from October 15 to 17, 1935. Some of them were sold, contrary to said instructions, for less than $27.50 per ton. Two carloads were shipped to Eastern markets and sold at auction for comparatively small amounts.

This suit in assumpsit was brought against both the corporation and its agent for the unpaid portion of the market value of the grapes at the rate of $27.50 per ton, aggregating the sum of $2,224.10. The complaint contains a second count which is based on an alleged conversion of a portion of the grapes and the proceeds thereof. The action was dismissed as to the defendant, Belier. Defendants' motion to require the plaintiff to elect whether he would stand upon his cause of action in assumpsit or for conversion of the grapes was denied.

The cause was tried by the court sitting without a jury. Findings were adopted favorable to the plaintiff in every respect. The court specifically found that the written consignment contract was duly executed authorizing the corporation to sell said grapes as a factor or agent of plaintiff for market value f.o.b. Turlock, "and not otherwise"; that the market value of grapes f.o.b. Turlock, at the times of all deliveries, was $27.50 per ton; that a specified portion of the grapes was sold contrary to instructions for less than said price, and that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the unpaid portion of the value of said grapes in the aggregate sum of $2,224.10, together with interest from August 26, 1936. Judgment was accordingly rendered against the corporation for that amount. From that judgment this appeal was perfected.

The appellant contends that the court erred in refusing to compel the plaintiff to elect between his cause of action in assumpsit, and his alleged cause based on conversion of the grapes; that the corporation's local agent had no authority to modify the written agreement or to accept the grapes for sale at market value f.o.b. Turlock; that the findings and judgment to the effect that the market value of the grapes f.o.b. Turlock was not shown to be $27.50 per ton at the times of deliveries are not supported; that interest on the amount found to be due plaintiff was wrongfully allowed, and that the factor is not responsible to his principal for loss sustained by a necessary auction sale when the purchaser refused to accept delivery of the shipped grapes.

[1] We are of the opinion the appellant was not prejudiced by the refusal of the court to require the plaintiff to elect whether he would rely upon his first cause of action in assumpsit, or upon the second count for alleged conversion of the grapes, in spite of the fact that the first cause is founded on contract and the second upon tort. The appellant relies upon the case of Bank of America N. T. & S. Ass'n v. Hill, 9 Cal.2d 495, 71 P.2d 258, in support of that contention. The court properly reserved its ruling upon that motion until the introduction of evidence was completed. Inadvertently that motion was not finally determined. The court did not find upon the second count that the grapes were converted. The findings which were adopted on that cause clearly assumed that the allegations merely amounted to another method of stating an action for assumpsit. Since the court evidently assumed that both counts were founded on assumpsit and depended on the same set of facts, the omission to pass upon defendants' motion for an election was harmless. Only one judgment was rendered upon the entire action for the market value of the unpaid portion of the grapes, together with interest. It has been held that, under such circumstances, the defendants are not prejudiced by a failure to require the plaintiff to elect his remedy as between two separate counts upon different statements of facts. Bank of America N. T. & S. Ass'n v. Hill, supra; Glantz v. Freedman, 100 Cal.App. 611, 280 P. 704.

We are of the opinion the written agreement which is involved in this case was not modified or changed by the plaintiff by the mere direction to sell the grapes for market value f.o.b. Turlock, for the reason that the contract was silent with respect to the price for which they were to be sold. There is ample evidence that the plaintiff specifically directed the agent, Belier, to notify the factor corporation to sell the grapes for market value f.o.b. Turlock, or not at all, and that the corporation received those instructions. October 10, 1935, two days after the first load of grapes was delivered to Belier at Turlock, he received a telegram from the New York Corporation, saying: "We have good market & you can tell growers can sell cars US–1 Alicante Carignanes 27.50 net perhaps more."

October 15th Belier received another message from his principal, reading:

"4 cars 27.50 5 cars

"We sold AOOAF Bare Alicante ACEQA net have AOOAB open [unsold] will work hard trying to sell them today you explain this to Bare tell him not to worry that will work hard sell his grapes f.o.b. Quote $27.50 local."

Clearly the corporation knew the plaintiff had directed the selling of the grapes for market value f.o.b. Turlock at $27.50 per ton. It is conceded some of the grapes were sold for less than that sum. Such sales were in absolute disregard of the instructions received from the plaintiff. There is no dispute regarding the quantity or weight of the grapes received by the distributor.

[2, 3] The relationship of principal and factor between the parties to this appeal is not disputed. That relationship clearly existed. Rhee v. L. K. Small Co., 83 Cal. App. 339, 256 P. 839. In the absence of a specific agreement to the contrary, it is the duty of a factor to obey the directions of his principal to sell fruit for a price not less than a specified sum per ton, even though advances have been made on the crop. Sec. 2027, Civil Code; Rhee v. L. K. Small Co., supra; Bones v. Fusco, 21 Cal. App.2d 476, 69 P.2d 911; Cooper v. American Fruit Growers, Inc., 137 Cal.App. 494, 30 P.2d 558. The foregoing authorities hold that a factor is liable for damages for failure on his part to obey the instructions of his principal with respect to the sale of produce. In those cases the factors failed to sell the produce to proposed purchasers when they were directed by the principals to do so. In the present case the factor deliberately sold a portion of the grapes for less than market value, which was shown to be $27.50 per ton, contrary to the specific directions of the plaintiff to sell them for market value f.o.b. Turlock or not at all. In the Rhee case, the language of the contract was strikingly similar to the agreement in the present case with respect to the factor's promise to "use his best efforts" to sell the products for "the best possible returns". In this case the factor agreed to "use his best efforts to sell said grapes at the best possible price."

Section 2027 of the Civil Code provides that: "A factor must obey the instructions of his principal to the same extent as any other employee, notwithstanding any advances he may have made to his principal upon the property consigned to him, except that if the principal forbids him to sell at the market price, he may, nevertheless, sell for his reimbursement, after giving to his principal reasonable notice of his intention to do so, and of the time and place of sale, and proceeding in all respects as a pledgee."

[4] We conclude that the distributing corporation, as a factor, was liable for the loss sustained by the plaintiff for failure to obey his instructions to sell the grapes for market value f.o.b. Turlock.

[5] In view of our conclusion that this case does not involve the modification or change of a written agreement, it becomes unnecessary for us to determine whether there was an acceptance by the corporation of the instructions given by the plaintiff to its agent. Those instructions did not amount to a change of the terms of the contract. It is true that a mere agent is not ordinarily authorized to modify or rescind the contract of his principal. State Finance Co. v. Hershel California Fruit Products Co., 8 Cal.App.2d 524, 47 P.2d 821; Thomas v. Anthony, 30 Cal.App. 217, 157 P. 823; 6 Cal.Jur. 374, sec. 225. It is also true that a written contract may be modified or even replaced by a subsequent, executed oral agreement between the parties, or by such agreement with an agent of a party when it is accepted or ratified by the principal. Sec. 1698, Civil Code; Sec. 2307, Civil Code; State Finance Co. v. Hershel Calif. Fruit Products Co., supra; Curtiss v. Starr and Co., 85 Cal. 376, 24 P. 806; 6 Cal.Jur. 375, sec. 226; 17 C.J.S., Contracts, p. 866, § 377b; 2 Williston on Contracts, Rev.Ed., 1702, sec. 591. There may be adequate evidence in this case to show that the New York distributing corporation ratified the directions of the plaintiff to the agent Belier with respect to the minimum price for which the grapes were to be sold, but since we assume that was not a change of the terms of the contract, it is not necessary to determine that question of fact.

[6-8] We are of the opinion the court properly allowed the plaintiff interest, under the provisions of Section 3287 of the Civil Code, on the amount found to be due to him for the unpaid portion of the purchase price of the grapes, from August 26, 1936. That section reads: "Every person who is entitled to recover damages certain, or capable of being made certain by calculation, and the right to recover which is vested in him upon a particular day, is entitled also to recover interest thereon from that day, except during such time as the debtor is prevented by law, or by the act of the creditor, from paying the debt."

The interest provided for in the preceding section is in the nature of damages to compensate for the detriment caused by the delay in paying a liquidated sum of money at the time when it is due. This, in effect, is an action in assumpsit for damages for breach of an agreement to pay the market value of grapes f.o.b. Turlock. That form of action may be based on either an express or implied contract when it appears that the terms of the agreement have been fully performed with the exception of paying the stipulated sum thereunder. 7 C.J.S., Action of Assumpsit, p. 116, § 9 bb. Interest may be allowed upon a liquidated amount which one is entitled to recover, or when that sum may be rendered certain by mere calculation, and the right to recover is vested on a particular day. The mere fact that proof is required to determine the market value of property on a designated date, will not prevent the allowance of interest under Section 3287 of the Civil Code. Farnham v. California Safe Deposit & Trust Co., 8 Cal.App. 266, 273, 96 P. 788; Brazil v. Azevedo, 32 Cal.App. 364, 367, 162 P. 1049; 8 Cal.Jur. 791, sec. 49; 15 Am.Jur. 583, sec. 166. In the text last cited it is said in that regard: "The more liberal view now prevails that interest will be allowed as damages where the demand, although unliquidated, is of such a nature that the amount is capable of ascertainment by mere computation, or can be established with reasonable certainty, or determined by reference to well-established market values."

In the text found in 8 California Jurisprudence, page 791, section 49, it is said: "The fact that proof of the market value of goods is required to establish the amount of a claim does not render it incapable of being made certain by calculation, so as to prevent the allowance of interest under section 3287 of the Civil Code."

Since the contract, as alleged and determined by the court, provided for payment of the grapes at market value f.o.b. Turlock, which was ascertained to be $27.50 per ton, the conditions upon which interest may be allowed under Section 3287 of the Civil Code have been fulfilled. The amount is not uncertain, according to the preceding authorities, because market value at Turlock was agreed upon, and that was definitely determined from the evidence adduced. Nor was the "particular day" on which the plaintiff was entitled to recover uncertain, for, pursuant to the positive instructions, the corporation was bound to sell the grapes for market value f.o.b. Turlock on the respective dates when they were delivered and accepted for shipment. The specific dates of delivery of each and every carload of grapes was alleged and proved.

[9, 10] The crop mortgage which is attached to the complaint authorizes the distributor to sell the grapes at auction. Two carloads were so sold to prevent loss from deterioration after they had been shipped East and acceptance had been refused by a purchaser. The plaintiff was credited on carload number 25470 the net sum of $96.50, and upon carload number 28720 the net sum of $97.10. The average net sum received for the carloads which were sold for $27.50 per ton f.o.b. Turlock was $372.00 per carload. We have held that crop mortgage should be construed together with the written marketing contract. It authorized the corporation to sell those two carloads at auction. It is therefore entitled to credit for the difference between the f.o.b. Turlock market value of $27.50 per ton, which was included in the judgment for $2,224.10, and the previously mentioned net returns for said two carloads sold at auction. That difference to which the corporation is entitled to credit is the aggregate sum of $550.40. Subtracting that sum from the amount of the judgment which was rendered leaves a balance of $1,673.10. The judgment is therefore modified to allow the plaintiff and cross-defendant judgment against the defendant and cross-complainant the sum of $1,673.10, together with interest thereon from August 26, 1936, at the rate of 7 per cent per annum.

As so modified the judgment is affirmed. The respondent may recover his costs on appeal.

ADAMS, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

Hearing denied; TRAYNOR, J., dissenting.

60 Cal.App.2d 387

WALLACE v. SPEIER et al.

Civ. 6802.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 30, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 29, 1943.

Hearing Denied Oct. 28, 1943.

1. Innkeepers 🔑10

An innkeeper is not absolutely liable for injuries suffered by a guest, but he does owe a duty of at all times maintaining premises in a reasonably safe condition.

2. Innkeepers 🔑10

Innkeeper cannot escape liability to a guest for injuries sustained as result of defect in a fixture by mere fact that originally fixture was properly installed, since innkeeper must use reasonable care to guard against wear and tear of ordinary use or time alone.

3. Innkeepers 🔑10

The negligence of an innkeeper in the protection of his guests from personal injury while in that part of hotel open to public implies a lack of the due care he is required to exercise.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1)
Innkeepers 🔑10

A decision on the question of the exercise of due care by an innkeeper for protection of guests from personal injury is within sound discretion of trial judge, whose findings will not be disturbed on appeal unless there is an entire lack of evidence or reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom to support his conclusions.

5. Innkeepers 🔑10

In action by guest against innkeeper for injuries sustained in fall while attempting to escape hot water from defective plumbing fixture, evidence sustained finding that innkeeper failed to exercise required due care to keep fixture repaired.

6. Innkeepers 🔑10

Where entire assembly of hot water faucet suddenly came off wall while hotel guest was taking shower and shot spray of hot water across bathroom, doctrine of "imminent peril" applied; hence mere fact that guest, in confusion of the moment, attempted to keep fixture attached to wall did not make him chargeable with contributory negligence.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Imminent Peril".

7. Negligence 🔑72

Under doctrine of "imminent peril", if person injured is confronted with an unexpected situation of danger to himself and under circumstances does what a reasonably careful and prudent person would have done if similarly situated, he cannot be chargeable with contributory negligence.

8. Evidence 🔑512, 513(2)

On question of due care as to frequency with which inspection of plumbing fixtures in hotel should be made, opinion evidence of plumbers as expert witnesses as to life of such a mechanism and as to frequency of inspection was competent. Code Civ.Proc. § 1870, subd. 9.

9. Evidence 🔑506, 547

An expert cannot be asked whether a structure is a safe one, or whether certain methods are prudent, but facts may be elicited from the witness from which the conclusion inevitably follows. Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 9.

10. Evidence 🔑512

Action of trial court in permitting expert testimony of plumbers relative to frequency with which inspection of bathroom fixtures in hotel should be made was not objectionable as empowering the witnesses to decide for the court whether or not hotelkeeper used ordinary care since trial judge was not bound to accept their testimony. Code Civ.Proc. § 1870, subd. 9.

11. Evidence 🔑508

The statute granting witness right to express opinion on question of science, art, or trade when he is skilled therein is to be liberally construed. Code Civ.Proc. § 1870, subd. 9.

12. Evidence 🔑512, 513(2)

Trial court did not abuse discretion in permitting experienced plumber to express opinion pertaining to life of plumbing fixtures and frequency with which they should be inspected. Code Civ.Proc. § 1870, subd. 9.

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; W. T. Belieu, Judge.

Action by L. D. Wallace against Leon Speier and others for injuries sustained in a fall in defendants' hotel. Prior to the decision defendant Speier died and the cause was dismissed as to him. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants Leo Lippow and Palace Hotel appeal.

Affirmed.

Gerald M. Desmond, of Sacramento, for appellants.

George R. Freeman and Elmer Laine, both of Willows, and Hubert I. Townshend, of Oroville, for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendants Leo Lippow and the Palace Hotel, a partnership, from a judgment rendered against them and in favor of the plaintiff and respondent L. D. Wallace, in the sum of $7,616.50. The personal injuries suffered by the plaintiff were found by the trial court to have been the result of the defendants' negligence in failing to keep a shower in one of their hotel rooms in reasonable repair.

At the first trial the jury failed to agree. At the conclusion of the second trial, which was before the court alone, the defendants moved for a nonsuit and a dismissal of the complaint on two grounds: First, that it appeared as a matter of law that the plaintiff was negligent at the time of the accident, and that his negligence either proximately caused or proximately contributed to the cause of the accident, and, second, that there was no evidence in the record of negligence on the part of either of the defendants. The motions were denied and the case was then submitted on briefs. After the filing of the briefs, but prior to the court's decision and entry of judgment, the defendant Leon Speier passed away, and the cause was dismissed as to him. Thereafter the court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law and entered judgment against Lippow, the surviving member of the partnership, and the Palace Hotel.

The record discloses that the plaintiff registered at the Palace Hotel in Willows on December 13, 1939, and was assigned to a room. Before retiring that evening he took a shower in the adjoining bathroom. At that time no defect was noticed in the operation of the faucet which regulated the flow of hot water through the shower head. On the morning of December 15, he again used the shower. It was then that the entire faucet assembly came off the wall. His testimony concerning the actual happening of the accident is in part as follows: "I turned on the shower, standing facing the shower or, rather to one side, * * * I turned it on with my left hand, * * * and as I turned it there was very little water, * * * just a little sprinkle, so I gave it another turn or so, I don't know just how many possibly two or three altogether and I noticed there was no water * * *. There was water coming around the escutcheon, I call it the collar, and I could see the thing was loose, * * * so I shoved it back and tried to turn it * * * but the escutcheon hit the valve and I was unable to make the connection and as I shoved it back against it it made a spray on my hands and arms so I had to let loose of it so when I let loose of it, the whole of the stream went across the bathroom and in moving away from it, I fell backwards, * * * the back of my head hit the floor * * * and my back hit the rise in the floor of the bathroom."

The defendants, called by plaintiff under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, testified that the shower fixture in question was installed in 1925; that since that date both defendants had "spasmodically" and "casually" inspected the showers by turning them on and off to ascertain if they were working properly, and that visual examinations also were made to discover leaks, if any. The porter testified that it was his job to inspect each bath and shower every day, following somewhat the same procedure as did the defendants. The maid, however, in answer to a direct question, "Did anybody else in that hotel have anything to do with the shower in room 109, other than yourself," replied, "Not that I have seen in there," and that such inspections were a part of her work. No internal inspection of the fixture had been made since its installation.

The plaintiff called as expert witnesses two plumbers, who testified that leaks were an indication that the plumbing was out of order; that water from a leaky valve would show in only two places, either out of the shower head or through the threads of the nut which holds the valve in place and thence down the wall; that the inspections described by the defendants would discover leaks only if the water was turned on; that the only means to definitely determine whether or not the fixture was operating properly was to remove the faucet handle and examine the assembly itself; that if the fixture was out of order the pressure exerted on the valve by virtue of the faucet handle being turned tightly to the right would keep the valve in place, thereby allowing no water to escape; that if, while still out of order, the handle was turned to the left releasing water through the valve to the shower head such release of pressure on the valve would permit water to leak through the threads on the valve; that therefore only when the shower was turned on could it leak, but because of the action of the shower head in spraying the water over the walls it would be difficult to determine whether the water on the wall or on the shower head itself was leaking water or was water which would normally flow through the shower head when the water was turned on.

One of the plumbers, Mr. Louderback, testified that he was called to repair the fixture on the afternoon of the accident and that he replaced the fixture with the parts as he found them. The other plumber, Mr. Savage, testified to finding ordinary string or twine, which apparently had been used for packing around the valve, when he examined the fixture shortly before the first trial; that string was not a proper packing; that when the string was compressed by turning the faucet to the right it bound the valves so that when the pressure was released by turning the handle to the left it would have a tendency to likewise turn to the left the nut which held the valve so that ultimately it would loosen the entire assembly. There was further testimony that no trouble would be expected from good fixtures properly installed for from six months to a year after installation, and it might not give trouble for a much longer time.

It is the first contention of defendants, appellants herein, that the testimony shows neither actual nor constructive knowledge by them of any defect in the shower, and that inasmuch as innkeepers are not insurers of their guests, such knowledge would have to be shown in order to hold them liable.

[1, 2] It is true an innkeeper is not absolutely liable for injuries suffered by a guest. 14 Cal.Jur. However, he does owe a duty of at all times maintaining the hotel premises in a reasonably safe condition. Goldstein v. Healy, 187 Cal. 206, 201 P. 462; Robertson v. Weingart, 91 Cal.App. 715, 367 P. 741. He cannot escape liability by the mere fact that originally the fixture was properly installed. The wear and tear of ordinary use or time alone should be guarded against with the exercise of the same degree of reasonable care. Ingalls v. Monte Christo Oil & Dev. Co., 23 Cal.App. 652, 139 P. 97.

[3] His negligence in the protection of his guests from personal injury while in that part of his hotel open to the public has been defined to imply a "lack of due care." Adams v. Dow Hotel, 25 Cal.App.2d 51, 76 P.2d 210, 211. In the last citation the porcelain handle of the hot water faucet broke, cutting plaintiff's hand. The trial court, in effect, found that the handle was in a dangerous and unsafe condition and that such condition could not have been ascertained by a reasonably careful inspection, which actually was made.

[4] It is apparent that the trial court in that instance was of the opinion that a proper inspection had been made and that therefore the defendant had used due care. Due care cannot be defined by arbitrary exactness—what might be entirely reasonable in one case might be wholly inadequate in another. Therefore, "a decision on the question of the exercise of due care, in other words, the negligence of defendant, is one within the sound discretion of the trial judge. He having exercised such discretion, his findings will not be disturbed on appeal unless there is an entire lack of evidence or reasonable inferences to be drawn from the evidence to support his conclusions." Adams v. Dow Hotel, supra.

[5] The instant case does not present a question involving a latent defect in parts or materials used in the assembly of the fixture as in the Dow Hotel case, but rather it is a condition amounting to a lack of repair of the fixture itself. Abundant testimony in this regard was introduced at the hearing. The trial court then found that the defendants "negligently and carelessly failed and neglected" to keep the plumbing fixtures in "proper condition and repair" and "negligently and carelessly" permitted the fixture to be out of repair.

Under such circumstances it naturally would follow that this court could no more conclude, than could the court in the Dow Hotel case, supra, that the findings lack all evidentiary support.

[6, 7] The defendants further contend that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Here the plaintiff was confronted with an unexpected situation. The entire assembly of the hot water faucet had suddenly come off the wall, shooting a spray of hot water across the bathroom. Such evidence would demand the application of the doctrine of imminent peril, for "even though he may have erred in his judgment, if he did under the circumstances, what a reasonably careful and prudent person would have done under a similar situation, he cannot be chargeable with contributory negligence." Bennett v. Hardy, 108 Cal.App. 473, 291 P. 903, 906. How then can this court say as a matter of law that plaintiff was negligent in trying to keep the fixture attached to the wall? Whether a person in a position of imminent peril acted reasonably is a question of fact for the court or jury. The conduct of the party must be viewed in the light of the confusion and excitement of the moment and not in view of the circumstances and surroundings of one not in danger. 19 Cal.Jur. 600.

[8, 9] Defendants' final contention attacks the admission by the court of the expert testimony by the two plumbers relative to the frequency of inspection of the fixtures and the length of time the fixtures could be used with reasonable safety. It is defendants' position that to allow the witnesses to express opinions called for by such questions is to allow the witnesses to decide for the court whether or not the defendants used ordinary care. Surely such a witness should be allowed to testify to the life of such a mechanism, and that if such question be proper then it should follow that testimony by one skilled in that work, relative to the frequency of inspection, should likewise be admissible. In Giraudi v. Electric Imp. Co., 107 Cal. 120, 40 P. 108, 110, 28 L.R.A. 596, 48 Am.St.Rep. 114, wherein the court allowed an electrician to testify as to what matters should be taken into consideration in locating electric wires, "and whether it was proper or prudent management to put them so low over a metallic roof," the Supreme Court, in affirming the judgment for the plaintiff, stated: "The cases do undoubtedly hold that an expert cannot be asked whether a structure is a safe one, or whether certain methods are prudent, but all hold that facts may be elicited from the witness from which the conclusion inevitably follows. To illustrate, In Bemis v. [Central Vermont] R. Co., 58 Vt. 636, 3 A. 531, an expert was held not allowed to testify 'that it was not prudent to use a certain hoisting apparatus with less than three men, on a stone of two tons heft.' Yet the court said there might have been shown 'the number of men required, danger in its use by a less number, its safety and adequacy when properly used,' and added that then the jurors could as well decide for themselves. Of course, the point had been as effectively decided by the expert as though the first question had been answered. The difference is largely one as to the form of the question; and, while I do not mean to say that it is immaterial, or that such an error may never be cause for reversal, I do not think it should be so held here."

[10] The ultimate questions to be determined by the trial court were whether or not the facilities provided by the defendants for the use of the plaintiff were reasonably safe, and had the defendants taken reasonable precaution by inspection or otherwise to maintain the fixtures in such condition? During the course of the examination of both expert witnesses many facts were brought out relative to the construction, operation, maintenance and inspection of shower fixtures. The questions to which objections were made were but the summation of their testimony as directed towards the ultimate questions to be decided by the court.

As was said in the case of Silveira v. Iversen, 128 Cal. 187, 60 P. 687, 688, wherein a witness was allowed, over objection, to answer the question: "How can it be determined, Mr. Ericson, whether a rope has become rotten and unsound?" The Supreme Court stated: "The question might have been in different form, but it was proper to inquire whether the defect could have been discovered by the use of ordinary diligence, which was really what was done."

The trial court did not empower the witness to decide any facts nor was he bound to accept their testimony. That the trial court did not have this in mind is evidenced by his response to defendants' objections. "He is learned and schooled in a line of mechanics, * * * I am not * * * I think the court should know with what frequency, if any, such mechanisms should be inspected * * *. In arriving at the question as to what constitutes reasonable care this, in my opinion, would be material." With all due deference to the learned trial judge and with sincere humility evidenced by a reluctant confession of our own mechanical deficiencies we venture to agree with his forthright observation that the witnesses knew far more concerning the intricacies of plumbing than did he.

[11] Section 1870, subdivision 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure specifically grants to a witness the right to express his "opinion on a question of science, art, or trade, when he is skilled therein." To attach to that section limitations of the nature proposed by the defendants would be to unduly restrict the province of the opinion evidence, for if that section is to have any degree of efficacy, then of necessity it must be viewed in the light of liberality. It might be said with little fear of contradiction, that rarely, if ever, does an expression of opinion by a so-called expert not amount to that which either the court or jury might adopt as a basis for the ultimate decision in the case. However, that does not mean that the witness is deciding the case or that in so testifying he is usurping the functions of the jury. He is merely giving an opinion based upon his technical training which the court may or may not accept as testimony that "was proper and necessary to an enlightened consideration and a correct disposition of the ultimate issue." Fonts v. Southern Pacific Co., 30 Cal.App. 633, at page 641, 159 P. 215, at page 218.

The case of Howland v. Oakland C. St. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 513, 521, 42 P. 983, 985, presented a situation very similar to that found herein. There, the Supreme Court, in passing upon a question involving opinion evidence, stated:

"We cannot say the court abused its discretion in holding that the witness McCarthy had shown himself sufficiently qualified to answer the hypothetical question tending to elicit his opinion as to whether the car of appellant could with proper care and attention have been stopped in time to avoid the collision. This is a question largely for the determination of the trial judge, and his ruling will not be disturbed, except error clearly appears. In this case it does not so appear. * * * Nor is there any question but that the subject was one upon which the opinion of the witness was admissible. The manner of running electric cars, their rate of speed, and the facility with which they can be stopped or handled, is not a matter of such common knowledge that the jury could judge as intelligently as one skilled in their use. It was therefore proper to resort to expert evidence." (Italics ours.)

[12] Likewise we cannot say that the court abused its discretion in the present case.

The judgment is affirmed.

ADAMS, P. J., and THOMPSON, J., concurred.

TAYLOR v. CLARKE.

Civ. 14041.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 8, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 24, 1943.

Hearing Denied Nov. 4, 1943.

1. Partnership ⚷53

In action for dissolution of a partnership and an accounting, wherein defendant claimed sole ownership of property involved, evidence sustained findings that written lease of property by plaintiff to defendant was executed merely to facilitate operation of business and was not intended to be binding and that a partnership existed between the parties.

2. Partnership ⚷64

That certificate of doing business under a fictitious firm name required by statute did not show name of person who furnished capital for the business as a partner had no material bearing upon question of existence of a partnership as between the parties thereto, since filing of certificate is required to protect third parties and does not affect relation of partners as between themselves. Civ.Code, § 2466.

3. Evidence ⚷428

Testimony relative to conversations regarding circumstances under which written lease was executed was admissible when offered for the purpose of showing there was in fact no binding agreement and not for the purpose of varying terms of a written instrument.

4. Appeal and error ⚷1056(1)

Exclusion of evidence which, if admitted, would not have affected the judgment rendered or compelled entry of a different judgment, was not prejudicial.

5. Partnership ⚷53

Evidence as to manner in which one claiming to be a copartner and seeking dissolution of alleged partnership treated business relations with defendant in his income tax returns would carry little weight upon question of existence of the partnership.

6. Appeal and error ⚷173(2)

Defense under the maxim of clean hands could not be raised for the first time on appeal.

7. Partnership ⚷26

Oral agreement under which capital for business venture was furnished by one party, who acted as the silent partner of another who actively operated the business, was not illegal or against "public policy".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Public Policy".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Parker Wood, Judge.

Action by J. Hartley Taylor against F. A. Clarke, also known as Frederic A. Clarke, for dissolution of a partnership and an accounting, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint seeking to establish his sole ownership of the property involved. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Marshall Stimson and Fred Horowitz, both of Los Angeles (Leslie S. Colyer, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Brooks Gifford and William E. Fox, both of Pasadena, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

The defendant in an action to have a partnership declared, for dissolution of the partnership and for an accounting, appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiff. After a trial of the issues presented by the pleadings, the trial court found in favor of the allegations of plaintiff's amended complaint and granted judgment accordingly. Defendant by his cross complaint sought to have established his sole ownership of the property involved; but the court found against defendant upon the issues raised by his cross complaint.

Briefly, the controversy arose out of the following situation, revealed by the transcript: Appellant had induced respondent to invest in the stock of a corporation in which appellant was interested. Thereafter the corporation was declared bankrupt; and appellant then proposed that respondent purchase the assets of the bankrupt corporation. Respondent advanced the money for the purchase of the assets; and respondent told appellant that after purchase of the assets respondent would allow appellant to run the business and respondent and appellant would be equal partners in the business and divide the profits equally. The assets of the bankrupt corporation were purchased and the business was thereafter carried on by appellant, who kept in touch with respondent regarding the operations. Respondent also advanced certain additional sums when appellant requested the money as necessary to carry on the business.

[1, 2] The greater part of appellant's contentions are in the final analysis concerned with the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of the trial court; and appellant's principal argument in this regard is directed to the effect of a purported lease of the assets involved, made by respondent to appellant, after the alleged partnership arrangement had existed for about three months. There is evidence that this lease was executed at appellant's request, that it was understood the lease was not intended to affect the partnership relation, and that respondent executed the lease upon the representation by appellant that it would enable appellant to run the business more conveniently. The trial court found that the lease was to have no legal force or effect between the parties, that it was not to be binding upon either plaintiff or defendant, that the terms of said document were never to be performed by either of the parties, that said document was to be a sham, and that it was made only so that the business could be operated more conveniently by the defendant and appellant. The record reveals support for such a finding in the evidence. Appellant also adverts to the fact that the certificate of doing business under a fictitious firm name, required by section 2466 of the Civil Code and filed by appellant, did not show the name of respondent as a partner. This fact has no material bearing upon the question of the existence of a partnership between the parties. The certificate of doing business under a fictitious firm name is required to be filed for the protection of third parties (Andrews v. Glick, 205 Cal. 699, 272 P. 587) and does not affect the relation of partners as between themselves. The transcript of the proceedings in the court below clearly reveals sufficient support for the findings made by the court.

[3-7] Appellant claims error in the admission of testimony relative to conversations respecting the circumstances under which the purported lease was executed by respondent, contending that such testimony was an attempt to vary the contents of a written instrument. It is at once evident that the testimony in question was not introduced for the purpose of varying the terms of a written instrument, but was introduced for the purpose of showing that there was in fact no valid or binding agreement at all. Appellant also contends that the trial court erred in denying appellant's request that respondent be required to produce for inspection and use of appellant upon the trial, the income tax returns of respondent, and in sustaining respondent's objection to the questions propounded by appellant relative to said income tax returns. Appellant argues that the manner in which respondent treated his business relations with appellant in his income tax returns made under oath was very material in determining whether a partnership actually existed. Without passing upon the merits of appellant's contention, it is apparent that the admission of such evidence for consideration by the trial court could not affect the judgment rendered by the court or compel the entry of a different judgment. The refusal of the trial court to consider the excluded testimony cannot under the circumstances be held prejudicial. As a matter of fact, such evidence, if held material, would carry but slight weight upon the question of the actual existence of a partnership. Appellant seeks to invoke the equitable maxim of "clean hands", but appears to have raised this question for the first time upon this appeal. Resort to such defense must be had in the trial court to be available, and appellant may not raise this point for the first time on appeal. Moreover, it does not appear that the maxim is applicable to the facts of the present case. There is no merit in appellant's contention that the alleged oral agreement of partnership upon which respondent relies is against public policy and void. As between the parties themselves there was no illegality or impropriety in respondent furnishing capital for the business venture and acting as the silent partner of appellant. It is unnecessary to discuss other specific exceptions taken by appellant.

The judgment is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and WHITE, J., concur.

Hearing denied; CARTER and SCHAUER, JJ., dissenting.

60 Cal.App.2d 504

In re GIANOLI'S GUARDIANSHIP.

Civ. 6959.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Sept. 16, 1943.

Hearing Denied Nov. 8, 1943.

1. Guardian and ward 🔑8

Under Probate Code section providing that Superior Court of county in which minor resides or is temporarily domiciled may appoint a guardian for his person or estate or both, Superior Court had jurisdiction to appoint guardians for a minor where minor lived in county for seven years with her father's permission, though her father lived in a different county. Probate Code, § 1440.

2. Guardian and ward 🔑10

A child over 14 years of age may nominate her own guardian, and such nominee, if approved by the court, must be appointed. Probate Code, § 1406.

3. Guardian and ward 🔑10

Where child over fourteen years of age whose mother was dead nominated as guardians her uncle and aunt and preferred to live with them, and her father purposed to remove her from the surroundings in which she had lived for many years to live in another county, facts sustained finding of necessity and convenience which Probate Code section required for appointment of aunt and uncle as guardians, notwithstanding that all persons were concededly fit to have child's custody. Probate Code, § 1440.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Hilliard Comstock, Judge.

Petition by Floyd Walker and Ida Walker to be appointed the guardians of the person of Roberta Mabel Gianoli, a minor child over the age of fourteen years, opposed by Fred Gianoli, child's father, contestant. From an order appointing petitioners guardians of the minor, contestant appeals.

Affirmed.

Taft & Spurr, of Ukiah, for appellant.

Preston & Gibson, of Ukiah, for respondent.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

Floyd Walker and Ida Walker, his wife, petitioned the Superior Court of Sonoma County to be appointed the guardians of the person of Roberta Mabel Gianoli, a minor child over the age of fourteen years, their petition being accompanied by a nomination of petitioners by the said minor.

Petitioners represented that the mother of said minor was dead, and that the child had been permitted by her father to make her home with petitioners at Cloverdale for the past seven years; that during said time the child had gone from grammar school into high school, and had built her life around her present home and surroundings, which she desired not to have changed; that her father had now demanded custody of said child and intended to remove her to another county; that it was necessary and convenient that a guardian of said minor be appointed; that petitioner Ida Walker is the maternal aunt of said child, and that petitioners are fit and proper persons to have her care and custody.

The father of said child contested the granting of said petition, urging that the facts stated by petitioners did not show either necessity or convenience for the appointment of a guardian. He admitted that he had permitted said child to remain with petitioners for the purpose of attending school, but alleged that he had paid for her maintenance. He further alleged that he had remarried and had a home for said child at Hopland, that he was capable of maintaining her, and that he and his wife both desired to have the child make her home with them.

At the trial of the proceeding it was stipulated that both petitioners and contestant are fit and proper persons to be appointed guardians of said child. Mrs. Walker testified that on the death of her sister, the mother of said child, Fred Gianoli had let petitioners take Roberta and her younger brother, and that both children had been living with them since that time; that their father had paid $10 per month each for their care, but was somewhat behind in his payments; that Roberta was in her second year in high school, had formed associations with her schoolmates and was happy and contented; that she and her husband were able and willing to have the custody of Roberta, and to maintain and support her; and that Roberta had signed the nomination freely and voluntarily without any request or suggestion on her part. Roberta testified that she desired to remain with her aunt and uncle, did not want to leave her present home and go to Hopland, that she had signed the nomination of petitioners as her guardians of her own free will, and that she desired that they be appointed her guardians. Fred Gianoli testified that he lived near the high school in Hopland, that he was employed by the Highway Commission with a salary of $140 per month, that he had allowed Mrs. Walker to have the two children and had paid for their maintenance until a short time before when a certain controversy had arisen between him and the Walkers, that he had visited the children often and that they had been well cared for, that he had furnished them clothing and had taken them on frequent week-end trips to the home of his father and mother in Mendocino County.

The trial court found that said child was temporarily domiciled in Sonoma County and had been so domiciled for more than six years; that she had been permitted by her father to make her home with the Walkers, during which time she had gone from grammar school into high school, and had built her life around her present home in Cloverdale; that her father had not, until September 1, 1942, made any request that her custody be surrendered to him; that he intended to remove her to another county, but that said child did not desire to have her surroundings changed and was desirous of having petitioners appointed as her guardians; that said petitioners were fit, proper and suitable persons to have the custody of said minor, and that it was necessary and convenient that a guardian or guardians of her person be appointed; that the nomination by the minor was her free and voluntary act.

An order appointing petitioners guardians of the person of said minor followed, and contestant has appealed, contending that the Superior Court of Sonoma County had no jurisdiction of the guardianship proceedings, and that neither necessity nor convenience for the appointment of a guardian was shown.

Section 1440 of the Probate Code provides that when it appears necessary or convenient, the superior court of the county in which a minor resides or is temporarily domiciled may appoint a guardian for his person or estate, or both, and that the appointment may be made upon the petition of a relative or other person on behalf of the minor, or on petition of the minor, if fourteen years of age. And under the provisions of Section 1406 of the Probate Code, if a child over the age of fourteen years nominates his guardian such nominee must be appointed if approved by the court.

[1, 2] The child involved in this controversy had lived in Sonoma County for seven years, and was obviously within the jurisdiction of the Court of that County within the meaning of Section 1440, supra. Collins v. Superior Court, 52 Cal. App. 579, 199 P. 352; In re Green, 67 Cal. App. 504, 226 P. 76; Ricci v. Superior Court, 107 Cal.App. 395, 290 P. 517; In re Guardianship of Kerr, 29 Cal.App.2d 439, 85 P.2d 145; In re Guardianship of Burket, Cal.App., 137 P.2d 475. She had arrived at the age of fourteen years and therefore had an absolute right to select and nominate her guardian or guardians, and her nominees having been found to be fit and proper persons, the court was required to appoint them. In re Kirkman's Estate, 168 Cal. 688, 144 P. 745; In re Estate of Meiklejohn, 171 Cal. 247, 152 P. 734; Collins v. Superior Court, supra; In re Guardianship of Kerr, supra; Guardianship of Burket, supra. As for appellant's contention that neither necessity nor convenience for the appointment of a guardian was shown, the court said in Guardianship of Burket, supra, that (a) the minor had reached the age of fourteen years, (b) he had nominated his father, (c) he preferred to live with his father, and (d) his age was such as to require "education and preparation for labor and business", Sec. 1408, Probate Code, and that each of the foregoing facts established the necessity or convenience for the appointment.

[3] In the case before us the child is over fourteen years of age, she has nominated respondents, she prefers to live with them, and her father purposes to remove her from the home and surroundings in which she has lived for many years and take her to live in another county. These facts are sufficient to sustain the court's finding of necessity and convenience for the appointment of petitioners as guardians. And as for appellant's contention that because he is the father of the child, is a fit and proper person to have her custody, and is prepared to make a home for her, the court said in Re Guardianship of Kerr, supra, that parental relationship is of no consequence because the statute gives a minor over the age of fourteen years the authority to select her guardian. And in Re Estate of Meiklejohn, supra, the right of the minor, on reaching the age of fourteen years, to have another guardian substituted for her father who had previously been appointed, was sustained, even though the fitness of the father was unquestioned.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

PEEK and THOMPSON, JJ., concur.

60 Cal.App.2d 451

COOKE v. COOKE.

Civ. 3320.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 13, 1943.

1. Appeal and error ⇨607(1)

A motion to terminate proceedings for the preparation of a transcript is generally addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge presiding in the court in which that document is prepared.

2. Appeal and error ⇨607(1)

The decision of the trial judge on a motion to terminate proceedings for the preparation of a transcript will be disturbed only if an abuse of discretion is shown.

3. Appeal and error ⇨985

Where record on motion to dismiss appeal showed nothing that occurred at time of its denial, and it contained nothing pointing to an abuse of the discretion on part of trial judge in denying the motion, motion was properly denied, there being a presumption of regularity of orders of the trial court.

---

2. Partnership ⇨47, 64

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Charles C. Haines, Judge.

Action by Marguerite K. Cooke against Dorothea Dyer Cooke, as executrix of the estate of Stephen B. Cooke, deceased, and others. From a judgment, named defendant appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal.

Motion denied.

Bertrand L. Comparet, of San Diego, for defendant, respondent, and appellant.

R. M. Switzler, of San Diego, for plaintiff, respondent and appellant.

MARKS, Justice.

This is a motion to dismiss the appeal of Dorothea Dyer Cooke, as executrix, because of delay in filing the record on appeal.

The action was filed on March 14, 1941. Judgment was entered on August 10, 1942. Motion for new trial was denied on August 28, 1942. Notice of appeal and request for clerk's and reporter's transcripts followed. On June 24, 1943, an order to show cause why the proceedings to secure transcripts should not be terminated was issued. On June 30, 1943, the trial judge denied the motion to terminate the proceedings to secure the transcripts and on August 10, 1943, the transcripts were certified and presented for filing in this court on August 19, 1943. The filing fees were promptly paid and the filings completed. On the face of the record the filings here were timely.

[1, 2] A motion to terminate proceedings for the preparation of a transcript is generally addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge presiding in the court in which that document is being or should be prepared. Unless an abuse of discretion is shown, the decision of the trial judge on that question will not be disturbed by an appellate court. Shutz v. Western Wholesale Liquor Distributors, 24 Cal.App.2d 659, 76 P.2d 135; Hohnemann v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 31 Cal.App.2d 692, 88 P.2d 748; Walker v. Etcheverry, 38 Cal.App.2d 611, 101 P.2d 709; Colburn Biological Institute v. DeBolt, 6 Cal.2d 631, 59 P.2d 108.

[3] The record on this motion to dismiss the appeal shows nothing concerning what occurred at the time of the denial of the motion. Therefore it contains nothing pointing to an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial judge in denying the motion. On the other hand, the presumption of the regularity of orders of the Superior Court comes to the support of the ruling. Assuming, but not holding, that this question may be raised on this motion to dismiss the appeal, we cannot grant it because the record fails to support the argument of the plaintiff that there was an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial judge in denying the motion for an order terminating the proceedings for the preparation of the transcripts.

The motion to dismiss is denied.

GRIFFIN, Acting P. J., concurs.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 453

RIDGE et al. v. BOULDER CREEK UNION JUNIOR-SENIOR HIGH SCHOOL DIST. OF SANTA CRUZ COUNTY (two cases).

Civ. 12456.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 14, 1943.

Hearing Denied Nov. 8, 1943.

1. Schools and school districts 🔑112

A statement, in verified claim against high school district for personal injuries, that claimant was a student at defendant's high school, constituted substantial compliance with statutory requirement that claim specify claimant's address, though it did not specify claimant's home address. School Code, § 2.801, as amended by St.1937, p. 414; § 3.

The word "address" is defined as directions for delivery of a letter; the name or description of a place of residence, business, etc., where a person may be found or communicated with, and hence is not always synonymous with word "residence".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Address" and "Residence".

2. Schools and school districts 🔑112

In deciding what is substantial compliance with statute prescribing contents of claim against school district for personal injuries, no weight should be given to fact that information imparted by claim was not intended to comply with statute, but only issue is whether acts done subserved purpose of statute, complying therewith in substance, but not in exact form prescribed. School Code, § 2.801, as amended by St. 1937, p. 414; § 3.

3. Schools and school districts 🔑112

Statements in claim, filed with high school district by minor student and his father, for personal injuries to student, that claimants were citizens and residents of county in which district was located and that minor was student at district high school, constituted substantial compliance with statute as to specification of father's address. School Code, § 2.801, as amended by St.1937, p. 414.

4. Schools and school districts 🔑112

A claim against school district for injuries to student as alleged result of district's "carelessness, negligence, recklessness and willful misconduct" was not insufficient because of willful misconduct allegation, which was "surplusage", in absence of evidence of injury to district because of reliance on such allegation. School Code, § 2.801, as amended by St.1937, p. 414.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Surplusage".

5. Negligence 🔑66(1)

Knowledge that danger exists is not knowledge of amount of danger necessary to charge person with negligence in assuming risk caused thereby, but doing of act with appreciation of amount of danger, as well as of danger itself, is necessary to render person negligent as matter of law in assuming such risk.

6. Schools and school districts 🔑122

Where 17-year-old high school student, receiving good grades in woodworking classes, was never instructed not to use power saw without guard, and his instructor used saw in front of students without guard attached, such student's knowledge of danger of such use was not sufficient as matter of law to charge him with contributory negligence barring his recovery of damages from school district for resulting injury. School Code, § 2.801, as amended by St.1937, p. 414.

7. Schools and school districts 🔑89

A school district is not liable under statute for injuries to student because of willful misconduct. School Code, § 2.801, as amended by St.1937, p. 414.

8. Trial 🔑252(8)

In action against high school district for injuries to student in woodworking class while operating power saw without guard, where there was no evidence that plaintiff's instructor knew that plaintiff was uninstructed in use of saw or that saw was dull or would be used without guard, trial court properly refused instructions on law of willful misconduct as applied to such instructor, though he used saw without guard in front of students, as conscious misconduct is necessary to constitute "willful misconduct". School Code, § 2.801, as amended by St.1937, p. 414.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Willful Misconduct".

9. Appeal and error 🔑1069(1)

In action against high school district for injuries to student, jurors' question to court during their deliberations as to whether school board carried compensation insurance held not to justify reversal of judgment on verdict for plaintiffs on ground that jury was guilty of prejudicial "misconduct" in considering insurance, especially where court properly instructed jury to disregard insurance. School Code, § 2.801, as amended by St.1937, p. 414.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Misconduct".

10. Appeal and error 🔑930(2)

The appellate court must assume that jury followed trial judge's instructions, in absence of contrary evidence.

11. Schools and school districts 🔑21

A "school district" is political subdivision of state, created for state purposes, subject to same privileges and immunities in regard to suit as state.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "School District".

12. Costs 🔑3

The right to costs is purely statutory and did not exist at common law.

13. States 🔑215

General statutes allowing costs to parties are inapplicable to state, in absence of express provision respecting costs in suit to which state is party.

14. Costs 🔑32(1)

The right to judgment does not inherently give right to costs as matter of justice.

15. Schools and school districts 🔑126

The statute creating liability of school district for any judgment against it does not include liability for costs incurred in obtaining such judgment. School Code, § 2.801, as amended by St.1937, p. 414; § 3.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; James L. Atteridge, Judge.

Action by R. C. Ridge and Walter Ridge, a minor, by his guardian ad litem, R. C. Ridge, against the Boulder Creek Union Junior-Senior High School District of Santa Cruz County for personal injuries to minor plaintiff while operating a power saw. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals, and from an order striking plaintiffs' cost bill, plaintiffs appeal.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Benjamin B. Knight, Dist. Atty., and Murphy & Hall, all of Santa Cruz, for appellant School District.

Rittenhouse & Rittenhouse and W. A. Deans, all of Santa Cruz, for respondents and cross-appellants.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

This was a suit by a minor and his father for personal injuries arising from the negligence of defendant school district. The jury gave a verdict for $266.52 to the father and $750 to the son. The court entered judgment against defendant for these amounts but ordered that the plaintiffs' cost bill be stricken. The plaintiffs have appealed from the order striking their cost bill and defendant has appealed from the judgment entered against it. The two appeals are consolidated by stipulation and only one set of briefs has been filed.

The plaintiff minor, Walter Ridge, aged 16 years 9 months, injured the index finger of his right hand while operating a power saw without a guard or a fence upon it. Young Ridge knew what these objects were for, to prevent injury, but others in the class used the saw without the guard because the fence was broken. The fence guided the wood to be sawed and if the saw was operated with the guard without the fence, it was extremely difficult to saw the board on the markings. Ridge was not instructed not to use the saw without the safety devices, and the instructor and other students used the saw without the safety devices on some occasions.

The plaintiffs filed their claim with the school district pursuant to section 2.801 of the School Code, as amended by St.1937, p. 414, alleging that the injury was caused by "the carelessness, negligence, recklessness and wilful misconduct of the said school district" and that the claimants were "citizens and residents of the County of Santa Cruz, State of California, and the said R. C. Ridge is the father of the said Walter Ridge, a minor, who is a student at said Boulder Creek Union High School." The complaint based on this claim alleged negligence on the part of defendant district. The answer denied the allegations of the complaint and as a separate defense alleged that Walter Ridge was guilty of contributory negligence. The court refused to give instructions at defendant's request on the issue of wilful misconduct.

Toward the end of the jury's deliberations, they returned with the following question: "May we as the jury inquire if the Boulder Creek School Board carries compensation insurance?" Whereupon the court gave an instruction whereby they were told to disregard insurance and that no insurance company was a party to the action. At no time was the subject of insurance brought up during the course of the trial.

Appellant school district contends that the court erred in ruling that the claim was sufficient in that no specific address of the claimants was stated as required by the School Code, and in that the charge of "wilful misconduct" did not allege any proximate cause for which they were authorized to allow claims. It also contends that the minor was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, that the trial court erred in not giving the proposed instruction on wilful misconduct, and that the misconduct of the jury in considering compensation insurance was prejudicial.

[1] The judgment against the school district is controlled by the provisions of the statute relating to the filing of claims. Section 2.801 of the School Code requires the claimant to file a verified claim which "shall specify the name and address of the claimant, the date and place of the accident and the extent of the injuries or damages received." In this connection it is conceded that the claim filed here did not specify the home address of the claimants. However, the claim did state that they were "citizens and residents of the County of Santa Cruz" and that Walter Ridge was a "student at said Boulder Creek Union High School."

Webster's dictionary defines the word "address": "The directions for delivery of a letter; the name or description of a place of residence, business etc., where a person may be found or communicated with." (Emphasis ours.) This definition clearly indicates that the word "address" is not always synonymous with the word "residence", although for the purpose of some statutes the courts have so interpreted its meaning. For example, in San Diego Sav. Bank v. Goodsell, 137 Cal. 420, 427, 70 P. 299, the court held that "address" and "residence", for the purpose of section 413 of the Code of Civil Procedure concerning the mailing of summons to absentee defendants, were synonymous as distinguished from the word "domicile." It should be noted that here we are dealing with a statutory requirement designed to give a public agency the knowledge whereby its liability can be investigated.

In interpreting a similar requirement for filing of a claim in suits against municipalities, the court said in Uttley v. City of Santa Ana, 136 Cal.App. 23, 25, 28 P.2d 377, 379: "The purpose of the statute would seem to be accomplished if an address is given at which or through which the claimant may be found, in order that the city officials may make such investigation of the merits of the claim as may be desired. The statute does not definitely require the giving of the claimant's home address or usual business address, and it is conceivable that a claimant might have neither a home address nor a permanent business address. * * * In the absence of any showing that the appellant (municipality) was misled or prejudiced, we think the allegations of the complaint are sufficient to show a substantial compliance with the statute." (Emphasis ours.) In that case the court held that the address of the claimant's attorney within the verified claim was a substantial compliance with the statute which required the claimant's address to be in the verified claim. The situation of claimant Walter Ridge is comparable to that of the claimant in the city case. The recital in the claim that Walter Ridge was a student at Boulder Creek Union High School informed the school district where he could be reached the major portion of the daylight hours. A letter addressed to him there would reach him. An inquiry by the school district at that place would have reached him personally or would have revealed his home address. There is no claim that the school district was misled nor that it could have been misled by the information imparted by way of an address of claimant Walter Ridge. Section 3 of the School Code enjoins the courts to construe its provisions liberally "with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice." In view of the foregoing we hold that the giving of a pupil's school address within the verified portion of the claim constitutes substantial compliance with the address requirement of section 2.801 of the School Code.

[2] In deciding what is in fact substantial compliance with a statute, no weight should be given to the fact that the information imparted was not intended to comply with the statute. The only issue, as we see it and as the doctrine is enunciated in the cases, concerns the purpose of the statute and whether in fact the acts done subserved the purpose of the statute, complying therewith in substance but not in the exact form prescribed. Sandstoe v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 28 Cal.App.2d 215, 82 P.2d 216; Kelso v. Board of Education, 42 Cal.App.2d 415, 109 P.2d 29. Those cases cited by appellant in which there was a complete failure to state in the verified claim any facts on which a finding of substantial compliance with the statutory requirements could be based are inapplicable to claimant Walter Ridge.

[3] A slightly different question is presented in considering the claim in support of the judgment in favor of R. C. Ridge, the father. However, the reasoning concerning the son's substantial compliance with the statute applies to the father, even if not so clearly. There is no claim here that the school district was misled. By inquiry at the son's school the residence and business address of the father could have been ascertained. It may be assumed that the school authorities knew his address through the son's registration. A letter addressed to the father at the school would probably have reached him, but, if not, the secretary of the board could have located him personally or by letter addressed to Boulder Creek. We hesitate to tear down the statute by statements of what the court may deem to be "substantial" compliance with its terms. But, under all the circumstances we must hold that the claim stated a sufficient address of the father within the doctrine of substantial compliance as heretofore enunciated.

[4] Appellant school district makes a second attack on the validity of the claim on the grounds that in no event did the claim state a cause for which the board was authorized to grant relief to the pupil in that "wilful misconduct" of the school district was one of the causes of the injury alleged. In the face of the allegations in the claim that the injury was caused by "carelessness" and "recklessness" we can not say that the board was misled by this surplusage in the claim. Section 2.801 does not require the legal conclusion of the claimant as to the cause of the injury to be stated; hence, all the legal conclusions regarding cause were surplusage. No estoppel by the plaintiffs' course of action is claimed. In the absence of any evidence of injury on the school district's part, due to reliance on the statement that the injury was caused by wilful misconduct, we can not say that the claim with its surplusage was insufficient in form to fulfill the condition precedent required by section 2.801 of the School Code in an action for negligent injury. The authorities cited by appellant support only the proposition that a complaint based on the wilful misconduct of the school district does not state a cause of action within the School Code and that no recovery is allowed on that score. Whiteford v. Yuba City Union High School Dist., 117 Cal.App. 462, 4 P.2d 266; Serres v. South Santa Anita School Bd., 10 Cal.App.2d 152, 51 P.2d 893.

[5, 6] On the merits of the claim itself the appellant school district attacks the submission of the case to the jury. The school district contends that Walter Ridge was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Although young Ridge knew what the guard was for—to prevent injury—he saw other students and the instructor use the saw without the guard. The fence which guided the wood to be sawed was broken and to operate the saw with the guard when the fence was broken was inconvenient. The markings on the board showing where the board was to be sawed could not be seen when the guard was down, and accurate sawing was practically impossible. Ridge was never instructed not to use the saw without the safety devices. On this state of the facts even though Ridge received good grades in his wood-working classes and was almost 17 years old at the date of the accident, we can not say as a matter of law that he should have appreciated the danger and not used the saw in its condition without the guard. Knowledge that danger exists is not knowledge of the amount of danger necessary to charge a person with negligence in assuming the risk caused by such danger. The doing of an act with appreciation of the amount of danger in addition to mere appreciation of the danger is necessary in order to say as a matter of law that a person is negligent. We can not say that the knowledge of danger which Walter Ridge had, in the face of the facts that he received no instructions not to use the saw without the guard and that the instructor used the saw in front of the students without the guard attached, was as a matter of law sufficient to charge him with negligence contributing to his accident.

Those cases cited by appellant school district in support of its position involve cases where the minor was proved to have had knowledge of the specific risks which he ran in doing the acts causing the injury. In Bolar v. Maxwell Hardware Co., 205 Cal. 396, 271 P. 97, 60 A.L.R. 429, the 15 year old minor had sufficient knowledge of the risks run with explosives to hide his experimental cannon and the gun powder from his parents. In Whalen v. Streshley, 205 Cal. 78, 269 P. 928, 60 A.L.R. 445, the 16 year old boy was an experienced rider of bucking horses and knew the risks attached. In Quinn v. Recreation Park Ass'n, 3 Cal.2d 725, 46 P.2d 144, the 14 year old girl deliberately chose in the face of the knowledge of the risk of foul balls to sit in an unscreened section, because she wished to sit near first base. In Mathews v. City of Albany, 36 Cal.App.2d 147, 97 P.2d 266, 98 P.2d 1025, the child was shown to have known the difference between explosive gun powder and fire cracker powder and had played with gun powder for a number of years. Here the boy was in his first year with power driven tools, the school recognizing that only after a certain age and instruction are children comparatively safe in using power driven tools; he had never been specifically informed of the danger although he knew what the guard was for; and the example of his instructor indicated to him that the use of the saw could not be too dangerous or the instructor would not have used the tool without the guard. On the whole it would appear to be a case where the boy knew the saw was not a plaything, but an instrument to be used with caution and care.

[7, 8] Appellant school district's next claim of error concerns the court's refusal to give instructions offered concerning the law applicable to wilful misconduct. The school district would not have been liable under sec. 2.801 of the School Code for injuries caused by wilful misconduct. Whiteford v. Yuba City Union High School Dist., 117 Cal.App. 462, 4 P.2d 266; Serres v. South Santa Anita School Bd., 10 Cal.App.2d 152, 51 P.2d 893. It contends that there was evidence in the record from which the jury might have concluded that Walter Ridge was injured through the wilful misconduct of Everett M. Brown, the instructor. It points to the following evidence in support of this contention: "The youth of the operator (Walter Ridge), the claimed lack of instruction, the claimed dullness of the saw, and the broken fence." Pacific Employers Ins. Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 209 Cal. 412, 288 P. 66, although cited in support of appellant's position, is distinguishable on its facts. In that case, in contravention of an Industrial Accident Commission Safety Rule which was known to the employer, an employee was allowed to use a power saw which did not have a guard covering the open blade. In the facts before us it is shown that a guard was provided even though the efficient use of the saw was restricted by its use. Further, there is no evidence that Everett M. Brown knew that Walter Ridge was uninstructed in the use of the power driven saw or that he knew the saw was dull, or that he knew the saw would be used without the guard. The use of the saw by the instructor without the guard in front of the students is not wilful misconduct. In Helme v. Great Western Milling Co., 43 Cal.App. 416, 421, 185 P. 510, 512, it is said: "To constitute 'willful misconduct' there must be actual knowledge, or that which in the law is esteemed to be the equivalent of actual knowledge, of the peril to be apprehended from the failure to act, coupled with a conscious failure to act to the end of averting injury." See also Malone v. Clemow, 111 Cal.App. 13, 17, 295 P. 70. The element of conscious misconduct is necessary to charge wilful misconduct, and here there is no evidence in the record from which the jury could have found that Everett Brown knowingly wilfully misconducted himself to plaintiff's injury. The trial court properly refused to give the instructions requested.

[9, 10] Finally the school district contends that the jury was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in considering insurance and that such misconduct justifies a reversal. First it should be noted that we do not agree with the school district's contention that the jury in using the words "compensation insurance" had reference to the technical connotations of the words concerning absolute liability. They used the term in the same sense as a layman might use the term compensation to mean the technical term indemnity. Secondly, there was no prejudicial error because the jury were promptly instructed to disregard insurance in their deliberations, and we must assume that they followed the judge's instructions in the absence of other evidence. Maggart v. Bell, 116 Cal.App. 306, 309, 2 P.2d 516; Sweet v. Sager, 28 Cal.App.2d 211, 214, 82 P.2d 201.

[11-15] The plaintiffs Walter Ridge & R. C. Ridge appealed from the order taxing and disallowing costs. They contend that section 2.801 of the School Code in creating a liability "for any judgment against the district" included a liability for costs by reason of section 3 of the School Code enjoining the liberal construction of the Code "with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice." A school district is a political subdivision of the state created for state purposes subject to the same privileges and immunities in regard to suit as the state. Skelly v. Westminster School District, 103 Cal. 652, 658, 37 P. 643. It has long been settled law in California that the right to costs is a purely statutory right which did not exist at common law. General statutes allowing costs to parties have been construed not to apply to the state in the absence of express provision respecting costs where the state was a party. Connecticut Gen. Life Ins. Co. v. State, 47 Cal.App.2d 88, 177 P.2d 377; 23 Cal.Jur. 587. There is nothing in the right to a judgment which inherently gives the right to costs as a matter of justice. Therefore, we hold that section 2.801 of the School Code was properly interpreted by the lower court not to include the right to costs incurred in obtaining the judgment provided for. It should be noted that at the last session of the legislature, section 1028 of the Code of Civil Procedure was amended to provide that costs were to be awarded against the state "on the same basis as against any other party" thereby changing the prior law in the State of California when the state was a party to an action.

For the reasons hereinabove expressed the judgment is affirmed. The order taxing and disallowing costs is also affirmed.

SPENCE, J., and DOOLING, Justice pro tem., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 473

BRINER v. BRINER.

Civ. 6973.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Sept. 14, 1943.

1. Army and navy 🔑34

Allegations of army captain's motion to stay proceedings on appeal from judgment for him that he was unable to leave distant city, in which he was stationed, to confer with his attorneys, and financially unable to meet appeal expenses, and pay attorneys, did not show that his ability to conduct defense to appeal was materially affected because of his military service so as to entitle him to relief prayed for under Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act. Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, §§ 100, 201, 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix §§ 510, 521.

2. Army and navy 🔑34

The mere fact that it would be disconcerting to army officer for him to incur further indebtedness to his attorneys for defending appeal from judgment for him does not justify stay of proceeding on such appeal under Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act. Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, §§ 100, 201, 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix §§ 510, 521.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; Raymond McIntosh, Judge.

Action by Monica S. Briner against C. Conrad Briner. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. On respondent's motion to stay proceedings on appeal.

Motion denied.

James J. Arditto, of Sacramento, for appellant.

T. L. Chamberlain and Gussie A. Stewart, both of Auburn, for respondent.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

This is a motion of defendant and respondent above named to stay proceedings on appeal in this court under the provisions of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, 54 Stat. 1178, 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix § 501 et seq., until the termination of the period of his military service and until three months thereafter.

Respondent represents that he is, and has been since the 20th day of September, 1942 (and prior to the filing of this appeal on March 19, 1943), a captain in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, stationed at Washington, D. C. He sets up that he has no regular income or means of livelihood other than his pay as such captain, that he has a wife and two minor children solely dependent upon him for support, and has other family obligations, and that in making a defense herein he is handicapped by reason of said obligations and the curtailment of his income since he entered the military service; also that his ability to make his defense on this appeal is materially affected by the requirement that he be in Washington where he is stationed, and that he is unable to absent himself therefrom to confer with T. L. Chamberlain and Gussie A. Stewart, the attorneys who represented him on the trial of said action in the lower court; that he is unable to meet the expenses necessary to be incurred on his part in connection with this appeal, which he alleges will include a copy of the reporter's transcript, the printing of respondent's brief, expenses of counsel and his per diem for arguing the case, and possibly items for a petition for rehearing and for a hearing in the Supreme Court; that he has no attorney authorized to act for him, and is indebted to his former attorneys, and that it would be humiliating and disconcerting for him to incur further indebtedness for attorney's fees; and he deems it necessary to devote his entire energies to the military needs of the nation, that his work includes medical research which requires a high degree of concentration, and that the pendency of this appeal will, unless stayed, impair his ability to promote the efficiency which is one of the purposes of the Solders' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act; that the amount involved in the action is substantial and the threat of reversal which would result from a prosecution of the appeal while he is in the military service would cause mental strain, distress and anguish to affiant and impair his efficiency.

In opposition to respondent's affidavit, appellant filed her affidavit in which she alleges on information and belief that respondent has a substantial income and is a comparatively wealthy man; that he has income in addition to his army pay, owns corporate stock and other property both personal and real, and he would be in no wise financially embarrassed if his motion were denied; that a suspension of the appeal would not strengthen the national defense; that his presence is not necessary and that his military service does not interfere with his ability to conduct his defense as he is able to pay costs and attorney's fees; and that the ends of justice will be served by a denial of the motion.

Respondent's motion, affidavit, and accompanying brief were presented by two attorneys, and the motion was argued on his behalf by one of said attorneys. Thereafter respondent, through said attorneys, filed a closing affidavit in which he denied allegations of appellant's affidavit as to his financial status, and realleged his inability to pay expenses on appeal, asserting that his whole income is necessary for the support of his family. He alleged that he has no means of paying the attorneys who have heretofore represented him "and that consequently he has no attorney authorized to act for or on behalf of him as to the requisites incident to the appeal." He reasserts that his ability to conduct his defense is materially affected by reason of his military services in that he is financially unable to employ counsel to represent him, and that the prosecution of the appeal would cause him mental strain and worry him when his first duty is to do the things assigned to him in the armed forces.

Do the foregoing representations by respondent justify a suspension of this appeal under the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act? Section 201 of that act provides: "At any stage thereof any action or proceeding in any court in which a person in military service is involved, either as plaintiff or defendant, during the period of such service or within sixty days thereafter may, in the discretion of the court in which it is pending, on its own motion, and shall, on application to it by such person or some person on his behalf, be stayed as provided in this Act, unless, in the opinion of the court, the ability of plaintiff to prosecute the action or the defendant to conduct his defense is not materially affected by reason of his military service." (Italics ours.)

In Boone v. Lightner, 63 S.Ct. 1223, at page 1226, 87 L.Ed. 1587, at page ——, in which the history and purpose of the act are fully discussed, the court said: "The Act cannot be construed to require continuance on mere showing that the defendant was in Washington in the military service. Canons of statutory construction admonish us that we should not needlessly render as meaningless the language which, after authorizing stays, says 'unless, in the opinion of the court, the ability of plaintiff to prosecute the action or the defendant to conduct his defense is not materially affected by reason of his military service.'" And in that case it was held that the stay of proceedings urged by defendant was properly refused.

[1, 2] We are of the opinion that the matters alleged by respondent in this case do not show that his ability to conduct his defense to this appeal is materially affected by reason of his military service. The presence of respondent in this court is unnecessary, and even assuming that his financial condition is as alleged by him, he is in no different position than any other litigant who may, by reason of a limited income, find it difficult or inconvenient to meet the expenses incident to an appeal. As for his allegation that it will be necessary for him to have a copy of the reporter's transcript, a copy of same is already on file in this court, and we do not agree that it is essential on such appeal that respondent have a copy of same. Our record shows that at least one of the attorneys who represented him in the lower court is appearing for him on this motion, and he is doubtless sufficiently familiar with the record to prepare a brief. As to the necessity for printing such brief, the filing of a typewritten brief may be allowed by the court on a proper showing; and as for respondent's allegations regarding his inability to pay his counsel, the counsel of record in this court who have at all times represented respondent on this motion have taken no steps to withdraw as such counsel and have made no showing of unwillingness to proceed on respondent's behalf. The time and effort already expended by them in presenting this motion would probably have been quite sufficient to prepare respondent's brief and argue his defense to the appeal. In Weynberg v. Downey, 176 Misc. 196, 25 N.Y.S.2d 600, an action to foreclose a mortgage, one of the defendants was in the armed service, and an attorney was appointed by the court to represent him. In connection with the question of how, if at all, such counsel might be compensated, the court said that such attorney in time of war should regard such service as a patriotic duty and act regardless of compensation. To the same effect see In re Cool's Estate, 18 A.2d 714, 19 N.J.Misc. 236. And as for respondent's contention that this proceeding should be stayed because it would be "disturbing and disconcerting" to him for same to proceed, we are cited to no authority holding that the mere fact that mental distress may be caused a litigant justifies a suspension of a proceeding under the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act. The rights of those in the armed service to have legal proceedings suspended are not unlimited. The purpose of the act is recited in section 510 thereof which states: "In order to provide for, strengthen, and expedite the national defense under the emergent conditions which are threatening the peace and security of the United States and to enable the United States the more successfully to fulfill the requirements of the national defense, provision is hereby made to suspend enforcement of civil liabilities, in certain cases, of persons in the military service of the United States in order to enable such persons to devote their entire energy to the defense needs of the Nation, and to this end the following provisions are made for the temporary suspension of legal proceedings and transactions which may prejudice the civil rights of persons in such service during the period herein specified over which this Act remains in force." (Italics ours.)

Respondent's civil rights will not be prejudiced by permitting this appeal to take its orderly course. Should the judgment of the lower court be affirmed on appeal, the litigation would be at an end and respondent's burden of mental distress lifted. And if such judgment should be reversed and a new trial become necessary requiring respondent's presence in order to protect his civil rights, a motion in the lower court to stay such trial would then be in order, and doubtless would be granted on a proper showing that such rights would be imperiled by reason of his military service.

We are cited to no cases in which proceedings on appeal have been stayed under the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act. In Rosenthal v. Smith, Ohio App., 42 N.E. 2d 464, a motion to dismiss an appeal on the ground that appellant had failed to comply with the rules of the court requiring the filing of assignments of error, briefs, etc. within fifty days after notice of appeal, was resisted by counsel for appellant who represented to the court that appellant was in the armed forces and that counsel had been unable to contact him. The court said: "The Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940 * * * does not accord the benefits thereof to a person in the military service who is represented by legal counsel. Nothing appears in the memorandum to the effect that counsel for appellant were not authorized to act for and on behalf of him as to all requisites incident to the appeal, including the filing of the briefs, etc. The filing of such briefs are the work of counsel only, and do not require the presence nor assistance of appellant." And the motion to dismiss was granted.

In Pope v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 67 Ga.App. 415, 20 S.E.2d 618, the court said that a person in the military service is not entitled as matter of law to a stay of a judgment against him under the provisions of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, nor is he entitled to a stay merely by virtue of that act unless, in the opinion of the court passing on the question, his ability to conduct his defense is materially affected by reason of his service; and there an order rendering judgment against the defendant was affirmed. Also see Charles Tolmas, Inc., v. Streiffer, 199 La. 25, 5 So.2d 372.

As we are of the opinion that respondent's ability to conduct his defense to this appeal will not be materially affected by reason of his military service, respondent's motion is denied.

THOMPSON and PEEK, JJ., concur.

---

60 Cal.App.2d 500

CAMPBELL v. RUSTIGIAN et al.

Civ. 6949.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Sept. 16, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 15, 1943.

Hearing Denied Nov. 8, 1943.

1. Appeal and error ⟹110

A suit to quiet title, wherein neither pleadings, findings, nor judgment raised issue of right to possession of realty or any other issue at law, was "equitable" in nature so that jury trial was not matter of right, and order granting plaintiff new trial after judgment on court's findings in accordance with jury's verdict for defendant was not appealable. Code Civ.Proc. § 592; § 963, subd. 2.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Suit in Equity".

2. Jury ⟹13(1)

A right to jury trial attaches only when issues of law are involved in pleadings.

3. Jury ⟹12(1)

The right to jury trial must be determined by character of pleadings considered as whole.

4. Appeal and error ⟹110

An action to quiet title, pleaded and considered by court in its findings and judgment as purely equitable in nature, may not be converted into lawsuit, so as to confer right of appeal from order granting new trial, by merely introducing evidence that one of parties was in actual possession of realty involved. Code Civ.Proc. § 963, subd. 2.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; H. S. Shaffer, Judge.

Suit by E. B. Campbell against Harry M. Rustigian and Miron Rustigian and wife to quiet title to realty. Judgment for defendant spouses, and, from an order granting plaintiff a new trial, defendant spouses appeal. On plaintiff's motion to dismiss the appeal.

Motion granted, and appeal dismissed.

David E. Peckinpah, Fred J. Rogers, Frank E. Curran, and L. Barber, all of Fresno, for appellants.

Barbour & Backlund, and Lawrence W. Young, all of Fresno (Keyes & Erskine, J. Benton Tulley, and Herbert W. Erskine, all of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice.

This is a motion on the part of plaintiff to dismiss the purported appeal from an order granting a new trial, on the ground that the notice of appeal is ineffectual because this court lacks jurisdiction since subdivision 2 of Section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorizes an appeal "from an order granting a new trial" only in "an action or proceeding where a trial by jury is a matter of right." In this suit to quiet title to real property, equitable issues only are presented by the pleadings or determined by the findings and judgment. In neither the pleadings nor the findings nor the judgment does it appear that the plaintiff or any of the defendants held possession of the real property. It is purely an equitable suit to quiet title and not "an action for the recovery of specific real property" contemplated by Section 592 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The complaint merely alleges that the plaintiff acquired title to the real property in question by purchase at a Sheriff's sale under execution pursuant to a judgment which was rendered in favor of the plaintiff in another suit against one of the defendants, Harry M. Rustigian. The last mentioned party filed a disclaimer in this action. The other defendants, Miron Rustigian and Hagoohi Rustigian, who are husband and wife, filed an answer merely denying the material allegations of the complaint, and affirmatively asserting that they bought the property from the Security First National Bank of Los Angeles May 4, 1937, and that "these defendants, and each of them, are the sole and absolute owners of said real property". The prayer of the answer merely asks that plaintiff take nothing by his action and that the defendants "go hence with their costs". Neither the complaint nor the answer alleges possession or asks for possession of the property.

At the time of the trial the defendants demanded and were granted a jury trial, on the theory that its verdict would be advisory only. The cause was fully tried and the jury returned a general verdict "in favor of defendants, Miron Rustigian and Hagoohi Rustigian." Plaintiff's motion to set that verdict aside was denied. The court adopted findings in accordance with the verdict favorable to the last mentioned defendants, and rendered judgment accordingly to the effect that neither the plaintiff nor Harry M. Rustigian had any right, title or interest in the real property, and upon the contrary that Miron Rustigian and Hagoohi Rustigian "are the sole, absolute and lawful owners" of the real property in question. The last mentioned defendants were awarded their costs in the sum of $167.85.

Plaintiff moved for a new trial on the grounds of lack of evidence to support the findings and judgment and for errors committed in the course of the trial. That motion for new trial was granted on the ground last mentioned. From the order granting a new trial the said defendants gave notice and prepared and filed their record on appeal. The motion to dismiss the appeal was duly made on the ground that this court is without jurisdiction since the action to quiet title is not one in which "a trial by jury is a matter of right."

[1, 2] We are of the opinion the purported appeal should be dismissed for the reason that neither the pleadings nor the findings nor the judgment raises the issue of the right to possession of the real property in question, and no other issue at law is presented. It is purely a suit to quiet title to real property which is equitable in its nature. It is only when issues of law are involved in the pleadings that a right to a trial by jury attaches. It has been held in an action for recovery of specific real property, as provided by Section 592 of the Code of Civil Procedure, when an issue of law is raised by allegations in a complaint, answer or cross-complaint that the plaintiff is out of possession and seeks thereby to recover possession, or where the plaintiff is in possession and the defendant by his answer or cross-complaint seeks to oust him and recover possession in his own behalf that the right of trial by jury then exists. Thompson v. Thompson, 7 Cal.2d 671, 681, 62 P.2d 358, 117 A.L.R. 1; Reiner v. Schroeder, 146 Cal. 411, 420, 80 P. 517. No such issue was raised in the present action. The right of possession of the real property is not involved.

[3, 4] The right to a trial by jury must be determined by the character of the pleadings considered as a whole. Fillmore

v. Reilly, 28 Cal.App.2d 460, 463, 82 P.2d 739; 15 Cal.Jur. 334, sec. 12. An action to quiet title to real property which is pleaded and considered by the court in its findings and judgment as purely equitable in its nature may not be converted into a law suit, conferring the right of appeal from an order granting a new trial, by the mere fact that evidence was introduced showing that one or the other of the parties was in actual possession of the property. If the possession or the right of possession of the property is neither pleaded nor determined by the court, the actual possession by one of the parties does not change the nature of the action. We therefore conclude that this suit to quiet title is equitable and that the parties were not entitled to a trial by jury as a matter of right.

It follows that since the parties to this action were not entitled to a trial by jury as a matter of right, on any issue involved in this litigation, the order granting the motion for a new trial is not appealable. Crouser v. Boice, 51 Cal.App.2d 198, 124 P.2d 358. The defendants will still have their day in court upon the new trial.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is therefore granted, and the appeal is accordingly dismissed.

ADAMS, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

Hearing denied; CURTIS, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

BONNER v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

Civ. 14063.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Sept. 2, 1943.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 20, 1943.

Hearing Granted Oct. 28, 1943.

1. Workmen's compensation 🔑1280

For limitation purposes, silicosis is not an "injury" until the employee knows, or by due care and diligence is presumed to know, that he has an occupational disease which has progressed to the extent that he is so disabled that the efficiency of his work is appreciably affected thereby, and such injury may not arise until after the employment proximately causing it has ceased. St.1937, pp. 266, 295, §§ 3208, 5405, 5406.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Injury".

2. Workmen's compensation 🔑1280

In case of a latent and progressive disease such as silicosis, the "injury" does not necessarily date from the last day of exposure to dust-laden atmosphere, so that the prescription periods begin to run from that date, but the date of the injury is the time when the accumulated effects culminate in a disability traceable to the latent disease as the primary cause, and by ordinary care it is discoverable that a compensable injury was sustained. St.1937, pp. 266, 295, §§ 3208, 5405, 5406.

3. Workmen's compensation 🔑1279

The word "time", as used in statute providing that, for an employer to be liable for compensation, employee at time of the injury must be performing service growing out of and incidental to his employment, etc., does not thereby differ from word "date" in the statute, providing limitations from the date of injury for compensation proceedings. St.1937, pp. 269, 295, §§ 3600 (b), 5405, 5406.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Date" and "Time".

4. Workmen's compensation 🔑52

The statutory rule of interpretation that the compensation provisions of the Code shall be liberally construed is given judicial recognition and is itself liberally construed so that its principle is extended to benefit dependents of persons injured in the course of their employment. St.1937, p. 265 et seq., § 3201 et seq.

5. Workmen's compensation 🔑201

Where a disease constituting an injury is contracted during employment with first employer, and its existence becomes known and it becomes disabling during employment with second employer, which second employment has had no effect upon the disease, first employer is liable for compensation for injury; but, where both of succeeding employments contribute to or are further proximate causes of the disease, compensation liability falls upon each succeeding employer. St.1937, p. 269, § 3600 (c).

6. Workmen's compensation ⚷566

The statutes providing that, in case of aggravation of diseases existing prior to a compensable injury, compensation shall be allowed only for that proportion of the disability due to the aggravation of such prior disease as may reasonably be attributed to the injury, are intended to pare down and not to impose liability. St.1937, pp. 266, 284, §§ 3208, 4663.

7. Workmen's compensation ⚷1763

The Industrial Accident Commission's failure to find that an injury was sustained, or that a disease was contracted during a particular employment, will not support an award against the one who was the employer during that term. St.1937, pp. 266, 284, §§ 3208, 4663.

8. Workmen's compensation ⚷201, 1707

The period during which one has been exposed to silica dust prior to the time when the exposure has resulted in a diseased condition is not to be considered in determining how much of the burden of compensation is to be placed upon the employer in whose service the disease was contracted, or, having already come into existence, was aggravated, and where the line is to be drawn is a question of fact. St.1937, pp. 266, 284, §§ 3208, 4663.

9. Workmen's compensation ⚷1347

An employer seeking to escape a portion of the liability for compensation for silicosis on the theory that he alone is not responsible therefor has the burden of proving that other employers should share the responsibility. St.1937, pp. 266, 284, §§ 3208, 4663.

10. Workmen's compensation ⚷201

Where an employment has brought about silicosis which was aggravated by a subsequent employment, the burden of compensating the employee for the resulting disability must be divided among the employers upon whom the liability exists, irrespective of whether death results. St. 1937, pp. 266, 284, §§ 3208, 4663.

11. Statutes ⚷225¾

Where a statute has been judicially construed and is later re-enacted in the same or substantially the same terms, it is presumed that the Legislature was familiar with the construction and that such construction, in the absence of an express provision requiring a different construction, was adopted by the Legislature.

12. Statutes ⚷225¾

Where subdivision of the Compensation Act providing that "injury" should include any injury or disease arising out of the employment, and that in case of aggravation of any pre-existing disease compensation shall be allowed only for such proportion of disability due to the aggravation as may reasonably be attributed to the injury, was adopted into the Labor Code, the adoption wrote into the law the construction placed upon the Compensation Act sections by the cases. St.1937, pp. 266, 284, §§ 3208, 4663.

13. Workmen's compensation ⚷1285

Under statute providing that no limitation in compensation proceedings shall run against any person under 21 years of age, where applicant for death benefits was a minor, limitation statutes did not run. St.1937, p. 296, § 5408.

14. Workmen's compensation ⚷201

Where tunnel superintendent had been working for his last employer off and on for three-year period before his silicosis became so bad that he had to quit his job permanently, and he died of silicosis and tuberculosis, and the conditions under which superintendent worked for his last employer were the proximate cause of his breakdown, an award of $5,000 as a death benefit would have been supported. St. 1937, p. 284, § 4702.

15. Workmen's compensation ⚷201

While determination of compensation to be allowed under an apportionment among claimant's employers because of aggravation of a pre-existing disease, is left to the sound discretion of the Industrial Accident Commission, it is a discretion to be exercised upon a legal and factual and not an arbitrary basis. St.1937, pp. 266, 284, §§ 3208, 4663.

16. Workmen's compensation ⚷1761

Finding, revealing that prior to tunnel superintendent's last employment he was exposed to conditions which might or might not have impaired his health, did not authorize apportionment of benefits for his death from silicosis over the entire period of his employment in mines and tunnels among various employers. St.1937, pp. 266, 284, §§ 3208, 4663.

17. Workmen's compensation ⚷201

Unless an employee dying from silicosis contracted the disease more than two years before he was required permanently to quit his job because of his bad condition, the Industrial Accident Commission, in apportioning death benefit over the period of his employment, could not consider years prior to the two year period. St.1937, pp. 266, 284, 295, §§ 3208, 4663, 5405, 5406.

18. Workmen's compensation ⚷1433

Evidence did not establish that tunnel superintendent dying of silicosis contracted the disease before his last employment, so as to authorize apportionment of death benefits over his entire employment in mines and tunnels among various employers. St.1937, pp. 266, 284, §§ 3208, 4663.

19. Workmen's compensation ⚷1779

Under statute providing that compensation awards shall not be altered after 245 weeks from date of the injury, finding that employee dying of silicosis had first contracted silicosis during some employment previous to his last employment was not a prohibited attempt to modify finding in his compensation proceeding that, by a date more than 245 weeks ago, employee had sustained an industrial injury during his last employment. St.1937, p. 301, § 5804.

20. Workmen's compensation ⚷1779

Under statute providing that limitations shall not run against persons under 21 years of age, etc., minor's proceedings for benefits for death of employee dying of silicosis was protected against limitations of statute prohibiting alteration of compensation awards after 245 weeks from the date of the injury, and hence finding in employee's proceeding that during his last employment he sustained an industrial injury being silicosis, did not preclude inquiry in minor's proceeding as to time when employee first contracted silicosis. St.1937, pp. 296, 301, §§ 5408, 5804.

21. Workmen's compensation ⚷1186

A minor, in a compensation proceeding which would be barred but for statute providing that limitations shall not run against any person under 21 years of age, cannot take the position that the Industrial Accident Commission has jurisdiction to make findings in her favor but no jurisdiction to make findings which do not favor her. St.1937, p. 296, § 5408.

22. Workmen's compensation ⚷1778, 1781

A finding is not "res judicata" during the period when the Industrial Accident Commission has continuing jurisdiction over its awards, so that the commission may rescind, alter, or amend such awards for good cause. St.1937, p. 301, § 5804.

23. Workmen's compensation ⚷1779

Under statute providing that limitations shall not run against any person under 21 years of age, unless a guardian is appointed, the time limit under statute providing that no compensation award shall be altered, etc., after 245 weeks from the date of the injury, does not apply with respect to minors until guardians are appointed for them. St.1937, pp. 296, 301, §§ 5408, 5804.

24. Workmen's compensation ⚷1779

Finding, in employee's compensation proceeding, that during his last employment he had sustained an industrial injury being silicosis, was not "res judicata" as to time when employee first contracted silicosis, where minor, before a guardian was appointed, had applied for benefits for employee's silicosis death, and the Industrial Accident Commission's jurisdiction was continuing in deciding her application. St. 1937, pp. 296, 301, §§ 5408, 5803.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Judicata".

25. Workmen's compensation ⚷1791

Where Industrial Accident Commission found in employee's compensation proceeding that employee during his last employment sustained an industrial injury being silicosis, commission was not "estopped" from finding in compensation proceeding for employee's silicosis death that the disease began prior to beginning of employee's last employment. St.1937, pp. 266, 284, §§ 3208, 4663.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop".

◆

Application by Margaret Mary Bonner, a minor, by her guardian ad litem and trustee, Margaret Bonner, against the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California and others, for a writ to review a compensation award in favor of petitioner.

Award annulled.

Richard C. Olson, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Everett A. Corten and Fred G. Goldsworthy, both of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

Herlihy & Herlihy, of Los Angeles, for respondent Industrial Indemnity Exchange.

BISHOP, Justice pro tem.

The petitioner in this proceeding, the wholly dependent, minor, daughter of J. J. Bonner, made application for a death benefit, following her father's death. Bonner's death was due to silicosis, contracted at some time during his twenty and a half years' work in mines and tunnels. The Commission at first awarded a death benefit of $5,000, but upon rehearing changed the amount awarded to $583. The tentative conclusion which led to the issuance of the writ of review has been confirmed; the award should be annulled because it goes beyond the support afforded either by the findings or by the evidence.

Basically, the correlative rights and obligations of the parties to the proceeding before the Commission rest upon these pertinent provisions of the statutory law, continuously in effect from their appearance in section 6 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917, Stats.1917, p. 831, 841, up to and including their restatement in section 3600 of the Labor Code, St.1937, p. 269:

"Liability for the compensation provided by this division * * * shall * * * exist against an employer for any injury sustained by his employees arising out of and in the course of the employment and for the death of any employee if the injury proximately causes death, in those cases where the following conditions of compensation concur:

"(a) Where, at the time of the injury, both the employer and the employee are subject to the compensation provisions of this division.

"(b) Where, at the time of the injury, the employee is performing service growing out of and incidental to his employment and is acting within the course of his employment.

"(c) Where the injury is proximately caused by the employment * * *." Earlier in the Labor Code, in section 3208, we find this definition: "'Injury' includes any injury or disease arising out of the employment * * *."

[1, 2] For the purposes of the statute of limitations (formerly, section 11, of the Workmen's Compensation Act; now, sections 5405 and 5406 of the Labor Code), the disease of silicosis is not regarded as an injury "until the employee knows, or when by the exercise of due care and diligence, he is presumed to know, that he has an occupational disease which has progressed to the extent that he is so disabled that the efficiency of his work is appreciably affected thereby." Argonaut Mining Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1937, 21 Cal.App.2d 492, 496, 70 P.2d 216, 219. The injury thus described may not arise until some time after the employment which proximately caused the injury has ceased. These words, found in Marsh v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1933, 217 Cal. 338, 351, 18 P.2d 933, 938, 86 A.L.R. 563: "'From our study of the subject we are brought to the conclusion that in the case of a latent and progressive disease, such as [silicosis], it cannot reasonably be said that the injury dates necessarily from the last day of exposure to a dust-laden atmosphere and that the prescriptive period begins to run from that day. Rather, according to our view, should the date of the injury be deemed the time when the accumulated effects culminate in a disability traceable to the latent disease as the primary cause, and by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence it is discoverable and apparent that a compensable injury was sustained in performance of the duties of the employment * * *'" reappear, in part at least, in Giminez v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1933, 132 Cal.App. 638, 640, 23 P.2d 425; Argonaut Mining Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, 21 Cal.App.2d 492, 497, 70 P.2d 216; and Price v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1935, 9 Cal.App.2d 213, 215, 49 P.2d 294, 295. In the Marsh case the employee, whose name identifies the case, quit his employment in February, 1928, for reasons bearing no relation to the disease of silicosis, the symptoms of which did not appear until December, 1928. The disease was not identified until a week before his death, February 14, 1930. The application for a death benefit, filed October 20, 1930, was held, under the facts stated, not necessarily barred by the statute, and the award denying the application was annulled "to the end that further proceedings may be had to ascertain when the statute of limitations began to run." The "date of the injury" in the Price case was fixed as May 30, 1934, although the employment had terminated in November, 1933, when the employer ceased business.

[3, 4] For the purposes of the statute of limitations, then, the injury may be deemed not to occur until some time after the employment, which was its proximate cause, has ended. But, as we have noted, one of the conditions which must "concur" in order that an employer may become liable to pay compensation for disability or a death benefit, is that "at the time of the injury, the employee is performing service growing out of and incidental to his employment and is acting within the course of his employment." Sec 3600 (b), Labor Code. The "time of injury" of section 3600, Labor Code, is not to be differentiated from the "date of injury" of sections 5405 and 5406, by making a distinction between "time" and "date," for there is no authority for relying upon the distinction that makes no difference between these two innocent words. The inconsistent positions that have been reached grow out of the desire, and the necessity, of interpreting Division IV of the Labor Code (which is, in substance, a codification of the Workmen's Compensation Act), as directed by its section 3202: "The provisions of Division IV * * * of this code shall be liberally construed by the courts with the purpose of extending their benefits for the protection of persons injured in the course of their employment." This rule of interpretation has, of course, been given judicial recognition (Pacific Lbr. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1943, 22 Cal.2d 410, 139 P.2d 892) and has itself been liberally construed so that its principle is extended to benefit the dependents of "persons injured in the course of their employment." Mark v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1938, 29 Cal.App.2d 495, 497, 84 P.2d 1071.

[5] We are dealing with a silicosis case, and our conclusions, however broadly stated, are limited to such a case. "The law clearly distinguishes between a physical injury sustained as the result of an accident and injuries which develop from progressive occupational diseases like silicosis." Argonaut Mining Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, 21 Cal.App.2d 492, 496, 70 P.2d 216, 219. It is established, then, we may say, that a disease contracted during an employment may appear as an injury sometime after the employment has ceased. One consequence of this is that in the case of successive employments a disease which becomes disabling and so compensable, during the period of the employee's service with employer C, may have as its sole proximate cause the previous employment with employer A. That is to say, a disease, constituting an injury, may have been contracted during the employment with A, although its existence may not have become known, nor may it have become disabling, until during the employment with C, an employment which had no effect upon the disease. If so, then for the results of the injury the first employer alone would be liable, for one of the conditions which must concur to create liability is: "Where the injury is proximately caused by the employment * * *." Sec. 3600 (c), Labor Code. It may be, however, that both of the succeeding employments with B and C contributed to, that is, were further proximate causes of the disease which constituted the injury, in which event liability for compensation for any disability would fall upon each of the three.

The question which arises in the event a disease, contracted during one employment, was contributed to by succeeding employments, that is, whether or not each of the several employers is liable for the full amount of compensation, as general and special employers are for compensation to their common employee (American M. Ins. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1937, 8 Cal. 2d 585, 588, 67 P.2d 103), and a principal and agent are for their employee (Cowell v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1938, 11 Cal.2d 172, 176, 78 P.2d 1016, 1019), has been answered for us by the case of Blanchard v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1924, 68 Cal.App. 65, 228 P. 359. In that case the employee, Blanchard, had "glass-blowers' arm," or, more accurately, glass-blowers' arms, for when his right arm became useless in his trade, he used his left arm until that too was no longer serviceable. Blanchard had worked as a glass blower for three, it might indeed be said for four, employers: twelve years with A, six months with B, six months with C, and then forty minutes with B again. It appears that he contracted the disease while employed by A, and knew that he had it, but continued to work on, though with less efficiency, until he finally had to quit. The Commission determined that he had become fifteen percent totally disabled and awarded him $1,249.80, but then prorated the amount among the three employers. As Blanchard's claim was barred against two of them, he was left with an effective award of only $468.70 against B, and petitioned the District Court of Appeal to have the award annulled. "The purpose of this petition," the reviewing court stated (68 Cal.App. at page 67, 228 P. at page 360), "is, therefore, to seek the annulment of that portion of the Commission's award which prorates the compensation between the three employers * * *." The court then proceeded: "Subdivision 4 of section 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, as amended (Stats.1919, p. 911), defines 'injury' for which compensation may be awarded under the act as follows: 'The term "injury," as used in this act, shall include any injury or disease arising out of the employment, including injuries to artificial members. In case of aggravation of any disease existing prior to such injury, compensation shall be allowed only for such proportion of the disability due to the aggravation of such prior disease as may reasonably be attributed to the injury.' Under this section it was plainly the duty of the Commission to apportion the award of compensation among the respective employers, and in doing so the Commission was required to exercise a discretion based upon the evidence of the various periods of employment, which is not attacked in this proceeding."

[6] The subdivision, it will be noted, which the court quoted and which, it declared, made plain the duty of the Commission to apportion the award, does not contain the word "apportion" or "prorate," or any word of similar import. That which the subdivision was framed to accomplish, as we can determine from the words employed, was the paring down of liability, not its imposition. This observation is not intended as a criticism of the court's conclusion in the Blanchard case, but to emphasize that that conclusion was based on two grounds. It was based not alone on the subdivision expressly referred to as its support, but also on the facts, previously reviewed but not reiterated, which revealed that liability for compensation rested upon the earlier employers. We do not interpret the Blanchard case as either holding or declaring that its subdivision 4 of section 3 authorized the spread of the burden of compensating an employee injured (by disease) upon previous employers who, but for the subdivision, would have no liability.

[7] Our conviction that subdivision 4 of section 3 is not to be construed as creating a liability is fortified by a further decision, six months later than that in the Blanchard case, and rendered by the same court. We refer to Moore Shipbuilding Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1925, 70 Cal.App. 495, 233 P. 392, 393, where the disease involved was lead poisoning, a disease which, judging from the facts of the case, is much more rapid in its development than is silicosis. For about two months prior to March 6, 1924, the applicant had worked for the petitioner as a burner of armor plate. From March 10 to March 21 he worked as a burner for a second employer, becoming disabled from lead poisoning on the last mentioned date. The Commission found that the disease was contracted during the second employment, but held that the compensation should be apportioned in accordance with the time worked by the employee "under exposure to lead." We quote at length the not lengthy remarks of the reviewing court:

"The attack of the petitioner upon the award is that it is wholly unsupported by the findings on the part of the Commission. The point is that the jurisdiction of the Commission to apportion compensation among several employers where an employee has contracted an occupational disease during the course of the several employments can be sustained only upon a finding that the disease which constituted the 'injury' defined in subdivision 4 of section 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St.1917, p. 831), as amended in Statutes 1919, page 911, existed at some stage of each prior employment. That is to say, that the power of the Commission to apportion the liability among several employers under the terms of the section cited is limited to a 'case of aggravation of any disease existing prior to any such injury.'

"The petitioners set forth in their petition extracts of the evidence which was heard by the respondents covering the subject of the injury to the applicant, and the respondent concedes that this evidence is correctly stated. From the petition it appears that there was no evidence of any nature tending to show that the applicant had incurred or had shown any symptoms of the disease while employed by the petitioner Moore Shipbuilding Company, and the absence of such evidence was apparently in the minds of the members of the respondent Commission, when they failed to find on that fact. On the other hand, the findings are that the applicant sustained injury while employed by the General Metal Supply Company, and the apportionment of the award against the petitioner was based solely on the conjecture that, while employed by petitioner, the applicant might have contracted the disease to some extent. But the direct testimony of the applicant showed that he had no symptoms of the disease while in the employ of the petitioner.

"The Commission is required to make findings upon all facts involved in the controversy (section 20, Workmen's Compensation Act of 1917), and a failure to find that an injury was sustained or that a disease was contracted during a particular employment will not support an award against the one who was the employer during that period. In this case the jurisdiction of the Commission to apportion the award rests upon a showing that the disease was contracted while in the employment of the Moore Shipbuilding Company. In this respect there is a failure in both proof and finding. It follows that the Commission exceeded its jurisdiction."

[8, 9] We conclude, then, that the period during which one has been exposed to silica dust, prior to the time when the exposure has resulted in that serious impairment of the functions of the lungs which may properly be termed a diseased condition, is not to be taken into consideration in determining how much of the burden of compensation is to be placed upon an employer in whose service the disease was either contracted or, having already come into existence, was aggravated. In many cases, no doubt, the first, imperceptible, minute, infiltrations of silica dust come to one during the days of boyhood play, upon the vacant-lot ball field, along the dusty road, up in the hay loft. These years are not to be taken into account in apportioning compensation for silicosis, years later, not because they are not industrial years, but because they have resulted in no pre-existing disease which can be said to have been aggravated or to have imposed liability as for an injury. The same is true of years spent in industry which have passed without that effect upon the bodily health which constitutes a disease; these years are not to be counted in apportioning the burden which the law places upon industry. Where the line is to be drawn between a healthy condition and a diseased one is, of course, a problem of fact, often difficult to solve with definiteness. An employer, upon whom the facts and the law place responsibility for compensation for silicosis, who would escape a portion of the load on the theory that he alone is not responsible, necessarily has the burden of proving that other employers should share the responsibility. Moquin v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1939, 33 Cal.App. 2d 511, 516, 92 P.2d 413.

[10] Our conclusion, that where it is made to appear that an employment had brought about a case of silicosis which was aggravated by a subsequent employment, the burden of compensating the employee for the resulting disability is properly divided among the employers upon whom liability exists, is not only supported by the Blanchard case, but also by Associated Ind. Corp. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1932, 124 Cal.App. 378, 384, 12 P.2d 1075, where the Blanchard case was cited, and by Argonaut Mining Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, 21 Cal.App.2d 492, 70 P.2d 216, where such an award was affirmed as a matter of course. It is argued to us that the statute, sub. 4, sec. 3, may authorize an apportionment in the case of a disability but not in a death case. We are of the opinion that this argument places too much strain on the use of the word "disability" in the subdivision. It would indeed be an anomalous situation if compensation should be apportioned among several employers for the period of disability due to a disease, but that when death resulted either the entire burden should be placed on the last employer, or equally on all. We hesitate to believe that the legislature intended that one rule should hold respecting compensation for disability and a different rule should follow death. The reviewing court, in Mullane v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1931, 118 Cal.App. 283, 5 P.2d 483, determined that subdivision 4 of section 3, applied where a death benefit was being sought. In that case an injury aggravated an existing disease for which the employer had no responsibility, disability first, then death, resulting. The Commission first awarded a death benefit without apportionment, and then on rehearing withdrew it entirely. The court stated (118 Cal.App. at page 289, 5 P.2d at page 484) that the finding on the rehearing, that death "was not caused by injury arising out of or in the course of the said employment," is "contrary to the undisputed evidence * * * and contravenes the plain provisions of said act, as declared in subdivision 4 of section

3 thereof. Therefore, the decision of the commission based thereon, denying petitioner any relief whatever, should be annulled, and the proceeding remanded to the commission for further action pursuant to the provisions of the act last mentioned * * *."

[11, 12] It is true that no one, apparently, had argued in the case just referred to, that the subdivision was not applicable to a death case. However, we are of the opinion that the construction which it and the other cases cited have placed upon subdivision 4, section 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, has much more binding force than is due to their value as precedents. This is so because: "If a statute has been judicially construed and is later re-enacted in the same or substantially the same terms it is presumed that the legislature was familiar with the construction which had been placed upon the statute by the courts and that such construction, in the absence of an express provision requiring a different construction, was adopted by the legislature as a part of the law." In re Estate of Hebert, 1941, 42 Cal.App. 2d 664, 668, 109 P.2d 729, 731. For applications of this principle see: In re Baker & Hamilton, 1880, 55 Cal. 302, 303, 304; State Commission in Lunacy v. Welch, 1908, 154 Cal. 775, 777, 99 P. 181; Harris v. Barlow, 1919, 180 Cal. 142, 143, 179 P. 682; Lindsay-Strathmore I. Dist. v. Superior Court, 1920, 182 Cal. 315, 333, 187 P. 1056; People v. Ellis, 1928, 204 Cal. 39, 44, 266 P. 518. The first sentence of subdivision 4 of section 3 we have already discovered in section 3208 of the Labor Code. The second sentence also appears there, with alterations of no consequence, as section 4663. The adoption of sections 3208 and 4663 accomplished more than the mere reenactment of subdivision 4 of section 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Act; it wrote into the law the constructions placed upon that subdivision by the cases.

[13, 14] In the proceeding under review the fact that the applicant for a death benefit was a minor has kept the case free from questions involving the bar of the statute. Sec. 5408, Labor Code. The questions that have arisen, however, make it important to note that the evidence clearly establishes that Bonner had been working as tunnel superintendent for J. F. Shea Company (whose insurance carriers are respondents in the pending proceeding) off and on for a three year period between June 15, 1933, and April 18, 1936. At the end of this period his condition, soon discovered to be due to silicosis, became so bad that he had to quit his job, permanently. On June 6, 1941, Bonner died "as the result," the Commission found, "of silicosis, upon which was superimposed tuberculosis." The evidence discloses, further, that the conditions under which Bonner worked during his last three active years could well have been a proximate cause, if not the proximate cause, of Bonner's breakdown. These facts would support the Commission's original award of $5,000 as a death benefit. Sec. 4702, Labor Code. (We are not passing upon petitioner's suggestion that that award should have been $6000.) What is there in the findings of the Commission, or in the evidence, which justifies the reduction of the amount awarded to $583?

[15-17] This finding of the Commission is put forward as the basis for the reduced award. "2. Prior to the date of June 15, 1933, J. J. Bonner was employed for a period of approximately seventeen and one-half years outside the State of California in mining and tunnel work. As a result of exposure in his work prior to June 15, 1933 he contracted silicosis which was further aggravated by the work which he performed for the J. F. Shea Company subsequent to June 15, 1933." The Commission had previously found that Bonner had worked for some seventeen months, between June 15, 1933, and April 18, 1936, for the J. F. Shea Company, and it is apparent, both from the findings and from the Commission's brief, that the reduced award was the result of apportioning the death benefit over the entire period of decedent's employment in mines and tunnels. While it is true that the determination of the amounts to be allowed, under an apportionment, is a matter left to the sound discretion of the Commission (Tanenbaum v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1935, 4 Cal.2d 615, 618, 52 P.2d 215), it is a discretion to be exercised upon a legal and factual, not an arbitrary, basis. We consider the finding that "as a result of exposure in his work prior to June 15, 1933 he contracted silicosis" as too general a finding to warrant the inclusion of the seventeen years' work previous to 1933 in the total upon which the apportionment was based. It would not be at all inconsistent with the finding for the fact to be that at no time prior to 1931, let us say, did Bonner have any symptoms of silicosis, or that, prior to that arbitrarily selected date, he had not incurred the disease of silicosis. The most that the findings reveal is that he was exposed to the conditions which might, but might not, have impaired his health. Unless he contracted silicosis by the year 1931, the years prior to that year had no place in the Commission's calculations.

[18] Enough concerning the findings, for there is a more fundamental weakness in the foundation upon which the award was erected. There is evidence that Bonner worked in mines and tunnels over a period of years before he began his last employment, with J. F. Shea Co., Inc., but there is no evidence to support a finding that he had contracted silicosis before the beginning of that employment. The evidence reveals but little of the character of the conditions under which Bonner worked with respect to their possible effect upon his health, quite an insufficient amount to support an inference that his health had been impaired, that he had a disease that could be aggravated by the employment that began June 15, 1933.

The petitioner makes another argument which merits attention because unless disposed of it might make trouble at any further hearing of this matter before the Commission. It appears that in a proceeding begun by Bonner to recover compensation for the disability resulting from his diseased condition, the Commission determined, in 1939, that his right to relief was barred by the statute. Among other findings made was one to the effect that during the course of Bonner's employment with the J. F. Shea Co., Inc., between June 15, 1933 and April 18, 1936, he "sustained an industrial injury, being silicosis. * * *" Petitioner contends that this is a finding of fact which closes the door, in the proceeding instituted by her, to all inquiry as to the time when Bonner first contracted silicosis, presenting in support of her contention: (a) "No award of compensation shall be rescinded, altered, or amended after 245 weeks from the date of the injury," Labor Code, sec. 5804; (b) the 1939 finding renders the date of injury res judicata; (c) the commission is estopped to make a different finding. None of these theories is tenable.

[19-21] With respect to the limitation of section 5804, two answers suggest themselves. In the first place, in the light of what the cases have said about the nature of silicosis as an injury, a further finding to the effect that Bonner first contracted silicosis during some employment previous to June 15, 1933, would not be inconsistent with, and so be regarded as an attempt to modify, the finding of 1939, made to determine the running of the statute of limitations, that between 1933 and 1936 he had "sustained an industrial injury." But if the new finding could be said to be an alteration of the old, it would not, by section 5804, be placed beyond the jurisdiction of the Commission to make, for the applicant in the new proceedings is a minor, and that proceeding is protected against the limitations of section 5804 by these words of section 5408 of the Labor Code: "* * * no limitation of time provided by this division shall run against any person under twenty-one years of age or any incompetent unless and until a guardian or trustee is appointed." A minor, certainly, in a proceeding which would be barred but for section 5408, cannot be permitted to take the position that the Commission has jurisdiction to make findings in her favor but no jurisdiction to make findings which do not favor her.

[22] Nor is the power of the Commission to make a further finding, even if it be inconsistent with the 1939 finding, lacking because of the common law doctrine of res judicata. The authorities agree that during the period when the Commission "has continuing jurisdiction over all its orders, decisions, and awards" so that "at any time, upon notice and after an opportunity to be heard is given to the parties in interest, the commission may rescind, alter, or amend any such order, decision, or award, good cause appearing therefor," quoting from section 5803, Labor Code, a finding is not res judicata. Cowell v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, 11 Cal.2d 172, 178, 78 P.2d 1016, and cases cited. The Cowell case is quite in point. There, in a proceeding instituted by an injured employee, the Commission had found that a corporation was the employer and made an award against it, discharging two individuals who had been named defendants at the Commission's order because they were thought to be employers. Thereafter the employee died, and his two minor sons filed an application for a death benefit in which they claimed that the two individuals who had been discharged were the employers. The sons' proceeding was consolidated with one instituted by the widow, and the corporation and the two individuals were found by the Commission to have been the employers and an award made against the three of them.

[23, 24] The individuals referred to appear as the petitioners in the Cowell case, contending, among other things, that the award against them violates the principles of res judicata. Of this contention the court states (11 Cal.2d at page 178, 78 P.2d at page 1020): "Neither were the findings and awards made during the life of the employee res judicata upon the subject of petitioners' status. This is so because the applications for death benefit made by the widow and children were filed well within the period during which the commission had continuing jurisdiction of the cause, to take further evidence or, upon due showing, to rescind, alter, or amend prior findings and awards. The commission committed no impropriety and no act in excess of jurisdiction in entertaining the applications of the dependents, in rehearing the issues, and in rendering altered findings. To such procedure the doctrines of res judicata, and estoppel, are inapplicable. This is well settled. [Citing cases.]" True, in the Cowell case, the applications of the widow and of the sons were filed within some 130 weeks after the date of the injury, so that whatever limitation section 5804, Labor Code, places upon the Commission's continuing jurisdiction did not apply. But, again we point out, by virtue of section 5408 of the Labor Code its time limits respecting industrial accident proceedings do not apply with respect to minors until guardians are appointed for them, and in the case now under review the petitioner had applied for a death benefit before a guardian was appointed. In deciding her application, then, the Commission's jurisdiction was still continuing, so that if any finding which it should determine it was proper to make could be said to be a modification of the 1939 finding, it would have power to make it. By the reasoning of the Cowell case, therefore, the 1939 finding cannot stand in the way of a new finding because of the doctrine of res judicata.

[25] Petitioner's third position is expressed thus: "Having once found that decedent was disabled in his employment, the Commission should be estopped from finding, upon the same evidence, after his death, that he was not so injured or disabled, since his dependents are otherwise left in the position where they are required to prove that which neither the Commission nor respondents ascertained or proved by the evidence previously submitted to the Commission." What we have stated earlier in this opinion, particularly respecting the lack of evidence and the burden of proof, perhaps cures the evil to which the petitioner here voices an objection. If so, the objection does not question the right of the Commission to make a finding that silicosis was incurred prior to 1933, upon sufficient evidence. Upon a new hearing it is not to be supposed that the Commission will make a finding that Bonner contracted silicosis before June, 1933, if the evidence before it is no different from that it already has had. On no theory of which we know can it be said that the Commission will be estopped to find that the disease began in 1932, if there is evidence to support such a finding. On a rehearing of this proceeding, therefore, the time when Bonner first contracted silicosis will be a proper subject of inquiry.

For the reasons given, the award is annulled.

PARKER WOOD, J., concurs.

SHINN, Acting Presiding Justice (concurring).

I concur in the judgment and in the reasons given therefor, except upon the last point discussed as to the conclusiveness of the finding at the former hearing of the time when petitioner's father sustained an industrial injury, namely, between June 5, 1933, and April 18, 1936. Where the injury is the disease of silicosis, which comes on gradually and may progress through several different employments, I think the former finding would not be in conflict with a possible later finding that the employee had suffered an industrial injury from silicosis prior to June 5, 1933. But however that may be, I think the Commission in the present proceeding for recovery of the death benefit would not be bound by a finding as to the time when the injury was sustained, made in the proceeding to recover compensation for injury. Section 5803 of the Labor Code provides in part: "The commission has continuing jurisdiction over all its orders, decisions, and awards made and entered under the provisions of this division. At any time, upon notice and after an opportunity to be heard is given to the parties in interest, the commission may rescind, alter, or amend any such order, decision, or award, good cause appearing therefor." In the exercise of this jurisdiction the Commission may, where good cause therefor appears, make findings at variance with or contrary to those previously found. Bartlett Hayward Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 1928, 203 Cal. 522, 265 P. 195. The power to alter or amend an order, decision or award would have little efficacy if new awards had to be based upon the former findings. The only limitation upon the continuing jurisdiction of the Commission is found in section 5804, which provides that: "No award of compensation shall be rescinded, altered, or amended after 245 weeks from the date of the injury." This section is inapplicable here for reasons which are not recognized in the main opinion. A proceeding for the recovery of a death benefit should be deemed a separate proceeding from one to recover compensation for injury insofar as may be necessary to allow the Commission to exercise its full powers in connection with a claim for a death benefit. An award of compensation for injury in a proceeding instituted by an employee cannot be considered as having been made in a later proceeding for the recovery of a death benefit. Of course the powers of the Commission are the same whether it be considered that there are two proceedings or only one for the claims are separate in substance as is the procedure for their enforcement. In no view of either can an award of a death benefit be regarded as a rescission, alteration or amendment of a previous award of compensation for injury within the meaning of section 5804. It would seem clear that the section was not intended to apply to original applications to recover the death benefit. Under section 5406, Labor Code, the claim of an adult for a death benefit may in some cases be filed as late as 240 weeks after the injury, and in the case of a minor that time would not begin to run until a guardian had been appointed, which, of course, might be long after the expiration of 245 weeks. A claim for a death benefit may be, and often is, allowed even though there has been no proceeding on behalf of the employee. Petitioner's claim was filed within the time allowed by law and in such cases, whether the claimant be an adult or a minor, the Commission has jurisdiction to proceed in the usual course to a final decision. Section 5804 imposes no restriction on the jurisdiction of the Commission, in a proceeding to recover the death benefit, to decide all pertinent questions of fact, even though such decisions may be contrary to findings on the same issues made in an earlier proceeding by the employee to recover compensation for injury. Under any construction of the earlier finding, it is not conclusive as to the date when petitioner's father contracted silicosis as an industrial injury, even though petitioner's application for the death benefit was filed long after the expiration of 245 weeks from the time of the injury, as found in the first proceeding.

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY
3 1786 10047 1843

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

SAN DIEGO

NON CIRCULATING